WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

DEPUTY COMMISSIONER THOMAS FITZPATRICK

Interview Date: October 1, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: We can begin by stating your name and your rank.

MR. FITZPATRICK: Tom Fitzpatrick, Deputy Commissioner for Administration, assigned to the Commissioner's office.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: Just for the record, it's Monday, October 1, 2:40 p.m., conference room 8N6 at headquarters.

MR. FITZPATRICK: On the morning of the event I was in my office and I was alerted by Commissioner Feehan and one of the secretaries outside that a plane had hit the World Trade Center. I looked out the window, saw a slice in the side of the north tower, and then Bill came down the hall and said let's go. So we responded from headquarters. I had previously had a meeting with Tom McDonald, so he came with us, along with Ray Goldbach. I think that was it in the car.

En route to the alarm, we could see the smoke from the north tower. I tried to get an idea of how many floors and it looked like the upper third of the building was involved. We got across the Brooklyn Bridge, went down Broadway and stopped the car, I think it was at Broadway and Dey. We out of the car and ran down the street. As we got to the intersection of Broadway and Dey or just a little bit down Dey, the second plane hit the south tower. And we continued down the street. By the time we got to the plaza, a lot of debris was coming down.

Q. Did you witness the second plane hitting?

A. I heard it but I didn't look up. The noise from the plane was enough to make you not want to look up. I thought the plane was actually going to land in the street to be honest with you. The noise was outrageous. When it hit the building it was even worse. I figured, as long as we didn't get hit by the plane, we were ahead of the game. The next thing I was worried about was getting hit by the parts. Various pieces of the plane were falling on the street. As we went down the street you could see parts of aircraft with stencil numbers on it and things like that. There was a wheel, or like a wheel housing or something else there in the street.

There were lot of bodies coming down but I didn't pay much attention to it. For some reason I was more focused on the airplane parts until somebody started pointing out the body parts. I was particularly concerned at that point with getting hit by something falling out of the building, so we ran under the canopy of 5 World Trade Center, to make our way towards the building, the north tower. We were under the canopy as far as we could go and cut through. There is a space between 5 and 6. When we got under the end of 5 we would have had to run across the plaza. We didn't believe that was a good idea, so we went through the space between 5 and 6 and went up an escalator on the side of 6. It was on the street side, on the Vesey Street side. There was a Port Authority cop telling us not to come up and we went up anyway. He directed us to an escalator which went down to the plaza to the concourse level so we could make our way to the command post at the northwest corner of the north tower.

When we got there, I saw --

Q. So that was West Street near the pedestrian bridge?

A. Yes, yes. I got there and saw Richie Sehirer had just come into the lobby, Chief Hayden, Chief Callan, a whole host of security people and people from the Port Authority. Bill Feehan and myself and then Tom Von Essen. That's all I can recall right now.

There are a lot of other people, but they were the only ones I focused on.

Q. Did you mention Chief Ganci?

A. I didn't see Chief Ganci in the lobby at that time.

Q. Can you tell us Commissioner, what the demeanor of the citizens or lay people were there in the lobby, or in the concourse?

A. With respect to the security guards, they seemed to be fairly composed. They were going about their business, making a lot of phone calls. The only civilians we saw were coming out as we went through the lobby of 5. The Port Authority police were directing groups of people out of the towers, out on to the street. Seemed like they were mostly going - they may have been going across the walkway at that time. I didn't really see where they were going, but they were directing them out of the building, quite a few people.

We were in the lobby, it could have been 15 minutes. We were getting reports. People were calling the security desk with reports of people trapped upstairs. We were trying to get an idea of what was going on with our own people upstairs. We -- somebody told us in the lobby that they had information that the Pentagon had just been hit, so in addition to the second plane, the idea of terrorism was confirmed by the Pentagon. We were looking to, because the command post was so crowded, we were looking for a place to set up a second command post, essentially for communications because we couldn't get any out from behind the desk. It's a big marble desk. It looks like the security station there is a marble counter with a wall in front of it and you had to go around it every time to get to a phone, so we figured it wasn't going to work out in the long run.

Q. The command center was actually inside number 6?

A. No, inside of the north tower.

Q. It wasn't in number 5, it was in the north tower?

A. Yes, we used 5 for cover and we ran through 6 to get into the north tower.

Q. So the north tower is the command post?

A. Yes, that's at the level of West Street, but you've got to go down one level. We were there about 15 minutes looking for the secondary command post. We started briefly talking about who was going where. We were trying to figure out, if somebody was going to go to OEM or somebody was going to stay on the scene. I think the Commissioner had been told that the Mayor wanted to meet him. I'm not sure where the Mayor was but the Mayor wanted to meet the Commissioner and some of his staff just north of the tower.

I looked in the concourse level where the shops are. It was too congested, too deep in the building for the units coming out in the street to see anybody. So we went back out to the lobby and dropped back to a position right outside that had 6 escalators going up to the walkway. I thought there might be an opportunity to have people staged there before they came into the main lobby.

Q. Those are the escalators that lead to the pedestrian bridge that takes you from one World Trade Center to the Financial Center?

A. Yes, it is. I looked around. There was no communication. We didn't think that was a good spot. The longer we stayed in the lobby we realized that with the second building and with the command post getting as crowded as it was, we were not going to be able to manage anything from that point, so we decided to move, Bill Feehan, myself, and I believe Commissioner Tierney at that point. I met her in the walkway or I might have met her before, but she was there anyway. I decided to look for a second place to go. I believe the Commissioner left to go north and Bill Feehan and myself, went up to the walkway to go across West Street.

Q. You mean the bridge there?

A. Yes, we went across the north bridge into the Winter Garden. When we got into the Winter Garden, just as soon as we stepped through the door I looked and said to myself this is a perfect command post, because they looked like they were having some type of an event. There were tables set up and there was a big - around the tables were two rows of tables across the front of the Hudson River side of the Winter Garden. That would be perfect because if you had a phone at each position, you have an emergency command post, an OEM type set up going right away.

There were two security guards, one of which I met later on, but there were two security guards who asked us if we needed anything. We told them we needed communications set up in that lobby. Because we figured that would be the command post. We could come out and do staging at West Street. He told us he would try to get it set up there. It was not a standard part of the lobby set up, but he would try to get us some communications. It appeared at that time that the whole building had been evacuated. It was empty except for security.

While he was doing that, we made our way back out to West Street into the driveway of 2 World Financial Center. There were two garage doors behind us. When we got out there we noticed that the apparatus were coming in and starting to fill up West Street. Ambulances were responding, and it seemed like they were coming from two different directions on West Street. So we didn't think that would be a good idea for the long term if we were going to have an event this big. We had to stage the ambulances down from Canal Street south, so that we could bring the ambulances down, pick up patients and either go through the battery into Brooklyn or Queens or back up the west side into Manhattan or whereever else we were attempting.

It was evident that we weren't going to be able to get to people above the fire. Based on the number of jumpers, we could only assume that hundreds of people were trapped.

We were there for, seems to me 10 minutes maybe. Time was all out of whack for me. I don't know. We were all - with all the running around and the time we spent in each place, it's kind of compressed.

Q. Are we still in the time period from when you saw the second plane hit from east of the World Trade Center?

A. Yes.

Q. You made your way over here. You told us your story about where you went to the Winter Garden back out on the street?

A. Right.

Q. Both of the World Trade Centers are still standing at this point?

A. Both still standing, both heavily involved, but both still standing.

Q. You then followed the driveway into Two Financial Center?

A. Yes, Tom McDonald was there and they asked him to go north and start to control the ambulances and the trucks that seemed to be stopping right at that point. What we wanted to do is get them to the side of the road to keep the street open. One of the things that was in the driveway -- while we were talking, we noticed there was groups of people with stretchers and EMS equipment running south on the sidewalk. At the same time there was a group of people with EMS equipment running north. And I thought it was at that point that we needed to coordinate which direction they were going in. If we were going to have a triage area in one set, which we presumed would be south and the ambulances were moving north, that the triage area should all be south.

Chief Gombo was in the driveway at that point. I asked him to take some people and set up a triage area whereever they thought it would be best to set it up. I believe they left the driveway and went south towards Albany.

Right after that there was a camera crew there from somewhere. I remember Frank Gribbon saying to me is there any chance this building would fall down. I don't think I gave him a real good answer, but he did tell the camera crew to step back because we were concerned about falling glass. We assumed from the last explosion that there were big big chunks of glass coming down from somewhere. So he told them to get back against the building.

At some point I believe Bill asked me to call somebody. But I can't for the life of me remember who or what. I was looking for a phone and the security guard who was in the driveway, there is a little stone wall with a railing or something on top of it, that you could climb up on it right at the end of the driveway, so Bill said to make a call. I jumped up on the wall and ran in right off the street. There was an office there, a security office, and the guy directed me to an office that was 5 feet away to use the phone. I made a phone call and came back out in the driveway.

Q. Is the driveway now on the west side of West Street, so it leads to the World Financial Center or does it lead to the World Trade Center?

A. No, the driveway goes right into 2 World Financial Center on the west side. There were two double doors there.

Q. Just to clarify, Commissioner, this is where the command post was set up?

A. Yes, yes, they were setting up the magnetic board and stuff. Came back out. Met Bill and I - forget who else was in the driveway at that point. Came back out and stood somewhere near Bill in the driveway. We were right at the raised driveway, which went down to the street, came up and went down to the garage. It was sort of raised in the center. We basically stood on the raised portion. I started to look up the building.

Q. Was Chief Ganci present in that area at that time?

A. I didn't see him. I don't remember seeing him. I came back out. I remember seeing Bill, but I don't remember. I don't remember clearly who else was there, but I know there were about - I would guess between 40 and 50 people in the driveway.

Q. All Fire Department personnel?

A. No, I think aside from Fire Department personnel, there were some other civilian people. I seem to remember somebody in a T-shirt. The only reason I remember that is because -- I think I remember that because I ran into him later on at the back of the garage. We looked up at the building straight up, we were that close. All we saw was a puff of smoke coming from about 2 thirds of the way up. Some people thought it was an explosion. I don't think I remember that. I remember seeing, it looked like sparkling around one specific layer of the building. I assume now that that was either windows starting to collapse like tinsel or something. Then the building started to come down. My initial reaction was that this was exactly the way it looks when they show you those implosions on TV. I would have to say for three or four seconds anyway, maybe longer. I was just watching. It was interesting to watch, but the thing that woke everybody up was the cloud of black material. It reminded me of the 10 commandments when the green clouds come down on the street. The black cloud was coming down faster than the building, so whatever was coming down was going to hit the street and it was pretty far out. You knew it wasn't coming right down. Judging from where people were jumping before that, this cloud was out much further.

Somebody yelled we've got to take cover or get out of the way or something like that and the only place to go, because we were in that driveway area, was into the garage. I didn't, at that point, expect the building to come down, I guess, but I knew you wanted to be out of the way of this black cloud. I ran into the garage and I would say ten or 15 feet into the garage, the building hit the street. It wasn't very loud but it was big. A big noise, it wasn't like a crash, like a car accident, more like a big thud. And a blast of air and debris came through the garage. I think the thing that is unusual about going in was when I ran in the garage there was a railing, where the driveway of the northern most part of the garage went in and split. It split with a yellow railing and as I was going in, two people fell back. I fell over them. To keep my balance, I reached out and put my hand on the railing. The people there were scrambling to get up.

When I got up, I just kept running straight ahead but I realized that I was on the other side of the railing. Not the driveway side, but what looked like a walkway. In this garage, that would be where you pay your ticket to get your car out. So I kept going straight with the railing. Some people ran down the driveway. I don't know to this point, still don't know if the driveway's southern most point was parallel to this or if it went down another level. I really don't.

Anyway, I ran into four or five people straight ahead with the railing on the left. Eventually, I ran into a corridor, a long corridor with a door on the end of a long corridor to get out of the debris that was coming through the door. We just kept going down the corridor, assuming it was going to come out through the side or the lobby or a hallway. Unfortunately it turned into a dead end, like a locker room, like an electrical closet or where they put lockers in. There were really no doors to the place. We just kept going to the end and at the opening where you assume it's going to open up into another lobby, it opened up into a room about this size. It had lockers in it. That was it.

So by this time we couldn't see anything, the noise was over. It was very quiet, but this plaster was in the air so you couldn't breathe normally without inhaling a mouth full of something.

Q. Were there lights or any lighting?

A. There were lights, but the stuff was dark. With all the stuff floating around, it was almost darkness, like a white out or a gray out. It seemed like the guy in the T-shirt was the guy - I thought he was a construction worker. He may have been a maintenance guy. But we got down to the end and he was saying is there a way out? Is there a way out? I couldn't find any. All I could see were lockers, after getting close to them, and conduits on the wall. There was no way out of that room, so we started to go back to where we came out and I think we ended up past the way we came in.

Q. How many people were with you, Commissioner?

A. I think there were about 5 or 6.

Q. Anybody that you know personally?

A. No.

Q. Did you have a Fire Department radio with you at that time?

A. I had no radio, no. I just had my turnout coat. Unfortunately, my helmet was in the car. Richie said he was going to go to - I think the Commissioner wanted Bill Feehan to go across the street to OEM and he said to tell Bill to give me his helmet, because I didn't have one. So we came back out of the hallway and somebody said there is a door. There is a door. Let's go out this way. I couldn't see it. So whoever said it stayed at the door, see, and kept yelling this way, this way, this way. You couldn't orient yourself. With the dust you didn't know which direction it was.

Q. Did you pass any people on the way back out?

A. I don't think I passed anybody who was walking around, because we were all together. I think there was only one guy I worked with next to me. But there were people behind him, so when we turned around to go back out, they were in front of us. I saw there was a door, I remember going and feeling my way around. There were a couple of door knobs. One of them said it was a locksmith shop. I saw an electrical closet and something else. It was a typical maintenance door. But I remember the locksmith one. It was stupid, I know. I assumed that the building had fallen on the other building. I couldn't get out of the garage. I keep remembering thinking that the locksmith would always have the keys to the doors and they were probably in the locksmith's closet. But who knows if he ever got out.

We came out and went into this door. I think we went up one landing into a store which seemed like a bagel shop or something. I seem to remember cameras or something, on the right side. That led around through the store into the lobby of the Winter Garden.

Q. How was the visibility at that time?

A. It was all -- it was still - the cement - you know the cement they put in, as you got further in towards the Winter Garden it cleared up. By the time you actually get into the lobby of the Financial Center, it was a little bit of stuff, but not nearly as bad as what it was before. I went to the lobby. We went across.

Q. Was there anybody in the lobby that you recognized?

A. I don't remember.

Q. Were there people in the Winter Garden?

A. No. I don't remember seeing anyone over there. There may have been people there, I just may not have been paying attention to that.

Q. Did you hear a lot of people yelling or screaming?

A. There was some people yelling, but I don't know exactly where they were. I didn't look to see. I didn't look back to see what had happened. But I knew that down to the right was the entrance - was Vesey Street. So we went down that way. Passed a - it was like a restaurant in the courtyard there. I think there is one on either side. I went down and I saw out on Vesey Street, I saw Tom McDonald, who we had just sent to move the rigs. So as soon as I saw him I knew he was alive. I went down there and I think he was looking for Tom Curti, might have been with Tom McDonald going down the street.

At that time I saw Tom McDonald, who looked more like a snow man than me, but it seemed like he had a real mouthful of stuff. So I went back in and grabbed a couple of bottles of water from the diner that we had just passed or the restaurant or something. I grabbed a couple of bottles of water and gave them to him. I then proceeded down Vesey Street to West Street, figuring that now I could come around to the right and back towards tower one and towards the driveway.

Q. Heading east on Vesey Street?

A. Yes, but you couldn't go that way. Between the dust and everything else you couldn't see much, but I think the walkway was still up. I also knew that the second tower was up. But Tom McDonald said what had actually happened. So I went out and looked and I could see the north tower, but I couldn't see the south tower, but sometime when you are down there if you are in the right position, it only looks like one building to begin with. So I walked a little bit down further and saw that all you could see was the radio tower sticking up through the smoke. But you couldn't really see anything else. But based on where the sun was shining through, where there was a shadow before, I said to Tom, the whole building is gone. I came back to him and thought more about the guys who went in the garage but they didn't come up the way I came up. I assumed that the garage at 2 World Financial went down and came back out and there had to be a driveway. I knew there was a driveway in the back of the building, so I went around the back of the building.

Q. Back by Vesey towards the water?

A. Yes. (inaudible). Back around behind 4 World Financial Center. I had actually come out of 3. I went back around behind 3 looking for the garage exit that should be coming out of 2.

Q. You went between 3 and 4 and you walked behind 3?

A. Yes, south and west.

Q. Behind the Winter Garden?

A. Behind the Winter Garden.

Q. So you were back near the boat pier?

A. Yes. As I got back here, I met the same security guard that was in the lobby. He had a ponytail. He told me he was retired secret service. Something official. I think he mentioned retired secret service. I thought that was pretty reliable. So I asked him if there was an entrance to the garage from this side, if the garage went through. He said he didn't know. He wasn't sure. There was somebody else that said it doesn't go through, it's a separate - because there's a wall between garages. So I started to go south behind Merrill Lynch near the park. So we came around and come around to that little bridge area where they took the families down. As I got around there, it just started to come down towards the building and all of a sudden a whole bunch of people started running. The second one --

Q. Towards you?

A. Yes, now they are all running towards me. I said the second one is coming down. This is getting to be a little bit too much. So we started to run straight out towards the water. Right near Liberty Street and then real close to 2 Financial Center. Ran out to the water where the marina is, and then ran north on the World Financial plaza till we came to the water. By then the second building went down. The cloud from that debris had already blown out through the street, but the people who were in that area were sort of protected because they didn't get the direct brunt of the second cloud because the building took the brunt of the hit. The cloud seemed to be, the Financial Center seemed to, you know, clear a path. The cloud went on both ends but didn't come straight at you, so you were a little bit better off there.

I went out to the water and tried to figure out what was going on. There were people out there in boats, starting to pull up to the pier.

Q. You noticed a lot of people out on the pier?

A. Yes, there were a lot of people out against the fence. I think some people had gone out there and stopped to watch what was going on after the first building came down, because it looked like if they had gotten that far and the buildings came down they should have kept running. It seems like they may have run out there with the first building and decided to stop and watch the second building. And then the second building came down, and they had no place to go except into the water, over the railing. As you got further north, you could see that they were getting hit by the cloud. Some people were trying to get into boats.

Q. Was there anybody in the water that you noticed?

A. I didn't see anybody in the water. I saw some people going on the boats. Some of the boats were having difficulty with gates that dropped down to let people on, but they couldn't get them down because of the railings. So we tried to figure out a way to get people up over the railings on to the boats. Some firemen were helping some civilians. Then I met a Chief out there, Raynis, I think his name was, who started to take a head count. I told him to get -- there was another Chief further down. It looked like he was doing the same thing. I told him to get together, to get everybody and send somebody down and get all the firemen on the pier, to try to get them together in one group. At least get a preliminary head count and we were going to take them out to meet -- the only thing I could see was the big arch in front of BMCC.

Q. That's up by like North Moore? Chambers and West?

A. Yeah, I told them take all the guys you can get and meet in front of the arch, and when we got there, we would figure out what to do next. By then -- the school, the high school started to let kids out, Stuyvesant High School. There was a lot of kids. The firemen were stretched along the pier there. So we went down this way and it looked like the kids were starting to come out of school, I'm thinking in my mind. So we made our way across towards BMCC to regroup. We came back down West Street, and I don't know what the time frame is, but I ended up running into a Battalion Chief and I asked him if he had anybody with him. It seemed like he had a group of a lot of different people. So I asked him if he had anybody with him. He didn't. I had gone, come down West Street and tried to get down as far as I could in front of 3. After the smoke cleared you could see that 3 was clear, but the bridge had come down and I thought maybe the guys were in the driveway of 1 North. I was hoping they were on this side of the bridge. I looked as much as I could in front of 3 World Financial Center. It was just six inches of debris. If there was someone laying there, it would be hard to distinguish them from the mounds of paper. I didn't see anybody, so I got Shaun Reen. I said get some guys. Get some companies. I think Bill Feehan is right here. I assumed that they were between the north bridge, laying in the street, and Vesey Street. You could see right away that if they were on the other side of that, forget about trying to climb over it or get through or past it. About the only way to do a rescue was from around the other side, the south side, which I hadn't seen. So he came down and told me he had about a dozen guys. Searched everywhere and couldn't find anybody. And then we started to - then people started to drift in.

Q. So just prior to the first collapse, you were at the driveway of Two Financial?

A. Right.

Q. Was Commissioner Feehan with you at that time?

A. Yes.

Q. Then he was out there also, but you weren't sure if Chief Ganci was there?

A. I didn't remember seeing Pete, but again that was after I had just come out of the building, making a phone call. When I came out, if you jumped off that wall there. I walked past - you might not have noticed anybody who was closer to that wall. If they were closer to the wall or if there were more people in front of him when I jumped off, I didn't see him. It's hard to tell. The only thing I could figure is that when we ran backwards, either they ran into the other driveway, which was separate, and made their way out, somehow got out. The debris had fallen and they couldn't get across the first one or if it was on a different level, they would have been at the second entrance. They must have came up next to that little wall to get out.

Because later on when I got back there, it looked like the little wall had been shielded from the direct hit of debris, because the building deflected it. I assumed they came back up next to that wall and made their way out to the street where the magnetic board was previously and must have got hit by the second building. But I never saw either of them after that.

Q. Did you ever see Tom McDonald?

A. Tom McDonald, when I came back the second time I found Tom McDonald on West Street. Because he was limping. He was sitting on a car. He was worse than he was the first time. He was sitting on a car or bumper or something like that. He had torn a muscle in his leg. He was having trouble walking. I think then he told me he found Tom Curti. So that was one less guy to look for. That's about it. The rest of it is a blur.

Q. When you went out between the first and second collapse and as you made your way back to West Street, that north bridge was down?

A. Right, I don't know if --

Q. It was down after the first collapse?

A. Was it? I didn't know. I really couldn't see. You could see the debris, but with the cloud, you couldn't, from where I was -- I was standing at the corner of 3 World Financial and looking up Vesey and West. All you could see was the top and the street. You couldn't see anything. It was like a snow storm. But you could see through the sun, every once in a while, you could see the north tower and the antenna sticking up. The reason I knew the second building was gone because the smoke drifted for a second, and the sunlight came through and I knew it wasn't an optical illusion, it was just gone. So that's all I know about the second one.

I don't know if the bridge was down or partially down. It could have been in the street. I didn't spend a long time looking.

Q. Commissioner, when you came back out after the first collapse, from the rear or the inside of Two World Financial, did you ever see Dr. Kelly down near that bridge area?

A. No, not by the north bridge. I didn't see her. I met David Prezant. He was in the driveway. The first one. As a matter of fact he was there when we came out. We were on the driveway the first time.

Either before or after I came out he was there. Because I think he went with Gombo or someone from EMS. They went together to build a triage area. But no, I didn't see Dr. Kelly. For some reason, it's real blurry. I can't remember why I went to make that phone call. I went to find out something. I ran in that building and made a phone call. I can't remember what it was. That's all.

Q. (inaudible)?

A. I called Sandy from the lobby when I went back in to get the water, because my sister lives in Battery Park City. Tom McDonald was sitting outside, I was going to get him some water. I went back in to steal the water. There was a phone right next to the counter, so I called Sandy. I told her to call my wife and find out where my sister was, because I didn't know if the building had fallen on her building. I couldn't tell. Find out how my sister was - call my wife, find out how my sister was and call my father, because he's in Florida. Just let them know that I'm still alive. And then I went on with the day.

Q. You mentioned earlier that you had a conversation with Commissioner Von Essen about a helmet.

A. Yeah.

Q. Did Commissioner Feehan give you his helmet?

A. No, no. He kept it. We never had a chance to make that. That would have been a difficult swap. I don't think he would have given it up so quick. I don't think he would have been so willing to go to OEM either. I'm glad he did, but that was the plan - it was going to be that. Once you started talking to Richie Schirer about recall, which we knew was going to be a mess, somewhere in the conversation Richie says to me "We'll do recall". I said to him "Make it quick, Yankee Stadium or Shea Stadium." Commissioner Von Essen said "I want you to go with the boss and I want Bill to go to OEM." He was going with the Mayor. But obviously that didn't work out. That was the last conversation between the three of us that day. Then Richie was at staging. I think he was on the phone, actually calling OEM, trying to get Shea Stadium or Yankee Stadium opened up. That's the last time I saw him. I guess he went off towards where the Mayor was going or back to his office.

Some people, I think when we went up across the walkway, I think some people were contemplating running out through the glass windows on West Street.

But they were having second thoughts because of the jumpers. If you got hit by a jumper, you'd be out of business. So we went up through the walkway to get out, but I don't know who might have gone out through the windows.

Q. Do you recall ever seeing Father Judge down there?

A. I didn't see him.

Q. When you were at the command post on West Street, across from the south tower, was it?

A. The north tower.

Q. North tower, could you see firefighters on either side of that tower?

A. I didn't notice. I know there were rigs. I could not actually see any people, but I could see the rigs there. When we were in the north tower, just before we left, there was a report of a third plane coming in from the Port Authority. I don't know if anybody knew whether to take that seriously or if it was true or not. But I heard Chief Callan telling guys to come down, to get out of the building.

Q. You heard him, or it on the radio?

A. No, I heard him say it. I was standing right there next to him. He told people to come down, to get out of the building. He wanted all personnel out of the building. I don't know if he was communicating that to the second tower or to both or to the people in the building, but I did hear him say that.

Q. This is when the command post was still in the north tower?

A. Still in the north tower. A lot of the marble in the lobby was falling off the walls, big slabs of marble were falling down. From the impact, I guess. The lobby didn't look too good. The integrity of the elevators - I started to think about the elevators. They had either blown out, cut off or could possibly have the cars coming down. The lobby was becoming an untenable place, especially if we wanted to continue operations.

Q. Elevators (inaudible)?

A. I didn't see anybody coming down the stairs in the lobby. I don't think there is an exit in the lobby.

Q. So you saw no civilian personnel coming out from the lobby?

A. No, when went I down and when I went back. We were in the lobby by the command station. You go east in the lobby. There are a couple of doors there that lead to the concourse. Three little doors. Those doors lead into the concourse where there are shops and stores. But as soon as I went through those doors, I figured that would be a crazy place to set up a command post, because who would find you. Where's the phones. There's nothing useful in there, so I came back out.

Q. So the first command post in the north tower was in the area of where the airline ticket booths are?

A. The first was at the street level in the northwest corner of the building.

Q. So it wasn't where the ticket booths are?

A. Right, there was nothing in the lobby that was commercial and the command post was a big marble desk which had a console behind it, but you couldn't see over it. About a five foot wall and there was all Port Authority cops and security people behind it. I went back there because somebody had given me a report. One of the cops behind there said we have people trapped on the 22nd floor. Some company was calling down to the lobby. They were trapped. Debris had come down in front of their door and they were looking for companies or firemen to remove the debris so they could get out. I gave that to Chief Hayden.

I said I don't know what we can do at this point, but just put it on the list. A list of places that we had to search or get to, because everybody was calling us up. And the 22nd, I thought at that point seemed like a relatively safe place to be. The 22nd would probably be the best.

Last thing we saw, as opposed to (inaudible).

Q. I just have one last question.

A. (Not recorded).

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: If no one has any further questions, Commissioner, I thank you and we will end this interview at this time.

File No. 9110002

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CHIEF FIRE MARSHAL LOUIS GARCIA

Interview Date: October 2, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. McALLISTER: This is Kevin McAllister from Administration. It is October 2nd at 11:06 a.m. We're with Chief Garcia in his office. I am joined by --

FIRE MARSHAL CAMPBELL: Fire Marshal Campbell.

MR. GILBERT: Steve Gilbert.

FIRE MARSHAL STARACE: Fire Marshal Starace.

CHIEF GARCIA: And Louis Garcia, Chief Fire Marshal.

MR. McALLISTER: We're going to direct Chief Garcia's attention to the morning of September the 11th, 2001, and we're going to ask Chief Garcia to tell us about the events of that morning from his perspective.

CHIEF GARCIA: Okay. That morning I was due to play in the charity golf tournament at Douglaston Golf Course. I probably got there somewhere about 7:30 I got to the golf course. I was in a foursome with Supervising Fire Marshal James Kelty, Captain Gene Kelty, who was the captain of 10 Engine located near the World Trade Center, and also Captain James Johnson, who works over in the Training Academy.

From the first tee of Douglaston Golf Course, ironically, you have a view of the World Trade Center. In fact, those are the two buildings you can see from Douglaston Golf Course. Douglaston Golf Course is in Douglaston, Queens. It's approximately between 15 and 20 miles from Manhattan. From the first tee you see the World Trade Center.

We teed off. I was on the second hole when I was notified through my alphanumeric beeper that a plane had gone into the World Trade Center. I got on my cell phone, called EOC and said, in my exact words, is this a fucking joke? And they said no, it's a confirmed hit of a plane; it's confirmed the plane has hit the World Trade Center.

At that point I turned around, James Kelty was in my cart with me, we turned around, went up to the first tee. I was going to go back. When we got to the first tee, a police lieutenant -- and I don't know his last name but his first name is Don. I can get his last name. He's on the Mayor's detail. He's a lieutenant on the Mayor's security detail of the City Hall street detail. And right from that vantage point you could see that the tower, the World Trade Center tower, the north tower had been hit. There was smoke billowing out from the tower and it was an unbelievable sight, and Don was on the phone with City Hall. I remember saying to Kelty get me over to my car. So we were taking the golf cart down to the parking lot of the golf course.

On the way down to the parking lot of the golf course, we heard a rumble. We looked around. We thought it was right near us. And we looked up and Don, who was still on the tee box, the first tee, said two planes hit and put up two fingers.

On my way down to the parking lot I told James Kelty, I said I hope this is not a terrorist attack. When we were notified of the second plane hitting, I knew it was a terrorist attack and I said I've got to go to the site.

So I left him there, got in my car. I'm on the way to the city, Manhattan. I stopped at my house, which is right on the way. I don't live too far from the golf course. I changed my clothing, got on the Cross Island Parkway and then onto the Long Island Expressway. At that time other emergency vehicles were heading into the city and we kind of made a caravan along the Long Island Expressway on our way into the city.

Q. Were you in radio contact at that point?

A. Yes. I could hear them doing two fifth alarms. There were two fifth alarms being called in. I was calling Hooper Street on my cell phone to ask if Chief Richard McCahey had gone. They said he was on his way. I got on the radio and I could hear fire marshals responding from Manhattan, from Manhattan base, also McCahey responding. He was trying to get through the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel. And I also called Hooper Street and I said the fire marshal of Hooper Street, they should respond also. At that point Bobby Byrnes was responding with fire marshals from SIU. I didn't know if other fire marshals were needed, so I didn't bother to call other bases to get Brooklyn, Bronx or Queens to respond.

As I was responding, as you're going down the expressway, of course, you get closer, you could see the World Trade Center, both towers are burning.

Q. You're still on the Queens side of the tunnel?

A. I'm still on the Queens side, yes. I'm going over that hill right before you go through the tunnel and you could see the skyline of the city.

Q. So you're west of the BQE at that point?

A. I'm probably -- no. The BQE? I'm past the BQE.

Q. So you're west?

A. I'm west of the BQE, yes.

I went through the tunnel with my caravan of cars. They turned to go south down Second Avenue. I went down Second Avenue south but I turned down 34th Street. Let me see. Let me get this straight. In fact, let me take that back. I don't know if I turned down 34th Street or Houston Street. But I went south for a while. It was either 34th Street or Houston Street. But I wanted to go down the West Street side. I was headed toward West Street because I wanted to go down West Street and approach it from that side. I thought I would have a better chance of getting closer because West Street is a large street and I'd have better chance of getting by the apparatus because it would be parked on the side.

I went down West Street, went past Chambers on West. Of course, you can see the towers burning all that time. Every time you saw them.

Q. Both towers were still standing at that point?

A. Yes, both towers were still standing. I went down to West Street. I went past Chambers and I probably parked a block and a half up from Vesey. I parked right behind a rig. I don't remember whose rig it was. I parked behind a rig, got out of the rig. I remember there was a chaplain there. He called himself a chaplain. I think he's a rabbi who works in counseling. But he calls himself a chaplain. He had his badge out and I know that this rabbi works in counseling and the counseling unit will be able to help you identify him. He helped me on with my coat and I got my helmet, I got my turnout coat and started walking down the street.

In front of me I could see the two buildings were burning. I'm walking down West Street. I'm passing rigs. There were a lot of other rigs parked there. I don't know the numbers. I didn't look at the numbers of the rigs. I was on the west side of West Street, walking on the west side of West Street. I walked underneath the north bridge. I was trying to find a command post.

On the way down there, I could hear McCahey establishing a command post on the south side of the World Trade Center, and after looking at the buildings, I found that I probably had more space on the north side, so I really wanted them to come to the north side. I was trying to contact them by radio in the car to get them to go north. Well, first in the car I was in radio contact and I was asking them exactly where he was and he was trying to describe to me where he was on West Street. I knew it was south from the position I was at. But I hadn't assessed it yet until I got out of the car.

So I get out of the car. I'm walking towards him, going south on West Street. I go underneath the north bridge and at that point I come across Chief Ganci, Commissioner Feehan and Chief Downey and they're standing across the street south of the north bridge looking up at the buildings and they're talking about what they're going to do.

Q. Were they on the west side of West Street?

A. They were on the west side of West Street. They were on the sidewalk on the west side of West Street. There were other firefighters around them. I could see them. There were firefighters across the street, but I didn't take note of who they were.

Q. And this would be on the west side near the north bridge outside the World Financial Center?

A. South of the north bridge nearest the World Financial Center on the west side of West Street on the sidewalk. I could see there was grass behind them, like a hill, like a hilly grass behind them. And they were talking about we're going to move command posts. They were really involved in trying to decide what they were going to do here, so I didn't really disturb them too much. My concern was moving my command post to where I thought it would be safe.

Q. Both of the buildings are standing at this point?

A. Both buildings are standing. And I did not take my radio out of my radio charger in the car and I couldn't see McCahey. I was looking south. I couldn't see McCahey. I was trying to use my cell phone. My cell phone didn't work. I was trying to call Hooper Street or headquarters so that they can get on the radio and tell McCahey to meet me north.

Before I got out of the car, by the way, let me backtrack, before I got out of the car, I was telling McCahey I'm north of the bridge. I'll meet you down there. By the time I got down to Ganci, I felt that being north of the World Trade Center was better than being south. So now I wanted to get a landline.

I remember at one point -- and I don't know if it was the first time I encountered them or the second time -- people were talking about moving their Fire Department command post north. So I felt that the fire marshals' command post should be north. I guess it may have been the first time I saw them because for some reason I started moving north on West Street again.

I went back underneath the bridge, walked north on West Street. I couldn't use my cell phone. I was trying to use my cell phone. Then I thought maybe I should get a landline so I could at least call headquarters, call Chris Tempro and have them radio Richie McCahey and the rest of the marshals to meet me up north.

Q. Can I ask you one follow-up to something you mentioned before? You saw Chief Downey, Chief Ganci and Bill Feehan outside the World Financial Center. During the time you were there, did you ever see Tom Fitzpatrick with those three?

A. No, I did not see Tom Fitzpatrick.

Q. Okay.

A. I walked north. Now I'm north of the bridge and there's some firefighters around me, there's firefighters walking down past me south and there's some firefighters milling around. I don't know exactly what they were doing. I turned around, I heard something, and I thought the facade and just the facade of the south tower was coming down, and one of the firefighters near me was saying holy shit, and I think he felt the building was going to collapse. I wasn't convinced of that at first. I thought maybe it was just some facade falling. All of a sudden there was a rumble and you see the building starting to collapse. At that point I ran north on West Street as fast as I could possibly run.

Q. At the point where you noticed the building was falling, were you south of Vesey?

A. I was south of Vesey. I was probably midway between Vesey and the north bridge, that north overpass. I was probably midway there. And the building started falling and I started running and a lot of people started running. Whoever was around me started running.

Q. Northbound?

A. Northbound. We were running northbound up West Street. At one point I could turn around. I turned around over my shoulder and I just saw this cloud. I mean, the building collapsed. There was a cloud coming at you. You knew you couldn't outrun the cloud. You just kept on running trying to get away from it, but you're not going to outrun it, so you kind of resign yourself to the fact that you're going to be overcome by the cloud. You don't know what's in the cloud. You saw a lot of papers flying around in the cloud, but you didn't know what solid material was in the cloud, what structural members or facade was in the cloud that could be coming at you, so that you just kept on going. You're overcome by the cloud. You heard things hitting around you and you say to yourself I hope nothing hits me. What can you say?

Q. At that point, or just prior to that point, did you know any of the people around you? Did you see anybody you recognized?

A. No, I did not. I remember before the cloud got to me there was a fireman near me running with me, but when the cloud overtook us, you can't see anything. You had zero visibility. What I did was I ran into some fire trucks. You ran into them. All of a sudden you saw a light in front of you flashing where the flashing lights were on and you just kept walking. You couldn't breathe. You can't breathe. You had a very tough time breathing and you're just saying to yourself I hope I get out of here. Your mouth is full of dust, concrete dust, whatever other kind of material there was in the dust and smoke. Your mouth and your nose is full of all that and you're just choking and you're trying to breathe. There comes a point in time when that dust cloud settles or the wind takes it away from you and it becomes easier and easier to breathe and all of a sudden it's clear.

Q. Any concept of how much time passed before that happened?

A. I mean, it seemed like a long time, but it could have been only two or three minutes. It seems like a long time when you're in the middle of it. At that time you looked at yourself, you're just full of this dust from head to toe, your helmet, your coat, everything. And I turned around and started walking back to see what was happening. The second building, the north tower was still standing, smoke coming out of it. I'm walking back to see if I could find Ganci and Feehan and the rest of them and see what we're doing here now. I still didn't have communication with the rest of my troops. I don't know where the rest of my troops were. I don't know how this collapse affected them. So I'm walking back towards where I last saw the command post.

Now, at this point I'm north of Vesey. I'm probably a block north of Vesey. I probably walked to a block north of Vesey. So I turned around and started walking south, got to around Vesey Street or past Vesey Street and I saw some Chiefs there, I saw a lot of people were there full of dust and trying to clean themselves off, spitting, getting it out of your mouth.

Q. Nobody you recognized in that group?

A. No, not yet.

Q. Okay.

A. And at one point someone comes along with a water bottle and gives me a water bottle to wash my face off and wash my mouth out with. And I'm walking now -- here is where my memory might be off. At one point I thought I saw Ganci and Feehan and I'm not sure if I really did. I'm very hazy. But I do remember seeing a Chief and it may have been Ganci, but there was a Chief there that said we're moving the command post two blocks north, which is the last thing, when I heard Ganci and Feehan the last time, they were considering moving the command post north. Now we're moving it two blocks north and people are walking north now.

Q. The second building is still standing?

A. The second building is still standing. People are starting to move towards me north and everybody is full of this dust and ash or whatever you want to call it. And the reason I'm saying I thought I saw Ganci, it may have been someone saying Chief Ganci is ordering.

Q. So you moved north on West Street, you were moving toward --

A. No. I'm moving south on West Street now. I've turned around and I'm moving south. So now I'm up to Vesey Street. I moved back towards Vesey Street where I'm encountering people moving north and these people are saying either Chief Ganci ordered it or I saw Chief Ganci, either one, or I might have seen Steve Mosiello. I'm not sure. But they said the command post is being moved two blocks north and Ganci's name is being mentioned. At that point I encountered Jerry Sheehan. During that time, during the time period before Jerry Sheehan, I might have seen Chief Pete Hayden over there. I believe Hayden was over there around by Vesey Street.

Jerry Sheehan is the lieutenant in charge of the NYPD Bomb Squad. He's an old friend of mine. I've known him for 20 years. And Jerry and I were trying to use our cell phones. At this point I want to get ahold of the marshals and just tell all marshals to stay away from the building and Jerry wants to get ahold of his Bomb Squad people. Neither of us had radios and neither of us had cell phones that were working.

So I walked one half block west on Vesey Street, on the north side of Vesey Street, one half block west of the West Side Highway, of West Street. There was a building and there was a parking lot in front of the building with cars in it and on the bottom floor was a bagel shop, like a bagel coffee shop type place, and Jerry and I went in there and we started using landlines. So Jerry made his phone calls and I made my phone calls and I was on the phone with Chris Tempro at headquarters.

A VOICE: That's the Embassy Suites?

CHIEF GARCIA: I don't know what the building is but there's that shop. It's the north side of Vesey.

A VOICE: Is it all the way down towards --

MR. McALLISTER: The movie theater; is that the one you're talking about?

A VOICE: Yes. The movie theater is on the corner there.

CHIEF GARCIA: Well, there was no movie theater in front of us. There was a parking lot there. The movie theater might be in the building on the upper floor.

A VOICE: Yes.

CHIEF GARCIA: And I got on the phone with Chris Tempro and I was going to tell him just get on the radio tell all fire marshals to retreat from the building, anybody south go south, two blocks south, anybody north go two blocks north of the building. I also had encountered James Devery, Jim Devery, Supervising Fire marshal. I encountered him on the street, on West Street, and I saw Fire marshal Sal Rignola. This is while I was walking down on West Street before I went on Vesey. Fire marshal Sal Rignola was there and he had a radio and he couldn't raise anybody, which made me worried about what was happening. He couldn't raise anybody on his radio. But I later found out that McCahey lost his radio when the building collapsed. I told him I was going to go down to the shop.

So Jerry and I went down to the shop. I was getting on the phone. I got Chris Tempro on the phone when the second building suddenly collapsed and we could see the second building collapsing through the windows of this coffee shop. We were half a block from West Street and the collapse was just on the other side of West Street and we saw it collapse. To me it was a faster collapse than the first collapse.

Q. That was the south tower?

A. The first collapse was the south tower. The second collapse was the north tower.

Q. Okay.

A. The north tower was now collapsing, but to me it was a more violent collapse. I don't know why. I think because the first collapse, to me, I thought at first, before it collapsed, it was just the facade going. This seemed to all of a sudden go down. To me it was more violent. It may not have been in reality, but to me it was more violent.

We got away from the windows. I dropped the phone and we told everybody that was in the coffee shop -- because the people who worked there were in there -- to get away and there were some firefighters or EMS workers there and they were giving us a bottle of water. We got away from the front windows because we thought they were in danger of blowing into the establishment. We went around into a kitchen area.

There was a door right in through a kitchen area right by the phones and we were looking around the corner to see what was happening.

The collapse occurred. This cloud again. Once again, we've got this cloud, this dark cloud of dust and smoke and whatever else is there. We get that coming towards the windows. The windows did not break inward.

The collapse was subsided, so we came out. I got on the phone with Tempro. I told him the second building just collapsed.

Q. Was it dark outside the window?

A. Yes. You can't see anything. It was zero visibility. The building had just collapsed. I said get the marshals on the radio. See who you can get on the radio, number one, if you get anybody on the radio, and, number two, tell them to get away from these buildings.

We went to the front door of the coffee shop and myself and Jerry Sheehan started calling to people. So we were right outside of the door of the coffee shop. We started calling to people to see if people would come to us because we wanted people to get into the coffee shop. And some people did hear us. We could hear them out there and we were calling to them, calling to them. We got them into the coffee shop to get some water on them, on their faces. The people who owned the establishment were trying to help out with the victims.

When it started clearing a little bit, I saw Chief Brian O'Flaherty. Chief O'Flaherty said to me don't touch my arm. He was injured. Obviously, he was injured. His face was cut up. He looked like he had a broken nose because he was bleeding heavily from his nose, and he was holding his arm, so I knew he had a broken arm or something seriously wrong with his arm. I sat him down in a chair and I started talking to him. I know Brian for over 20 years, probably 25 years, and we got an ambulance. There were ambulances west of us. On the water there were ambulances. There was a triage station set up. So we were trying to direct Brian off the chair after we washed off his face to go to the triage. We were going to get him to the triage station and get him an ambulance.

Also coming in from West Street down Vesey Street was Pete Hayden being carried by two firefighters or two officers. He could hardly walk. He really needed help walking. We were trying to get him an ambulance also. We got him into the bagel shop and we did some treatment. We gave him some first aid, very little first aid, but just washing their faces off and helping them try to get their breath back. At that point I got some EMTs that had some of those gurneys or whatever.

Q. Back boards?

A. Not even back boards but gurneys, the ones that roll along the ground, and they were starting to take people back to the ambulances.

Q. About how many people came into the coffee shop?

A. It could have been as many as ten, twelve. You know, they were coming in and out. If they were able to leave, they would leave. They would wash off and get themselves composed and leave.

Q. Uniformed and civilian people?

A. Mostly uniformed people. EMS people, too. Mostly EMS people and firefighters. I do remember one woman being carried was a civilian.

When I went back out, now it's cleared, Brian O'Flaherty has been taken care of, Pete Hayden, Chief Hayden has been taken care of. Myself and Sheehan walked back towards West Street. West Street, of course, is a mess. The bridge is now collapsed. The north bridge is now collapsed. I see Fire marshal Rignola and he has a radio with him still and I said to him can you get somebody on the radio? He did get somebody on the radio. I forget who it was. But they were south of the World Trade Center. They were south on West Street, way south.

He told me that he jumped into a tower ladder when the second building collapsed and that a piece of metal went right through his tower ladder, his front windshield. He was down on the floor and it just missed him. So he survived because he had gotten himself down on the floor in his tower ladder. But I saw the tower ladder. The cab was like demolished.

Q. So the tower ladder was stationary at the time; nobody was operating it?

A. No, nobody was operating it. It was just stationary. It was just parked there by West and Vesey. He just jumped in there to get away from the collapse and this piece of building went right through the front windshield. Luckily he had gone down. He was on the floor.

At that time Chief Fellini -- and I can't tell you how long after. Everybody was kind of wandering around on West Street wondering what they were going to do. Some of the fire Chiefs were saying we're moving north, we're moving north. That seemed to be the theme for a while, moving north, moving north, you know, before the second collapse, and then after the second collapse it was the same thing, let's move north. At one point I saw Chief Fellini finally arrived. He was there for some reason and he started taking some charge of the situation and he told everybody we're moving north.

I think everybody's concern at this point was, of course, who was trapped. There was no order here at all. They were taking about where Chief Nigro was and someone said Chief Nigro is in the command post south; he's all right. People started realizing Chief Ganci wasn't around. And this is just general talk.

Q. Can you describe what you saw as you looked down West Street?

A. Down West Street, well, what I saw was two buildings down, smoke coming from two buildings. The cars that were in the parking lot, there was a fire in the parking lot in front of that bagel shop I was in. It was like a big, open, empty lot with cars in it. There was a fire that started there and it was spreading to other cars and once in awhile you'd have some explosions there and the fire actually after a period of time got pretty big because it was multiple cars. Several cars were going at once. So some debris from the building was burning and must have landed there and started these cars on fire. So you had this black smoke coming from these cars that were on fire, which no one paid attention to. We all said so what; let them burn themselves out. And you also heard what I thought were gunshots.

Later on, in a conversation with Jerry Sheehan, he told me those were real gunshots. Police officers that were trapped were shooting their guns off to try to draw attention to where they were trapped. I found out later on that Commissioner Dunne was trapped in a car in the first collapse and before the second collapse had happened the Bomb Squad had brought a car down because Dunne couldn't walk. He has a bad knee. If you noticed, he's been on crutches for a while.

Q. Right.

A. So a Bomb Squad car had gone down and gotten Commissioner Dunne right before the second collapse occurred. Commissioner Dunne had been north of Vesey Street when the second collapse had occurred because he was taken out by car. He had been first trapped in a car in the first collapse. These are stories I've heard afterwards. And when Fellini got there things started to come into order.

My concern, of course, was the fire marshals. So I was concentrating on trying to reach fire marshals. At one point I found out that Rignola, McCahey and a bunch of marshals were south of the World Trade Center and they had moved towards Battery Park. And I knew I had fire marshals down there.

What I didn't know was that Supervising Fire Marshal James Kelty had left the golf course and was in 10 Engine when the collapses occurred with his brother, captain of 10 Engine. He described to me what happened there. When he got there, there were people injured coming out of the buildings and they were trying to treat people and bring them into 10 Engine and try to treat them, and what they thought was a third plane hitting was really at that point the first building collapsing.

Q. 10 Engine is on West Street?

A. No. 10 Engine is on Liberty Street, on Liberty Street just east of the plaza. Why they didn't get touched, I don't know. I mean, the firehouse is a little beat up, but it was still standing. It's right on Liberty. Here's Liberty.

CHIEF GARCIA: Yes. Where is the Trade Center?

A VOICE: This is 2 World Trade right here.

A. Yes. They're right here.

Q. Okay. Got it. It's directly south of 2 World Trade?

A. Yes, 2 World Trade Center.

Q. Got it.

A. And they were treating people and everybody was just trying to get to radios to see how they were. As time passed, I was able to determine where the rest of my marshals were. Chief McCahey came around to meet me north of the World Trade Center because I insisted on everybody coming north, but he said they were safe down south, but he also told me Chief Nigro was in a command trailer by Battery Park, that he was okay, that Chief Cassano was okay, but no one had seen Ganci or Feehan. The word was circulated that Ganci and Feehan were trapped or had been involved in the collapse. There was no talk about Ray Downey. But Ganci and Feehan definitely. I saw Steve Mosiello.

After that they were just trying to organize parties to go in there and try to get people out, and I saw my marshals. Basically what we were going to do at that point was stand by to see what we could help out with the digging and we would later decide how we were going to conduct an investigation and what kind of investigation was going to be conducted.

Q. Did there come a time then when you did set up a command post north of the site?

A. Not really. What we did was we used the site south. I had more marshals south than north. But there was no real formal command post ever set up. I hung around. I was near the command post they were setting up north of Vesey. I was near that command post. And the concentration at that time, it's not investigation, but everyone is thinking about how to get people out, and people were trying to break up into crews, it seemed like they were trying to break up into crews, but there was a lot of confusion. There was a lot of confusion.

Q. Any idea approximately what time it was now, at this point in time?

A. This has got to be I'm going to say about a half an hour after the second collapse. Before then really everybody was in a daze. Everybody was just trying to assess the situation, and it was a tough situation to assess.

Q. Sure.

A. I don't think anybody had ever seen anything like this.

MR. McALLISTER: Are there any follow-up questions? It's pretty clear to me.

Q. Chief do you have anything else that you'd like to add, any other observations that you may have had on that day?

A. Not really. My observations are that, I mean, we've never had a situation like this. From an operational point of view, even though I'm not a Chief in operation, a fire Chief, I was a firefighter at Rescue 1, I was a lieutenant in the South Bronx fighting fires, and I had never seen so much fire in a high-rise building. Never. Even when I was in Rescue 1 as a fireman in rescue in Manhattan. I have never seen more than one floor going and an entire floor. You're talking about multiple floors and the entire floor from west to east, north to south, an entire floor burning. That's a lot of fire. I don't think we were capable of putting out that much fire in a building.

My other observation is that the airliners crashing into the building may have weakened the building, but that is not what caused the collapse. What caused the collapse was the intense fire from the jet fuel that continued burning along with combustible materials on multiple floors and the fact that the building was built with a core construction. The floors were supported by the core and also by the skin of the building, the steel outer skin of the building. That's how those floors were supported. So here you have an airliner coming in, one airliner came in straight and hit on an upper floor, that was in the north tower, and it hit probably in the 90s, the floors it hit. The upper 90s it hit. The second plane, which caused the first collapse, as it came into building banked, it banked, so the wings, if you saw the film, the wings hit multiple floors now. Now the amount of floors that were hit were greater because the wings had banked. So then you have the wings going into floors above and below the main fuselage of the plane, and it also hit near the corner and it hit on a lower floor, probably 20 floors below, somewhere in the 80s, in the low 80s, 83rd floor, somewhere along there, 83rd floor, 81st floor. That's where the second plane hit. Now, that's in the south tower and that's the first tower that collapsed. So you have that plane hitting.

Now you have all this intense heat, you have heat probably up even close to 2,000 degrees burning here. Steel joists and steel I-beams, at 1,200 degrees of heat they'll expand nine inches per hundred foot of steel. So per hundred foot of steel, steel will expand nine inches. So you have this expansion going on because they've been subjected between 45 minutes to an hour and a half to heat now. The second tower to collapse was the first one hit. That was an hour and a half after it was hit.

Q. What do you estimate the temperature was at that time?

A. Reaching 2,000 degrees in those towers. So now we're going to have these this steel expanding and also it starts warping and twisting. So once it was weakened to that point, the steel, besides the crash, it was weakened by the fire, which really caused it to collapse, one floor started collapsing into another floor, and that's what caused the collapse. So it was really the fire more than the plane crashing into the building that caused the collapse.

How do we operationally treat that in the future? I don't think we can. I think we restrict our efforts to try to get people out of the building, but we don't have enough water or enough manpower to get up in that building and put out a fire that's that extensive in one of these buildings.

Q. In the period of time?

A. In any period of time. It will burn itself out before. Either the building is going to collapse or it's going to burn itself out. In the Empire State Building, the Empire State Building would not have collapsed. It's different types of construction. It's not core construction. It's masonry, it's columns, it's heavier built. But then, of course, you don't have these big, open spaces. In the Empire State Building it's more compartmentalized.

Q. Right.

A. So a building like the Empire State Building would not have collapsed. You would have had a huge fire there, you would have had a lot of floors burnt out, you would have never put out the fire, it probably would have burnt itself out also, but the building would have stood. This type of construction, I don't think we'd ever be able to put out a fire like this.

We restrict our actions to evacuation rather than trying to put the fire out, and that's the only observation I could make.

MR. McALLISTER: Does anybody else have anything? Okay. It's now 11:48 a.m. on October 2nd, 2001. This concludes the interview with Chief Garcia of the Bureau of Fire Investigation. Thank you, Chief.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CHIEF MARK STEFFENS

Interview Date: October 3, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. McALLISTER: I'm McAllister from the Bureau of Administration. We're interviewing Chief Mark Steffens of Division 1, formerly the commanding officer at the Office of Medical Affairs. The date of the interview is October 2nd, 2001. It is now 2:47 p.m. This conversation is taking place in conference room 8E13 at Fire Department headquarters.

I'm also joined by --

MR. CAMPBELL: Patrick Campbell, fire marshal.

MR. STERACE: Fire Marshal Michael Sterace.

MR. McALLISTER: And Chief Mark Steffens.

Q. Chief Steffens, I'd like to draw your attention to the date of September the 11th, 2001, and I'd like for you, in your own words, to describe your experiences from that day.

A. I normally start work at 9:00, so 8:50 I was still home showering, getting ready for work. I saw what happened on the television going on. I heard what happened. I saw initially the first tower on fire.

I got dressed as fast as I could. I got into my department vehicle, and I proceeded all the way to the Kosciusko Bridge down the BQE. My next recollection is being on the FDR Drive. I don't remember how I got from the BQE to the FDR Drive.

My next recollection is I'm coming down the FDR Drive. I get down to about the Staten Island ferry terminal, and I couldn't get any further. Civilians were running everywhere. There was smoke in the air, and the white powder was in the air. I think only the first tower had dropped at that point.

Q. Had dropped?

A. The people who were running, they said the first tower had dropped already. So I would imagine this is probably like about -- I'd say somewhere between 9:15 and 9:30, thereabouts, by the time I got into Manhattan.

I abandoned my vehicle at about the Staten Island ferry terminal. I pulled over there, by where they have the chopper pads on the East River. I abandoned my vehicle. I put a mayday on the radio that I was abandoning my vehicle because I did not have a portable radio with a charged battery at that time.

So I got out. I was on foot. I was heading up South Street to Division 1 on foot. That was as far as I got. Coming down South Street was Jerry Bacchus, who was the ALS coordinator for the EMS command. He picked me up.

Q. He was in a vehicle?

A. He was in a suburban. He had the suburban stocked with medical supplies. He picked me up, because I was on foot at that time. I got in the suburban with Jerry Bacchus. We went down the drive, under the hole, out onto West Street. We got up to about the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel.

When we got to the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel, about that point on West Street, there was a Port Authority cop standing there. They were shouting, "The tower's going to come down. The tower's coming down. You've got to get out of here."

Q. What were you able to observe at that time around there?

A. Black smoke. Black smoke and people running everywhere. A lot of fire apparatus on both sides of West Street. I didn't see any guys, just apparatus. I saw some stretched lines and things like that.

So we continued to drive into the smoke cloud. We got to maybe one block north of where the Battery Tunnel exits onto West Street there, and then, boom, a massive explosion. Right in front of us we saw what looked like a fireball and smoke. It was rolling this way.

I said, "Jerry, we've got to get out of this fucking car." I'm afraid --

Q. That's okay.

A. I'm afraid -- so we bailed out of the truck.

Q. This is your recollection.

A. We bailed out of the suburban. We went underneath it. The thing blew over us. I had my turnout coat on. I put my face in my helmet. The thing blew over us. I felt heat. I felt all kinds of debris and stuff hitting my body.

When I opened my eyes, it was pitch-black. I closed my eyes again. I was praying. When I opened my eyes a second time -- and it feels like each one of these instances was a long period of time, but I don't know how long it was.

When I opened my eyes a second time, it was like skiing in a blizzard. It was just white, a sea of white, and everything blowing all around. So I felt okay. "Jerry, we've got to get out of here."

We got out from under the vehicle. We got back in the vehicle. We jumped over the divider and started driving back down West Street to the battery. We got to battery -- we put the vehicle up against where that old fortress is right by the Holocaust memorial. There's an old fortress right where the Statue of Liberty ferry terminal is.

Q. Sure.

A. We put the vehicle up against that wall, and each one of us climbed into one of those cubbyholes.

Then there was another it sounded like an explosion and heavy white powder, papers, flying everywhere. We sat put there for a few minutes. It kind of dissipated. We pulled the vehicle out, right down to the battery. We turned on the emergency lights, and it became a casualty collection point.

Q. Had you been in radio contact from the time you were on West Street?

A. The last radio contact was when I maydayed when I bailed out of the vehicle. No other radio contact after that point.

Q. There wasn't a radio in the suburban?

A. There was a radio in the suburban, but I don't recall that we were using it. We were running at that point. We were coming down West Street. One of the EMS guys was running. He was just dressed in blue, covered in soot, bleeding from under the face like this. We grabbed him. We threw him in the back of the suburban. We pulled down to West Street.

When the smoke and all of that dissipated, we turned on the lights. It became a casualty collection point there. All the EMS people were running down West Street. They collected by our vehicle.

All kinds of vessels, barges, little small pleasure craft, everything was just pulling up to the dock, and we were putting civilians -- there was one police lieutenant -- I don't know his name. He did a fantastic job. And we just evacuated as many civilians onto these boats and sent them to Jersey.

My guys established that casualty collection point. We were doing eye washes and boo-boos and giving out whatever masks we had to civilians and to cops like that. We were there for what seemed like a couple of hours at the battery until the point there was nobody left, just the emergency service people.

At that point I became aware of an EMS operation that was going on in the Staten Island ferry terminal. So I gathered up my guys, and we walked on foot to the Staten Island ferry terminal, where I was reunited with the other folks that established the casualty collection point at the Staten Island ferry terminal there.

I was there for a couple of hours, and then we were all directed to report to the command post which was at Chambers and West.

That was early afternoon. We regrouped and were given various assignments. I was sent to command the Chelsea operation.

Q. So you think that when you were on the drive the smoke you saw was probably from one of the aircraft and not from a building?

A. No, because it wasn't heavy smoke. You could smell fire. I know the smell of fire, and I have been around long enough. So I recognized the smell of fire. But there wasn't all of that debris or anything flying around in the air. There was just people, people everywhere, people running.

I got to the point where I couldn't go any further with my vehicle because there were people in the streets, on the drive. So that's when I decided to bail out of the vehicle, figuring I could make better time on foot.

Q. Sure.

A. My thought was let me go to Division 1, group whatever I could so we could go to the incident site.

Q. When you were on West Street approaching the World Trade Center site, do you think that's when the first tower that came down?

A. I think it was the second tower came down, although I don't know for sure.

Q. Was there a lot of debris while you were still going on West Street?

A. No.

Q. Powder?

A. No. A lot of fire apparatus, a lot of engine companies like that.

Q. The street was clean?

A. It seemed wet. There were stretched lines. I didn't see my guys. This seemed weird to me, all this apparatus but no guys. There were lines stretched on the ground but no guys.

Q. So it was clear while you were going up West Street?

A. Yes. That's when we heard this massive explosion and I saw this thing rolling towards us. It looked like a fireball and then thick, thick black smoke.

Q. Is it possible the second one occurred while you were in the battery?

A. The second one had to have occurred while we were at the battery, because that's when all this white stuff started flying around.

Q. That sounds right.

A. But the time line -- I don't know when these things actually occurred in real time. I was home at 8:50. I had to be in the car before 9:00. I was just about dressed. I was shaving, putting on the finishing touches, when I saw the thing on the news. I ran to the car. You can look at my unit history in the CAD system, see what time I logged on and proceeded down there. It took me a while to get down the BQE.

Q. It seems like there was about a 45-minute period, between about 9:45 a.m. and 10:30.

A. 8:45.

Q. No, I'm talking about where the both the buildings came down. I'm not entirely accurate on that, but that's what it seems like to me, at the time.

A. It seemed like the time frame between what we saw on West Street and what occurred when we were at the battery, it seemed like they happened close together. But when I think about the things that occurred during that period of time, it couldn't have been close together because too many things happened. But it seemed like they happened very close to one another.

The whole thing seemed like it happened very quickly from getting no further with the vehicle so let me just pull this car over and bail out, what I can do on foot. I didn't get more than a block or two -- you know where the fire station is on South Street?

Q. Yes.

A. That's where I was. Jerry picked me up right there. We went right into the hole, came around up onto West Street. I didn't know what the hell -- when the Port Authority cop tried to stop us -- he waved and said, "No, the building's going to come down."

At that point I wasn't listening to any cop. My thought was I've got to go there. My guys are there. Then boom and the cloud. I didn't want to stay in the vehicle. I was afraid that the windows were going to blow out. My reflex action was to get underneath it.

Q. How did the vehicle survive when you got out from under the vehicle?

A. Just covered with soot. It didn't blowout any windows or anything like that. I guess we weren't close enough. So the vehicle survived. It had a lot of powder and stuff on the windshield like that. At that point I was just grateful to be able to get in and get the hell out of there.

Q. Is there any follow-ups? I want to know, did you see anybody on the way that was present that you knew besides the guy that picked you up, Bacchus? Anybody else? Did you see anybody else from the Fire Department?

A. No. No, I grabbed the one EMS guy. I never saw him before. I remember his name is Badillo, Benjamin Badillo, an EMT in the Bronx. He just came out of the cloud, poor kid, covered, bleeding down the face. I grabbed him and said get in this truck, and the three of us bailed out to the battery.

Q. Any follow-ups?

Do you have any other observations, Mark?

A. When I went back to recover my vehicle, I recovered my vehicle and caught up with Chief Basile and Chief Villani. We were going to go look for their vehicles. We drove out onto West Street. I came from the Statue of Liberty ferry terminal. My car was on the east side, so it was fine, it was okay.

We drove back down again. We weren't able to go down the hole. We went onto West Street. When we pulled onto West Street, it was just like nothing I've ever seen in my life. All the apparatus, the fire trucks, everything all blown out, the windows were all blown out, body parts lying on the street, mud, soot, people walking around dazed.

I saw one proby -- he had a proby on the helmet -- by himself, walking by himself. I tried to get him to come with us. He said, "No, no, I've got to go back. I've got to go back." We washed his eyes. I gave him something to clean his face. Then he turned around and went back into the cloud. I never saw him again.

There were lines stretched --

Q. Do you recall his name?

A. No. Young, young guy. He had a proby on the front of the helmet.

Q. Any numbers on there?

A. I can't remember. I can't remember at all. I didn't want him to go back, and he wouldn't listen to me. I wasn't going to hold him back. He walked off.

Q. That was after the second or after the first collapse?

A. After the second. He just walked back into that big, black cloud.

That's as much as I recall.

Q. I appreciate your time today. Thank you very much. Thanks, Chief.

A. I'm sorry I couldn't be of more help.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

PARAMEDIC MANUEL DELGADO

Interview Date: October 2, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. McALISTER: This is Kevin McAlister from the Bureau of Administration. It is October 2nd at 2:03 p.m. We're in conference room 8E13 at Fire Department Headquarters, and in a moment we will begin interviewing Paramedic Manuel Delgado. I'm here today with...

FIRE MARSHAL CAMPBELL: Patrick Campbell, Fire Marshal.

FIRE MARSHAL STARACE: Michael Starace, Fire Marshal.

MR. McALISTER: Now we'll start with Paramedic Manuel Delgado. He's assigned to the Office of Medical Affairs.

Q. Drawing your attention to September the 11th, could you describe where you were working that day and when you became aware of the World Trade Center incident?

A. It must have been about five to 9:00. I got a call from Joe Farrell, who is a DOH rep from the Bureau of Emergency Services, the Department of Health, calling me saying what's going on at the World Trade Center? I had no knowledge of it. I looked immediately to the CAD, the computer-aided dispatch system, in the computer. I noticed that there was a 1040, a plane into the World Trade Center. I called him back and advised him of such.

At this point, one of the doctors that was here, Dr. Cherson, I advised him of the fact that there was a 1040 going on and maybe, you know, it's part of our response matrix.

Q. What's a 1040?

A. An airplane into a building.

So I called Commissioner Clair, who at that time was up in Albany in a CMAC meeting, let him know what was going on, and I told him I would get back to him as soon as I got to the scene. Myself, Dr. Cherson, and we met up with Dr. Guttenberg, who is the EMS fellow in the office downstairs, us three proceeded to get in Dr. Cherson's car and drove across the Brooklyn Bridge.

Obviously, when we were driving across the Brooklyn Bridge, it was very obvious that there was something serious going on at the World Trade Center. There was a gaping black hole. It seemed like the upper floors, and I don't know exactly -- now I know through press reports what floor more or less was hit, but it looked to me like the top ten floors were fully engulfed in smoke at this time.

Q. How many of the towers were burning; one or two?

A. One. Only one at this time.

So we went across the Brooklyn Bridge, had a little trouble navigating through the traffic, and finally arrived at the corner of I believe it's West Broadway. Let me look on this map real quick. West Broadway and Vesey.

As soon as we arrived, 84, a massive explosion goes off, and at this point we didn't know what it was. We thought it was a secondary explosion. We didn't know that it was a second plane. In fact, I didn't know there was a second plane until much later in the evening.

An explosion goes off. I immediately tell everyone to get out of the car and hide somewhere, go underneath something. It's interesting because, as we were there, there was a police car, I guess, on Vesey, on the corner there, and some debris comes down from whatever this explosion was, at the time we really didn't know, and it just crushes it, I mean, crushes the top front of the police car, which really scared me at that point.

Q. Could you tell if it was airplane parts?

A. It looked like an airplane part afterward, yes, it did. It looked like part of an engine. It was pretty big. It was probably the size of the hood because it kind of hit it, bounced, and then rolled off.

So then at that point we were approached by a police officer holding one of his cops with a massive evulsion of the forehead. I need the car, I need the car.

Q. What does that mean in layman's terms?

A. An evulsion is the scalp sort of like was peeled back. So there was some heavy bleeding. It was worse actually than the injury. She still had her consciousness. He says, I need the car, I need the car.

So Dr. Cherson proceeded to West Street to the temporary command center at that time. Me, the cop and the cop who was injured and Dr. Guttenberg got into the car and drove this cop that was injured down to Beekman. We drove the cop to Beekman, dropped her off. At that point people were being mobilized at the hospital itself.

Dr. Guttenberg and myself then jumped back in the car and went back to the site.

Q. When you say you went back to the site, where exactly did you go at that point?

A. Well, we couldn't get back to where we were on Vesey and West Broadway, so we ended up on -- now, let me look on the map here. Up further. Broadway itself, Broadway between, I would say, Fulton and Ann Street, I guess it is. Fulton and Ann, yes. We kind of left the car there in the middle of the street and proceeded to walk down to the West Street command, which was a command post at this time.

When I got back to the command post, I was able to secure -- because everyone's cell phones seemed to be dead at that point. Luckily, one of the lieutenants there handed me a cell phone. I was able to call Commissioner Clair, who was still in Albany, telling him at this point we had a very, very serious incident going on, and that I don't know how he and the other physicians who were up there could get themselves down here as quickly as possible because this was a major terrorist attack. So he told me that basically the state police were securing a chopper for him and the other two physicians to fly them down. That was my last communication with him.

So we were at West command for a while.

Dr. Cherson moved forward to I believe it was in another command post. I don't know what building this was. At this point it becomes really crazy.

Q. Can I ask you a detail question before you get there?

A. Yes.

Q. The West command, I see it located here on the map roughly at the corner of -- what is that, Vesey and West?

A. Yes. That looks look Vesey and West, I guess?

Q. Yes. That's the north bridge, I think?

A. Right. We were just in front of the north bridge.

Q. Could you describe, were you on the east side of West Street, the west side?

A. We were on the west -- well, no. I would say the east side of West Street. I guess, on the middle, there's like a barrier here, sort of like a potted, planted barrier before you get to the financial district area. So we were all standing there. The vehicles or the staging, which is the area where the ambulance was set up, was back here on West Street.

Q. Who was with you at that point in time?

A. At that point, Dr. Cherson was with me. I saw Commissioner Drury showed up at the scene. He was with us there for a little while. He was looking for Commissioner Gregory. Captain Jace Pinkus from Communications was there and an assorted amount of EMS Lieutenants and Fire Operations people were around. I remember at one point seeing the Mayor. I saw Commissioner Von Essen. Really, at that point, I really lose sight of what was going on because there was an horrific site. I mean, people were starting to jump or fall from the top.

Q. You were able to observe that?

A. Yes, definitely. We saw them jumping from here down and that was really horrific. There was nothing you could do for them. We wanted to go in after them and they basically told us don't because it's very dangerous at this point.

Somewhere along the line Dr. Cherson was told that -- and I don't know who relayed this information to him. I guess it's Vesey command, but actually it was on Church between -- I was closer to Cortlandt and I don't know what street this is. Dey Street?

Q. Dey Street.

A. Actually, that's where the command post was, a triage command, and we were told that they were getting hammered. So what happened was that myself --

Q. That was a staging point for medics and EMTs?

A. Yes, right. Exactly. That's where mainly all the medics and EMTs were starting to treat people as they were exiting the building. So myself -- well, first, before that, Dr. Cherson tells Dr. Guttenberg to go back to the car and get the weapons of mass destruction kit, which is basically the TUPAM, the atropine and the narcotics that we carry in case of a biological incident. That's what immediately we started thinking. So Dr. Guttenberg goes back to the car.

At this point, also, at the north bridge, we ran into Dr. Asaeda, who got down there on his own response. So Dr. Asaeda was going to set up a command over in the lobby of OEM. What building is that, 7? Tower 7?

Q. 7 World Trade Center.

A. 7 World Trade Center. So Dr. Guttenberg and Dr. Asaeda were to set up their command -- there were already some medics and EMTs in the lobby of 7 World Trade Center. So they were going to set up their own triage and command center there. Dr. Cherson and myself then walked back to the Vesey command. But at this point it wasn't right on Fulton. I remember Cortlandt more than I do Fulton, although it might have been. I don't know. I remember the opening of the building and seeing the north tower right in front of me. That I remember very clearly.

We were getting hammered with patients. At one point we wanted to move forward and again we were told do not. Dr. Cherson made it very clear, don't go any more forward because of the bodies and everything else that's coming down.

Q. So now, just stopping you at that point, both of the towers are still standing?

A. Both of the towers are still standing, yes.

Q. You're looking basically straight at the north tower?

A. Right.

Q. You're looking across the plaza of the World Trade Center?

A. Yes, right, and people are exiting this way in droves. I mean, there was just a stream of people running, running, running, and basically at this point our triage was, if you're walking, keep walking, and if people are being carried or people were falling, we would move forward, and we moved forward as much as in between towers I believe this was 4 and 5, buildings 4 and 5.

Q. That's right.

A. I know we went in there and helped some people come out, some lady, who she ended up in the pictures, in a red dress, who was extremely burnt. There was another guy who had to have second and third degrees over about 80 percent of his body, and he was carried out halfway and I guess collapsed or someone dropped him and just ran. We picked him up and started bringing him out.

At this point we were getting an influx of equipment, LSU unit, like the logistical support units who carry the oxygen and all that stuff. They were coming into the area to give us oxygen, to give us blankets, and then units were also coming in. But we were getting inundated with patients. We had more patients than we had ambulances. We were stuffing four and five people in an ambulance at this point. I mean, it was just to get people out of there with minimal treatment. There was nothing you could do.

Q. At that point in time, did you see anybody you knew either from the fire or the EMS side working the ambulances?

A. Yes.

Q. Who did you see?

A. Quite a few people. There was Carlos Lillo, who I later found out he's deceased.

Q. Where did you last see Carlos?

A. Carlos was with me and it's interesting because Carlos always had a smile on his face, and Carlos has been around for a while, and I remember at one point on Church we had like four or five critically, critically ill people who were laid out and there were people still streaming out, and this is after, where we're moving back and forth trying to get people in and out, I remember turning and seeing Carlos with his helmet and tears pouring down his eyes, and at first I thought maybe this guy is overwhelmed, maybe he needs to get out of here, you know? I go to him, Carlos, what's the matter? What's going on? He says, my wife's in there. I said, listen, man. This is God's will. You've got to help me with the people. Snap out of it. We've got a lot of patients. You've got to help me here. So he does and he begins to do what he has to do, which is to help me treat people and start sorting who is bad and who isn't.

Now, time, I have no idea, time factor here. I don't know what is five minutes, what is two minutes, what took ten minutes. I know that a Lieutenant showed up with the LSU unit, again, and says, I need help getting oxygen out of the back of this vehicle. I remember seeing oxygen tanks in a milk crate.

By the way, the other people who were here were Lieutenant Bruce Medjuck, who is from the EMS operations, Captain Janice Olszewski. I remember seeing -- Dr. Cherson was there with me. I lose track of who was there really. I mean, I remember Lillo because it sort of stuck out in my mind that this man was crying so hard and like it kind of -- he was out of place because I was wondering for a slight moment, I said, what's he doing here? He's a Queens unit. But at this point I figured everyone was being brought in and who knows what the heck is going on.

Q. Did you lose track of him then or did you see him?

A. Well, it's interesting because I didn't lose track of him because I was concerned. I was concerned of the fact that he was overwhelmed, I think, by the fact that his wife was in the building.

Oh, you know who else I saw there? Gabe Depena.

Q. Delapena?

A. Delapena, yes. I saw him also there because at one point he goes, Manny, Manny, what's going on? He's another one that was searching for his wife because I believe his wife was in the tower.

Q. I think that's right.

A. Yes. But I tried to keep my eye on Carlos as much as I can. I'm dealing with the people that are coming out. There's some other people there that I don't really know their name. I know their faces. A black gentleman that works down for operations also. In fact, there's a picture of them both treating that lady that I'm talking about with the red dress in one of the Time magazines that I forgot his name. It will come to me in a minute. But anyway, we're treating.

I remember at one point or another this Lieutenant coming in and asking for help to get the oxygen out of the vehicle. I go to help him, and at that point I remember not seeing Carlos, and I don't know if he was there or not there. But immediately once I put the oxygen down, I hear the rumble, and I heard a rumble that we thought was another plane. That's what immediately everyone said, there's a plane coming, there's another plane coming.

So we all looked up and what we saw was tower, I guess, 2, the south tower, begin to do this. The top kind of did this and there was a horrendous rumble.

Q. Now, your hand is showing that it's kind of tilted in one direction. What direction did it tilt?

A. It was tilting towards us, so it had been to be tilting eastward.

Q. East?

A. Maybe southeast. I'm not sure because at this point it's total pandemonium. At that point we hear the rumble and, you know, this is it. I figure I'm dead. I thought this tower was going to topple. So I start to run. I remember running -- I don't know which way I ran. I don't even know what street I ended up on to be very honest with you. I ran -- it must have been either this or Fulton. One of these two.

Q. Dey Street or Fulton Street?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know if there was a church next to you?

A. I don't know. I know there were stores up the block. So I start to run --

Q. So you definitely headed east; you're just not sure down what street?

A. Yes. I didn't want to go west. I figured let me go east. There's a subway station somewhere here, so it may have been Fulton maybe?

Q. Yes, it was. It's a major station there.

A. I remember seeing that and I remember saying I'm not going down there because I don't want to be suffocated, I don't want to be suffocated. But as I ran, I got knocked down by it seemed like even someone punched me in the back, like a blast it seemed. It just kind of picked me up and knocked me down. I scraped my elbow, I twisted my ankle, my pants got all ripped, my glasses got blown off and the helmet came off. I get up quickly and all I can see now is just -- it had to be on Fulton -- the blast, this dark cloud coming at us, at me anyway, because I don't even know who's around me at this point. You kind of lose all -- I lost all track of time. I lost basically all body movements and I was going on, and then we're engulfed in the smoke, which was horrendous.

One thing I remember, it was hot. The smoke was hot and that scared me. I've treated in 18 years many, many people with smoke inhalation, and I know the consequences of inhaling heat. So I got really scared. I tried to put my T-shirt over me. That didn't work. I couldn't see because my glasses were shot. I couldn't see because my eyes were irritated. Like one guy said, it was like breathing cotton balls, that's what it felt like, because your mouth was just full of this shit and your nose, everywhere. I'm running -- not running because I'm walking now. I'm afraid. I'm thinking in my mind I'm going to die of suffocation or somebody's going to run me over, because you couldn't see your hand in front of you. That's how dark it got. I walked into one or two poles.

Then out of -- I don't know. It was God's miracle, basically. I don't even know how I ended up there. I was on the corner and, as I was telling them just before you walked in, I heard a banging and I walked towards the banging and there was, as later I found out, it was a Fire Marshal and a cop, a detective in plainclothes, who were banging, trying to break the door down in one of these computer stores on the corner there.

Q. Do you know the marshal's name?

A. No. He did take our names down, so he should have a record of it. I haven't been able to find out who he is. So they're banging on the door, and I remember telling the cop, you know, you have a fucking gun, you have a fucking gun, use it, use it, we're [redacted]

Q. Sure.

A. That's exactly what he does. In between his coughing, he takes out his gun and the first bullet doesn't break it. Second one, the glass comes down. It must have been a thick glass. We were able to get inside.

Q. So he fired off two shots?

A. Two shots, yes. Then inside there's, I guess, like a gate, sort of like the gate that we have downstairs in that store, an inside gate. So we see that and we're like, oh, shit. So, finally, us three, we hold it up and we let the civilians get underneath. I think there were one or two of them. There weren't a whole lot of them. Or maybe three. I'm not even sure at this point. They go under and we hold it for each other and we go under and we go into the store. We walk up some escalators to the second floor, which looked to be like a computer store. We started looking for water or anything to wet ourselves to clean off our faces because we're all coughing and hacking. We find a water fountain and we all basically drink from that and wait for the smoke to clear a bit.

Q. Is the smoke in the building, though?

A. Yes. And the smoke alarms are going off and who knows what else is going off. There's smoke but it's not that bad, though, so you could see. It's a haze. It's sort of like when you're in a club and you see the haze, you know, it's hazy, it's not necessarily black, pitch, acrid smoke that was outside. I would say about five or six, seven minutes go by while we're inside. It seemed like an eternity, you know what I mean? So we told the civilians, look, just head towards the water. Leave. Get out of the store. Go towards the water and keep walking. Just keep walking. Don't go this way.

The three of us proceed -- and I don't even know what street it is. I think it was Fulton. It might have been Dey Street. I don't even know what street it was. We start heading back. I believe the store was probably on Broadway. I think I made it that far up. I'm not even sure, though. It had to be because it couldn't have been on Church.

Q. It wasn't J & R was it?

A. No. I know where J & R is over by City Hall. No, I wasn't that far. It had to be around Broadway. So I remember we go outside and I lose track of where they went and I start heading down I guess it's Fulton Street and I heard the rumble again. So now it's the second tower coming down.

Q. Now, just prior to that, had the air cleared outside?

A. Yes. It had cleared to the point where you could see. It was still smoky. There was still a heavy smoke condition in the area and dust, I mean, and papers and debris and God knows what else was in the air. But it looks even like snow sometimes because that's kind of coming down from everywhere.

Q. Were there any people out on the street at that point?

A. There were people walking around, yes, in a daze. It looked like a moon landscape really. The lights were on, cars were driving by, and then more dust would be kicked up. I remember walking down and then I heard the second rumble, and I don't even know where it was now. I'm not even sure if I went back to Church or what. But we heard the second rumble, turned right around and started running again and went -- and I remember just going -- I don't even know what street. Now that I look at this map, I don't know what street I was at to be honest with you. I don't know if I got back to Broadway or -- I know I ran backwards, not backwards, but I turned around and started running back up again and went into there was this liquor store -- not a liquor store. It was a clothing store and there were some people in there already, and I got in there, and there was also, I believe, another Fire Marshal in that store. I don't who he was. I think he was a Fire Marshal. I'm not sure because he wasn't a cop. We were able to use the phone in there to try to call out, but whoever I was calling, I was trying to call some of my people but their cell phones weren't working. That was it.

Then, at that point, five, fifteen minutes went by, I guess, before the smoke cleared again. There were very few people in the street at this point. I ended up on I guess it must be Fulton over by Beekman Hospital. There's a little triangular square. It's not even a park. It's like a little square. I ended up there and I ended up running into Dr. Cherson. That's the first time I saw him since the incident went down. Then we ran into Bruce Medjuck, Lieutenant Medjuck, and Bruce had a radio, because Alan's radio was blown off of his pocket or whatever and I don't know where it went, and he told us that we were assembling down at the ferry. That was going to be the main place to try to get people treated there because we weren't going to get around to West Street or to Chambers Street where they were trying to set up another command post because both buildings at this point were down.

So that's what we did. We walked -- I don't know where we walked, but we walked downtown all the way to the ferry terminal, and at that point Chief Basile was there with his aide and some other people were there and we started to get ready for mass casualties to see how many people were coming and who we could try to help. But there were no patients. Nobody was coming.

Q. Not a single patient came to the ferry terminal?

A. A few scratches, bumps, bruises, people who had already left the building way before, some people with some difficulty breathing, one guy with a broken ankle, another one with some trauma to the chest, but nothing life threatening, that was the big thing.

Nothing gory. I mean, they were walking wounded for the most part, and that's all we treated.

So a bunch of physicians came from surrounding hospitals, nurses. We got all our resources together, established a critical and a noncritical area, and that was it.

Q. How long was that area set up?

A. Well, from the time we got there, they had already started to move the benches to cordon off the area, and I guess within 20 to 30 minutes the site was set up to accept critical and noncritical. Then our resources started coming in more rapidly, so we were able to get a lot more stuff like extra equipment, blankets, cots. So we had about 20 or 30 critical areas to treat and Dr. Cherson at that point was the Chief medical officer there and started assigning physicians and nurses who were there and medics to certain areas. Then at the street level we had a staging area where the ambulances were being mustered and somebody was taking care of that area. I don't know who he was, some Lieutenant. But nothing ever came.

Q. How long did you stay there?

A. We stayed there until about, I guess, 4:00 o'clock, and later on I found out this happened about 10:00, I guess, when this thing collapsed. It must have been about 10:00.

Q. Roughly, yes.

A. So it must have been about 4:00 o'clock. What we did is we found out that they were setting up a command post on Chambers and West. So we said let's go back and try to find Dr. Cherson's car, see if it's still viable, which we did. We went back to Broadway where it was between Fulton and Dey. Is that Dey Street or whatever it is? There it was in the middle of the street. Amongst all the dirt and everything else that was there, the car was there. It was full of dust on the inside. We ended up driving to Battalion 8 first to wash it off and try to clean off some of the dirt and dust that was all caked onto the vehicle, and then we went to Chambers and West, where the command post was set up, stood there for a little while, and then building 7 collapsed.

We were very far and at this point I remember being there and they said it's collapsing and I didn't even give a shit anymore because, first of all, I was far enough away from it that I kind of knew it's not going to freaking hurt me and, really, I don't know if I was just in a mood that I just didn't give a shit or I felt kind of safe. People started running back and I was just...

At this point my leg started to hurt me, which is interesting. All through the day it didn't hurt me. But I started feeling a tinge in my ankle.

So building 7 came down, the OEM building, and then they moved back forward and the command post was set up and we started hearing of the casualties. That was sad. That was sad because a lot of my friends are dead. A lot of them. On both sides. And that's a shame. That's a shame. But basically that was it.

I'd say about 9:30 at night, I hitched a ride with some vehicle that was coming to Brooklyn and they dropped me off on Tillary and Flatbush and I hobbled in here. They gave me clothes and stuff and told me to take a shower and that was it. I came back to work the next day, still not understanding, still not really -- which was interesting because, when I got home that night, I got to see the incident. I lived it, but I had never seen it, because I had never seen the planes hit or anything. We thought they were bombs going off. We didn't know. We were being told later on that the Sears Tower was hit and the Pentagon, and you hear all this shit, but you don't know. Actually, when I got home that night, that's when I got to see the actual footage of the plane hitting. It was horrendous. More so when this thing collapsed. That noise? I can never forget it. And the people jumping, the people hitting. I mean, 18 years I've been a medic in this city. I've been through two plane crashes. I have never seen the destruction.

Another thing I've got to tell you is, when we first got there, when we were walking down Vesey towards West, there was a ton of -- or I could say a lot of body parts and like baggage, clothes and stuff, along Vesey.

Q. From one of the airplanes.

A. Yes, from one of the airplanes. I don't know if it was the first or the second because this was after the second one had hit. So it could have been from either one. But I remember walking --

Q. Where was it, though? On Vesey?

A. Right in front of the OEM, because on the OEM building side there was a scaffolding and I remember I was walking underneath there. We kind of felt that there was some protection underneath the scaffolding. I remember as we were walking down, after we had dropped that person off, when we were walking down Vesey, I remember probably between -- what's this?

Q. Church?

A. No. Probably between Broadway and West, I remember seeing body parts.

Q. That's West Broadway.

A. Yes, West Broadway and West on Vesey. I remember seeing body parts and I remember saying to myself where the hell did these freaking body parts come from? Where are these coming from? There was a few. I mean, some recognizable, some that didn't look -- like they were probably charred, and also like luggage stuff, like we saw a lot of shoes, even some luggage, airplane parts, engine. There was an engine on the left here. If you remember, building 7, there used to be that overpass over by building 7. Just in front of it.

Q. The concourse.

A. Just up before that, there was like a little plaza?

Q. Right.

A. Right there, there was like a big engine part. It seemed like a whole engine was right there, lying right there in the middle of the street.

Q. Covered like the way the jet looks?

A. Yes. In fact, you could see the fan. I remember that because I could see -- now, it wasn't the whole engine because the engine is big, but I know the front part of it, it looked like the whole engine because I could see the fan, and that's what stood out in my mind. There was an airplane tire also there and then these bodies and luggage from the thing because there were shoes everywhere also. Some shoes had what looked like blood in it, other shoes didn't, other shoes were burnt, and this was just a first impression.

I guess the severity of this whole incident kind of struck me as I was walking to West Street. I knew that this was a serious, very serious event going on, because in my lifetime I have never seen that much destruction, that much carnage. Never. Never in my life have I seen something like that. Everything from bombings that I've been to, to airplane crashes at LaGuardia, I've never seen something to this magnitude, and it kind of woke you up to say the least.

Then over here people, you know, the guys were going into the building. I mean, it was horrible. It really was. It really was. And that was it. I'm here today because I think the grace of God. [redacted]. I had a few patients who I wish I could have carried away, but you didn't have time. You didn't have time to think. I don't know where Lillo went. I don't know if he went this way or he went that way. Where did he go? I don't know. It's interesting because, of the seven or eight people who were there at this location, none of us ended up in the same place. It's sort of like roaches and you turn the light on, you know what I mean? Everyone scattered. Wherever you saw or you thought there was an opening, that's where you went. Obviously, no one went towards the building, but we all scattered in different directions.

We eventually ended up meeting after the second explosion, three of us met up here, but I didn't see a lot of the people that were with me until two, three days later. I got word that they were okay. For instance, Dr. Guttenberg and Dr. Asaeda, who were at 7 World Trade Center, they got trapped in there and had to like climb in and out and get out because that building also became very damaged supposedly and they were there. We thought they were dead. I guess he was in an area where Commissioner Tierney might have been,

I believe. I think she was in 7 also.

So it's just the grace of God. I mean, there was a tremendous loss, but I think that more people survived than really should have to be honest with you with the destruction that occurred there. I mean, you guys have been to collapses. You know what I'm talking about. You have a three-story building collapse, you know the destruction that occurs there. Magnitude that now by a hundred freaking stories coming down on your head.

Q. And by two.

A. Yes. And two of them. So it was the grace of God that any of us that are alive are here, truly it is, because it just should not have been. Luckily and unluckily, I guess, the building pancaked. But if that building toppled, there ain't no way. It took less than ten seconds for that blast of air to knock me down because I remember saying to myself, I got ten seconds to hide, thinking that I may have that long. I don't know why it came into my mind, ten seconds, but I figured I got ten seconds, and I could only maybe have run 50, 60 yards in that time period, and it just knocked me over.

Q. Just the force of the air?

A. Yes. It just knocked me over and just threw me, and that was it. I thought that something had hit me. I thought like a piece of metal or something had hit me, and there was no metal, because when I turned around, I saw the blast of black air coming at us, at me anyway, and that was it. That's it. That's the story.

MR. McALISTER: Do you guys have any follow-ups?

FIRE MARSHAL CAMPBELL: No.

FIRE MARSHAL STARACE: No follow-up for me either.

MR. McALISTER: I appreciate your time.

THE WITNESS: Sure.

MR. McALISTER: Thank you very much.

THE WITNESS: No problem. Thank you.

MR. McALISTER: It's now 2:35 p.m. and we're going to conclude the interview.

File No. 911005

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

DR. MICHAEL GUTTENBERG

Interview Date: October 2, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

MR. MC ALLISTER: This is Kevin McAllister from the Bureau of Administration. It's October 2, 2001, at 1510 hours. We are here with Dr. Michael Guttenberg from the Office of Medical Affairs.

Also with me are --

MR. CAMPBELL: Patrick Campbell, Fire Marshal.

MR. STARACE: Michael Starace, Fire Marshal.

Q. Dr. Guttenberg, we'd like to draw your attention to September 11, and in your words, we'd like you to describe what you experienced on that day.

A. Okay. Actually, I was just coming in to the office and was on line waiting for breakfast when the pager went off for the assignment for the World Trade Center.

I picked up the cell phone and got in touch with Dr. Shearson and Manny Delgado from the office, who were also leaving to respond, as well. I met them in the parking at MetroTech, and we proceeded to respond. I don't recall the exact street, but we went over the Brooklyn Bridge, and as we were about one block away from the assignment, there was an extraordinary loud explosion.

There were people starting to evacuate from the area, and then we noticed the tower that was burning -- and as we were one block away from the assignment, we heard an extraordinarily loud explosion, and with that, many more people went running in the opposite direction, at which point there was, I guess, a few seconds of radio silence, and then somebody came over the air and said, "A second plane just hit the other tower." At that point --

Q. Can I talk for a second? I apologize.

As you were coming over the Brooklyn Bridge, do you recall approximately what time it was?

A. 48 -- I'm going to say it was approximately -- the second plane hit at what, 9 -- I don't recall the exact time.

Q. Roughly 9:10, I believe.

A. It was 9:10? So we were coming over the Brooklyn Bridge. Had to be about just a couple of minutes after nine, five after nine.

Q. What were you able to observe at that point on the Brooklyn Bridge?

A. From the Brooklyn Bridge and actually from Flatbush Avenue and Tillary, as we were going towards the Brooklyn Bridge, we noticed the tower that had been hit, and the upper floors were -- well, we could see flames and a large amount of smoke billowing from that one tower, and that's all that we observed from a distance.

Couldn't see much else, and at that point, actually, it was picking up the cell phone and attempting to start making some, you know, notifications and just that this was a real assignment.

Q. And what did you notice from the time you were on the Brooklyn Bridge until the moment you alluded to a few seconds ago, about the second plane hitting?

Could you describe what you observed from the streets?

A. I was actually -- I was in the back seat of the car, so I didn't see anything above me per se without having my head out the window, which it wasn't.

What we noticed was actually a lot of people of various assortments. Most people in suits, people on their way to work, being -- and in a somewhat orderly fashion, being evacuated.

Everybody was sort of between the traffic department and the police was trying to pull everybody away from the -- away from that area. The buildings were evacuating and people -- the streets were packed with people, all -- most of which were attempting to move in the opposite direction from the towers.

Like I said, I don't recall the exact street. Manny was driving, and we were coming down that one block. I wasn't looking up, and just out of nowhere was this tremendously loud explosion.

The truth of the matter was, we didn't see the other plane coming in. I thought it was a second explosion from the first plane, and then it was some radio silence for just a couple of seconds. I guess people were kind of floored by what they just saw, and then there was somebody keyed up on the radio, from the EMS citywide radio, that said that was a second airplane, and then at that point we were within a block.

As we were actually coming down -- and I'm going to presume, but don't hold me to this, it was possibly -- it was actually one of the side streets, and I just don't recall.

At that point, we were getting ready to actually park the car a couple of blocks away, and we got out of the car, and we were approached actually by a couple of police officers who were in plainclothes, one of which was holding her partner up, was holding her partner, and she was bleeding from the forehead and had some other assorted injuries, but was walking and was just screaming, "Just take me to the hospital."

So Allen, Dr. Shearson, got out of the car, started to proceed up to what was at that point the designated command post, and myself, and Manny and this other -- and the two police officers, we threw them in the back of the car and brought them over to New York downtown, and then we proceeded back to the incident site.

Q. Do you recall the injured officer's name?

A. No, we didn't even get that far. It was about a one to two-minute ride. I was holding direct pressure, talking to her. It was a female officer, who had a laceration across the forehead. We pulled up to New York downtown. There were people already outside some of the -- and we assisted her in, and we just left.

Q. Did she say how she received that injury?

A. From something flying, flying off, you know, off the building, and Manny was probably better off at this. I'm not totally familiar with this area, but Manny proceeded back to the incident location.

Once again, at that point, there was a greater urgency on the part of the police to move everybody out of the area, and --

Q. Were both buildings still standing at this point?

A. At this point, yes, both buildings were very much standing. We parked the car, and I don't recall what street it was on. Myself and Manny proceeded up to the command post, and at this point actually we walked -- we probably -- that is what I was going to say. We probably parked on Church, because we walked -- I remember we walked down Vesey past Building No. 7 and some other buildings and went to the initial EMS command post, myself and Manny Delgado.

We met up again with Dr. Shearson, and Dr. Asaeda at this point was also meeting us on the scene, and the rest of the EMS operations were commencing from there. I, at that point then went back to the car and grabbed the poison antidote kit out of the car, not knowing what to expect or what was next, came back to the site, and at that point, you know, the decision was made we were going to split up a little bit, and there were going to be some forward triage and treatment areas.

Q. Before you go forward, could I backtrack for one second?

A. Yes.

Q. When you went back to the car to get the kit, could you describe what the conditions were like during the walk both to the car and back, anything you may have observed?

A. It was actually -- the streets were, at least the walk down Vesey Street, the street was remarkably empty. The only people that were out there were some firefighters, police, FBI-type agents.

There were some fire trucks, which were unattended by and large, and some hose line, and there was some meager attempts at putting up some police tape. The other thing that I noticed, like I said, and it was very few -- they were, like, few to no civilians at this point, and it was really an effort to move people forward.

The other thing that was actually evident, though, is what appeared to be some plane parts, like some circular pieces of a plane, and lots of shoes. I don't know if that was women jumping out of their -- jumping out of their heels to run, but there were -- just impressed me there were no -- you know, there were no injuries on the street at that point, but there was lots of shoes all over the place and plane parts. It was the same thing in both directions.

At that point, like I said, I went back to the command post.

Q. Just one other follow-up. I'm sorry.

Did you see any of the unit designation numbers on the engines that may have parked out there? Do you recall any of the numbers?

A. No, no. The only thing that was kind of bizarre actually -- and I don't recall if it was -- which direction I was walking at the time, but actually I think Chief Nigro was walking down Vesey Street at this point, too, and he was actually by himself, but he was walking down the street somewhere.

The -- went back to the command post, and at that point we decided to split up a little bit. Allen, Dr. Shearson, and Manny went off somewhere, and myself and Dr. Asaeda proceeded to the loading lock of World Trade Center No. 7, which would be pre-

Q. No. 7 is on -- this is No. 7, here, I believe. Where is the loading dock?

A. It was on the Vesey street side. On the Vesey Street side, and we were in the process of setting up. Not anticipating the buildings were going to come down in such a fashion, we proceeded to set up a triage treatment area in the loading dock. Myself, Dr. Asaeda -- there was one or two EMS bosses there. I don't recall who they were, and lots of personnel. Most of the EMS personnel that were there were actually from the voluntary hospitals, some Lenox Hill paramedics there, and from some other voluntary hospitals, and there were some FBI agents down there, as well, some people from the Office of Emergency Management, who were actually upstairs and supposedly brought some supplies down to us.

There was only one patient in there at that point, and that was an elderly gentleman who was really there more for exhaustion, not claiming any injury, but anticipation was obviously our patients were going to come down.

While we were there, we started to hear this rumbling sound, and this was probably five, ten minutes after we got into the loading dock. We heard this rumbling sound and, you know, the rumors were there of additional planes missing, and actually, my initial thought was this was actually another plane, and there was the loading dock, and then it was like the top of the dock, the garage, and then the loading dock.

Just off to the right, there was a door with a fairly long, narrow hallway, and at this point, there was probably between police, and FBI and EMS people, was probably about 20 plus people in this loading dock area.

Q. Do you know anybody there?

A. All of us -- Dr. Asaeda, and just by face some of the EMS providers. We all stuffed ourselves into this hallway, pulled the door shut, and the noise just got very loud and the room filled with dust. The noise stopped, and we opened up the door, and everything was pitch black.

The way we got into the loading dock was not the way we were getting out. It was obstructed.

Q. The door was blocked?

A. Yeah, and we found our way -- we walked across the loading dock area, and we found there was another door. We went in that door, and from there we were directed to -- I really guess it was like a basement area of the building, but we were directed to an opposite door.

Q. What looked like was blocking the original entrance?

A. You know, there was a couple of people who actually pulled some of the -- that pulled the actual garage doors down. I think that and some debris. It was too dark at that point.

We walked our way through the loading dock by feel. We got to the opposite side. We found our way out of one of the back doors of No. 7 and came outside, and actually the truth of the matter I still hadn't realized that it was the tower that came down. I thought it was another airplane, and I looked up, and it was after, you know, everything was sort of pitch black, and there was dust flying everywhere, and I looked up, and it didn't strike me at first, but when I looked up, all I saw was -- I saw the tower with the antenna, and I remember when we went in, that was -- it seemed to be the more distant tower when we started, and you know, there was -- and now, that's what struck me.

It wasn't making sense just yet. We found some patients, who were just walking around in a daze or experienced some inhalation type of injuries. There were a few ambulances there. We basically threw them in the back of the ambulances. We told the providers who were there, just go far, go to another borough, take them somewhere else, and with that, the rumble started again and the second tower came down.

Q. Let me stop you there.

A. Yes.

Q. When you came out of No. 7, do you recall what side of the building you exited on?

A. We -- I ultimately ended up back on West Street, so I'm going to think -- and it was some packing lots and stuff like that. So I actually -- I think I came out by Barclay, and proceeded back down -- ultimately proceeded back down to West.

There were some parking lots in the area. There were other some buildings around, and just by where I ultimately ended up and continued to run, I was on West Street.

Q. So that's where you were treating patients prior to the second building coming down?

A. We were treating patients, yeah. We were treating patients around here, and from there we proceeded up to -- and then the second building came down, and not really knowing what was going on, we ran a few more blocks.

At that point, we settled the street just past -- just after Chambers. We passed the school. We saw Stuyvesant. Just right around Stuyvesant, Chambers, in that area, within one to two-block radius above and below.

We tried to re-establish ourselves one more time in some sort of triage treatment area, not knowing what was happening. We were just tracking down who was around, trying to get some ambulances into that area to stage in that area. It seemed at that point that we were a safe distance away, and then all of a sudden everybody started running again and saying there's a gas leak under West Street, and literally, fire engines, police, whoever was left standing at that point, everybody just started running north on west towards the piers, and --

Q. Did you know anybody there at that point in time?

A. On West Street?

Q. Either at the time you were treating the patients before the second tower came down or in the time you were heading north toward --

A. Yeah, Dr. Asaeda from this office. Joe Cahill, who is one of the ALS coordinators who works out of MetroTech. He was actually on a -- I guess on a train on his way in to work, and so he came on his own, but he was assisting us there.

I just -- a lot of faces that I knew from the voluntary hospitals who were there, and I guess those were the people who stand out most.

Another person was actually one of the nurses who works at the hospital where I work, and mostly by face, not really by name.

Q. So what happened after you heard of the possible gas leak?

A. Started running. Everybody sort of picked up and ran. There was a passing police van with very few passengers. As they were driving, I opened up the side door and dove in and got away a few more blocks, got out and started to, you know, I guess attempt to regroup.

At that point, the decision was over the radios that everybody was -- the attempt was to get everybody to stage up at Chelsea Piers and regroup up there and define what resources we were going to need, so that's where I -- at that point, I went up to Chelsea Piers and up to the EMS command post.

Q. Any idea what time it was at that point?

A. At that point, it was probably getting close to eleven o'clock in the morning, and that's where I spent a good chunk of the rest of my day.

Q. A long two hours.

A. A horrible two hours. I mean, there was a lot of running more than anything, and, you know, by and large, it was bizarre only because I really -- I actually felt more numb than anything throughout. I didn't know what to feel or what to expect, and I think a lot of it was just bizarre that way, not knowing what was next.

Q. Did you have a radio on?

A. Actually, I didn't.

Q. Transmissions throughout?

A. Actually, you know, I didn't. I'm sort of low man on the totem pole here of the fellows, so I actually didn't acquire a radio, which they needed up at that point at Chelsea Piers.

Whatever radio stuff I heard was when standing next to other people. I didn't have a radio in my possession for several hours.

Q. I think we need to -- transmissions or anything that's going on that you might have -- that stuck in your head?

A. From that whole day, actually, the two things -- well, initially, I don't know what happened as the buildings fell. There was nobody close enough with an EMS radio at that point when the buildings came down, but I guess initially it was a relative calm on the radio.

As much as this was not a routine thing, a plane into the World Trade Center, this was sort of something that the resources were available that were being sent. Everybody was sort of following instruction and doing and operating in a normal fashion. It was what you would expect at an MCI.

The part that was really bizarre is actually -- what seemed bizarre is there was the second explosion, you know, the second plane explosion, and then it was -- at least on the EMS radio, there was absolute silence for probably 10 or 15 seconds, you know, which to me, it seemed like 10 to 15 seconds, but it was absolute radio silence for a few seconds. I don't know if everybody was just sort of --

Q. We were told that the air was so thick with debris that radio waves weren't able to travel.

A. That was after the towers came down.

Q. After the collapses, immediately in the immediate aftermath?

A. I wasn't really -- you know, at that point, I was running, and I wasn't close enough to anybody with radio in hand. It was frustrating as hell, I can tell you, when the cell sites went down, which was right -- really as soon as this incident began. All I wanted to do after I got out and a safe distance away was actually just call my folks and say, you know, I'm alive, and that was the worst thing.

I mean, it took hours and hours for the cell sites to come back up, at least at Sprint. That was really for me the worst part of this whole thing, was not being able to make a phone call.

In a bizarre way, the best person on the street there that day was some little old Spanish lady who says I live a couple of blocks from here. She had a pad and a pen, took down a list of names, a list of phone numbers -- took down a list of names and phone numbers and called, and she got ahold of my parents about two hours before I did, and -- so.

Sorry I couldn't offer you more.

Q. No, that's great. I appreciate your time, doctor?

A. No problem.

MR. MC ALLISTER: Thank you very much. It's now 1530 hours on October 2, 2001, and we are going to conclude the interview. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

PARAMEDIC JAMES MURPHY

Interview Date: October 3, 2001

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

KEVIN MC ALLISTER: This is Kevin McAllister from the Bureau of Administration. It's October 3, 2001, 1224 hours. We are in room 8E13 at headquarters and we are speaking with Paramedic James Murphy from the office of medical affairs. I am joined by --

MR. DANIEL: Patrick Daniel, Fire Marshal.

MR. STARACE: Michael Starace, Fire Marshal.

KEVIN MC ALLISTER: And James Murphy is with us.

MR. MURPHY: James Murphy, Paramedic.

BY MR. MC ALLISTER:

Q. Mr. Murphy, we are going to draw your attention to September 11, 2001, and I would like to get your recollections of the event of that day.

A. I was here in the office and someone came down the hall. I think they got one of the group pages that there was a job at the World Trade Center and we looked in the computer in the CAD system and saw that there was one, an aircraft incident at the World Trade Center, and then we heard yelling from the office of public information, so we all ran down there. Because we knew the televisions were there. And we saw that something had happened to the World Trade Center. A couple of people from the office, two of the doctors and one of the medics, took off right away and the rest of us sort of stayed around getting ready to do whatever. And we ended up preparing to go get an ambulance.

We left here, went to Cumberland, got equipment that belonged to one of the guys that worked here who couldn't go out and then went to Woodhull Hospital and got a ambulance and responded from Woodhull Hospital with the ambulance.

When we went across the bridge, it was the last time we saw the towers. We went across the Manhattan Bridge and they were both still standing. We went across, I think, Canal Street.

Q. Were both of the towers burning at that time?

A. Both towers were burning at that time. We didn't leave until after the second plane hit. By the time we got through traffic to Woodhull to get the ambulance, I'm not -- the timing on that I'm not sure. The only timing I really know is that we arrived between the time the first tower fell and the time the second tower fell somewhere on Broadway, around City Hall and I don't remember whether it was at the junction of Park Row and Broadway or higher. I know Warren Street is there somewhere. Whether that was the first place we stopped or whether that was where we actually ended up stopping, I don't know.

We went across Canal Street and then I went and turned and went down Broadway. We were heading into the staging area, which I believe was like on Church Street, somewhere around there, and --

Q. Do you have any idea what time it was at that point?

A. No. We had the radios on in the ambulance, but we didn't hear anything about the buildings collapsing because the siren was on. The truck was not the newest or the quietest thing in the fleet, so we couldn't really hear the radios that well.

We turned down Broadway and as we got down in the City Hall area, there were people running everywhere and a lot of smoke and dust. We really weren't sure what it was. Which sort of surprised us, because the last thing we saw was the smoke was really up high.

We saw, then, an EMS Captain, Janis Olszewski, standing in the middle of the street covered with dust waving at us. That's where I'm not sure where we stopped with her.

Q. Somewhere on Broadway?

A. Somewhere on Broadway, around City Hall. And whether it was up by Warren Street or farther down, I'm not really sure. I just know that Warren street was involved in our stopping at one point.

We started treating some people at that point as they were running by. It was mostly like eye injuries from the flying debris. People were covered and they were having trouble breathing. Then We did hear a report that the second tower was starting to collapse and the Captain who was with us said, "Let's get out of here." Because she had heard the rumble then. It had reached us and we turned and started running and then I realized that I could drive a lot faster than I could run, so we grabbed the truck and I grabbed everybody else that I was with.

That's when I'm not sure where the stop came. Whether I stopped first at Warren and then we went on, but the Captain just kept going, kept going. I know we didn't stop running until Canal Street.

Q. What did you observe at that point while you were running and what was the state of the street, if you recall?

A. More people running, lots of people. The dust cloudy saw sort of in the mirror, the second one, as it was coming down. But I was too busy trying to avoid hitting the people that were running in the street.

When we finally stopped to start treating people, we decided -- the Captain felt safe and we decided we would go as far as she was, because she was obviously under the first one when it came down. She was a little, you know, a little, I guess, stressed. I don't know a better way to put it. When she finally felt comfortable, we stopped and started setting up.

We ran into two EMT's and I'm not sure whether it was before we left or after, who had been at the staging area and had to run from their ambulances that had patients in them. Which was not good for them. It wasn't good for us to hear it either. But they started helping us to treat people at the scene. Again, it was very minor stuff, because nobody got to us that was pretty badly hurt.

Q. The other EMT's you ran into left ambulances with patients in the back near the collapse?

A. Yes. I'm not sure where those ambulances were. They ended up going a different way than us afterwards. Oh, because we had the Captain. They told her to report to the command post, so those EMT's stayed with ambulances that were staging somewhere else and we responded to the command post with that Captain. [redacted]

Q. Which Chief?

A. Mittleman [redacted] and then went back to the command post and ended up at Chelsea staging.

Q. Where was the command post that you are referring to?

A. It was -- I don't even remember where we went. It was on West Street somewhere. It was on West Street somewhere.

Q. Was it north of Chambers?

A. Yes. At that point we didn't get anywhere back down there until -- I didn't get back down that way until the next day. We stayed up at the Chelsea -- the Chelsea Piers, and the three of us got assigned to do various things there: Assist the doctor who was there in setting up the hospital, in arranging which doctors and nurses were going to work in which areas. Because they set up a whole hospital in the Chelsea Piers and we had various tasks of organizing the medical assistance and stuff like that.

That was it until I went back the next day with the doctor. We actually started walking around the site and looking at what was going on. Telling people that they should put their masks on and that kind of stuff. That filled up the whole next week pretty much.

Q. Any other recollections about the date of the incident? Anything you might have seen that you recall? Any people you might have run into that you recall?

A. I know by the end of the first night -- well, by 10:00 o'clock the first night we had heard that all of the people from our office were safe, but that some of them, like the doctors, had lost things like their glasses. Dr. Cherson was working at the ferry terminal without his glasses and he can't see. He's like me. I have contacts on. He had lost his glasses so we don't know how he was working, but he was. But everybody from our office was okay and then we had heard that there were hundreds of firefighters trapped and it was just -- everybody was -- you know, and then you started seeing people from the outer areas. We wondered how they got there so fast. You know, some of these guys were covered in dust and going back in again.

The first hour went so fast for us. It didn't seem, because we had to get from here to the place and then back again. We didn't realize that it had taken so long. It was just like moments, it felt, from the time we left here to the time we were running from the second building coming down. We didn't even know the first one came down. We had no idea when we pulled up that that's what that was.

Q. So it was still burning when you were in Brooklyn?

A. When we came over the Manhattan Bridge, you could clearly see both towers standing there burning.

Q. Anything else? Radio transmissions that you recall?

A. No. We took -- we had radios from here with pretty bad batteries. That was on our portables. But the truck radio, we got a truck from -- the actual vehicle radio wasn't very loud and the truck was really loud, and the siren, so I didn't hear. I'm sure there was a transmission about the first building coming down, but we never heard it. And there were three of us in the truck listening to the radio and none of us ever heard it. The first we knew was when Captain Olszewski told us that one of the towers had fallen. That was the first we heard.

Then just before the second tower came down we heard a radio transmission about the second tower is falling. And then the Captain heard the rumbling. We all heard it, but she recognized it for what it was and told us, "Let's get the hell out of here." Because she heard the first one coming down. We never heard that one come down.

Q. Was it a distant rumble or was it really loud?

A. It started off distant and got loud and then as we started running the sound sort of disappeared in the background with all the other stuff that I was doing and the sound of the ambulance Engine as I started driving.

Q. Did the cloud of debris ever catch up with you or were you far enough?

A. No. Never caught us. That's why I'm thinking that maybe we never got any farther than Warren Street. Tracey and Dee -- we don't know -- we were talking about it and we couldn't figure out whether we stopped farther down or whether we stopped at Warren Street. We are just not sure whether we got any farther down.

The one thing I do remember is after we stopped running, people were actually -- one guy passed us. Everybody was offering us food, drink. We were sitting treating people and some guy ran past us with three knapsacks. One on his back, one on his chest and one on his hand and he stopped and handed everybody a bottle of water in the ambulance and continued on. We could see the dust cloud and he just ran in with bottles of water.

Q. A civilian or --

A. A civilian. Other people who were walking away said, he said, "I brought my lunch for work but obviously I'm not going to be working today. Would you like it?" People were offering us stuff all over the place.

A city sheriff came over to us and said, "Do you guys need water to treat people?" We said yes, because we only had the little bottled water in the truck and we knew that wasn't going to last very long. The next thing we know, there is a city sheriff and two other guys with 5-gallon jugs, probably from -- it said "Poland Spring" on it so it must have been a Poland Spring truck. I guess the guy just opened the doors and started giving it out to people. We had huge bottles of water in the truck to rinse people off.

Then people wanted to rinse their mouth out. You can't keep having them all put their mouth on the same thing. Then I went to a little -- a little tiny, hole-in-the-wall deli and asked the guy for a couple of cups and the guy comes out and gives me a whole case of cups. It's gotta cut huge into his profit margin, but he didn't care. He just gave me a whole bunch. So then we started giving sleeves of cups to the ambulances that were sitting there. Then we moved on. That's actually before we moved to the command post.

Captain Olszewski had to actually go into a store and use a phone, because all of our cell phones were dead. I guess there was just so much going on on the radio that she decided not to use the radio, just to call somebody. I'm not sure who she called, but then she said, "You gotta take me to the command post."

Q. Any other recollections?

A. No.

KEVIN MC ALLISTER: Thank you very much.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT DULCE McCORVEY

Interview Date: October 3, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. McALLISTER: This is Lieutenant McAllister from the Bureau of Administration. It's 1252 hours on October 3rd, 2001. We're in Room 8E13 at Fire Department headquarters, and we're about to interview EMT Dulce McCorvey. I am joined by --

MR. CAMPBELL: Patrick Campbell, fire marshal.

MR. STERACE: Michael Sterace, fire marshal.

MR. McALLISTER: And.

EMT McCORVEY: Dulce McCorvey.

Q. I would just like to draw your attention to September 11th, 2001. Give your recollections from the events of that day.

A. The times are a little blurry. I don't remember -- I know we had gone downstairs. It was like around 8:00, and I went downstairs with someone to get coffee. As we were coming up, everyone was running out of the buildings, the elevators. I almost got run over by a lot of white shirts and a lot of gold.

We came upstairs. Everyone was running. We walked by OPI. We saw on the TV screen that a plane had already hit the building, the first building. I pulled the job up on the CAD screen, and that's what it said, it was a cargo plane (inaudible).

So at that time I went over to my supervisor. One of the docs and one of the paramedics was going out already. She told us to hang back and wait and see what happened. I don't know exactly what she said.

By the time the second plane hit, I had already gone downstairs, gotten my equipment out of my car that was parked outside on Flatbush Avenue. You could see the smoke coming from the buildings, because you could see the buildings from the back of this building. I could see the smoke coming back -- in the back of the building.

I came upstairs. She said, "We've got to go find an ambulance." There was myself, Jim Murphy and Tracey Mulqueen. We tried calling the different stations. Cumberland down the block, they said to come down and get an ambulance.

We got in my car, all the equipment and the three of us, and drove to Cumberland. They couldn't give us an ambulance. The captain said they didn't have any available at the moment. We went down to Woodhull. We went through a lot of traffic. We finally got an ambulance. It wasn't stocked or anything. So that delayed us a bit.

We got in the ambulance, and we drove down to the Brooklyn Bridge or the Manhattan Bridge. I don't remember which bridge we took.

Q. Did you have a radio with you?

A. We had a radio. We had a portable radio. The battery died, so we couldn't get any communications out. The KDT in the ambulance was broken, so we couldn't log on. So we were getting -- I don't remember hearing what they were saying, because I was sitting in the back of the ambulance, and Tracey and Jimmy were sitting in the front. I couldn't really hear what they were saying.

We were listening to citywide, and there was a lot of communication. I couldn't tell what it was. We had the siren on, and there was a lot of confusion trying to get around traffic, people trying to get on the bridge, people blocking us.

It was the Manhattan Bridge. We got off the Manhattan Bridge, because I remember getting off at Canal.

Q. There was a lot of non-emergency traffic on the bridge?

A. Yeah. Well, no, they were blocking off the bridge.

Q. Oh, I see.

A. They were diverting them, so it was hard getting onto the bridge. When we finally did get on the bridge, the bridge was here. So it was the Manhattan Bridge.

I don't know what road we went down, because I couldn't see too clearly. We ended up on Broadway. We were speeding down Broadway following -- there were traffic cops directing everybody go down that way. So we followed them.

We were going down Broadway. I don't know exactly at what point we stopped on Broadway. We saw a captain that I knew her from the academy, and she was full of dust. We didn't know where we were going. We were looking for the incident command center. We really didn't know. We were just going towards the building.

When we saw her, we pulled over to help her. She was saying an explosion -- she didn't say the building went down; she said she was under the building when the plane went down. That's what I remember. We tried to calm her down, because she was upset.

Then we heard this loud noise like another plane. That's what we thought it was, another plane. It was a real loud rumbling. I can hear a lot of people screaming. We didn't know what it was, and we turned around and saw people running the opposite way on Broadway, running north on Broadway. We could see this big, black cloud of smoke coming up. I said, "Oh, shit."

We turned around, and Janice says, "Run!" So we ran. We started running. We turned around and ran. Janice ran, and Tracey was running, and Jimmy was right behind us. I didn't see where Jimmy was. I stopped and screamed, "Jimmy!" I didn't see him. He had gone back and gotten the ambulance and turned around.

He pulled us into the ambulance. We ran into the ambulance. All I could see is behind, because I was in the back of the bus. All I could see is this big cloud of smoke coming and people just coming out from inside this cloud of smoke. You could see from the side streets, like you could see smoke coming down the side streets, swelling up the road.

So we just kept on going. At one point we slowed down and we stopped in front of 26 Federal Plaza. I said, "We can't stop here. We've got to keep on going." So we kept on going, and we went up close to Canal Street. I don't know what street we stopped on. We stopped there.

Q. During that time when you were on Broadway and heading north on Broadway, did you notice any fire apparatus?

A. I saw no fire apparatus. I saw no firemen at all.

Q. Any other EMS vehicles?

A. I saw two other EMS vehicles. Where we had finally stopped, there were two other EMS vehicles. Two guys came out. They were running. They came out without the ambulance. They work in Manhattan, I'm pretty sure. They said they weren't in shock. One of them was crying. I can't remember his last name.

He said there were two patients in the back of his bus. They were strapped to a long board. He had to run, and the building fell on the ambulance. So I don't remember (inaudible). I know the guy -- I can't remember his name. They were pretty upset.

Everybody coming out was cops. There were a lot of cops coming out, all full of that white dust. There were a lot of people screaming, crying, hurt, a lot of cuts and bruises.

We stayed there for a while. I don't know how long.

Q. That's near Canal Street on Broadway?

A. Yeah, because I could see Canal up the block, and we were on Broadway.

I don't know the times, really. Now it's like a blur, like a million years ago.

We treated people as they needed to be treated, and we tried to help where we could. Somebody brought us water, a big jug of water.

Just a lot of cops were coming up. I don't know what precinct they were from.

From then Janice said she's got to find a command center, so we started going toward the west side and went towards West Street.

Q. Janice is the captain?

A. Yeah.

Q. Olszewski; right?

A. Olszewski, right.

So we went up to West Street. On West Street there was a lot of commotion. There was a lot of units. I saw firemen walking, a lot of firemen walking. They were walking up, all covered in soot. There were trucks going down. I couldn't tell you what the companies were.

I saw an EMS captain and an EMS chief. We went up to them, and we saw one of our medical directors. I saw units from Bellevue.

Q. Do you know any of their names?

A. The medic unit was Artie Gonzalez and Al Siegel. They're a medic unit from Bellevue. I saw Dr. Richmond. I saw him. I saw Chief Mittleman and Captain -- I can't think of his name.

Q. Where did you see them?

A. West Street at West Street.

Q. West Street and --

A. West Street and -- I have no idea. West Street. It was below Chelsea Piers, way below Chelsea Piers.

Q. Was it south of Canal, do you think?

A. It was south of Canal.

Q. On West south of Canal?

A. Yeah. But I don't know names.

Q. How close to the site?

A. All I could see is a lot of smoke, so I really don't know how close I was to the site. Maybe Barclay Street? Maybe that far down, Barclay Street?

Q. Did they tell you they were coming from the site?

A. No, they didn't say that. We just went up to the chief and told them that Janice was under the building when the plane hit [redacted]. Then he said, "Well," to the captain, [redacted]

[redacted]

[redacted]We couldn't get out of the city, so we ended up at NYU[redacted]

Q. [redacted]?

A. Yeah.

[redacted] We saw a couple of cops in the hospital. Actually we saw a lot of cops with injuries in the hospital, minor, not serious.

We went to Bellevue to gas up, and as we're gassing up we hear that loud rumble again. The three of us knew already to hide under the ambulance or go into the garage, because we didn't know what it was. We thought another building was going to come down or another jet was coming. But the fighter jets were flying over Manhattan. We're like, are they ours?

After that we went back. We had seen Dr. Richmond, and Dr. Richmond said, "Come back here." We ended up here. We went back to Chelsea Piers, and we ended up in Chelsea Piers. We were trying to find Dr. Richmond. We didn't see him right away, but we saw a lot of ambulances.

The people I saw I know from Manhattan. Most of the people I know were Manhattan ambulances. I didn't see any fire trucks. Police cars, I just saw police cars blocking the entrance going down that way towards the Piers.

While we were at the pier, they were setting up the hospital. We were in there for a while. Then we finally caught up with Dr. Richmond. He said to help out with the volunteers. There were a lot of volunteers coming up that wanted to help.

So we set up with the medical volunteers and tried to set them up and tried to get their names down and see if they could come, they could stay. We didn't know what the situation was.

Around I think it was maybe 4 or 5:00, one of the cops said that the buildings were collapsing still and there were people still in need. They were pulling out anybody from the area. So we just told the docs to hang out, the volunteers to hang out and wait and see what happens.

We just helped set up blood donations. People wanted to come and donate blood. People wanted to come and help and do anything they could. So we just helped set that up a little bit.

Q. Did you treat anybody?

A. Not there, not at the Chelsea Piers we didn't treat anybody. Later at night, maybe 11:00, we had like a bus load of cops that came in from ground zero. They were treated in the hospital. Maybe about 10, 15. Then after that we started getting a couple bus loads. We saw some firefighters come in. I don't know where they were from. It seemed like everybody was from all over the place.

I stayed there until about 1:00 and then hitched a ride with an ambulance. I was going back to the academy, and then I went home.

That's pretty much it. I really didn't see any firemen. I saw fire trucks. I remember seeing fire trucks coming down that way from West Street to Chelsea Piers.

Q. Any other recollections, things that you may have observed that were odd or unusual or just things that you recall that you can tell us about?

A. Unusual in what sense? The whole day was unusual. I don't know.

The things that stick out in my mind is the fire in the towers when we were going down. In my car we were going down towards the station, and we could see the fire in the towers. The cloud of smoke coming towards us.

Just standing at Chelsea Piers and not seeing the towers. A lot of police, a lot of Secret Service, a lot of ambulances. People from every voluntary hospital that you could think of was down there, from all over. Fire trucks from volunteer fire departments were down there, ones that I know, from all over, as well as from God knows where, towns I never heard of before. A lot of people coming down. If you needed water, you asked for water, they gave you water. You ask for a bottle of water, and you got a jug of water.

MR. McALLISTER: I'm going to conclude the interview. It is now 1306 hours, and we are going to conclude the interview. Thank you.

MR. McALLISTER: This is Kevin McAllister from the Bureau of Administration. It's October 3rd, 2001, 1540 hours. I'm with Jim Drury from the Bureau of Investigations and Trials and with Commissioner Stephen Gregory of the Bureau of Communications. We're in Commissioner Gregory's office and we are now commencing the interview.

COMMISSIONER GREGORY: On Tuesday, September 11th, I was sitting in my office, it was just shortly before 9:00 o'clock, having a cup of coffee, and I heard on the scanner in my office on the PD SOD frequency police units frantically screaming about a plane that had just crashed into the World Trade Center. At first I didn't realize what had happened and then it dawned on me. I immediately got up and left my office, went around the corner.

At that point in time I saw Chief Ganci, Chief Nigro, a couple of the other chiefs coming out of their office talking about a plane that had struck the World Trade Center. At that time I had no idea what type of plane. I assumed, and it was only an assumption on my part, that it was a small plane that had strayed and winded into the Trade Center.

I proceeded back to my office. I gathered up my driver and I took two EMS captains with me because I figured a situation like this would probably need medical assistance at the scene. We proceeded to my vehicle.

We left headquarters, went over the Brooklyn Bridge, around by City Hall. We went down I believe it was Barclay Street, all the way down to West Street, made a left turn. As we were going over the bridge, we could visually see the upper floors of the World Trade Center with emanating heavy smoke and fire, at least 1 World Trade Center I should say.

When we got to West Street, we made a left turn and we went back down I believe it's one block to Vesey Street. At that point in time the driver stopped the car and debris was falling from the building. I told him to turn the car around and to park it on the other side of West Street, which we did. We went on the west side of West Street, up a slight incline, which I think is Vesey Street, parked the car, proceeded to put on my turnout coat, my helmet, and we walked back down to West Street.

At that point in time I proceeded with Captain Frank D'Amato from Emergency Medical Dispatch. We started to walk down West Street. Probably 25 to 50 feet into our walk we encountered several what appeared to be bodies or human remains in the street. We proceeded past that and headed down looking up at the building. There was a lot of debris falling down. There was very heavy fire on the upper floors of the building. We worked our way down going south on West Street to ultimately arriving close to Liberty Street, where I encountered Assistant Chief Jerry Barbara.

I spoke with Chief Barbara and he informed me that he was the incident commander of 2 World Trade Center and he asked me if I would give him a hand running the command board. I indicated that I would, at which point in time we stopped at Liberty Street. Jerry was sizing the building up. I proceeded to get on the radio.

I called the Manhattan Central Office on the radio. I asked them to give me the rundown of units that were assigned to 2 World Trade Center. The Manhattan dispatcher came back giving me the rundown, I jotted all the companies down, and we proceeded to wait. After a few minutes we weren't receiving any companies. Chief Barbara asked again where are the companies? It appeared that the companies that were responding were coming from north to south and that they were being all grabbed at 1 World Trade Center, the furthermost north building.

I suggested to Chief Barbara at that time that we possibly transmit a second alarm for a tunnel box and bring Brooklyn companies through the tunnel. He agreed with my recommendation and I requested a second alarm assignment to be brought in from Brooklyn through the Battery Tunnel. The companies in a short period of time started to arrive. I went out into the street. I flagged the companies down. We started to have them come in and report in to our command post.

At that point in time Chief Art Lakiotes showed up. At that point Chief Barbara, Chief Lakiotes, Chief Barbara's aide, Gary, I don't know Gary's last name, and myself were at the command board. The command board was roughly on the corner of Liberty and West Street, but then at that point in time, looking at the building, we observed people jumping from the building, we observed debris falling from both buildings. This is after, naturally, the second plane had hit 2 World Trade Center, which happened while we were there. We observed people jumping.

So Chief Barbara suggested that we move further south. He said let's head down towards Albany Street. We actually went down somewhere between Liberty and Albany Street to a point that we were actually right in front of the World Financial Center, which is just a little bit south of Liberty Street and just south of that south bridge that goes across West Street. We set up the command post at that location. So we were between Liberty and Albany, about halfway down. We set up the command post there. The companies started to come in.

At that point in time Chief Barbara said that he was going to head into 2 World Trade Center. He told me that as soon as a battalion came in with an aide that I felt comfortable with I should tell Gary to meet him in the lobby. Chief Barbara turned, started walking towards 2 World Trade Center, looked up at the building, sized it up, and that's the last that I saw Chief Barbara.

My time estimation of how long he was gone before the building came down? I would venture to say it wasn't any more than maybe four minutes, five minutes, somewhere in there, but time was a little hard to figure out. But I would say it was somewhere around four to five minutes.

At that point in time we heard a rumble, we heard a noise, and then the building came down. All we saw was dust and everything just started to get very chaotic. At that point in time all of us at the command post, firefighters, chiefs, myself, we turned around, we started to run south, down West Street towards Albany. Looking back over my shoulder, I realized that I wasn't able to outrun whatever was coming because it looked like a giant wave behind us, so I went up against a chain-link fence, I got down on one knee, I put my hands over my head to hold my helmet on so I wouldn't get hit in the head with anything, and we just proceeded to get clobbered with all kinds of debris.

It got very black. It got very quiet. It was very peacefully quiet; so peaceful that I thought I was dead.

Q. Were you on the west side of the street or the east side?

A. I was on the west side of West Street up against a fence in front of the World Financial Center. There's like a chain-link fence. It's about a six-foot fence that separates their property from -- actually, right over here. This is exactly where we were, right here.

Q. He's denoting a space in front of 1 World Financial Center, which on our map is denoted as the home of Dow Jones.

A. Originally we were right here. This was the number one location that we were at. We wound up to be at number two location over here, number one location being immediately south of the south bridge across the West Side Highway, number two being the location in front of 1 World Financial Center.

The air got very thick, very dirty. It was very difficult to breathe. I was choking. I proceeded to at some point in time -- again, I lost track of time -- to give an urgent or a Mayday message on the radio, which I subsequently listened to myself and I have a cassette of that, indicating that something had happened. I asked a dispatcher if they were aware of it because during the time that it got very black and very quiet, my radio cut out completely. Apparently the dust in the air cut the radio signal out. The radio just hummed for maybe about 30 seconds and then it came back on again.

At that point in time I called Manhattan. I was answered. I asked them if they were aware of an explosion at the World Trade Center. I told them basically what I thought had happened and they came back and they answered me, and then subsequent to that I gave them a radio transmission indicating a major collapse of the World Trade Center. There were some conversations going back and forth.

At that point in time the atmosphere started to clear slightly. It started to lift. It went from total blackness to gray. I could now see vehicles, I could see lights on vehicles, I could see some people moving around, I could see some people laying in the street, laying on the sidewalk. I got up. I was with another firefighter. I have no idea who it was. We went around. We had picked some people up, people who were bleeding. We tried to administer to them whatever we could, but everybody was covered with this white powdery substance.

We found a firefighter that was injured and we took him down further south on West Street to Albany and we went up Albany Street. We went west on Albany Street towards the water. At that point in time we took the firefighter into a garage. There's a parking garage, a little street on the south side of Albany just a little bit west of West Street. It's a parking garage that has something to do with the building. We took the firefighter in there. He had a groin injury and he was bleeding from the back of his head.

At that point in time Dr. Kelly appeared. She looked at the individual. She said we had to transport him, get him out of there. We had him on a back board. We picked him up and started taking him out when all of a sudden -- later on we found out that 1 Trade Center collapsed. So we went back inside, put him down, tried to secure him as best we could because the whole scenario started all over again. It got black, the dirt was flying, there was debris all over the place. We tried to stay out of the way because things were flying all over. How long we were in there? I don't know. A couple of minutes. It started to lift again.

We went over and administered again to the firefighter. Dr. Kelly was still there. We picked him up. We brought him outside. There was an ambulance outside, which we took. We put him in the back of the ambulance and we drove him down Albany Street to the water, where he was subsequently put on some type of police launch or something.

At that point in time I was at Albany Street and the Hudson River on I guess the promenade over there. There's a sidewalk promenade. I saw a fireboat. A marine company was out in the water. They were standing offshore. I flagged the marine company down. I told them to come in. They came in and they came up alongside the seawall.

I spoke to the pilot. I asked him where his officer was. He said he didn't have an officer; he didn't know where he was. I told the pilot to tie the boat up. He said do you want me to take people off? I said no, I want you to tie the boat up and I want you to stretch two lines from the boat onto Albany Street, because they had a water problem down at West Street. So I felt that, since there was nobody else around to do anything, stretching the lines would be the best thing.

At that point in time fire officers started to appear. They came up. They wanted to know what they could do. They had rigs with them. We wound up ultimately stretching two lines from the boat supplying pumpers. The pumpers also stretched lines to the West Side Highway where they supplied the manifold. After that we were basically tending to injured firefighters and injured civilians along the water. Subsequently, I worked my way back down to West Street.

After that, I don't know. Everything is a blur. Somehow I wound up on the other side of the bridge, which we couldn't get by. We had to go through a building to get around. I don't even know what building I went through, but somehow we got around and I wound up back up on Vesey and West or the other side of the incident, and then subsequently I wound up back up onto I guess Chambers, somewhere around Chambers where the command post was, and from there I worked my way east and we wound up at City Hall Park where I met up with one of my guys from the Field Com Unit.

When we left City Hall Park, we walked down I believe it was Barclay Street, Barclay and Church, I think. There's a church on the corner, right? Yes. St. Peter's Church.

As we were passing St. Peter's Church, the captain of Ladder 102 and the lieutenant from Ladder 102 were coming out of the church and they informed me that they had Father Judge's body inside the church. They had brought it from wherever they recovered it into St. Peter's Church.

At that point in time Tom McGonigle from the Field Com and myself went into the church. We went up to the altar. They had Father Judge on the altar. He was wrapped in sheets, some type of white sheeting, and they had him laying on the altar. We knelt down. We said a prayer.

We left the church at that point in time and proceeded down Barclay Street and again somehow worked our way around back to West and Vesey -- how I did that I have no idea -- where I met up with Father Delendick and another chaplain who I know him but I can't recall his name, and I informed them about Father Judge and where he was, and at that point in time they said they were going up to the church to see what they could do for him.

After that I just wandered around the site for a while, I really don't recall what I did, ultimately winding up in a McDonald's finding a telephone, and that's about it. I met Commissioner Fitzpatrick, Commissioner Drury, and Commissioner Fitzpatrick and I ultimately came back to headquarters to try and get things together back at headquarters since everybody else was at the site, and that's basically it in a nutshell.

Q. Do you recall at any time, particularly when you were on West Street, any companies whose vehicles may have been parked near where you were?

A. No. I know I was with an officer from Ladder 146, a Lieutenant Evangelista, who ultimately called me up a couple of days later just to find out how I was. We both for whatever reason -- again, I don't know how valid this is with everything that was going on at that particular point in time, but for some reason I thought that when I looked in the direction of the Trade Center before it came down, before No. 2 came down, that I saw low-level flashes. In my conversation with Lieutenant Evangelista, never mentioning this to him, he questioned me and asked me if I saw low-level flashes in front of the building, and I agreed with him because I thought -- at that time I didn't know what it was. I mean, it could have been as a result of the building collapsing, things exploding, but I saw a flash flash flash and then it looked like the building came down.

Q. Was that on the lower level of the building or up where the fire was?

A. No, the lower level of the building. You know like when they demolish a building, how when they blow up a building, when it falls down? That's what I thought I saw. And I didn't broach the topic to him, but he asked me. He said I don't know if I'm crazy, but I just wanted to ask you because you were standing right next to me. He said did you see anything by the building? And I said what do you mean by see anything? He said did you see any flashes? I said, yes, well, I thought it was just me. He said no, I saw them, too.

I don't know if that means anything. I mean, I equate it to the building coming down and pushing things down, it could have been electrical explosions, it could have been whatever. But it's just strange that two people sort of say the same thing and neither one of us talked to each other about it. I mean, I don't know this guy from a hole in the wall. I was just standing next to him. I never met the man before in my life. He knew who I was I guess by my name on my coat and he called me up, you know, how are you doing? How's everything? And, oh, by the way did you... It was just a little strange.

Q. On the television pictures it appeared as well, before the first collapse, that there was an explosion up on the upper floors.

A. I know about the explosion on the upper floors. This was like eye level. I didn't have to go like this. Because I was looking this way. I'm not going to say it was on the first floor or the second floor, but somewhere in that area I saw to me what appeared to be flashes. I don't know how far down this was already. I mean, we had heard the noise but, you know, I don't know.

Q. You talk about your drivers. Who were they?

A. EMS personnel. I had Sam Harris, who works up here, I had Captain Frank D'Amato and Captain Jason Pinkus. Four of us were in the car together. Captain Pinkus and Sam Harris went in one direction and Captain D'Amato and I went in the other direction. So, when the collapse happened, we didn't know where the other people were. We were sort of separated in the middle. And then ultimately I lost Captain D'Amato even in my section. I didn't know what happened to him. When it started to come down, I ran south and he ran sort of west into a building and that was the last we saw of each other.

Q. What about Chief Artie Lakiotes; did you ever see him again?

A. I saw Artie Lakiotes a couple of times after that. We were in the same area. I guess we ran in the same direction. I saw him after the collapse. We both went over and hugged each other and realized that we were both still there, and I saw Artie a couple of times after that.

Q. Where did you last see Dr. Kelly?

A. Dr. Kelly I saw last when we put that firefighter in the ambulance and after that I didn't see Dr. Kelly. I didn't know where she went.

Q. And you mentioned a Tom McGonigle?

A. Tom McGonigle was assigned to the Field Com Unit. I met him at City Hall. I think Tom was either coming in to support the Field Com Unit, he may have been coming in from home, but I met him on I guess that's Broadway that runs down from City Hall. I met him on Broadway and then Tom was with me for a while and then I think he went to the mobile command vehicle to work over there and I lost track of him after a while.

Q. Where did you park the car initially when you arrived at the scene?

A. Sam parked the car initially right here. This was spot number one. And the stuff was falling down and I said get the car out of here. We turned the car around and we parked the car over here.

Q. Just for the record, you parked it on Vesey Street near West?

A. Vesey --

Q. West of west?

A. Initially we parked it on the southeast corner of Vesey and West Street, ultimately moving it immediately to Vesey Street about two, three hundred feet west of West Street. My car was wiped out over there, too. All the windows were blown out and shrapnel and damage and everything. But that's where Sam parked the car, over here, and once we parked the car there, we came down here. I walked down West Street, I guess by the first tower, and then right about here we started to encounter people laying in the street, and then we continued on to here and I met Chief Barbara over here. We set up the initial command post over here, which is near Liberty.

Q. Which is the south bridge?

A. Right. And then we ultimately moved it in front of this World Financial Center building, No. 1, which is Dow Jones.

MR. McALLISTER: 1 World Financial Center.

Q. Now, as you proceeded down West Street, did you see a Fire Department command post set up on West Street?

A. No. I didn't see any command post. In fact,

I didn't see anybody. That's the part that really it was like a ghost street. There was nobody there. I didn't see people. You know, I saw nobody coming out of the building. I guess, after a while, thinking about it, I assumed all the people went out through the promenade and came out this way, but I didn't see anybody here. I didn't see any people here. I saw parts of the plane laying here. I saw, again, bodies laying here, pieces of bodies, and then coming down here I met Chief Barbara, and then there were people down here, a lot of civilians down here.

MR. McALLISTER: Again, referring to West Street in the proximity of World Trade 1?

COMMISSIONER GREGORY: Yes, exactly.

Q. Now, you mentioned Chief Barbara's driver or aide, Gary?

A. Gary. I don't know Gary's last name.

Q. Did you see him after the collapse?

A. No, I didn't see Gary after the collapse. I spoke to Gary the other day. Gary came here to see me and Gary said that he was blown down, ultimately got up, and then somehow worked his way down, after helping some people, worked his way down, and then he wound up in a hospital somewhere, whether it be in Staten Island or Jersey or wherever, but he wound up in a hospital, I know that.

Q. The airplane parts that you referred to, they were on West Street or on Vesey Street?

A. I saw airplane parts on West Street.

Q. How did you know they were airplane parts?

A. It looked like pieces of a plane, skin of a plane. I mean, they weren't really discernible. I couldn't say this was this part of a plane or that was that part. Just knowing a plane had hit the building and I looked and I saw it looked like the skin off a wing or a fuselage or wherever it came from.

Q. Clearly not building material?

A. No. The building material was sort of gray and you could see it, you know, how it differed from the plane. I was listening to the tape this morning of the people calling up and they were describing the plane that hit the building. Actually, so many people saw it. They actually described the plane as it came in. They said it was a military-type plane and it was green and it was this. I mean, I never saw the color of the plane.

Q. Where were you when the second plane hit?

A. We were down at the command post between Liberty and Albany on the west side of West Street. And after the second plane hit, somebody said they heard rumors that a third plane was coming in. Where they got that from, I don't know. But somebody said the cops said there's a third plane coming in. We didn't know anything about that.

Q. Did you see or hear the second plane before it hit the World Trade Center?

A. I never actually saw the plane, but I heard it. You could hear it coming in and then we heard the explosion and you could hear the roar of the plane coming in. At first I didn't realize it was a plane. I thought it was like the roar of fire, like something had just incinerated, like a gas tank or an oil tank. It sounded like a tremendous roar and then you heard boom and then there was a big fire, a lot of fire, a big fireball. I never actually saw a plane hit the building. I never saw that. I saw it on television, but I never saw it while I was standing there.

Q. I guess just one follow-up. You said West Street was empty. Empty as far as people being on the street or was there fire apparatus parked there?

A. There was fire apparatus parked there. But I guess I had expected to see like droves of people evacuating the building and we would have to get the people out of there, but there were no people. When I say no people, I mean relatively no people. There were a few stragglers here and there, but other than that, there was no volume of people. Again, later on, in looking and thinking about it, I would have assumed everybody probably went out through the promenade onto the Church Street side of the building. But I was surprised that there weren't more people in the street over there.

I never did see Commissioner Feehan. I never saw Chief Ganci. I never saw Chief Burns. The only person I really came in contact with was Jerry Barbara. And I never saw a command post because maybe at that time they may have been inside 1 World Trade Center when we passed by and then maybe when we passed by they came outside. But I never saw them. They were probably in the building. So I can't actually say that I ever saw anybody. I mean, I saw chauffeurs hooking pumpers up and stuff like that, but I never really saw any of those individuals.

That's unusual because usually -- and, again, I still to this day don't know why I went down to No. 2. I mean, normally, in the normal course of operation, I would go to the command post, wherever Commissioner Feehan was with Ganci. For whatever reason, that day, I'm still racking my brain why I did it, I just walked right past the building and went down, further down, all the way to the other side. Why did I do it? I don't know. No idea.

MR. McALLISTER: Any follow-ups?

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: No. But I would just ask the Commissioner to put his name on the map and we'll add it as an exhibit to our file. So let the record reflect he's doing that now. Today's date is October 3rd, 2001.

MR. McALLISTER: And just before we conclude, we'll offer the Commissioner an opportunity to give us any further recollections or observations before we conclude the interview, if he has any.

COMMISSIONER GREGORY: [redacted]

[redacted]

[redacted]

MR. McALLISTER: Thank you, Commissioner.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: Thanks, Commissioner.

MR. McALLISTER: It is now 1610 hours, October 3rd, 2001, and we're going to conclude the interview. Thank you.

File No. 9110009

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT MURRAY MURAD

Interview Date: October 4, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. CAMPBELL: Today is October 4th at 10:30 in the morning. We're in conference room 4E21 at headquarters. My name is Patrick Campbell, Fire Marshal, here to conduct an interview with Murray Murad about the occurrence of September 11th.

Also present in the room is --

MR. STARACE: Michael Starace, Fire Marshal.

LIEUTENANT MURAD: Murray Murad, Lieutenant Investigator with Bureau of Investigations and Trials.

Q. Okay, Murray, we're just coming here and trying to do a fact-finding mission of what you saw on September 11th in the morning of the plane crash and the incident that happened at the World Trade Center. Just tell us what you saw and did that day.

A. Well, I was conducting business down on Greenwich and Liberty at Engine 10, Truck 10, on that day. I happened to walk through the quarters around 8:35 and I asked to speak to the officer in charge of the truck -- I think that was Captain Mallery; I think it's

M-A-L-L-E-R-Y -- I needed to speak to one of the firemen. It so happens who I was looking for, the firefighter was there.

So we went upstairs and we started to prepare the paperwork. I was conducting a confidential investigation at the fire house. It was about 8:41 that we heard a plane hovering over the fire house. It sounded like the plane was right on top of us. At that time the captain was upstairs. He was taking a shower in the office and I was conducting the work with the firefighter.

The captain came out and said: "What's going on? This is a no-fly zone. There should be no planes over here unless this is a military plane, a plane in trouble." Other than that, there was really no clue.

So about two or three minutes after hearing it, you heard something like revving. We took a look, and, boom, the north tower is hit. So what happened was everyone left the house except for the captain, because he already had his relief. What I'm assuming is that he's going to man the house. His relief was there.

They all took off. The engine and the truck took off I guess they both were responding to a pre-arranged staging location when the World Trade Center is involved in some kind of major incident. And they all took off.

So what happened was people were running out of the building. We got a couple of injuries. We were treating them.

Q. Out of the building, out of the Trade Center?

A. Out of the Trade Center, yeah. I don't know which Trade Center building they came out of, but it was either the north or the south building.

It was very minimal, like five, six patients. They came with very, very minor injuries. There was a police officer in the fire house. I asked him: Listen, can you get an ambulance here, we have a couple minor injuries. We need an ambulance at the staging location here.

The ambulance comes in. The first EMT that walks in, he sprained his ankle. So he was not much of a help, but he tried to get these people as comfortable as possible.

Let me go back. Let me go back one second before this. After the first plane hit, we went downstairs after everyone took off. I was there downstairs for maybe seven, eight minutes.

I went back upstairs because I wanted to get something out of my bag. Maybe about 10 to 12-minutes after that first plane, I heard another plane. Then I said to myself, we're being attacked.

I ran downstairs. No sooner did I run downstairs and look up, that I saw the second plane strike the south tower. It was such a vicious hit and such a precision hit, it was unbelievable.

Still we didn't have that many more people coming into the fire house, just regular civilians hanging around. They were looking at everything else like that. So pretty much everything was pretty much stabilized in the fire house. The captain was still the only one there.

At that point there were two fire marshals that came to the house. They wanted to borrow some equipment. I can't identify who they were. I forget what they looked like. They got some gear from the house and then they took off. So I only saw them for a second. I only determined they were fire marshals because they had their jackets on.

So at this point what I did was I went around the corner to Liberty and Greenwich to tell the people listen, just keep walking, just keep walking as far as you can, just stay away from the buildings.

I got to the American Stock Exchange building. A guy came out and asked me what do you think we should do? I said listen, if it was me, I tell you in one word, R-U-N, run, just leave. Oh, we have a protocol, for this and that. Listen, you've to get your people to safety. I don't think being in the building is that safe. But this is the American Stock Exchange. I said listen, you do what you have to do. We have a couple of retired cops on the job here. So one of them called me over. I told him the same story. I said listen, you guys need to get out of here, just for safety reasons. Again, he told me that they have their protocol that they do.

So I continued on my little excursion here trying to get people out of the stores, out of the buildings. I went to all of the shops right behind the fire house. I said listen, just leave your building, just leave.

Q. This is on Greenwich Street?

A. Yeah, right on Greenwich and Liberty, right behind the fire house, right on -- is it Cider or Cedar?

Q. Cedar?

A. Cedar. They have all the little coffee shops there, bagel stores, gourmet shops there with all the foods. I told them just leave, just -- don't even close your business, just walk out and leave. They're telling me they're okay, they're okay. Now it's getting a little frustrating because I said listen, you should really leave. Don't lock your door, but let your employees go. That didn't seem to work.

So I went back into the fire house to see what I could do. The EMS unit was trying to treat a couple of people. We had a guy with a broken leg, possibly, and maybe one patient with second degree burns but nothing life-threatening. All the injuries in the fire house were minor. There were really no life-threatening injuries.

So in a matter of 15, 20 minutes, the captain yelled out and you heard this roar. All he said was run to the back, it's coming down. And we all started running to the back of the fire house.

I know the design of Engine 10, Truck 10. It's on the corner, pretty wide. Then as you go into the house it narrows into the hallway. It has a phone. It has a TV room. Then it has a bathroom and a kitchen, which I totally forgot about, the kitchen during the collapse.

Everyone's running down to the basement or upstairs. One of the firefighters, who must have come in when they were calling all these guys in, I don't know who they were, said go upstairs, go upstairs. A lot of people didn't want to go upstairs because they were afraid. The building is coming down upstairs.

So as we were running, we were picking up the injured people. They would fall, we would stop, two people pick them up.

Q. Still in the house?

A. Still in the house. Then it came down. From the implosion, we all got thrown and all that stuff came in the house, all that debris, all that concrete and all that fiberglass. Name it, it was in there. It was incredible. Then it started getting dark, darker. You couldn't even see in front of you.

Q. Inside?

A. Inside the fire house. You couldn't even see. I couldn't even see in front of my face. Then it became very, very black. We were trying to get out the door. The back entrance was blocked with all the rubble. Somehow they were able to get the door open. Again I think most of us forgot about the kitchen. We were all trying to go out through the back. So everyone I think got out.

So what happened was I got out and I went to see what was going on. It was a nightmare. Cars were tossed. I mean, all that stuff was in the air, on the street.

So I walked up to Trinity Place. It just so happens I needed a mask, you know. I happened to see Matty James who was in a Jeep. I said Matty, you got a mask? He said: "I have a couple of Scott packs." I didn't want to take one because they had a couple of fire trucks that were hanging out right in front of him. I don't know what fire trucks they were, but they looked kind of beaten up from the explosion.

Q. This was on where?

A. On Trinity Place.

Q. On Trinity?

A. And Cedar.

Q. Cedar.

A. Right, right up there.

Q. They were parked there, and they were smashed?

A. I don't know if they were really smashed, but there was a lot of debris on them. I only saw one or two. I can't really identify them because there was so much debris in the air and on the ground. The pictures that you see, that's what was going on.

So he said to me: "Hop in my car, I'll give you a ride, because there's a cop, he's giving out masks on the corner." Meanwhile I can't see, my eyes are so red and irritated and I'm coughing up all the soot and everything. So I got a mask from the cop.

Then there was like a little cappuccino store right there. I knocked on the door and was let in. Listen, can I use your facilities here? He said oh, yeah, come on in, wash up. I just wanted to wash my face and get all that stuff out of my eyes. He said hey, have some water. He gave me a bottle of water. I was there about 15 minutes. Then I started walking out.

I walked about two, three minutes, and all of a sudden I heard a plane. Now, I'm like the only one walking on this block. I said oh, my God, we're being attacked again. Someone said it could have been a B15, a U.S. plane up in the air. Actually, what I think it was, was simultaneously the plane and the north tower coming down. So that's what the sounds were. I heard that rumble.

So I started going back to the area where Liberty Street was. I went up to Liberty Street. Everything's destroyed, everything, all the buildings around it. The only thing standing was the fire house.

I re-entered the fire house. I spotted a chief. I think it was Philip Burns only because someone called his name. A couple of firemen were in there. There was Firefighter Peter D'Ancona. He was there. He was assigned there. I saw him. He was looking for gear. There was no gear to be found for these guys, no turn-out coats, no nothing. Everything was gone.

Guys were coming in. A couple of companies were coming in just trying to assist. It was still dark out.

What happened was everybody got out of the house safely. I asked the captain where is everybody? He said everyone's out, everyone's fine, everyone's good. There was nothing else to do. Then I spotted the two EMTs that were assigned to the location. I said listen, I have a car --

Q. Do you remember their names?

A. No, I don't. The ambulance was destroyed in the collapse. I don't know if it was totaled, but there was a lot of damage to the vehicle.

Q. Where was that vehicle?

A. It was parked right inside the 10 and 10 house.

Q. On the side?

A. Right inside.

Q. Oh, inside?

A. Inside, right. They backed it up. I don't know if they were going to do triage or going to transport.

Q. How did the ambulance get damaged?

A. All the debris from the collapse of --

Q. So it was outside?

A. It was inside. From the implosion, everything just came inside.

Q. The doors were open?

A. The doors were open.

Q. Oh, the doors were open?

A. Yeah. They should have been closed, but I don't think -- no one expected within an hour the collapse. It was an awful thing.

Q. Where did you park?

A. I parked down on Greenwich between -- I think it's Carlisle and Rector. That's where I was parked.

Q. So you were down a little further?

A. Yeah. Because what happened was when I got to the house it was almost changing shifts and I didn't want to take a parking spot up, because they double park there and everywhere right around the corner. It was still early. I said you know what, let me just park up further. I found a spot, I pulled the car in, and then I just walked up to the fire house.

Q. You never made it to the towers? You never went near the towers?

A. No, that was just from my location of being right at 10 and 10. That was the closest I was.

Q. Philip Burns was in there during that whole time?

A. I only saw him when I came back after the second tower collapsed. I'm only saying it was Philip Burns because someone said that was Chief Burns.

Q. That was after the second?

A. After the second collapse.

Q. When the first one was hit, you were outside?

A. No, I was almost in front of the house at the front doors. The doors were open.

Q. Which is actually right across the street?

A. Right across the street. It was on Liberty and Greenwich.

Q. You looked up and you saw the --

A. I didn't look up. What happened was the captain just -- we heard a roar, and he just yelled out it's coming down, just run to the back of the fire house.

Q. Oh, no, when it hit -- did you see it -- were you outside when it hit?

A. No.

Q. You were inside?

A. Yeah. We just heard all the rumble and all -- the collapse.

Q. I'm saying you were in the house when the first plane hit?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you go out at all right after it?

A. When the first plane hit? I did. I went outside.

Q. What did you see then?

A. I just saw the fire -- the smoke coming out from the top from the north tower.

Q. Was there any debris?

A. Not at that time.

Q. No debris at all?

A. No. Stuff was coming down, but nothing real major. After the second plane hit even more stuff came down.

Q. I'm sorry, when the second plane hit.

A. When the second plane hit, it was just a lot of fire, a lot of black smoke.

Q. Coming out?

A. Right. What happened was that we looked up and then within a couple of minutes one guy jumped -- an individual came out. It wasn't like a jump, because they came out backwards. Evidently from the explosion up on those floors they got blown out. Someone else came down and they were coming out. I only saw two people come out.

Now we had more people congregating in the fire house. We would just evaluate them, if they were injured. No, we're not injured. We need a phone.

Of course the cell phones were not working. The only cell phone that worked I think was Nextel. It's a two-way portable radio, practically, and you can have contact. You don't even have to worry about dialing. That's the only phones that were working.

Everyone's cell phones were just not working. My cell phone was dead. The beepers were dead. Everything in the fire house was dead. There was no communication whatsoever. So we just relied on whatever information we were able to get, which was actually really nothing.

Q. Were there a lot of plane parts or anything when the second one hit?

A. Not that I saw, no.

Q. You said there were firemen around you. Did you hear any transmissions going on?

A. No. It was all verbal among the firemen just discussing. The radio communication was fairly -- I didn't hear anything.

MR. CAMPBELL: Do you have anything else, Mike?

Q. Anybody else you actually recognized?

A. I recognized the captain. I recognized one of the firefighters. I recognized a lieutenant that was from BHS. I don't know his last name. His first name is John. He was good friends with Geoff Guja. Actually they went down together. Geoff unfortunately didn't make it.

Q. You don't remember the fireman's name?

A. No, that was with him? I don't remember.

Q. Captain Mallery, he stayed in the fire house the whole time?

A. I believe so.

Q. Anything else? Is there anything else you want to add? You can say anything about how you felt or whatever.

A. It was something that if you were there, to describe it, it was horrible. It was a horrific act against us. It was something that you would never, ever think would ever, ever happen to this country.

When those towers came down, it was like a sign of something. When all these people -- I mean, war is war. They talk about Pearl Harbor. Bottom line is Pearl Harbor was a military base, installation. It was peace time.

But here what happened was we got two planes, our own planes, going into two towers and killing almost 5,000 people. It was just an awful day. It was day I'll never forget, just the sounds of everything and the planes hitting. The awful sound of hearing that plane over the fire house. It was like it was sitting right on top of the fire house. That's how close it was. And then revving up the engine and then hitting the north tower.

Q. You had said earlier people in the fire house were alarmed when they heard the plane. They felt something was wrong?

A. Oh, yeah.

Q. Before it even --

A. I was upstairs. There was only the captain and the firefighter. It was George Bachmann who was up there with me. George Bachmann was in Vietnam -- served in Vietnam. So he knows certain sounds. Like we said, this is a no-fly zone here. What's a plane doing here?

So as soon as that plane hit, they all took off. The only one left was the captain at the time. Anybody else coming back, coming into the house was either called in or off-duty guys coming in, grabbing equipment. I saw the two fire marshals. They were grabbing equipment. They asked the captain: "We need some gear."

But again, no one ever expected it to collapse like that. Just thankfully a pancake rather than toppling over. That would have been a nightmare. But in an hour the intensity of that heat must have been incredible.

Q. Did any of the guys from 10 and 10 come back after --

A. They were out. I understand that a lot of them didn't come back.

Q. So none of them came back after, while you were around?

A. No, no. They, I think, just went to the location where they were supposed to go and whatever assignment they were given. The problem was when the south tower went down, I guess there was no communication and people just went into the north tower. That's what they were saying.

When the south tower came down, that was where the communication was. While the north tower is still up, burning, guys were just told go into the building. There was no radio communication. That's what --

Q. You were by the south tower?

A. Right.

Q. After that got hit, were there any firefighters going into Two World Trade from Liberty Street or anything?

A. No, they just -- everyone just got in and they went to --

Q. No, I'm saying when the second one hit when they were responding when they made the other alarm for the second tower.

A. Right.

Q. Units were assigned to the second tower or the south tower. Did you see any of them go in?

A. No, no. Actually I didn't see any units from where I was. They must have all gone to Vesey or they were parked on Church right up on the street. I saw some fire apparatus up on, I think it was, Church or Trinity or right up there on Liberty Street.

Q. Did you see any numbers or anything?

A. No.

MR. CAMPBELL: All right. This concludes the interview. It's 10:52. Thank you very much.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

PARAMEDIC TRACEY MULQUEEN

Interview Date: October 4, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. McALLISTER: This is Kevin McAllister from the Bureau of Administration. It's October 4th, 2001. We're at Fire Department headquarters in 8E13, and we're about to begin an interview with Tracey Mulqueen, who's a paramedic assigned to the office of medical affairs.

I'm joined by --

MR. CASTORINA: Ron Castorina, Bureau of Investigations and Trials.

MR. TAMBASCO: Mike Tambasco, Bureau of Investigations and Trials.

MR. McALLISTER: Tracey Mulqueen as well.

Q. We're just going to draw your attention to September the 11th and ask you for your recollections about the events of that day.

A. I guess to start with, the first time I started hearing -- I was actually in the pantry making breakfast. I started to hear people screaming. The first thought was that there was a bird in reception, like a bird had flown in or something. I don't know where that came from.

I went out to see what was going on, and I went to the eighth floor reception and I could see the flames and the smoke coming out of the first tower in the Trade Center. It was surreal. It's like you're seeing it but you're not really processing it.

I was watching for a few minutes, and the second plane came in. Basically the next thing I remember after that was we had all of our office's medical equipment on a chair and we were running out the building.

They had somehow worked out for us to get an ambulance at one of the battalions in Brooklyn. So we ran to somebody's personal car, because we didn't even try to get a pool car. We figured all the pool cars were probably gone at that point, which I wouldn't be surprised if they were.

So we're driving through Brooklyn, and three of us -- it was myself, James Murphy, who's another paramedic, and Dulce McCorvey, who is an EMT in the office. So we go into her personal car with all the equipment, and we're driving and we're hoping we don't get lost.

Again, we're in a personal vehicle.

I'm basically stopping at the red lights. I'm jumping out of the car, stopping traffic so we can drive through, because we just needed to get there. I probably shouldn't be telling this to the BITS people, but anyway.

Q. We've heard this story before.

A. I know.

Just trying to stop. People looked at us like what's going on. I guess people didn't know yet. We were listening to the radio, the regular AM radio -- I forget what station it was -- and starting to hear the reports about what's going on.

So we get an ambulance, we throw our stuff in it, and we start heading over to Manhattan. We were driving and we come over -- I think we came over the Manhattan Bridge and went around City Hall. We were driving down Broadway, and there was no AM/FM radio in the ambulance, so we had no idea what was going on at this point.

Q. What were you able to observe as you came over the bridge and after you entered Manhattan?

A. Just there was a lot of cops. There was a lot of activity. I really wasn't seeing people, like the hordes of people like you see on the news. I think we were more concerned about going the right way and not getting lost. I was in the passenger seat of the ambulance, so I was kind of copiloting at that point.

We started to come down Broadway, and we could start to see people coming up at us, just all types of pedestrians, walking only in one direction. Like I said, we didn't have a radio in our ambulance, and nothing had come over the regular FD radio. So we didn't even know the first tower had collapsed at that point, and we were driving straight in. We had no clue.

One of the captains from operations, Janice Olszewski, if she hadn't stopped us, we probably would have been right underneath the tower when it came down. We had no idea what was going on.

We were coming down Broadway, and I'm not sure exactly where we ended up but I believe we were probably at Broadway and Vesey. We were probably right about here. She had flagged us down. We got out of the ambulance. We started talking to her. You could see that she had that look in her eye. She told us that the tower had come down.

Literally within like maybe a minute or two of being on the scene, you could start to hear the rumble again. Everybody just said, "Get out of here!" Everybody just took off running.

Q. That was the rumble from the second tower?

A. It was, definitely, because you could start to see the dust cloud was starting to come at us and everything. We were running up Broadway, and I don't know how he did this, because all I thought was just get the hell out of here. I had Captain Olszewski in my sight, and I had Dulce McCorvey in my sight, and we were together. I had no idea where Jimmy Murphy went.

The next thing you know, the ambulance comes up Broadway. "Get in!" Cool. So we all jumped in, and we just all sat in the back. You could see the dust clouds coming at us and going down the side streets.

Q. You were moving, you were driving?

A. Oh, yeah. So we actually beat out that cloud, because there's no way you could have driven through that. We were driving, and we stopped at one point and we looked and saw that we were outside the federal building. We ain't stopping here. So we went a few more blocks up.

I remember Janice Olszewski just sitting there screaming, "Keep going. We're not far enough. We're not far enough. Just keep going." We just were all sitting in the back of the ambulance, what the hell just happened. I don't think it really even sunk in.

We knew something had happened. I don't think we realized like the whole thing had come down, because we didn't even know -- she had said that something had collapsed, there was some kind of explosion, I don't know. We just got out, we stopped, and all of a sudden people just started coming out, all covered in the ash.

Q. Where did you stop?

A. I know we were outside of 385 Broadway at one point, because there was a lingerie shop there and the guy was so nice. He let us come in, let us use the bathroom, let us use the phones. I know the deli next had asked people for quarters to use the phones, which I could not believe. This guy was like, "Whatever you need. What can I do?" He was just amazing. I'm going to make a point to go back there and thank him, because he was absolutely wonderful.

I think we all sat down on the back of the bumper. We were trying to get dust masks, and we gave out all of our masks within a couple of minutes, because everybody was coming up. You could smell it. It's not a regular smoke smell. It's acrid concrete, whatever. We gave out dust masks.

Then within I guess a couple minutes, people started coming out, making their way out of that cloud. There were some injuries. A lot of just completely petrified, shell-shocked -- I guess when you see pictures of people from other parts of the world after bombings and stuff, that shell-shocked look.

When you see people in New York in business suits coming out covered in ash, looking like that, the whole thing -- surreal is definitely the only word that describes a lot of what went on that day, and afterwards too.

I know after a few minutes some guy came up, and he must have just run to the first deli he could find and bought all the water he could fit in his backpack and just came by and just started giving out water to people, which was -- I guess that was the beginning of people coming together and trying to do the right thing. People came by and bought sandwiches in a store and just tried to give us stuff. Somebody finally came by and was giving out like bottles of water, like the five gallon ones.

Actually, this is interesting, just to go back. When we were driving up Broadway before we actually got there, there was a sheriff's car, and my husband is a deputy sheriff in the New York City sheriff's office. As we were driving by, I yelled at them, "Tell Paul Mulqueen that his wife is here."

Because afterwards, maybe about half an hour, all I could think of is I know my husband works in Manhattan, I know he was there. I'm trying to focus on what I need to do, and people coming up cut and having trouble breathing. We had a few different oxygen bags and regulators and stuff. You go into auto pilot and you try to do what you have to do, and all I could think about was where's Paul, where's Paul. Nobody could get through on the cell phones.

I guess probably about 12-ish I saw another sheriff, and I said, "Could you please just try and raise him on the radio." He called him. Finally all I heard back, "What?" I thought, okay, he's okay, which I thought was very funny. The guy was like, "Lord, there was a family member looking for you." You could hear like the relief in his voice, and he was like, "Okay." But it was like "What?"

I found out later he was helping to evacuate the fire. There was a picture. He was in like Time magazine and Newsweek magazine evacuating some of the victims out. I understand where that "what" came from at that point, but it was the happiest word I heard.

I don't know how long we were there, but we were there for a while trying to just catch people as they were coming out, people were being carried out, limping up. Everybody was pretty banged up, although not as banged up as I expected. I think a lot of us really expected worse injuries. It seemed like people were mostly either walking wounded or they didn't get out. It's unfortunate.

Q. What street were you getting these injuries at?

A. We were still in front of 385 Broadway.

Q. On Broadway?

A. Yeah, which I think is just south of Canal Street.

It's funny, because the whole time too you don't realize how often you use the twin towers as your reference point, because for the next couple days I would look and I had no idea where I was. I would go to look up to see where the towers were. I guess that's something I'll have to get used to, but it was very strange.

I know once --

Q. Were there other units there at that time?

A. There was one other ambulance there. I think it was from the academy, because I know like Marlena Coffey was there and Jenna, she's from the academy. She was with a couple of other people and some other EMTs that were closer that didn't get out of the cloud had come up. I know one guy's name was Kevin. He was covered in ash.

I think after once we kind of got control of the scene there, everybody was just to the phone to try and call people, to just let them know that we're okay. I know when I got in touch with my aunt, she was hysterical, which started me off, the last thing you want.

We were told to 85 with one of the deputy medical directors, so we met up with him at wherever that first treatment sector was on the West Side Highway there. There was all the ambulances, and all other people started coming in. I saw ambulances from New Jersey. My friend lives on North Shore. This funky big ambulance thing. I never saw a truck like it.

We met up with Dr. Richmond, which apparently he and Commissioner Clair and Dario Gonzalez, the two physicians and the commissioner, were flown in from the state police from Albany, which was good.

At that point Captain Olszewski was who we kept with. [redacted]

[redacted]

[redacted]T. MULQUEEN[redacted]

[redacted]

I remember what struck me most is when we were on the east side and stuck in all that traffic, people were just going about their day. People were sitting at cafes eating. I know life goes on and stuff, but to see people -- it was almost like how could you just be going about your business? Don't you know what just happened?

[redacted]

I saw her I don't know when, a couple days later. I had slept here a couple nights, and I ran into her one night. It was good to see people. I never hugged so many people that I worked with in the space of a couple of days, ever.

From the hospital we went to Bellevue to restock, because our bus was trashed. They had everything set up outside for restock. We had no oxygen, we had no masks, we had no water left for doing people's eyes and stuff. We were flushing them out. We had no gas. It was like everything you could run out of, we ran out of.

We were standing at Bellevue. All of a sudden we hear this rumble of like a plane really low, and I started to freak out. Jimmy Murphy said, "It's okay. It's an F-15." I've never heard an F-15 before. I don't go to air shows or anything.

But that plane and the rumble, especially because you hadn't heard a plane since; maybe a helicopter or two. But that sound, that was -- and just to see all these fighter jets over New York City was very, very strange.

So then we restocked, and we were sent to Chelsea Piers. We pretty much spent the rest of our night there. Actually how did I get to Chelsea Piers? Honestly I don't know where we went after Bellevue. All I know is at some point I got hooked up with Dr. Richmond and we ended up at Chelsea Piers. I don't know how I got there. Okay. That's pretty interesting.

Q. It's common that people have gaps, because a lot of people don't recall big chunks of time from that day.

A. I have no idea what I did. The next thing I know, it was nighttime and we were at Chelsea Piers and we were helping -- we got the morgue set up, which actually they never used, on the ice rink, which I thought it was actually a good idea.

Yeah, just getting everything set up, all the hospitals, getting all the people -- everyone was just rushing in. Everybody knows about how many people we had volunteering their time, and just stuff, equipment.

I remember at one point an unmarked truck pulls outside Chelsea Piers, and they start unloading it. You see just big brown boxes. I'm like, "Guys, I know I'm Miss Panic here, but did anybody check those boxes? Where is this stuff from? It could be terrorist stuff." The FEMA guy standing next to me says, "Oh, maybe we should check the truck out." I was like oh, my God, you know. Who knew at that point? He was like, "Wow, that's a good idea."

At some point that night, we went to go check out some of the -- I went with Dr. Richmond to ground zero from Chelsea, and I got to see a little bit of it. Words can't describe. You can see all the pictures and all the footage. I don't know if you guys were there or not, but it just looks like the gates of hell opened up. I've heard that from other people too. You can't describe that.

Then we went back up, and we were finishing coordinating. I actually got home the first night, because my husband came and picked me up. That was good. That was very good. I was very, very thankful, very thankful. We're both the same type of people, we're there.

I know my parents were in Walt Disney World, and they shut the whole park and wouldn't tell people why they started shutting people out.

A guy had a radio and told my parents, and my mom just flipped, because she knows where I work. She knows that when big things happen, we're out the door first.

The only reason why I wasn't out the door with Dr. Cherson and Manny Delgado was because I was making my frigging bacon in the pantry. Who knows what would have happened had I been there.

You hear all these stories. There were so many people that were just lucky because they were in the wrong place at the wrong time or the right place at the right time. That's two things: I had my bacon saved me, hopefully, and then Janice Olszewski stopping us in the middle of Broadway before we drove right into the thing. I'm very lucky and very happy.

I came back the next morning, and I had met up with Dr. Cherson at that point. I spent the next couple of days with him. That's a very big blur. All I know is that by the end of the day I could barely walk, my feet hurt so much. My big toes are still numb now, because we were just on our feet for so many hours. The next couple days I ended up just sleeping up here in one of the doc's offices.

Oh, wait, no, I forgot this one. The next day we were -- after we were helping the setup -- they were setting up the northwest triage and treatment sector in the American Express building all of a sudden you started to hear that rumble again. Everybody just took off.

Q. This is on the 12th?

A. Yes. Apparently in the back some of the facade had been falling down, but you didn't know that. All you know is you heard that rumble again. We were all running. All of a sudden we're like "we're not far enough," which we heard a lot of them.

All of sudden I see one of our EMTs coming up towards West Street, and he's starting to go in the building. I started screaming, "Get out of there!" One of the cops turned around and said, "Why are you screaming?" "Because you know what, I just ran for my frigging life again. If I'm a little high-strung right now, then you're going to have to understand that."

This guy was going back in the building. He's like, "Oh, okay. All right." Why are you screaming? Because he's walking towards a building that might be collapsing? I don't know, you know. It was just funny.

We moved back, and then they checked it out. You see the back corner had collapsed a little bit. But they checked it out. Apparently the building was -- they used it for a triage and then the morgue. I think it's still being used, actually. I think the DMAT teams are in there now.

I don't know what else you're looking for.

Q. That's great.

A. Kind of a rambling story.

Q. That's what we're looking for. We're looking for your recollections, a narrative from you as to what you observed. We appreciate that.

A. I'm just meeting people. I met one guy, one of my old partners, and he was off. He said his whole fire company's gone, the whole company. Just running into people like that. When you look at people that you're not going to see again, it's hard. It's very difficult.

Thank you.

Q. Thank you very much for your recollections.

MR. McALLISTER: This is Kevin McAllister again. It is 12:12 on October 4th, 2001, and we're going to conclude the interview now. The interview started at 11:52 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CHIEF SALVATORE CASSANO

Interview Date: October 4, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. TAMBASCO: This is the interview of - I'm here with Salvatore Cassano. We are in his office on the 7th floor at 9 Metrotech. My name is Mike Tambasco. I'm the investigator assigned to the World Trade Center Task Force. Present in the room with me is Assistant Commissioner James Drury, Fire Marshal Michael Starace, Peter Campbell, Fire Marshal.

Chief, if you would - we are going to be starting this interview at 1350 hours. Just take your time.

Q. I'm going to ask you some questions, Chief. Could you start from when you initially heard about a plane crash on September 11, 2001?

A. Okay, fine. We were in the command center. I was in the command center at the time the first plane hit. We were sitting around the table and at the table was Chief of the Department Pete Ganci, Citywide Tour Commander Donald Burns, Citywide Tour Commander Jerry Barbara and Citywide Tour Commander Joe Callan. There may have been some other people there. I don't remember, but I know at least we were there.

Q. Where was this command center, Chief?

A. The command center was in the back. It was the citywide tour command center. It's right behind the fire operations center. There is a room back there where we have our offices.

Q. On the 7th floor?

A. Right, on the 7th floor. We were just talking about the day's events, the previous day's events, when on the Department radio, there was a message blurted out that - something to the effect that the outside of the World Trade Center was on fire. So that sort of perked up our ears, and not knowing what was going on, everybody naturally did what they do. They got up and started to move out, and I stayed there a little longer just to see what the transmission was, and I remember hearing something about a plane hitting the World Trade Center, so now I really got my gear and my motor in gear.

I came out of the office, came down to look for Chief Ganci. Pete was already on the road. I looked out the window and in the office with me was Mike Canty, Battalion Chief. We looked out the window and we saw that the plane had hit the tower. We actually saw a lot of smoke coming from the World Trade Center. I said wow. With that I turned around and I left. I went down to my car. My aide was actually driving Donald Burns the day before. So he had to stay with Donald Burns and had driven Donald Burns, so I drove myself.

I got in my car, drove out of the building and was naturally listening to the reports and all the reports we heard, you know, including a transmittal of a fifth alarm. I came out and over the Brooklyn Bridge. All I could see - being that I was driving, I really couldn't get a good look, but I did see a heavy column of smoke in the sky. I drove over the Brooklyn Bridge.

I went down and actually had 2 EMTs in my car. One was a black man. I don't know who the other fellow was. They asked me for a ride over to the Trade Center. I took Brad with me and Brad could tell you who the other fellow was, because I don't remember. And they were in the back seat. That's what I was doing. And we drove down, we came actually onto West Broadway. I parked right by - I was trying to park by 7 World Trade Center, so I ended up on West Broadway and Vesey, right on the corner, right adjacent to the Federal Office Building.

Then as we were getting out of the car, the second plane hit the south tower, just as we were stepping out of the car. We had some debris come flying down on us. Brad and the other fellow took off. I ran into a garage, waited till everything cleared up and then when it calmed down, I got back into my car and we went --

Q. You were going to go pick up your car?

A. We went down. I got back in the car after the smoke and all had cleared from the second hit and I ended up going down, possibly Murray Street to West Street. I parked my car on West Street, probably somewhere near Barclay, probably a little further north of that. I got my bunker gear out of the car. I suited up and I looked up and I could see the heavy smoke condition.

I started to walk down West Street and I got in front of tower two and saw where the command post was set up. It was set up on West Street. I looked up and I knew this was not the right place for the command post, so I told the field communications unit, I said this is too close to the building. We have to move this out of here and get it back.

So they took the command post and moved it further across the street, further west. I'm not exactly sure where the garage is, but it's probably in front of the Millennium. Not the Millennium. Sorry. It's probably in front of the Two World Financial Center and Winter Garden. There is a garage down there where we set up. You will know, if you have been down there. You will see it. It was there.

So what we did was we set up the command post there across the street, further away from the building. At the command post we had Chief of Department Ganci, myself, field communications and numerous companies. I don't remember. I remember seeing the 101 truck, 202 engine, I think it was 105; companies like that.

Then Chief Galvin reported into that command post, and he had been given an assignment to go to work with either Chief Burns in the south tower or go to the Millennium. Again, I'm not exactly sure what the instructions were that he was given by Chief of Department Ganci and before Tom went to the command post, he was getting all the channels right. He said one was going to be the tactical and either 5 was going to be the command in the south tower or 6 was going to be the command for the north tower and he was trying to get everything down pat before he left. With that he took off and he went on his way.

After looking over the command board and helping communications with the command board, talking to Chief Ganci, he asked me to go in there and rendezvous with Chief Galvin to see what was going on. So from the command post I walked across the street. I went into the Millennium, into the lobby, where I saw Chief Galvin, who was kind of overwhelmed. He was the only one there. His aide had gone someplace and he was very busy.

But inside the lobby of the Millennium it was very quiet. Very few civilians. In fact, I didn't see a civilian. All I saw were building employees. They were very calm. So I went into the lobby of the hotel. We saw 13 truck with Captain Walter Hynes, who I knew, and Captain Dave Wooley, who is usually with engine 54. I saw 11 truck in the lobby. Actually they were up on the mezzanine.

I saw 23 engine and I assigned 23 engine to be the command post company for the Millennium to help out Chief Galvin. We were getting overwhelmed with phone numbers and elevators and all that and keeping a record of the companies. So I gave 23 engine that assignment. Stay in the lobby and be the command post company for Chief Galvin. You are his aide.

After conversing with Chief Galvin for a while, taking his numbers on the desk, security desk, so we could converse with them if we needed to get in touch with them, I took the phone number. I took the companies that were in the lobby and went towards the restaurant. There is a restaurant, Tall Ships, in that building. Went in there, went to the bathroom. Came out. There were some people in the restaurant. They looked kind of confused. I told them stay here, it's safe right now. There's people jumping and stuff like that. I was afraid of them walking across the street and getting hurt by falling debris.

I left the lobby. I left the restaurant by way of Liberty. I came out that exit, started to walk up Liberty to West, where I met Commissioner Feehan and Commissioner Tierney. I talked to them. I actually showed them where the command post was. I told them to walk away from the building because there were jumpers and get close to a fence. There was like a chain link fence across the street. We walked along the chain link fence and walked close to the building. When we got to the building, I brought them to the command post.

We stayed at the command post for a while, helping out Chief Ganci, and then the south tower collapsed. When the south tower collapsed, what we did was we either ran, got blown or fell down that garage, into that garage. That's where we all went. And after the dust and smoke cleared, someone showed us an exit. I went up an exit stairway and came out the lobby of the building. Some people, I guess, just stayed there until it really cleared and came up out of the garage, the ramp itself.

So they had told us there was an exit out the rear of that building to - actually further towards the water. So we started telling people to go back into that building, go out the rear exit and go towards the water. Chief Ganci told me to set up a command post further north towards Chambers Street. And that's what I started to do. I started to walk north to try to get people to set up a command post further north and I believe that's when Pete and I got separated. Pete started to go further south.

At the corner of West and Vesey, I met Chief Turi. He had a bull horn. He had full bunker gear on and he wanted people to get further north. I told him I was setting up a command post on Chambers and let's move north, get out of here.

Then I met Chief Pete Hayden and Chief Joe Pfeifer. Deputy Hayden, DC Pfeifer. They were in the lobby of the north tower. And they got from - when the south tower collapsed, the lobby got pretty crappy. They came out of there and they were all full of dust and all that and I saw Pete Hayden and I looked at Pete and said where were you? He said I was in the lobby of two and he said Father Judge is dead. I had just been with Father Judge. I had seen Father Judge on Church - sorry - West Street. I realized - I said Pete we have people up there, the building is loaded with our guys. We got to get them out of there.

I tried to call Chief Ganci on the handy talky. I was calling car 3. For some reason we couldn't touch base. So I told Pete Hayden and Joe Pfeifer, we got to move the command post further north, start moving north. Get them out of here. I'm going to go look for Pete and tell him what we got. They started to move, I turned around and started walking down West Street to find Chief Ganci.

Q. Going south?

A. I was going south. I was trying to find him, to let him know we still got a lot of people in the north building. We got to get them out of there and that's when tower one came down, so I was on West Street. I looked up. There was a jet plane. It sounded - I mean it sounded like another plane coming over and I said holy god, I hope it's one of ours. I looked up. It wasn't ours. There was a building coming down.

I turned around and started running north on West and I looked up. I knew I wasn't going to make it any further. There was a rig on the corner of West and Vesey. I dove under the rig and waited out there. I got hit in the back with some concrete or something like that. As soon as everything cleared up - I don't know where it came from, but coming down - I met Pete Hayden again after that. He had gone up Rector. I met him. He gave me a hug and said are you all right? I'm fine, I thought, I was all right. I couldn't walk. I had gotten hit in the back.

A couple of EMTs with their stretcher put me on it and wheeled me up into a building. I guess there was a triage center there in the building on - right by the water. From there they took me to St. Vincent's Hospital. I got out of there about 3. I came back here and I started working here. That's pretty much what happened.

Q. Let me start with a couple of questions, Chief. Going back to the command center on West Street, you said when the south tower came down, you ran down the driveway?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. Did you see Chief Ganci at that point --

A. I saw him afterwards. We all took off, but I met him back on the apron afterwards. That's when he told me, he said, we got to get people up north. We are going to set up another command post. Send everybody up north. That's when I talked to Pete and that's what I was in the process of doing. Pete turned around and went south. I think he heard that we had people trapped and that's when he went south. I did see him after the first collapse. We were talking. He had given me instructions, and I was trying to carry them out.

Q. What about Commissioner Feehan, did you see him running to the collapse?

A. I can't recollect, but I believe I saw him afterwards. I believe I saw him afterwards with Pete. I believe everybody that was on that apron made it into the garage, because when we came back out we looked around. There was rubble, but nothing where we couldn't see somebody if they were trapped under there.

Q. Now you said when you came around and you saw Chief Turi with a bull horn, you started heading south again, because you wanted to talk to Chief Ganci about possibly -- our guys in the north tower.

A. North tower, yes.

Q. How far down did you get in relation to where the command post on West Street was when the north tower started coming down?

A. I really don't know. I thought I got -- I didn't get down too far, but I think I got down further than I thought I did because I -- people that were on the corner that were with me made it all the way around on Vesey. I couldn't. I made it just to the corner of West and Vesey. So I don't really know. I got down a little further than I thought.

Q. Okay. Then you said they had the command center outside the north tower early on and then you said it's too close, we got to move it?

A. Right.

Q. Where had it been in relation to the north tower when you decided it had to be moved?

A. It was right in the middle of West Street. They might have had it on the island. On West Street there is an island. They might have had it right on the island. Much too close. We moved it across the street and right against the building in that driveway, yes.

Q. You say you parked your car originally at West Broadway and Vesey?

A. Right by 7 World Trade Center.

Q. Is there any particular reason you moved it again after that?

A. No, I wanted to get closer -- I knew that that was too far away. So I wanted to get closer to where I thought the command post would be or get into the north tower and I didn't want to walk all the way around to there, so I drove my car, parked it on West Street with the intention of not being caught in all the other stuff that was there, get it out of the way.

Q. Other than the ladder companies or engine companies you already delineated inside of the Millennium Hotel, other than the workers, how many civilians did you see in that restaurant?

A. I would say probably six or seven civilians in the restaurant.

Q. On Vesey Street when you first arrived there, what was the scene like? That was where the first plane that hit. Was there any debris on that street?

A. No, there was no debris on that street at all from the first plane. I drove right up there and then like I said, I had just opened my door and the second -- I thought it was the secondary explosion. I didn't know it was another plane in the south tower, because when I heard it, I looked up and I saw debris. It had to be debris flying over from the south tower. Not much, but there was enough coming down in the street where I took off and I ducked into a garage until it cleared up.

After the secondary explosion in the north tower, I didn't know what the hell - I didn't know it was another plane that had hit until I got around to the command post.

Q. Do you know now that rig you dived under?

A. Yes, I believe it was Rescue's collapse rig. I remember seeing rescue - they told me -- on that corner, it was Rescue's collapse rig.

Q. It withstood the blast?

A. Yes, thank god.

Q. Was it the high rise unit?

A. No, not the high rise unit. I think they told me the windows were blown out or something like that, but nothing heavy fell on me.

Q. What time do you think it was that you actually left this building that day, that morning?

A. Probably 5 to 9. I ran right out. I was a little behind everybody else.

Q. And the last time you saw Chief Burns was?

A. Last time I saw Chief Burns was at the command center and when he left the command center, I never saw him at the scene.

Q. Did you hear him on the radio at all?

A. No, in fact I was asking where they were working, because they told me that Chief Barbara had set up outside and I couldn't find him. I was looking for him too. I couldn't find him. That's where I met Commissioner Feehan and Commissioner Tierney and they asked me where was the command post. I said probably you just got to walk around the outside and get out of the way of anything that's coming out of the building.

Q. Did you ever hear later on that the initial command post was inside one of the towers?

A. No. I knew that there had to be a lobby command post, but we set up outside with Chief Ganci. He was the incident commander at that time and I knew exactly where he was going to stage, so that's where I staged.

Q. When you left the restaurant in the Millennium, did you see Chief Galvin still inside the lobby there?

A. Yes.

Q. What block did you come down when you met Commissioner Feehan and Commissioner Tierney?

A. I came out on Liberty and I met them right there, in fact, where the south walkway still is. I met them right around there, in that vicinity, and they wanted to know where, so I walked them that way across and came down on West Street.

Q. On what street, West and Liberty?

A. Yes, yes.

Q. You actually walked north with them to bring them up to the command post?

A. Absolutely right.

Q. West across and then up?

A. I don't know where. I think Lynn went into the lobby somewhere. I don't know. I don't know. I think they told me she was in the lobby and then Bill went to the lobby too. I stayed at the command board with Pete Ganci. I stayed there.

Q. You mentioned jumpers before. Did you see them?

A. Yes.

Q. Both towers?

A. I didn't see jumpers from the south tower. I saw jumpers from the north tower and it sounded like concrete falling, hitting the pavement. That's what I was concerned with, those people in the restaurant, to get them out and getting hit with either the jumpers or something falling, windows. I was worried about glass.

Q. You mentioned Father Judge. Where did you last see him?

A. I saw Father Judge as I was walking to the Millennium. He was on West Street. And I saw him come out and I walked up to him, gave him a smile. I told him Father Judge, we are going to need a lot of help here. You better get some more chaplains. He smiled and said something. I forget what he said. I don't remember what he said. That was the last time I saw him.

Q. Anything else?

A. No.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: Chief, thank you very much. Mike, you can conclude it.

MR. TAMBASCO: The interview is now concluded at 1410 hours. Thank you, Chief.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT FELIPE TORRE

Interview Date: October 9, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. FEILER: Today's date is October 9, 2001. The time now is 714 hours a.m. This is Lieutenant Monte Feiler with the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name, rank and command?

A. Felipe Torre, EMT, Battalion 50.

Q. At Battalion 50, New York City Fire Department, EMS command, regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

EMT Torre, if you can just begin and give me a scenario of where you were during the time frame of September 11 in the morning.

A. That morning I started to do a second tour of overtime. We were coming out of New York Hospital Queens. We had just taken a patient there and we were redeployed to the World Trade Center incident. We gave the dispatcher an update when we got there and we made it to Broadway and Murray Street and that is as far as you could go, because we were stopped by numerous police personnel and civilians because a lot of people that were hurt and needed assistance. We radioed in and I notified the dispatcher, the Citywide dispatcher, that we were not able to make it to the staging area.

My partner and I, we got out, took our equipment, and you know, we separated. He attended to some patients and I attended to another. In the process of helping other people, over the radio we also heard that the second tower was hit. A lot of pandemonium, a lot of people were really scared. So was I. We were trying to help as much and control as much people as we can.

Then the first -- one of the towers fell down.

Q. Did you see that?

A. Yes. We were trying to help a couple of people into the ambulance and we got caught up in all that debris, you know.

Q. Did you at any point go into any of the buildings?

A. I was tending to some people at the CitiBank on Broadway and Murray.

Q. They were being brought to you?

A. They, the police stopped us. I think a couple of bank managers also were out and they hailed us. I believe I was helping some young lady that was cut, I believe it was on the leg. She was bleeding, then there was other people that were complaining of chest pain and they had respiratory distress and we were trying to see if we could get some other units to help us.

Q. Were you parked on Broadway southbound?

A. Yes.

Q. North of Murray?

A. Yes, and --

Q. You were flagged for injured people, you never actually got to whatever staging area you were told to go to?

A. Right. We never made it there. All hell broke loose, because it came over my radio, people yelling to get out, they were bombing New York. So we never really finished providing care for these people, because they all panicked and they all stampede out. We followed out, because everybody was wanting to get out. The walls shook and then we felt it when a rumbling and some people were yelling earthquake.

Q. Was your partner with you the whole time?

A. We separated because there was so many people that wanted help. People, when we got to Manhattan, there was people already on their way out and people had fallen, people had shortness of breath, so he went one way and I went another. When the tower did fall, I didn't know where he was. He didn't know where I was. I personally got caught up in that big cloud of debris and the only thing I could think of was getting to the ambulance, which was parked. We had parked it, we left it right there. I know that we got caught up with a couple of the police officers and couple of civilians and all I can think of was just putting them in there and just easing the ambulance out and that's how we got out.

Q. You drove of it out?

A. We drove out of it yes, and we were advised to --

Q. You found your partner, your partner came back out?

A. Yes, he came back out. We also helped out Captain Olszewski, she, she came out of that rubble. We were all covered in that dust, but she was, I guess she was -- we were all choking, but she was really bad and I got her into the ambulance. I was trying to get as many people out and she had I guess stepped out, because I didn't know where she had went.

Q. What was your unit number that day?

A. I was 50 Adam.

Q. Who was your partner that day?

A. David Cira.

Q. David?

A. C-I-R-A.

Q. Were you told a specific staging area to go to over the radio?

A. Yes, they -- but they had changed it. I believe it was Vesey and West. I know it was Vesey Street, Vesey and I think the West Side Highway, as far as I can remember, but we never made it there.

Q. Where did you say you were?

A. We were at Broadway and Murray.

Q. You were a few blocks away?

A. Right.

Q. What time do you think you got there, approximately?

A. It was before the second plane hit I guess.

Q. I guess 9:15. Anywhere around --

A. We got there before the second plane hit, so we got there after the first plane. Everybody was speculating that it was a possibility that it was a news helicopter that had lost control and slammed into the tower.

Q. Where did you get that information from?

A. It came through the KDT. It was something about an aircraft that I believe that I read, that it was a possibility that lost control.

Q. You were on the scene for how long would you say before the second plane hit approximately?

A. It seems like it happened so fast, but we were there when the second plane hit and we were there when the first tower collapsed. So I don't know, I guess you could say, what, 40 minutes.

Q. You said at some point you had some civilians on board when you left that Broadway and Murray location?

A. Yes, we never left, we, my partner and I, we separated. He went and helped out some people. I was helping out some people and the second plane hit and of course over my radio there was just a lot of people were yelling and they were talking about terrorists and they were talking about bombing, so everybody heard it and everybody panicked. It seemed like we were right there because the whole building shook and then the ambulance was right parked at the street.

Q. Did you see any other apparatus go by, fire engines or EMS units?

A. Yes, yes, I believe there was a Booth, a New York Hospital Queens unit. There was like two other units, but we all went separate ways because there were so many people that needed help. Then I guess, I don't know which tower fell down, but that caught us. All of a sudden, bright sunny day became pitch dark and we were all choking and we couldn't see and all I remember was get to the ambulance. I think I took about 6 police officers that they also were caught up in there and I just told them get in the ambulance. I think I took like 2 or 3 civilians. I had no idea.

I was afraid also because some of the people said look, there is a guy from EMS that is laying on the floor. They had told me. I said I didn't know if it was my partner or not. But you couldn't see anything. So I didn't know where that might be. We couldn't see anything. What I did was I did a U turn and edged my way out of that location, then my partner showed up like a block away. I stepped to the back and he took us out of there. They told us whatever patient we get, take them out of Manhattan, so we just notified, we asked for a stand by at New York Hospital Queens. I believe it was like 6 officers, about 3 civilians that we brought in. That was it. I came back.

Q. Did you see any other EMS personnel besides those going by, anyone in the street, any officers, EMS officers?

A. Like I said we were helping out Captain Olszewski. She wasn't doing too good, but then she stepped out. We washed her face.

Q. Do you know where she went?

A. No, I, you know, I told her to stay, she wasn't doing too good, but came back to Queens and we started seeing -- she had walked out, so I don't know where she had gone. But that, I do remember that. I saw a lot of other people, EMS people, but I don't recognize them. They could have been Manhattan units. Everybody was doing something.

Q. You met your partner one block away, where would that be?

A. You know, we were on Murray and Broadway. I made a U turn, so I'm not sure if it was on Broadway that we were on or on Murray, but -- I don't know, I really couldn't tell you a precise, but thank god when I saw him I was relieved, because everybody told me that he was hurt.

Q. He had patients with him at that time?

A. No, no. Because I had the ambulance. He had came out and whoever we were helping, everybody was just going crazy. Then after that it was trying to help your own selves.

Q. And you transported to a hospital?

A. New York Hospital, Queens, the old Booth Memorial.

Q. You weren't there when the second building collapsed?

A. I don't think so. I don't know which one had collapsed, but we were there when.

Q. The first one came down?

A. Yes, one of them came down. I took police officers from the -- the Bronx, the 49 precinct.

Q. Did you get their names, were you ever able to get their names?

A. Oh, yes, we did ACR's on them. Yes, we did ACR's. I'm not sure. I think it was like 6 officers and about 3 civilians. We tried our best. I know that one of them suffered, one of the civilians, an older lady, she suffered an MI, and I think one of the officers had an asthma attack. We all, they were all, I was trying to give everybody time on the oxygen, because there was two on board and the two on the portable bags that we had and I had like 6 cops and 3 civilians, something like that, so we were trying to help each other, as well as myself. We took them to the hospital and that's all I know. They told me to come back here.

Q. You came back to the Battalion?

A. Yes.

Q. You never responded back?

A. No, no. I never went back there. Besides, the ambulance wasn't fit to go back. It was just filled with all that dust and a lot of the people had either vomited or spit it all over.

Q. When the first building collapsed, you and your partner were separated, you were by yourself tending to patients?

A. Well, when we got there we never made it to the staging, because a lot of the police officers just flagged us down and I recall that they flagged us down at Broadway and Murray. We were in front of the, I believe it was CitiBank. The employees of the banks said look, we got a lot of people that are hurt. There was a young lady that had a laceration, I believe. I don't know if it was to the foot or leg. That's when a short time later, that's when the second plane hit, so I never got a chance to finish trying to control bleeding.

There was also people that were complaining of chest pains and stuff like that. So I never got a chance to see all these people because once the second plane hit, it came over the radio that terrorists and bombing, so of course, everybody all panicked, got out and just started running and the lady with the cut, I don't know where she went. We all ended up outside. That's when one of the towers fell.

Q. Where were you at that point when the first tower fell?

A. At that location, Broadway and Murray.

Q. In the street or in the CitiBank?

A. We had came out because we didn't know what was going on. First they said they were bombing New York. A lot of people were talking about earthquakes and everybody just scattered. Somebody had told me that my partner was hurt and then all you could see is that big cloud. We can hear the rumbling, you could hear. We just saw that cloud, we turned around and it all caught us. I was with the -- I can't remember her name, but it was a police officer, female police officer.

She grabbed on to me. She got scared. I was scared, because we heard all that rumbling and we could only imagine that parts of the tower was falling down. My concern was if we stay there we were going to get hit. But like I said, day turned to night and all I could think of was get to the ambulance, because I knew we had oxygen there and at least we can at least inch our way out. But when they heard the radio, a lot of people just made like a Cuban chain. She clinged on to me and then they clinged on to her and I said look, let's get in the ambulance, get some oxygen, we had water. We were able to wash our faces out.

So like I said, there was about I think 6 officers. They brought I think about 3 civilians came in. As much as I could get in and I turned around and we inched our way out and then thank god my partner showed up and we notified them that we were taking them to the old Booth.

Q. You were working off a radio, do you remember what channel you were on?

A. Citywide.

Q. Did you always stay on that channel, were you initially on that channel or did you ever change to it and did you change any other frequency after that?

A. No, afterwards they told us to stay on Citywide. We were --

Q. You were initially on Queens?

A. We were on Queens, right. We were on Queens, then they told us to switch to Citywide. A lot of people were calling for help. I was calling for help. We just notified them that we were going to go to the Queens Hospital.

Q. Okay. Was there any persons from people that you can identify being on the scene, any other uniformed workers that you know by name, any paramedics or EMTs that you know that you saw while you were operating on the scene until you left the scene that you saw present there?

A. You know, I saw a few people, but I don't know their names. The only one that I can recall was Captain Olszewski. I saw Hunter units that were also there. Metro Care units.

Q. EMS officers, other than the Captain, that's the only one you saw?

A. I saw other officers, but like I said I don't know them by name.

Q. Were they running away from the building, were they running into another building?

A. When we first got there, there were two units pulled up. We got there and like I said a lot of people stopped us, so we never made it to the staging or to the triage. Then they pulled up, I believe it was New York Hospital Queens paramedic ambulance. They also tended to other people saying that they was having chest pains. I think Saint Vincent's Catholic Medical Center paramedic ambulance was also there.

Q. But you can't identify who the individuals were?

A. I can remember their faces, because they work here in Queens, but I don't know their names offhand.

Q. You saw them again afterwards that same day or --

A. No, I haven't seen them recently that I recall. If they show me pictures or something, I bet I can recall them.

Q. Okay. Any fire officers did you see that you know, that you would know who they are?

A. By me, no.

MR. FEILER: At this time I would like to ask the other interviewers to state their name, rank and command.

MS. ROM: Lieutenant Pat Rom, from the Bureau of Investigations and Trials.

MS. MAGGI: EMT Diana Maggi from Investigations and Trials.

Q. Is there anything else that you would like to add before we conclude the interview that you think is important?

A. No.

MR. FEILER: At this time we will conclude the interview. I want to thank you for your time in assisting us with this. The time now is 7:35 a.m. This will conclude the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT ANTHONY BARTOLOMEY

Interview Date: October 9, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Today's date is October 9th, 2001. The time is 0916 hours. This is Christine Bastedenbeck of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm with Christopher Eccleston. We're conducting an interview with the following individual:

Q. Please state your name, rank, title, and your assigned command of the Fire Department regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

A. My name is Anthony Bartolomey, an EMT assigned to EMS Battalion 4.

Q. What unit were you working on September 11?

A. 02 Bravo Tour I.

Q. Who were you working with on that day?

A. Pasquale Felitti.

Q. On that morning, were you assigned to the World Trade Center?

A. Yes.

Q. Approximately what time?

A. At approximately 8:55 a.m.

Q. At approximately what time did you arrive?

A. At about 8:58.

Q. On your way there, were you able to see anything that was happening?

A. Debris floating in the air from the towers, people running away from the towers and vehicles left abandoned in the street. We were approaching from Broadway coming westbound on Cortlandt Street. There were two taxicabs and a soda truck left abandoned by their drivers. My partner actually got out of the vehicle and pulled the vehicles over to the side so we could get the ambulance through. We made a right turn onto Church Street, parked on Church and Fulton in front of the Millenium Hotel on the southeast corner.

Q. When you arrived there, did any civilians report anything to you?

A. Yes. Numerous civilians were telling me that a plane had hit the building. There were discrepancies as to the type of plane. Some were saying it was a Cessna or Leer jet type, a small jet plane. Some said it was a large passenger plane. One person actually said that it was like a military style plane that actually shot missiles into the building.

Q. Who did you report to when you first got there?

A. When we got there, there were no supervisors on the scene. We reported to a paramedic unit from New York Downtown, I believe it was 1 Victor. They're paramedics based out of Beekman Downtown Hospital.

They had had their vehicle on the corner of Vesey and Church, on the southwest corner, in front of 5 World Trade by Borders Bookstore. They already had three patients in their vehicle. There were more patients approaching as we had gotten there. So we grabbed our equipment out of our vehicle and walked up a block to them. It was them and a crew from 1 Adam was there also treating some patients. Nobody had established staging at that time yet, or, if they had, it hadn't come up over the radio. So pretty much we stayed where we were and started to treat patients there.

Q. That was where; at the corner of --

A. The corner of Vesey and Church Street.

Q. Okay. Then just tell me the events that you remember happening.

A. Then as we were starting to treat some more patients, we heard rumbling. We thought maybe it was debris falling from the tower. You look up and you see the flame of the plane hitting the second building. When you see the footage on TV, you see it fly in one side and the fireball shot out through the other side. We actually saw the fireball shot out from the north side of that building.

Everybody got behind the vehicle to brace themselves against any debris that was coming down. Debris came down. There was glass and metal hitting the ground around us. That's when we decided to get out of that area because we didn't know what else was going to come down on us. So we got the people that were able to walk from there, we got them to walk, got ourselves out of there.

I'm not sure where my partner went after that. I went towards the subway station on Church Street in front of that cemetery. It's by the Trinity Church annex. Because people were standing there just like deer in the headlights kind of thing, just staring.

Q. Did you walk at that point?

A. I ran, actually.

Q. You ran. Okay.

A. It was only across the street because we were on the west side of the street. The subway station is on the east side. There's a double entrance. Two stairways converge into one. They go down into the mezzanine level. People were just standing there. I was telling them get down, get underground, because they're sitting there while stuff is still falling on them. So I get them down there.

That's where I started finding patients and apparently somebody was there with -- I guess he must have been treated and the crew that was there ran and he got left behind because he had a cervical collar and he had a triage tag around his neck. So I had a couple of civilians help me carry him down the stairs to the bottom, to the mezzanine level, where the token clerk is, put him there, and then they had another patient who was a female. She had fallen and hit her head. She had a lump about the size of a golf ball on her forehead. She was going in and out of consciousness. We put her down next to the other guy. Then there was an elderly female who felt weak in the legs and was unable to walk. So now I had three patients there in front of the token booth.

So I go back upstairs, come up on the radio, let them know, you know, I'm half crew. I don't know where my partner is. I've got three patients not able to walk. I need somebody to get them out of there because at that point I had no equipment on me either. Slowly but surely the police started coming down with some equipment to help carry the patients out. We got the third one out of there. I forget exactly what time. It was right before the towers fell, which that was about between 9:55 and 10:00, approximately. Because we had gotten back upstairs with the last patient and there was nobody around. There were police officers there saying the tower was in danger of collapse and so they were evacuating the immediate area.

So we went up one block to Barclay Street. We were still on Church walking northbound. We got to St. Peter's Church, and I'm not sure who these people were, I'm not sure if they were federal or plainclothes police officers also, told us start setting up a triage over in front of St. Peter's Church because at this point nobody really was sure where everybody was going. So anybody who could walk was walking, getting out of the immediate area.

So we still had this one guy on a long board with a collar on him, and they brought one other person over who was in a stair chair. I forget exactly what his injuries were. I believe he had hurt his ankle or something like that. That's when we heard the rumbling of the tower starting to collapse and we started to get people inside the church because you saw the cloud of the smoke and the soot that was kicked up when the tower fell. At the rate of speed it was coming up the street, we weren't going to be able to outrun it, so we decided the best bet would be to get back in inside. We got who we could inside. I got caught outside of the church when the dust cloud overcame me and then I felt my way back in. There were some other officers and people inside the church, and we waited there until the dust subsided a little bit so we could get out.

At that point I lost track of time. I couldn't tell you exactly what time everything happened after that. We get outside I was complaining my throat was burning from breathing in -- I don't think how long I was outside breathing in all the soot and everything. There was a unit from Booth Memorial Hospital, another ambulance unit. They already had patients in their vehicle. They took me and told me to go with them, and then they brought me up to Roosevelt Hospital.

Q. And you became a patient there?

A. Yes.

Q. Where were you when the second tower collapsed?

A. I'm not sure because, like I said, I lost track of time. So I'm not sure if I was still in the church when the second tower came down because we were in there for quite a while before you could see outside enough to step out because the soot and the dust, the black in the sky to the point where it looked like it was nighttime outside.

Q. You said you ended up going to the hospital with a Booth Memorial unit?

A. Yes.

Q. In the time that you were down at the scene of the Trade Center, did you run into any EMTs or paramedics that you knew?

A. I ran into one, but I didn't know him. He said he was from Brooklyn.

Q. Was he on duty or off duty, in a uniform?

A. He had the uniform shirt, but he was wearing jeans, so I'm assuming he was off duty at the time.

Q. But you didn't know his name?

A. I didn't know who he was. He just said he worked out of Brooklyn.

Q. The only place you went prior to the collapse was into the subway station?

A. Yes.

Q. And that was --

A. The E train. It's the World Trade Center station of the E train.

Q. From which street did you enter into that?

A. From Church Street in between I believe it's Cortlandt -- no. Fulton and Vesey. Right here in front of St. Paul's cemetery.

Q. You never went into the Trade Center buildings themselves?

A. No. The closest I got was in the front, right here, where Borders Bookstore was, which is right over here. That was as close as I got. I never actually went inside the building, no.

Q. So for the first collapse you had gone to St. Peter's Church?

A. Yes.

Q. As the building came down and the cloud of smoke approached you, you felt your way into the church?

A. Yes.

Q. Then you came outside and you're not even aware of when the second tower came down?

A. No.

Q. Do you know approximately what time you became a patient?

A. That would probably be around between 10:30 and 11:00. I have the paperwork from the hospital. I don't have it with me. But it would tell you what time I got to the hospital and the time I was released.

Q. Okay. Is there anything else that you'd like to include in the interview, anything you want to say?

A. No, that's about it.

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Then this concludes the interview with EMT Anthony Bartolomey. The time now is 9:28 on October 9, 2001.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMTD CHRISTOPHER KAGENAAR

Interview Date: October 9, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. RADENBERG: Today is September 9th, 2001. The time is 1533 hours. This is Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department, City of New York. I am conducting an interview with the following individual:

Q. Please state your name, rank and title.

A. EMTD Christopher John Kagenaar.

Q. Your assigned command?

A. My assigned command is Battalion 31.

Q. Of the Fire Department, City of New York?

A. That is correct.

Q. We are at EMS Battalion 31. This interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

All yours. This is not so much by the questions but what you recall.

A. Pretty much coming out of the station, because the station is always overlooking the World Trade Center, that as we got the signal over the KDT and we were pulling out of the station, I thought it was like a little fire, and then we come out and there's like people from Cumberland Hospital looking up at it and there was like black, thick smoke coming out of the World Trade Center Tower 1 and we're like, wow, this is real, because you really didn't know how bad it was until we got over the Brooklyn Bridge, when we got near the Brooklyn Bridge. It looked like a war zone. Cops, firemen, vehicles, all the lights heading over the bridge. It was crazy. It was like it was a movie.

Then as soon as we got over there, as soon as we got off of the Brooklyn Bridge, the people were running like it was a Godzilla movie, and we had to stop there for a while. People were overcome, were shaken, were scared, minor cuts and bruises, and we had to stop and do that, and there was a Lieutenant that showed up and said, look, you guys have to get over to the scene. You guys can't stay here. So finally when PD got control of the area, we moved over to I think it was Church. I think it was Church area.

What happened was then the second plane hit the tower, and it was a loud noise, I mean, it hit, and at first I was like this can't be happening. It's like lightning doesn't strike twice. Then the second plane hit the tower, so now we know, oh, my God, what's really going on here now?

So it was just a lot of confusion, everybody started running again, and then we set up and we started treating people, I mean, minor cuts and scrapes, and some people had serious damage.

MR. TAMBASCO: Do you recall where you were when this was happening? I don't know if the map would help you at all.

Q. When you first came off the bridge, the Brooklyn Bridge, do you remember where you were?

A. We were over here on Church. Because he was Haz-Tac, so I had to set up like 200 feet away and stuff.

Q. So on Church Street somewhere?

A. Right.

Q. Somewhere on Church. You were down by the towers?

A. Yes, I was down by the towers.

Q. Okay.

A. Then, when the second tower came down, everybody started running, big cloud of smoke. I left the truck open because I couldn't find Harris and I dove down a train station. Then I came back up on Reade and I got back in there and came back to the scene and I see my ambulance. It was still there, but it was like full of dust and soot. Because in case Harris could have made it to the truck, he could have dove in the truck to save himself. There was just total devastation. I've never seen anything like it before in my life. So Russell had --

Q. Your partner, Russell?

A. Right. Russell Harris.

Q. He hadn't left you while you were there; you were still with the ambulance?

A. Right. I had to be with the ambulance while he went in to go Haz-Tac, to suit up.

Q. Oh, okay. All right. So he was suiting up with the Haz-Tac stuff?

A. Right.

Q. Then you lost sight of him?

A. Right.

Q. Do you remember where the train station was that you went in?

A. No. I didn't even look. I just dove down the train station. Then I walked for like a little bit and I came back out when all the dust and soot cleared and everything.

Q. Where did you go from there?

A. I went right back to the truck.

Q. Right back to the truck?

A. Right back to the truck because I thought maybe he could have made it to the truck.

Q. Then you stayed there?

A. I stayed there. I met up with somebody whose name is Morrison. He was off duty and he showed up.

Q. An EMS guy?

A. Yes, an EMS guy. He showed up with shorts and Timberland boots and he just wanted to help out. So I was like, that's it, you're with me, we're going to stick together, and we went over to the staging. But we also had to run when the first tower came down. It was like the first time you thought it was impossible and then the second time it happened, too.

Q. So Russell was still with you when the first one came down or he was gone? In other words, you got there, set up, and he went and set up?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay.

A. I was mostly doing like treating patients and then a Citywide ambulance would come up and something like that, you know, hey, take this patient.

Q. So when the first tower came down, that's when you went down into the subway, or the second one?

A. The first tower.

Q. The first one. Then you stayed there?

A. Yes. Then the second tower, when the second tower was coming down, we grabbed as much people and personnel as we could, threw them in the back of the ambulance, and we went two blocks and we went down this way so we had the building protecting us as the -- it was nasty because there was such a thick, brown smoke, it was like everything was gone, and it was like that for a while.

Q. So you were heading uptown?

A. Yes.

Q. I got you.

A. Trying to keep the vehicle, one, intact, and also to try to get -- because I had loaded the back of the ambulance with people just to get them out of the area, cops, firemen, ATF agents, whatever.

Q. Anybody who got in.

A. Yes. Pretty much get in, get in, let's go. Morrison drove and we turned up this way and we just stood there and we waited until that big dust thing blew on everything. It was like a blizzard.

Q. But you had the other building --

A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember what street you wound up on?

A. No. I wasn't even looking.

Q. Someplace north.

A. Then they told all the units to start heading over to Chelsea Piers, and we went over there and we just stood there. Then they told us, okay, now you're going to go over to Reade and Greenwich. We went to Reade and Greenwich. We stood there. Then the 911 calls kept coming in, but it was like the calls that came in at 9:00 o'clock in the morning and we were backlogged. They started coming back in and like 7 World Trade Center --

Q. You were hearing all this over the radio?

A. Yes. So every time we tried to like -- we'd see a unit go out of staging and it would go back in, we're like hoping they won't come back. But they came back. So it was getting real depressing. Then finally they moved us over by the Staten Island Ferry and we just sat there until we got released. Pretty much we just stood there like hoping for something to do. We didn't see anything.

Q. Just one other question. When you were talking about that Lieutenant before, when you first got there, was that an EMS Lieutenant?

A. Yes, it was EMS.

Q. It was. Okay. You don't know who it was?

A. No. Pretty much I remember there was a Chief Vilani who was in charge of the Staten Island Ferry and he was like keeping us going and stuff. He was like, you know, we lost a lot of people, we don't know who, but we've got to keep going. So it was kind of nice to hear him talk like that. He was very like, you know, keep us going, like got us food and they set up phones for us and everything.

Q. That was Vilani?

A. Yes, Vilani.

Q. EMT Morrison, do you know him or do you know where he works?

A. He works in the 57.

Q. Battalion 57?

A. Right.

Q. Did you see any other EMS people that you remember?

A. Well, I was glad to see everybody from my station was okay because there was a couple that we still didn't know about until the end of the night because we got spread out all over the place.

Q. When did you finally wind up catching up with Russell?

A. Actually, I have a Nextel and he finally got ahold of me when he was in the hospital. He told me I'm in Brooklyn Hospital.

Q. He was able to get you by phone.

A. Yes. Radios, they were saying no unauthorized transmissions, only supervisors and officers got to use the radio and everything.

Q. I guess that's about it, unless you have anything else you want to say.

A. Well...

Q. Feel free.

A. I mean, everything went well. You thought it would have been chaos with everybody running around, not knowing what to do, but pretty much it was something, it was a disaster, but there was like order. There was still a chain of command.

Q. Very good. Thanks.

A. No problem.

MR. RADENBERG: The time is now 1542. The interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT RUSSELL HARRIS

Interview Date: October 9, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. TAMBASCO: Today is October 9th. My name is Mike Tambasco assigned to the World Trade Center Task Force. We're doing an interview today regarding the events of September 11th at the Trade Center. In the room with me is Investigator...

MR. RADENBERG: Paul Radenberg.

MR. TAMBASCO: The subject of the interview is...

EMT HARRIS: Russell Harris, Battalion 31, Unit 31 Henry Tour 2.

Q. Russ, if you can, just start right from the beginning and just tell me everything that you saw, you felt, you did, to the best of your memory.

A. That particular morning, my unit that I was relieving, which was 31 Henry Tour 1, came in a little late. Ironically, they parked it at the top of the hill, which they never do. They always park down here at the garage. So by the time that we signed for our equipment and we were going out to the unit, my partner, who was Mr. Kagenaar, he happened to look over out the gate and saw that the World Trade was on fire. When he initially told me that, I thought it was a joke. I was opening up the side door and placing my equipment in because I was teching that day. I looked over as well and saw that it was on fire.

Subsequently to that the dispatcher called me maybe 30 seconds, 45 seconds later, and stated they wanted us to respond to a job. But the funny part was the job wasn't to the World Trade Center. It was at 350 Fifth Avenue, which is the Empire State Building. So my partner was driving and he clearly stated to me he didn't know Manhattan that well. So during the course of going over the bridge, he really didn't know which direction to go to. So we got off going towards Park Row, which is right in front of City Hall.

Well, by the time we passed City Hall, there was a melee of traffic and my partner had to tie on brakes for people who were running madly coming down Park Row in front of J & R. So we actually got caught and had to make that left turn and got stuck right there. As we did that, a few unmarked RMPs also were stuck. One of them was a police officer I had known. His name is Claude. He's a detective. So as I'm sitting there talking to Claude trying to figure out where he was responding and what was going on, we happened to look back at the Trade and we saw the second plane hit, bam.

At the same time, about three city buses were coming past. So we stopped the city buses and we cleared out all of the passengers and we asked the buses --

Q. They were going downtown?

A. They were going towards the Brooklyn Bridge. We asked the buses to sit at the foot of the Brooklyn Bridge so in the event that there were any walking wounded, we could throw them on the buses and send them over the bridge. Well, as we were doing that, a Fire Lieutenant came and approached me and he asked what unit I was, and I told him, and he said all the Hazmat units are staging down at West and Vesey and he needed me to suit up.

So I explained to him that my partner wasn't Hazmat certified and I was unable to suit up. He said, don't worry. You go down there and somebody can help you suit up. I want you to go in the building. We've got a team there. We want to go in and we're doing search and rescue. So I said, well, I still can't do it. He said, look. After you do this, you don't really have a lot of patients because they're walking wounded. They're okay. I want you to just gather up, and he told me to go down to West and Vesey.

Well, at the same time, like I said, there was a melee of people running. Smoke and debris was going everywhere. So my partner once again jumped behind the wheel, we got in, put on the lights and siren, and we were able to make it down to Church and Park. At Church and Park, the FBI told us, this is our staging, this was where we had to stop, we couldn't cross their barriers. They were setting up barriers. At that time I saw everybody coming, Housing police, DEP, Corrections, court officers.

Q. Private.

A. Court officers. I looked back at the building and I saw all this black smoke and everything. Well, as soon as I stopped, my partner and myself, we opened the door, I got out my Hazmat equipment and I was starting to put it on the hood of the thing, of the vehicle. We had a walking wounded come and he was cut severely to his left arm and his left upper thigh.

Q. Civilian?

A. Civilian. He was lacerated bad. So we put him right in the bus. My partner started wrapping him up, you know, stabilizing the bleeding, took his pressure and everything, and at that time, FBI and a police Captain came and they asked me could I move my vehicle up another block and that we had a temporary triage down at St. Peter's Church, which is at Church and Barclay. So I said all right. The patient was stable, vital signs were normal. We packed him up. So I told my partner, put him in the chair. Since I have the Hazmat mask and my helmet, I'll go down there and drop him off at the church in the chair and I'll come back. So I took the patient down to the church. Once again, a Fire Lieutenant came up to me. He saw me dropping off the patient and he advised me --

Q. If I can interrupt you one second, who was at the triage center over there?

A. There was an FBI agent. That's the only one I saw outside. I never actually made it in the building. As I'm dropping off the patient, the FBI agent comes up to me and he says, oh, man, I just heard there's a third plane coming in. So I look at the patient, I'm at the church, and I said, well, look, there's nothing else I could do for you right now. You're here and you can hop upstairs and you can go in the church and that's where you could be safe.

As I said that and he turned around, all this black smoke started filling and I looked at the building and it started vibrating. So I was almost next to the cemetery at that time. I was on the side of the church. I looked and all this debris just started exploding everywhere, and I turned around to run and I didn't see the patient anymore, and myself and the FBI guy just started going down that block.

Q. Were you going north?

A. Going north over towards Broadway.

Q. Right.

A. So I think that was Vesey I turned down at the time because I was on the side of the church. I went up Vesey. When I got maybe halfway the block, I got knocked to the ground. My helmet got cracked. A piece of debris had hit my helmet. So I quickly got up, put the helmet back on, and I was still running. There was black smoke everywhere. I couldn't see anything. By the time I got to Broadway, I looked around the corner. Because debris was flying, I wanted to make sure I just didn't get knock unconscious, and I looked and I just saw parts of things just flying past me. So I stopped and took a deep breath and just ran across and I made a left on Broadway. By that time I made it to City Hall.

When I got to City Hall, people were -- they were just in chaos trying to climb the gates and the fences and get in. Somebody noticed I was in the Fire Department EMS uniform, so they brought this lady up to me and I was out of breath. They said this lady is having chest pains. I said, well, I don't have an ambulance. I have a radio, but I can't communicate because we were having communication problems. I said, but if she wants, she can gladly follow me because I'm going to go where you can get some help. So I guess they understood that at that time everything was all chaotic and there was nothing I could do, and everybody just started following me and I told them stay away from the larger buildings and really going into City Hall wasn't a great thing. So we all started moving downward going towards the Supreme Court.

So by the time I got to the Municipal Building and I turned around to look to see if debris had stopped falling, the second building started coming down. By that time everybody took off again. So I looked to see and I had noticed at that time I didn't know where my partner was and the radio was chaotic. I couldn't go over the radio. My partner and myself just happen to have Nextel radios, but we couldn't communicate because the satellite went down. So I said, well, as soon as I get over here, down past the courts, I'll probably be able to get a signal and I'll keep trying him.

At that time I ran into a young man named Mr. Medina. He works for Long Island College Hospital, but that day he was working up at Beth Israel. When I reflected back after speaking to him, because he came up to me, he was out of breath, he had a working cell phone and I had the working part of a radio, and he had told me he lost his partner. I said you know what? While I was standing there, I noticed a Beth Israel bus and it got crushed, so maybe you should just keep coming with me. Then I noticed I was hopping and my leg was swelling up.

Q. The Beth Israel bus was where?

A. The Beth Israel bus was right back at the World Trade Center.

Q. About where you were parked?

A. Right around the corner. But they were closer in front of the building. So he decided he would stay with me. We kept trying to communicate. We called Citywide. They referred us to RCC. We called RCC and we gave them both of our shield numbers and told them we were all right and that I was trying to get into Brooklyn to get to the hospital because my leg was just swelling up. He kept calling on his cell phone to try to update them to where we were so there wouldn't be a problem, and then he was telling them that we'd lost our partners.

By the time I got down to -- there's a park over there around Bowery, maybe a block over from the Manhattan Bridge. We sat down for a moment and debris was still coming down. It made it all the way down to that park. That's a little past Canal Street. We were able to catch our breath and get through and let them know I was fine, and he told me, if I'd be all right, he'd like to head back because he wanted to find his partner. So I told him, you go ahead, and he said, no, I can't leave you until I know you're all right.

So he walked me back towards the Manhattan Bridge and we noticed all these people going over the bridge and they were stopping the trucks and cars, and he saw private green sanitation truck and he went up to the guy and said can you take my partner in to Brooklyn so he can go to the hospital, and as he said that, some of the people overheard him and they came and they grabbed me and lifted me up and they put me in the back of the dumper in the back of the sanitation truck.

So as I'm coming over, I hear my partner come over Citywide and he says my partner is in the building. Because he heard them advise me to get dressed and go in the building, he assumed when I went to drop off the patient they took me in the building, so I was in the building. I heard him and they told him unauthorized transmission, only Chiefs and above can be on Citywide at this time. So I went back over the radio and told him I'm not crushed in the building. I'm going over the bridge. So I'm all right and I'll talk to you later.

When I got halfway over the bridge, people started looking back because this thing starts smoking again. They thought something else was going to happen. They stopped all the traffic in the middle of the bridge. So I had decided I would get off this garbage truck and keep hopping until I got into Brooklyn. Once I got off, though, I noticed there was a firefighter coming across the bridge and he was holding his radio, and he was covered in soot and he was talking on his radio but he didn't have a battery on the radio.

So we both made it about the same time to Tillary Street and this lady was driving past and she stopped and she picked me up and she brought me to the station here. I don't even know what happened to the firefighter. But once I got here, I made it the best way I could to the hospital because we didn't have any vehicles or anything. Actually, the battalion was closed off. They had it barricaded. So once they saw me coming in full of soot and everything, they opened the gate for me and let me in, and then I hobbled down here and I was advised I had to get to the hospital, and I did. By then I had noticed I had a lot of beeps and a lot of phone calls because people found out, I guess, that I was all right from the World Trade.

When I got to the hospital, everything was fine. They diagnosed me, told me I had actually tore a hamstring. But they had looked at it and they said, you know what? It's not that bad. In light of what was going on, I figured the same thing. So I returned back to work. I didn't stay out at all because I knew there were a lot more people that were worse off than myself.

So I came back to work, and by the time I got back there, I noticed both of my partners who were on vacation came in because they called in and they told them I was lost at the World Trade. One came from Long Island and one came from Bay Ridge and they both came in and worked. They were sitting at the bridge in hopes that they saw me coming over the bridge, I guess.

I guess the biggest thing that I noticed was the lack of knowing what was going on, because I don't know what you could say would be worse, to actually stand there and see this? The first thing came in my mind was the movie Armageddon, and this was reality, with the black smoke 30 floors high, debris falling everywhere. Being on this side, not knowing what was going on that side, because there were people, when I was coming back over the bridge, going on motorcycles walking, people coming back this way trying to go to Manhattan, and I'm thinking to myself they must be crazy. But then there were people here that were more stressed because they couldn't get on the other side of the bridge.

So I didn't feel bad knowing that I had made it. A lot of people had guilt that I spoke to afterwards or they were just so devastated. Because I have never seen anything like that in 21 years of emergency work. But like I said, the biggest thing was to know that certain people had made it out, because everybody didn't have to make it, and that we were able to just stand up and go through all of this and still come back the next day. So I guess the biggest thing I learned was, not the salaries, not the titles, because there were no bosses anymore at the scene. We were very chaotic and I guess from M training and just love of humanitarianship, which we all have, we all were able to bring together and make it through.

Q. Anything else you want to say, Russ?

A. No.

Q. I guess you said it all.

A. Other than I'm just happy I'm here and the first thing I did was let the kids know I was all right. I was worried about debriefing everybody here, EMS and the Fire Department and the police, and we subsequently had a debriefing set up a few weeks later up at Cumberland Clinic.

Q. Thanks, Russ.

A. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER CRAIG MONAHAN

Interview Date: October 9, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. CASTORINA: Today is October 9th, 2001. I'm Ron Castorina. I'm at Engine 24, Ladder 5.

FIREFIGHTER MONAHAN: Craig Monahan, firefighter first grade, Ladder 5.

MR. CASTORINA: Present is --

MR. McCOURT: Tom McCourt.

Q. Firefighter Monahan, can you tell us on September 11th the events that took place that day, where you were working and going through all the details?

A. I was off duty. When I saw the second plane hit, I drove in to work from Staten Island. I had two other firefighters with me, Steven Altini and Joe Ray. Joe Ray and I both had our bunker gear with us because our last set of tours we had been detailed to other companies. We just so happened to have gone home with our bunker gear. Altini didn't have his.

So I rushed in, and I got here pretty quick. I parked in front of 90 West. I came through the tunnel, Battery Tunnel, parked in front of 90 West. Joe Ray and I geared up, put our gear on. We started heading north towards the towers. Altini, we left him at the rig. He started heading towards -- the command center at first. I think he ended up going back to 10 and 10 to get gear.

Anyhow, as we were walking through the streets, the West Side Highway was littered with body parts. You could identify a hand, small pieces, but obviously body parts. It had that odor. I've been through this before.

Q. What time is this now, approximately?

A. I have no idea.

Q. Both towers were still up?

A. The two towers were both standing, and they were roaring.

Q. Both planes had hit at this point when you were there?

A. Right. I left Staten Island at -- it wasn't my house; it was somewhere else. But I was on the south shore of Staten Island. I went into somebody's house, because they said that a plane hit the tower, and they were showing me on their TV.

As we turned it on and looked at it, the second plane hit. I knew right then that we were losing companies and mine was probably going to be one of them. So I was going in, and the other two guys came with me.

We got there really fast. I drove on the shoulder or however it took to get here. I parked in front of 90 West, left the keys in my truck in case anybody needed to move it. The highway was kind of clear as far as vehicles. There was no traffic going through. It really wasn't congested with rigs at that spot.

I saw an ambulance. Dr. Kelly was getting on the ambulance with I don't know who. They were putting someone on the ambulance. That was before we got to the south pedestrian bridge, before Liberty Street. You could see airplane parts just littered across the street, across the highway.

Joe and I walked north. My goal was to find Ladder 5, my company's rig, and try to retrace their steps and find them and help them. As we were walking past the towers, it was just unbelievable. You had to watch where you were walking. You didn't want to step on a scalp or a knee joint or something like that. There was just stuff everywhere.

We kept going north. We were just on the edge of the sidewalk. We got in front of One World Trade Center, and I looked in. It looked like it was dark in there. I had to find 5's rig. As we were going, I'm looking to see the rigs. I know we normally come down West Street. I want to find my rig, get tools, and then maybe I can trace my way in from there.

It turns out we found Squad 18 under the north pedestrian or somewhere around there, and we got masks. We took masks off of there. We were looking for tools. All we got was a couple of masks.

Just north of that pedestrian bridge before Vesey, we found Ladder 5. It was parked in the middle of the highway, right up against the divider.

Q. Can you mark that on the map, where it was parked?

A. 5 Truck was right here.

Q. Just write "5 Truck."

A. That's where it was when we got there. The tormenters weren't down.

Q. Put "05" or something like that right next to it.

A. It was just parked. It was running. But the tormenters weren't down. It wasn't close enough to ladder the building.

As we're looking through the rig to try to get a Halligan or some tools, some construction workers or I dont' know if they were civilians. They were employees I think somewhere down there, and they came running over to us saying there's a chief that needs to get down. There was a chief up on the mezzanine area right on the corner of Vesey and West.

I got in the truck. I pulled the tiller wheel in position so that all Joe had to do was sit up there and hold that wheel. I was going to back Ladder 5 close enough to this mezzanine area so that we could put up the aerial ladder to get him down and whoever else he had up there.

We did that. We backed it up. We got it close enough. We laddered the building. We put the aerial up, and that's it. Basically that's it.

Q. Who was the chief there?

A. I didn't get his name.

Q. When you got there he was still there?

A. He was still up there. I don't know if he came down our aerial or what. That was right about when the first building came down. We put the aerial up.

Q. Could you put on there where you moved it to? Was it pretty close to where it was originally?

A. We moved it this way, right there.

Q. So basically just as you got it in place, that's when the building started coming down?

A. We got it in place, and then we got off the turntable. We were looking for tools again. Then all of a sudden you heard something, and it sounded like a harrier jet was landing right over top of us. Sure enough that second tower was just coming straight down.

It was sick. I didn't think I was going to survive. It was really a sick sight and a really sick sound.

Q. What did you do?

A. I said, "Let's go, Joe. We're going to dive under this engine there." There was an engine, I think it was at Vesey and West, I think it was right on the corner by the median, and we ran to it and we dove underneath it. We ran to it, ran around it and dove underneath it, because we figured we were going to get covered and that's our best chance.

Although debris fell around us, the main structure felt as if -- we were lucky. When it sounded like the explosion stopped, the steel hitting, when it all seemed to stop, this just like a fire storm of wind and material, a sandstorm kind of, just came and wailed by, really flew past us quick.

We huddled and stayed in place, and we threw our masks on. I knew which way was north, so we started walking north to try to get out of that storm. Eventually it cleared. It was probably 20 minutes. It's hard to say, because it seems like to me that all of the time frames, how many minutes it took me to get there, I couldn't tell you. It's just like everything is just one. Your mind is playing games.

Q. Most people have the same problem.

A. I would like to ask you guys questions, you know, the times of what happened, piece my life together.

Together Joe and I walked north on West Street, and we found an engine company, hooked it up to a hydrant, and we fired the stag to try to knock down some of the smoke just so that we could see. We did that for a short time.

Q. Was there a lot of burning debris around or anything?

A. Not that we were able to hit. But there was a parking lot I think on the corner of Vesey. I'm not sure. I think it was the corner of Vesey and West. I'm pretty sure, yeah. On the southwest corner of Vesey and West, there was a parking lot that was just roaring. Every car was transmitting to the next car. This was between the two collapses, I think.

I went over there. I took a saw off of some fire truck, some ladder company -- I don't know -- and took a metal-cutting blade. There were two fences between the highway and this parking lot. I cut the fences and, with an engine company, advanced the line and started knocking down those fires.

Once that line was in place, that engine was in control, they didn't need me. So that's when I started making my way back down to try to get inside the rubble.

Q. Did you get any direction from anybody at all or were you kind of like working on your own? Did you meet with any chiefs or lieutenants?

A. I saw chiefs. Yeah, I ran into chiefs, and they were all telling me to get lost: "You ought to just go north." But I didn't really want to do that because I know my guys are in there.

I left the saw there. I left that engine company. I figured they don't need me to put these cars out. I started walking back towards the towers. Then, bam, the next one started coming down. I just couldn't believe it.

Q. Where were you when the next one started coming down? How far away were you?

A. I think I was north of Vesey. I might have been closer to -- between Vesey and Barclay on West Street.

Q. You were by yourself at this point?

A. I had Joe with me. We had lost each other and then got back together, I think. Your mind plays games with you when you see this kind of shit. I know we were together when the second one fell also. After that one came down, we walked north again.

We met up with an engine company. They were just staying by a hydrant and spraying the water, trying to knock the smoke down. They were just going to stay there. We hung out with them for a minute.

Then, I don't know, that's when I lost Joe, after the two towers were down. I knew he wasn't in the collapse. Somehow in the dark we lost each other. I headed back down -- well, that's it. That's all you want to know, the two towers.

Q. Well, you can go on a little bit.

A. I came back down, and I went to five, and it was crushed with steel and all kinds of crap. I didn't see anybody in it or under it or around it. So I started making my way towards the pedestrian bridge, and I saw that the bridge had come down substantially. But there was about four feet -- there was a void underneath the pedestrian bridge where you could see the street. So I climbed under. I went under and went into the pile and started looking for guys and everything. There was just nothing to find. Everything was the same color.

That's all you guys want to know; right?

Q. You covered it all. Anything else you want to add?

A. That's it.

MR. CASTORINA: The time is 12:50. This concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT GREGG HANSSON

Interview Date: October 9, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. CASTORINA: This is Ron Castorina, working with Thomas McCourt. We are at Engine 24. The time now is 11:10. The date is October 9th, 2001.

Your name, sir?

LIEUTENANT HANSSON: Lieutenant Gregg Hansson.

MR. CASTORINA: Where are you assigned?

LIEUTENANT HANSSON: Engine 24.

Q. Can you tell us what happened on September 11th?

A. Sure. I believe the call came in somewhere around 8:47, when the tower was first hit. I hopped on the rig. We had an extra man with us. It was myself, Firefighter Ottrando. John Ottrando was the chauffeur. We had a probationary trainee Firefighter Byrne, probationary Firefighter Sterling, Firefighter Claes, and Firefighter Billy.

I believe we were responding on second alarm, which was the initial second alarm. I'm not sure what due we were. We responded down Varick Street, which turns into West Broadway. We came down into Vesey, made a right onto Vesey and made a left onto West Street. We parked at the corner of West and Vesey, where my chauffeur was going to hook up to a standpipe.

Obviously we noticed smoke coming up from the north tower. Me and my four men proceeded with our rollups, the standpipe kit, up the stairs into the lobby of the One World Trade Center, which was the north tower building.

Q. Is that standard procedure or were you given direction by anybody there?

A. No, there were no directions at that time to do that. That seemed like standard procedure to me in a high-rise building.

At the time I did not know what had transpired, whether that was a plane or some type of explosion.

Upon entering the Trade Center, we went through the revolving doors but noticed that all the glass was out. So we could have gone right through the building.

At the northwest corner I believe is the Port Authority command post. Deputy Chief Hayden was there already with his aide. There were several other units on the scene. It was understood that all the elevators were out at that time.

We waited for direction, at which time a battalion chief did come over. I don't know which battalion chief it was. He was speaking with Lieutenant Fischer Ladder 20. I was standing next to Lieutenant Fischer, and he asked what staircase he was going to use. I'm not sure what Lieutenant Fischer said, but I was then assigned to go up with Ladder 20 as a team.

I believe we followed a Port Authority police officer. We went past the elevator banks. You could see that they were all blown out. We went over to stairway A, which was the southeast corner area. There were many civilians self-evacuating at the time. We got the evacuees into a single file to come down, and we single-filed our way up.

We made our way up somewhere between the 15th and 20th floor, at which time we saw one woman, a black woman, with burns along her arms. In the same vicinity we were met with a woman who was having severe respiratory distress, which was likely caused by an asthma condition. She was with a civilian who stated he was from the 90th floor, and he had a large gash to his forehead.

We took her off the stairway and into the hall. I tried to call for an urgent, but at that time I realized that quite a number of maydays and urgents had already been given for many civilians and also for firefighters who were having trouble breathing already or having chest pains.

Q. What floor are you on at this time when you pulled her off?

A. I believe we were around 20.

Q. 20?

A. Somewhere in the vicinity of 20.

At that time we had her lying down. She was breathing but having some trouble. We didn't have any oxygen with us, and there wasn't much we could do. I realized we weren't going to get any help, so we just monitored the situation.

I questioned the guy from the 90th floor, who said it was a plane. That's when I first realized that we had a plane up there. He said there was a fireball on the 90th floor and a lot of smoke on the 90th floor.

He got to a room where there was about eight people, and he said the eight people did eventually get out. He stated to me that he believed everyone from the 90th floor had gotten out.

She started to feel better, and she said she was ready to descend again.

Q. What were the conditions in the stairway?

A. The conditions in the stairway were absolutely clear. There was no smoke whatsoever. Occasionally on the hallways you could see a light haze, but that wasn't on every -- some were totally clear. Some had a very light haze. But the stairways were totally clear. All the civilians looked fine except for the ones I just indicated.

So we left that civilian from the 90th floor, that gentleman, he assisted the woman down. We continued our way up. I believe Ladder 20 had gotten off with us on that floor and were taking a rest.

We continued up until I believe the 27th floor. My men started to become pretty exhausted at that point. Again we took another rest at the 27th floor with Ladder 20. There was a couple civilians with a woman in a wheelchair.

At that time I ordered Firefighter Billy to stay with her and if he got any assistance from any units on the way up that he could descend with her. But at that point I said for him to just stand fast.

I don't know how long we were there for, maybe five minutes. Then we continued our way up again, eventually reaching the 35th floor. Again, we were still with Ladder 20. On the 35th floor I spotted Engine 33, and I spotted Ladder 5. There was also a battalion chief, which I'm not positive but one of my members has indicated he believed he was the battalion chief from Battalion 11.

We also had a couple EMS workers up there. I did see one firefighter lying in the hallway in the elevator area, lying on his back. He was being administered oxygen. Everybody else that I did speak to indicated that they were doing okay.

Basically we were taking water, ice tea or whatever, and the battalion was setting up a staging area at that point. So again we were taking another break.

I then spoke with the Engine 33 officer, which was Lieutenant Pfeifer. We were trying to formulate a plan with the battalion chief as to how we were going to get up somewhere around the 90th floor, being that we were already exhausted at this point.

I don't know if that's important or not, but our idea was to take only four rollups out of the eight men we had instead of the eight rollups. My estimate is that we might have been on that floor between five and ten minutes. I would say at least five minutes.

I was in the vicinity of the battalion chief, who was on the command channel, when I heard a mayday given over the command channel to evacuate the building. He started to tell everyone to evacuate, as I did also. I saw all the units get up. Everybody got their gear. Everybody started for the staircases to evacuate.

Ladder 5 I know for a fact had been going down stairway B, which was in the elevator bank in the middle of the building. Engine 33 -- I'm not positive but I believe they went to stairway C, which I believe was the southwest corner. I went back to my men with Ladder 20 to stairway A.

Still in the hallway, we heard a big shake in the building. It's my belief that was the tower two coming down. I'm not positive, but you could definitely feel an incredible shake.

Q. Did you hear any explosion or anything from the first?

A. I didn't. Some people stated to me that there was at that time, but I can't recall actually hearing.

Q. You were at the 35th floor --

A. We were at the 35th floor.

Q. -- when you decided to evacuate and got the mayday.

A. Right.

Some people have indicated that that was the 37th floor, but I believe it was the 35th.

Q. Do you know what time?

A. I have no idea what time frame that was. But if in fact that was the tower coming down, it was 10:06.

At this point I do not know that the second tower was hit by a plane, nor do I know that that's the second tower being hit. I did hear on my way up transmissions from Ladder 3, which was Captain Brown. I did hear him communicating with somebody. I assume it was with the command post or some chief. I have no idea.

Q. Where was Captain Brown?

A. I'm not sure where Captain Brown was. I had assumed he was in the first building, because they were from Ladder 3, and I assume they would have been coming down on the initial alarm to the first. I'm sure you will find out in your interviews. I've heard and I thought he might have been as high as in the 60s, but I don't think that's correct. I did hear after that that he might have been in the 40s of tower one.

I thought he gave a mayday, and I thought he stated that there was an interior collapse. But again I'm not positive of that.

On the way down I could hear them calling for Ladder 3. Then they would call specifically for Pat Brown. There was no response from Ladder 3 whatsoever from that point.

The chief had directed us, after this big loud shaking, to get in the stairways. At that time I was with Lieutenant Fischer and my men. I believe two of his men had gone up, before this shake, had gone up. He was obviously upset at them for going up. He was screaming at them for them to get back down. Then he went up to go get them. At that time I ordered my men, "Let's get out." So we started to get out.

I lost contact with Firefighter Claes at that time. I thought he was ahead of me. I found out later that he had gotten out of the building much sooner than we did.

We got down to 27, where I went to pick up Firefighter Billy that I had left off there.

Q. He was still there?

A. He was still there with the woman in the wheelchair.

At that time Firefighter Byrne had indicated to me that he left his mask up on the 35th floor. So I ordered him to leave the building, to stop for no one, being that he had no mask.

So now I was with Firefighter Sterling and Firefighter Billy. A couple people, civilians, indicated to me that there was an elevator that was working at this time. But I had already gotten transmissions over the air that some elevators had already crashed down to the first floor. I told them no one is getting in an elevator.

There was another officer there. Firefighter Billy indicated to me that he might have been the captain of Engine 21. We discussed how to remove the woman, and I believe he said to me that he's going to take her down with his company. They went to stairway B. I said, "Okay, Rich, come with me and let's continue on down stairway A." We went down stairway A.

We got down to the third floor, and the third floor was partially blocked by some sheetrock. We started to move that when a firefighter from Squad 18 -- I believe his name is Kelly. He is alive. I've seen him since. He said to me that you can't get down that staircase, there's no exit that way, and he needed help with a civilian.

There was on that floor now -- on this particular floor all the lights were out. We had a rather large gentleman, I would say maybe 300 pounds or so, a civilian, who was for some reason incapable of walking. He was on the ground. We assisted him in trying to remove this guy. We made our way to stairway C, I believe.

We were having quite a difficult time trying to remove this guy. There were a couple Port Authority police officers. They might have been ESU. I have no idea. We finally managed with great difficulty to get this guy down to the first floor, and we were directed by Port Authority police officers to the lobby area of the north side of the Trade Center, which was a couple of doors right in the middle.

We had two officers there who said, "Hold up. There's people jumping out of the building and there's a lot of debris coming down." They were actually looking up outside the building when we were still in the lobby. They said it was okay to go, and we started to bring this guy across.

At that time we were with I believe the officer of Engine 15, which was Lieutenant Foder. I believe he had at least two men with him. It was myself, my two men, the Squad 18 guy, and I believe I saw a guy from Rescue 5. I think his name was Firefighter Spade, who made it also. There were at least four police officers.

We started to go across. There was a little overhang there for the Customs building. We made it across to that, under that overhang. The civilian just kept on tripping over debris. There was debris everywhere.

Q. What was the condition? It was still heavy smoke?

A. You had a visibility of about 10 to 15 feet, I figure. To me it looked like a whiteout. There was a lot of debris on the ground. It seems to me it might have been the sheeting of the Trade Center. A lot of that you saw. This guy kept on tripping over it.

I went ahead of I believe Lieutenant

Foder and Firefighter Kelly from Squad 18. At that point we're assisting the civilian, trying to hold him up. At that point I got rid of my mask. We were outside the building. We were all pretty exhausted by that point too. I went ahead of them to remove debris. We were at this point right here. I don't know if you can see that.

Q. Okay.

A. That's basically where we were. Then a large explosion took place. In my estimation that was the tower coming down, but at that time I did not know what that was. I thought some type of bomb had gone off.

I was, I believe, ahead of the rest of the firefighters and officers there. I made it to the corner, and I took about four running steps this way when you could feel the rush of the wind coming at you. I believed that that was a huge fireball coming at the time.

I then hit the deck into the side of the building and basically waited it out. We were all hit with debris. At that point it was a total blackout. You couldn't see anything. All this glass already had been taken out.

I found out that those guys there that were behind me had jumped into World Trade Center six when this came down. I was in the courtyard over here. I got hit by a lot of debris at that point, but I guess within seconds or a minute it was over.

I was still okay. I got myself up. I had no mask at the time. All I had was my flashlight. There was dead silence. You couldn't hear anybody. No transmissions over the radio. There were craters all over the place. You were in the middle of this cloud that was fairly suffocating, so I had no idea how much longer I was going to be able to stay in there.

I wound up crawling for a ways, and I finally saw a flashlight. I don't know if there's a staircase in here, but I saw a flashlight and I saw someone calling, "This is the way out. This is the way out." I made my way to that staircase, got myself out, and I don't know where I came out. I think I might have come out this way and over to Church Street.

At that point I saw Firefighter Byrne when I got out into the street. There was nobody else around for blocks. I could hear Firefighter Billy calling a mayday at that point. I tried to respond to him over the radio and tried to direct him out. He didn't respond again to me.

I then looked for help to get a mask, to get a search rope of some sort to try to go back in there. There was nobody around. We went several blocks, I don't know how far, when I finally found Ladder 164's rig.

All my maydays went unanswered. I got on Ladder 164's rig. I called the dispatcher, gave the dispatcher the mayday, told them that both myself and Byrne were out of the building and I was missing the rest of my company. I said I don't know where the command post is, but there is nobody around.

Q. Byrne was with you the whole time?

A. From that point. On the 27th floor I had told Byrne to leave.

Q. Right. You hooked up with --

A. I hooked up with him again at this point.

Q. Who was the one with the flashlight that you saw think you saw leading you out?

A. That was a police officer. It could have been the Port Authority or it could have been ESU.

Q. When you were outside you were by yourself?

A. On the initial collapse?

Q. When you were outside. When you came around.

A. I was by myself at that point.

Q. And then you picked up Byrne?

A. On the street somewhere.

We walked several blocks, but then we found an ambulance and we saw Safety Chief King in the ambulance. I started to ask him what happened. That's when he told me both towers are down. I didn't even know that had happened, but that's what it was.

Eventually we made our over to Engine 7, Ladder 1's quarters. A triage area had just started to be set up. There was a doctor there, and she took a look at me. She said, "Your throat's extremely red. We have to get you to a hospital."

I called the dispatcher again from the department phone there, indicated again where I was. They provided no other information to me.

Soon after that then an ambulance came, they picked me up and they transported me to Forest Hills, where I stayed until about 4:00, when I finally got a ride back to the city.

I made my way back to quarters here. Sometime around midnight I went back down.

Byrne stayed at Engine 7. We all eventually --

Q. Byrne didn't go to the hospital?

A. What?

Q. Byrne didn't go to the hospital?

A. Byrne didn't go to the hospital at that time.

Q. You decided respiratory difficulties, no injuries?

A. Yeah, as it turned out. I mean, other than minor scrapes and stuff, I was all right.

That's pretty much the most I can remember.

Q. The rest of the company, what --

A. The rest of my company turned out to be okay. You can speak to Marcel in a few minutes.

From what he told me, he had gotten out all the way to the rig, Engine 24's rig again, and he operated all day from there. He did receive burns to his back area when he had taken off his coat. Then all this stuff started to happen.

Ottrando was the chauffeur. All he stated to me was that when they started coming down, the big cloud, he just started running north, and I believe he operated most of the day.

Firefighter Billy and Sterling got themselves out also from the area that I also had been in, and Billy was eventually taken to Downtown Hospital. Somewhere around 4 p.m. I started to find out that they were okay, but that was -- I'm sure you guys know there wasn't much information. There was nobody around.

Q. Yeah, right.

A. The only other thing I can remember that I might have left out is on the 35th floor there were a couple civilians. I believe there was a civilian in a wheelchair on the 35th floor at that staging area. When we started to evacuate, I believe she was going down the B staircase where Ladder 5 was. It's speculation at this point, but I believe they were assisting her.

We did find most of those members from Ladder 5 two days later in a staircase with two civilians.

I did leave another thing out. After the 27th floor, we were coming down. I got stopped again around 17. At the 17th floor, a firefighter came into the staircase and said, "I need some help with a room full of civilians."

As it turned out, I came out of the A staircase, I went down to that room. I left my men there. I went down there. There was it looked to me, about 15 firefighters and about maybe 10 civilians in this room on the --

Q. 17th floor.

A. Southwest side. I kind of stated generally that we have to evacuate the building, "Let's go." I was approached by someone -- and I saw Pfeifer there from 33 Engine. I also saw someone from Rescue 3. I'm not sure if he was the officer or not. I thought he was the officer, but he might not have been.

He took me aside. He took out a window on that floor, showed me West Street, and that's when I saw the damage done on West Street. I could still see several rigs, but you could see all the debris also.

I again said, "I think we've got to get ourselves out." He said, "I'm not sure we can get out." I said, "We've got to try." I again generally said, "Let's go, everyone, let's get out." I did see some people go to the C staircase. I went back and got my men at the A staircase and descended down. Then eventually I hit the third floor, where I teamed up with that guy from Squad 18.

I think that was it.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER MARCEL CLAES

Interview Date: October 9, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

MR. CASTORINA: The date is October 9, 2001. The time is 11:47. I'm Ron Castorina. I'm at Engine 24, interviewing -- your name, sir?

FIREFIGHTER CLAES: Marcel Claes, firefighter 1st Grade, Engine 24.

MR. CASTORINA: And your name.

MR. MC COURT: Also present is Tom McCourt.

Q. And on September 11, 2001, can you tell he what your assignment was that day?

A. My original assignment was in Ladder 5. I had a mutual with Paul Keating, but the engine was short that day, so they -- it was common practice to go back into the engine, being I'm an engine man.

So the call came in, and we got on the rig. We responded going south on Varick Street, and I said to the nozzle man when I saw the damage, "That's got to be an explosion," not realizing that it was hit by a plane.

We pulled up to -- I believe we went down Canal Street and went along West Street south, and we ended up parked on West and Vesey Street. There was a sprinkler system, a siamese for the sprinkler right there.

We went to the lobby of 1 World Trade, and when we got in there, we saw a lot of damage in the lobby around the elevator banks, and we found -- I found out that it was hit by a plane, thinking it was an accident.

So we proceeded up with other engine companies and truck companies in Stairwell A. After a dozen floors or so, we started to take breaks every four floors. We didn't realize it was hit by -- we didn't realize 2 World Trade was hit by an airplane, so we kept going up. It was single file, civilians going down and firemen going up.

The civilians were orderly and blessing us and helping the injured down. I checked the standpipe a few times on the way up. We made it up to the -- I believe the 35th story. We were taking a breather. I was on my knees, catching my breath, and we were discussing -- we were going to hook up with another engine company to make it up there -- easier to get up there. We were going to have some guys just take cylinders and the other guys take hoses, but we felt this rumble and this noise, like a train was going through your living room. Felt like an earthquake.

A few minutes later, a chief -- someone told me he believed it was 11 battalion -- said to drop everything and get out, get out. He didn't say why. He just said, "Drop everything and get out." Probably said it a couple of times.

So basically, that's what guys did. I went back and got my coat, my cylinder and my standpipe kit, and I was the last one to go down from my company, but they ended up -- we got separated because I found out later that one of our -- Richard Billy was on the 27th story in the hallway with a woman in, I believe, a wheelchair, and the rest of the company went in to get him.

I continued down, not realizing that they stopped at the 27th Floor. I made my way down to around the 10th Floor. Someone said go to Stairway B, so I went down. I went to B. I saw Faust with Battalion 8. I asked him did he see anybody from 24 engine. He said no. I continued down.

I made it to the lobby. I did see a woman walking real slow. I walked behind them. She was being helped. I don't remember if it was a fireman or EMT. I got -- I just wanted to get some fresh air, so I went around them. I made it to the lobby.

I saw building employees running around. There was a lot of debris in the lobby. I went out the same way I came in. That was on the northwest corner of tower -- 1 World Trade.

Q. On the map on there?

A. I went out a window that was taken out, because I knew my engine was parked on that side. I made it out to the -- I saw a man in the courtyard. He was waving me out, like come on out, get out of there. I didn't look up. I just went out to the street.

When I got out to the street, I looked up, not believing what I was looking at. I saw three people jump out of the building, and it started to collapse, and I took off north on West Street. I made it behind an engine. I was only carrying my coat. I had time to put it over my head. I was at the back step with another fireman. I don't know who it was.

Finally when the dust cleared, I started walking north on West Street for a couple of blocks. I didn't see the rest of my company. I saw some members from Ladder 8, and I decided to go back to the engine, because it was still running when I went out the first time, so when I went back to Engine 24, which was parked on the Vesey and West, it was still running, but the supply line was severed and there was a lot of dust and debris on the ground.

It was -- I believe Engine 239 was a couple of blocks north on West Street, who were originally supplying 24 engine. They --

Q. Can you mark on the map where you believe Engine 239 was?

A. I'm only guessing that they were up the block.

Q. Where was the chauffeur from 24? He was still at the rig or he --

A. I didn't see the chauffeur. I don't know what happened to anybody. That's why I went back to the engine, hoping that I'd find somebody from my company.

I got no response on the radio. I found out later they went to the hospital, and I didn't -- I didn't know where the chauffeur was, so I went back to 24 engine. I went back to the engine. It was still running, still hooked up to the Siamese.

Firemen were taking hand lines off, so I had to boost the tank. They were looking for people, and they needed precautionary lines. Actually, it was over here, 24 engine. I stayed with the engine, 239. I believe -- yeah, it was an officer, I think, from 239, and his men that were -- he supplied me -- it took awhile, but we found the first lengths. At one point, we were putting out ground fire with the first lengths.

There wasn't much pressure, because when I did get resupplied finally, I hooked up to a tower ladder, I believe 12, that was parked or maybe they moved it, Ladder 12. They operated up Vesey Street because a lot of rubble over there and ground fire, you know, going over here.

It was like ground fire and rubble that was on fire, so I just stayed right at the engine hoping somebody would show up from the company, at least they'd find me, but I just felt I had to do something, so I -- you know, I made sure that those hand lines and -- you know, I was -- I felt I was being useful just by manning the pumps.

At one point, a rescue company came by, and they walked into the -- you know, this is after the collapses. I they walked in. I guess they did their thing. I guess they were -- actually I don't know what they were doing. They must have got off. You know, they were off that day and went back to the company to gear up and made it there on their own.

Q. How was your breathing with all the dust and the debris?

A. Oh, at the -- after the collapse, I was gagging behind the engine, and there was -- my throat was caked up with this stuff. I almost threw up. Couldn't see the hand in front of my face.

Eventually the dust cleared. That's -- and after that, I picked up my cylinder and my coat and went up West Street, north on West Street, but then I came back after my eyes were all itchy.

Q. Smoke got cleared a little bit when you went back?

A. Yeah. After the dust cleared, I went back and operated the engine. I wasn't in any condition to climb through the rubble, but I felt, you know, I was being useful at manning the engine.

Q. Right.

A. Because of the ground fire. They ended up taking a multiversile tower ladder and two hand lines. I believe the hand lines were mostly because there was guys operating, searching over the terrace.

Let me see. There is like a terrace there and then the building. This building ended up -- there was a lot of rubble over here, of course. I guess that's between 8 World Trade and 1 World Trade that was on fire. This building -- I was watching the fire, started in this corner.

Q. Which building was that?

A. 8 World Trade, U.S. Customs building, and I guess about six stories, and it was on the 5th Floor, and then it just went from south to north in the course of the day. All morning I was watching 7 World Trade burn, which we couldn't do anything about because it was so much chaos looking for missing members.

Q. Did you end up going to the hospital or were you injured in any way or --

A. Yeah. When I was running, some hot stuff went down by back, because I didn't have time to put my coat back on, and I had some -- well, I guess between first and second degree burns on my back, ended up in the crack of my ass, and that's where the worst -- the worst ones turned out to be, because I was covering myself, and I couldn't -- it finally settled.

Q. Went down to your back?

A. Yeah, in my bunker pants.

Q. Did you get any first-aid?

A. I did. About four o'clock -- no, actually, I got some first-aid by some EMTs that were parked, I think on Vesey -- yeah, at the intersection of Vesey and West I got some first-aid.

Q. This was how much after?

A. A few hours afterwards. A few hours afterwards, because I was going to get to some water. I ran out of cigarettes. I was hoping to grub a cigarette.

Q. I'm with you.

A. All right. So I did get some first-aid earlier in the day, but finally after 3:30, quarter to four, I was feeling nauseous, and I wasn't sure why.

I thought maybe the burns were affecting me somehow, so I ended up going to the triage at Stuyvesant High School, and I found -- I was looking for the command post, and there were a lot of firemen, I guess who came after the fact.

I got to triage. They put some cream on my burns and flushed out my eyes for the first time, and I -- like my eyes -- I mean, I had great glasses to read, but I used to be able to read the paper with good light, but I couldn't even do that for a couple of weeks. They finally got better.

And then I sat around. I found out the rest of the guys were okay. They went to the hospital. I saw the chauffeur there. That was at Stuyvesant High School. Well, actually it was on West Street right outside Stuyvesant High School. They thought -- they were relieved, because they thought I was missing.

I did see members that came after the fact that were -- you know, but they weren't from the company. They came from home, but I guess they stayed looking for members that were missing and never went back to where the triage was by Stuyvesant High School.

What else? So by six o'clock I decided let me go home. I called my wife finally, because the phones weren't working around ground zero, so I found someone with a phone at four o'clock. I called home, and she was relieved, and I sat around there to rest, and I walked to the firehouse, and I made it to Canal Street, and I saw another fireman, a messenger I believe he was, and he drove me to the firehouse, and I took a shower and talked to the guys for awhile, and I was hoping they would find guys from Ladder 8 -- Ladder 5, rather, and that's that.

The next day I came back just to see what was going on. I was in no condition to go back there. And I worked Thursday. I was -- it was 24 on, 24 off. So I came in Thursday morning, and we didn't even have a fire truck until earlier that afternoon.

The shops did a great job fixing it up. It was missing gauges, the gauges on the pump, and the windshield was broken, and cabinet doors were bent. It was missing a lot of hose and tools. So we got it back that afternoon. We cleaned it up Thursday afternoon.

I believe they took it to the Sanitation Department, and they power washed it, and we got it back here. We had to hose the inside out, and we stocked it with whatever we had in the tool shed, and we went back in service around six o'clock that night.

We didn't have many runs, but I think that was the only operating engine covering lower Manhattan, except for the one that was operating within the collapse zone, the ground zero.

We did go back Thursday night. Was it Thursday? I think yeah, we did go back. It was our turn to good back to ground zero, and all I did was fill buckets with dust and debris. It rained that night, so we went back to the -- after a number of hours, we went back to the firehouse.

I was up all night, and Friday morning I went to the medical office, and they gave me a prescription for antibiotics, told me to keep -- it was starting to get infected, my burns, so they told me -- they put me light duty.

So Saturday I came back to the firehouse, and I was due to work at my light-duty position at Rac 5 Sunday morning. I went home -- when I got home Monday morning, we started with wakes and funerals all that week, because they did recover guys from Ladder 5, so we were off.

Basically, I didn't come back to the firehouse until the following week. The following week after Greg Sausito's memorial Mass, and then we were on -- when I was scheduled to come back to work. They went back to the regular schedule.

And that's about it.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT BRIAN BECKER

Interview Date: October 9, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

MR. MURAD: The date is October 9, 2001. The time is 12 o'clock, 1200 hours, and this is Murray Murad the New York City Fire Department.

MR. CUNDARI: George Cundari.

MR. MURAD: I'm conducting an interview with the following lieutenant.

THE WITNESS: Brian Becker, Engine 28, Group 22.

MR. MURAD: The New York City Fire Department. We are currently at Engine 28, Ladder --

THE WITNESS: 11.

MR. MURAD: -- 11, regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Presently there is no one else in the interview room, and we will be conducting the interview with Lieutenant Becker.

Q. Lieutenant, would you like to give the story of what -- your accounts of what took place on that tragic day.

A. Okay.

Q. And your role.

A. I had relieved the lieutenant from the night tour. He had left -- I was in the kitchen with the other firemen. I was standing up with a cup of coffee, and I heard a loud explosion. It sounded like it was coming from the back of the firehouse. I thought it was north of the firehouse.

I put down my coffee, and I said to the guys, "I think we're going to work. That was an explosion." So walking out to the apparatus, we heard the voice alarm came over and said there was an explosion in the World Trade Center. So we were putting on our boots, getting ready. The engine was dispatched on the box. The time was 8:48.

I knew right away. I felt right away it was -- I remembered thinking they got us this time, because I heard the explosion, so I knew it was a large explosion, and the World Trade Center, so I figured we were on route to a big disaster.

There was never a doubt in my mind, as I recall, that it was anything other than a terrorist attack.

We went east on Houston Street to the FDR, down the FDR Drive, and by the time we were approaching the Brooklyn Bridge, we could see the tower. We could see fire lapping out of the tower. Seemed like all four sides.

I guess we could see two or three sides from the FDR Drive and could see fire lapping out of multiple floors from about three quarters of the way up the building.

We made our way around the Battery, plowing through traffic, and made our way up West Street past the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel. We saw -- on arrival, we saw a lot of debris in the street on West Street. I could see what seemed to be -- coming down the FDR, I could see both towers, but I could see -- I only saw the fire in the north tower. The other one hadn't been struck. I'm sure of that.

We saw a lot of debris in the street as we came up, and I was concerned. I could see what seemed to be remains of bodies in the street. I told the chauffeur to stay as far to the left as he could, because I didn't want to get hit with a body in the cab and die right there. I remember thinking that.

We drove just past One World Trade Center, and we stopped under the pedestrian overpass, just north of the -- we got in a sheltered spot. We dismounted the apparatus. I'd say that was right here. We stopped.

Q. This is where the apparatus was, on West

Street?

A. Right, I would say we stopped just about underneath there. Underneath -- if that's a pedestrian walk --

Q. Right.

A. -- we stopped the apparatus under there just to stay out of shelter, because I figured there were jumpers, and I figured it was a very dangerous place to stop, so we stopped under the overpass.

We got off the rig. I asked the chauffeur, "Where are you headed?" He said -- whatever he said, he ended up hooking up on Barclay and West Broadway. That's just north of 7 World Trade Center, which it all interconnected, we think. You know, I'm pretty sure. Or maybe he was on Vesey. I'm not --

Q. Between Barclay and Vesey he parked?

A. Okay.

Q. He parked there.

A. As we were heading into the building, one of the guys said -- we were very excited and very pumped up, and it was a terrible situation. It was like a battlefield. It wasn't -- we kept it together, but we were -- as we were heading in, one of the guys, I forget who, said, "I forgot my mask." So we were delayed. I said, "well, you got to get your mask. We'll wait for you here under the overpass."

So we probably waited about 30 seconds or a minute or so. I would say 30 seconds to a minute while he ran to the rig, which was still, I guess, blocked by traffic and pulled his mask off, so we stayed as a unit. That delayed us for a few seconds.

All these things contributed, I think, to our survival. That's why I mentioned that, because, you know, every little -- every second made a difference.

Q. At that time, the rig was still on West Street and --

A. Well, I guess it was like a few -- a few -- maybe -- you know, there was traffic and a lot of -- you know, it was rush hour still, so he hadn't made the corner. He hadn't -- anything like that, so I would say 30 seconds to a minute.

So I grouped with the other firefighters under the overpass, and we gave him riding positions, and I gave the senior man the nozzle and things, and then when the other guy came back, we said, "Okay, let's make it a direct route right into the -- let's move fast."

So we moved into 1 World Trade Center from that northern pedestrian overpass, from underneath that, so we took the shortest route, and I think we just went in a window. I think the glass was blown out there.

I remember getting the impression that the elevators were blown out, and I kind of can verify that, because a chief grabbed me by the shoulder, and he said, "Engine 28, you're teaming up with Engine 4 and just take four roll-ups and head up."

I don't know who the chief was. There was no command. It was chaos in the lobby.

Q. Can I just interrupt?

Was there any communication at that point from the time you got off the rig and you waited for the other firefighter to get his gear and the 30 seconds?

Was there any radio transmissions or was there any direction?

A. Nothing that I recall. Honestly, nothing directed to us for certain, and we didn't direct anything. I didn't speak with them, because I knew I bounced the first division for years, and I responded to the World Trade Center several times, so I knew the procedure, you know.

Even though this wasn't typical at all, I was still going on that I knew I was going to report into the lobby command post. I knew where it was.

So we got into the -- like I was saying, when the chief grabbed me by the shoulders, he said, "Take four roll-ups only between the two companies. Team up with Engine 4 and start your way up," and I remember specifically asking him how are we going up, and I remember thinking that it was a stupid question, because I knew the elevators were blown out, but I just asked it anyway, just in case he knew something I didn't know, and he said, "You're walking."

I have an impression of smoke around the elevators, and bent doors, and it was pretty -- the lobby was pretty devastated. I don't remember who that chief was.

So we teamed up with Engine 4. I knew the officer, Joe Farrelly, so we were talking, making small talk and making our way up, and about two or three levels up, there were a lot of civilians coming down, and it was very -- pushing through them, so heavy traffic against us, and I saw a building personnel person, and I said, "Is there a better staircase?" And he goes, "Yes, there is. I'll take you to another one." He took us up maybe one or two more levels, either to the 3rd or 4th Floor, and I think we switched either from C to B or B to C. I don't really remember the letters any more.

We made our way down the hallway on the 3rd or 4th Floor, both units, and by then I think there was a chief with us, and as I recall, he had an 11 on his helmet, so I presume since then it was not the division so I presume it was chief from the 11th Battalion, and so we pretty much then traveled up as a unit, 4 Engine, Engine 28 and this chief.

There was also -- I remember a fireman or two from Ladder 8, and about the 10th Floor or so, the chief made a decision to -- the new stairway we were in had a lot of people coming down, and the chief made a decision that we were going to pause and get these people to another stairway and direct them to another stairway to try to vacate that stairway as best we could for us to go up and use it as an attack stairway.

So I would guess we were something like on the 10th Floor or something. So we probably spent a couple of minutes directing civilians to another stairway. They were all very cooperative, and there was no panic to speak of, and I remember reassuring of the civilians saying, "You're all right now. Just continue now. You are safe now."

I asked people occasionally has anybody been coming from a fire, you know, a floor where they have seen fire or smoke, just trying to determine how far up we had to go. So I had the impression we were heading for Floor No. 60, but it actually would have been higher.

So the firemen were getting pretty tired by then, and they wanted to take little breaks every few floors, so our progress was pretty slow. We weren't aware of any -- of the other plane. We heard rumors that another plane was on route, and one of the guys, Lieu, "Did you hear that? There's another plane on route, another one."

So we kind of knew somehow that a plane had hit. We knew it was a terrorist attack. Just -- I don't know -- accumulated knowledge along the way, I guess, from civilians talking or a little handy-talkie chatter, but by then, I presume, it was already 9:30 or something.

Q. You never heard the second plane?

A. We never heard the second plane.

Q. Just to verify, you were in the first tower that was struck, which was in the north tower?

A. Yes.

Q. And you had --

A. World Trade Center No. 1.

Q. And you had --

A. So I would say within -- we were probably in there like at probably 9:04, 9:05 or something like that, so I would say just as we were in the stairway heading up, the other plane probably hit the other tower. I would say -- but we weren't aware of that. We had very poor handy-talkie communications. We didn't hear much of anything. There must have been Maydays galore out in the street. We didn't hear any of them. I didn't. The chief didn't apparently either.

I remember it took a long time. A couple of the firemen were having a tough time keep going. We stayed as a unit, all of us still, all -- both companies, the chief, and by the time -- I remember we got -- had to go in to Floor No. 28. I said, "Come on, guys, we are at 28. Come on, next stop is 28th Floor." So that's accurate in my mind.

After that, I think we made another push after that, but that is not as accurate in my mind, that I'd say we were in the 30th or 31st, 32nd Floor, or something like that, and a few of the guys were lying wiped out on the floor, you know, taking a break with their masks off and lying in the hallway when there was a very loud roaring sound and a very loud explosion, and the -- it felt like there was an explosion above us, and I had a momentary concern that our building was collapsing.

Looking up, guys were diving into the stairway, and then it was like -- everybody was very scared by then. I'm talking the firemen, and then we were very worried about what was going on. We didn't know, but apparently that was the other building falling. I think we were that far along.

So we regrouped in the stairway for a couple of minutes, and I told the guys, "All right, hang on. Let's see what's going on." I still wanted to go up and fight the fire. The chief was very good. He said, "All right, everybody calm down."

A couple of firemen said, "Did you feel that rush of air?" and things like that, and how it was going on. It really felt like our building was coming down, and then the chief, who was out of sight for a few minutes, then came running up the stairs, and that's my impression, and he was saying -- "All right--" everybody was very adamant and loud, and he said, "Everybody, we are -- all Fire Department personnel are out of the building. We are getting out. Leave all your equipment," he was yelling, "Leave your equipment, and just get up and go, go, go," like that.

So I presume that he got the word that the other building had fallen.

Q. What floor were you guys on?

A. I would say 30th or 31st, something like that.

Q. That's when the chief --

A. That's when we were notified. I think this was the 11th Battalion. I think his body was recovered yesterday.

Q. Oh, boy.

A. But I'm not sure, because I thought that the 11th battalion also was with Ladder 6 when they were -- so I'm not clear on all this.

So we made -- we started to make our way back down, and there were no civilians to speak of in our stairway. There were a couple of stragglers being helped by somebody or other. We did tell them keep going down, and there were -- we might have seen a couple of firemen, but everybody was in the process. Everybody was heading down. Nobody was heading up any more, and it was pretty clear that we were getting out.

Q. Did you have an idea what time you guys started to descend down?

A. I would say it was like one minute after the first building collapsed, the first collapse of the other building.

Q. So five after ten then?

A. Right. It took us a long time to get up there.

Q. There were firefighters above you?

A. Not that I know of, no. I mean, we didn't see anybody going up ahead of us. We just saw civilians coming down, and by the time we were heading down, there were really no civilians any more, and we had a clear track to the -- and to the lobby.

When we got to the lobby, there was total devastation then. When we went in, it was blasted apart, and there was broken glass everywhere. All the windows were out, but when we got down, just my impression was that it was like being outside. You know, you weren't even in the building any more. It was devastation, but we were in the northwest corner of the building, so we were diagonally separated a hundred percent from the first collapsed building. We were on the opposite corner -- we were the most sheltered part.

We got to the lobby, and we saw things. We saw an arrest being made of some Arab-looking type guy. I think he had a blue uniform type World Trade Center type maintenance type person. It was my impression. It didn't seem important to me. It seemed like he was being arrested by a Port Authority type policeman. That's my impression. I remember them putting cuffs on him, and I remember one of the firemen saying, "Look, they're arresting the guy," and I said, "Never mind that. Never mind that."

You know, it was not our concern. There was chaos in the lobby. It was random people running around. There was no structure. There were no crowds. There was no -- no operation of any kind going on, nothing. There was no evacuation. It was just people running around, a few Port Authority police, and I think Engine 4 made it down.

I was talking to guys this morning. You know, we were with them. I remember on one or two floors above, Joe Farrelly, the captain, saying, "Oh, Brian, how you doing? I thought you were behind me," you know, but I ended up ahead of him the last flight. We were checking floors intermittently on the way down occasionally, make sure there were no firemen and stuff. We were trying to do a dignified retreat.

We didn't really realize the extent of what was ahead or what had already happened, and we got to the -- then we got to the lobby.

I have no more recollection of Engine 4. We gathered Engine 28, me and the four firefighters. We gathered by the edge of the lobby, the northwest corner of the lobby by the broken glass, and I made a move towards going out, and then I was worried that we were going to be hit by bodies or falling debris, and then I said -- "I don't know, you know, what --" this is the truth, this is what happened actually in that moment.

I said, "I don't know. Maybe we should stay here for -- maybe we are safer here at the edge of the lobby." And one of the senior guys said, "Let's get the F out of here." So we said, "Okay, let's go, let's -- Ready, here we go. Let's head for our overpass."

So we just ran as a unit to the overpass again, and we took a look up, and it was like one -- it was like, holy shit. It was like -- because it was like -- I guess the building was kind of -- I don't remember specifically, but I remember it was, like, we got to get out of here. So I think that the building was really kind of starting to melt. We were -- like, the melt down was beginning. The collapse hadn't begun, but it was not a fire any more up there. It was like -- it was like that -- like smoke explosion on a tremendous scale going on up there.

I said to the guys -- I said, "We are in the collapse zone." I mean, that sounds like a joke, but I said, "We got to -- we can't stay here." So we started running up West Street, and I'd say within 50 yards or so the building was collapsing behind us, and then it was like everybody was, like, oh shit, you know. This is it. Every man for himself, running up West Street.

Q. So what members of the Company 28 were with you that day? Do you recall?

A. With me?

Q. Yes.

A. Chelsen, Ippolito, Campagna -- he's an eight-week guy -- and Kehoe. He's the famous photographed firefighter of Engine 28 on the steps.

Q. Did you happen to remove any injuries or civilians or any of your own members following any collapse?

A. After the -- after the collapse, we were about 50 to a hundred yards north of the pedestrian walkway, and the collapse was occurring, and the firemen were all ahead of me, but my four firemen were ahead of me running up West Street, and then the black cloud just came roaring at us, and then we got separated for an hour or so, and I made -- I was torn between -- after like, you know, five or ten minutes, I guess, if I kept trying to get it together. Everybody -- you know, it was chaos. You know, it was pure chaos, and after maybe ten minutes or so, trying to figure out what had happened, and where we were, and letting the dust settle a little so we could see where we were, I kind of figured my four guys were safe.

I thought my chauffeur was dead for sure, because he was parked somewhere near the building. I made a little effort to -- I headed back. I figured I have to head back and try to see about my chauffeur, and I started back on my own, but we were confronted, like, with a huge pile of burning building, and the -- not even getting near the overpass where we were, and there were other buildings burning, like towering right to the side, and I was by myself, and I just talked to myself, Well, geez, I just almost got killed, and I'm not going to tempt fate any more. Didn't seem like there was anywhere to go.

We were kind of blocked. All the rubble was on West Street, so we would have had to go all the way around by the river to get around to the other side, so --

Q. Just going back to the handy-talkies, the communication.

A. Right.

Q. While operating prior to the first collapse, and following the first collapse, were there any communications?

A. We didn't hear anything. I didn't hear anything.

Q. Also during the second collapse --

A. After the second collapse, it was pure pandemonium on the handy-talkies.

Q. Is there a certain channel that you guys operate on?

A. We stayed on the primary technical Channel 1. We never switched.

Q. You never switched.

Just going back, given the current status of any member missing or deceased member, did you see them or did you --

A. No, I never saw a firefighter die. I never saw -- turns out our chauffeur made it. He was pulled into a building. He had experienced both collapses on the street, and he had been somehow pulled in on the second one that would have destroyed our apparatus totally. He was pulled into a building by a policeman or something into a federal building or something.

MR. MURAD: George, any questions?

BY MR. CUNDARI:

Q. What did you hear when the building starting collapsing the second time? Did you feel -- just started coming down? You didn't hear anything, feel anything?

A. We felt -- our whole building that we were in, when World Trade Center 2 collapsed, that was the first one to collapse. We were in World Trade Center 1. It was a tremendous explosion and tremendous shaking of our building. We thought it was our building maybe collapsed, there was a collapse above us occurring.

It was tremendous shaking and like everybody dove into this stairwell and waited for, I guess, 20, 30 seconds until it settled, and that was our experience of the other building collapsing.

MR. MURAD: Lieutenant Becker, I would like to thank you for allowing me to do this interview with you.

The time now is 1220 hours, and I'd like to state this concludes the interview.

Thank you very much.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER KEVIN MURRAY

Interview Date: October 9, 2001

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

MR. MURAD/CUNDARI: Today is October 9, 2001. The time is 1240 hours and my name is Murray Murad/George Cundari of the New York City Fire Department. I am conducting an interview with --

A. Firefighter, Third Grade, Kevin Murray, assigned to ladder 18 that day of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

Q. I am currently at Ladder 11 and Engine 28 regarding the events on September 11, 2001. Firefighter Murray, do you want to give your account of the tragic day?

A. Okay. I'll start from the beginning. I came to Ladder 11. I was -- I knew I was being detailed to 18 Truck and I thought I was riding for somebody on 11 Truck when the first plane hit. The second alarm was given, 28 Engine was turned out and I had somebody relieve me on 11 Truck so I could get over to 18 Truck in case they went on the box. I got over to 18 Truck. I was assigned by Lieutenant Borega, I was assigned the can and shortly after that the fifth alarm was given for the first tower and we went to -- 18 Truck was assigned. That's just about the same time that the second plane had hit, because we still saw kind of the explosion when we got onto the FDR, because they're pretty close.

On the FDR, there is a lot of traffic on the FDR and we saw -- I don't know which tower it was, but I think it was Tower 2, what looked like a hole where the fire was. That looked like a plane had gone through it.

Q. So that would probably be the south tower?

A. Probably the south tower, right, because we were coming from the FDR. So the south tower is closer. So probably the south tower. We saw -- I couldn't believe what I was looking at. We got under the bridge that goes from the FDR into West Street and there was -- it was unbelievable. There was jumpers everywhere, there was bodies everywhere, pieces of plane everywhere. It didn't seem like a lot of firemen everywhere. There was rigs parked in a couple of different areas, but you didn't see a lot of firemen, at all.

Q. Would you happen to know basically or to the best of your knowledge, where you saw those rigs?

A. There was a couple of rigs parked in front of the north tower and a couple of rigs parked -- there was a bridge that comes across where Liberty Street is and there was a van fire right next to that. I remember seeing that when I came in. And I saw a couple of rigs parked on Liberty Street. Where we parked, our rig was on -- we parked our rig under the bridge, the pedestrian bridge of -- that comes from 1 World Trade across the street to the Financial Center, the pedestrian bridge. That's where we parked our rig under.

Q. Were you able to identify any of the other apparatus or units that were there?

A. That were there?

Q. If you recall.

A. The rigs that we saw?

Q. Right.

A. No. Not to my knowledge. There was a company that was pulled in right next to us. I'm not sure what that company was.

Q. Okay.

A. Now we're all just looking up. The first thing the Lieutenant said is "We're staying together on this." I said, "Lieu, I'm grabbing a search rope." I grabbed a search rope, we all grabbed an extra cylinder and we started heading across under the bridge towards the first tower, Tower 1, the north tower. So we had walked alongside of 6 World Trade. We're parked under here. 18 Truck was parked on this side of the street, right there. We walked under the bridge and then pretty much walked into 1 World Trade right on this corner. Tower 1, that's how I went into the building (indicating).

There was a bunch of glass broken and we didn't go in through a doorway. There was all glass broken, there was glass everywhere and there was bodies everywhere. Everywhere that you looked there was a body or mush, you know. We got into -- the command center was somewhere in here or there was a bunch of chiefs somewhere in here (indicating). When we got in there, there was a lot of people not knowing what to do. Van Essen was there. Van Essen came over to 18 Truck.

Q. This is the north tower; correct?

A. North tower. Van Essen came over to the 18 Truck as soon as we got into the building or shortly thereafter and said, "Forget about the fire. Just get the people out." That's what they actually told us and these people -- we're waiting to get a sign basically.

So we stood over here on the northern most wall, the exposure 4 wall -- the exposure 2 wall and waited to get a sign. 21 Engine was doing the same thing, standing there with us and we were waiting to get a sign. I actually helped Father Judge into the building, because he went under one of those -- where the glass was, they had these metal bars going across and he had to bend over and walk under it. So I helped him into the building and then they said, we're going to be sent to the third floor and above. To start working our way up to start doing the search.

Now my father works in the building and I'm looking for a directory to see where he worked and we went to -- the first floor we went to was the third floor and all these people were coming down in the rear of the tower back here. They have these escalators that were shut off and all these people were coming down.

The elevators looked like they were on fire in the lobby. There wasn't smoke coming out of them, but it looked like they all bubbled up and everything and there was a fire in there. Basically we took the B stairwell, which is in between the elevators. I'm sorry. We forced an elevator door first and we got an lady out of an elevator. The elevator in the B stair, next to the B stairwell, closest to the B stairwell. We helped a lady out of there and we started walking up to the third floor. That third floor was clear. There was no damage, nothing. We got up to the fifth floor and there was severe damage. The ceilings had come down, the some walls had caved in. Major sprinkler damage, because there wasn't just a sprinkler. It was just like 2 and a half inch hose hitting you in the face when you were walking up there. So we were walking. We figured this is a good place to start looking for people and we were in some sort of -- we didn't see a company name or anything. Like we were in some sort of corporate area with cubicles or anything. It was almost like we were in like a locker room or something. We had made our way to like where the janitors worked or something. We had checked all the locker rooms and everything else. We were forcing some doors. We were there for a while.

Then we went to the sixth floor and did the same thing. Same sort of damage up there. When we were on the sixth floor, it was the sixth floor or the fifth floor, we were helping the people get down the B stairwell. And what I found out later to be was the first tower had collapsed.

Q. The south tower?

A. The south tower had collapsed. Now, it shook us and knocked a couple of guys down. Everybody ran to the stairwell. All the lights went off, all the shit came up the stairwell. It was filled with dust. There was a report that a third plane had hit the building and then we got another report that the 65 floor in the north tower had collapsed. That's what the rumbling was. We had no idea that the south tower had gone.

So at that point we --

Q. Did you get a report from the radio? Any communications? How was the communications at that point?

A. Communications were all over the place. I had the can so I didn't have a radio, but I was with the irons man and I kinds of heard a lot, but a lot of people were trying to talk at the same time. It was just static, a lot. What you did hear was -- what I did hear at one point, which I thought was Ladder 11, but it wound up being Battalion 11, because I was listening for them, was on the 30th floor. But it wasn't Ladder 11. It was Battalion 11.

We basically did an evacuation at that point and we started trying to get the people to keep going down the stairs, to calm down. What happened was that we didn't see it, but a portion of the lobby had gotten knocked out when that tower came down, so we couldn't evacuate people down that stairwell anymore. So we started funneling everybody that was on the stairwell through the 5th floor, across the 5th floor through the locker room, to another stairwell. I think it's the C stairwell. I'm not sure. And we started sending people down that.

Eventually someone -- and we were basically set up on a relay where it would be a couple of us every 15, 20 feet with flashlights showing people where to walk and we sent the people down that stairwell. Whatever was blocking the B stairwell must have got freed up, because then we were able to -- we were able to start sending them back down that stairwell. Because people, it was taking forever to get these people through the 5th floor.

Q. And were all you guys still together at the same time or were you separated?

A. We were spread out on the 5th floor, but we were all together. We were all there.

Q. Okay were you also on channel 1?

A. Yes. We were always on channel 1.

Q. At any time did they advise you to switch to another channel?

A. I heard something about somebody being in a different tower or something, switch to channel 3. But I didn't have a radio, so I didn't really think about that.

Q. When you were in the second collapse, of the north tower, do you recall the individuals or the companies that were with you?

A. 28 Engine was with us when we left the building. They weren't with us on the floor when we came down. After that, after we got everybody out, it was all firemen in the stairwells, in the B stairwell and I saw a guy from 16 Engine that I knew on the stairwell. We kind of waved to each other. I saw a guy from 15 Engine in the stairwell.

Q. Do you recall any of their names by chance?

A. Yes. Jimmy Hynes from 15 Engine, I saw him in the stairwell. He's okay. Pete Fallucca from 16 Engine, I saw him. He's okay. And this is all in the stairwell coming down. We went down to the lobby. Because once the firemen were all evacuating, we decided to evacuate with them. We went down to the lobby, this is the first time I got to see the lobby. We were missing Charlie Maloney from 18 Truck. We didn't know where he was. I think he was the irons with me that day. Because he had gone down to the front of the stairwell to guide civilians out the stairwell. When we got to the lobby and saw so the lobby was devastated, we thought maybe he got killed in that. But he wound up being okay later on.

What happened was we got down to the lobby and a guy from Rescue 1, I don't know his name, came over to 18 Truck and said, "You gotta help us if you got any steam left." He was all bloodied up. He goes, "My company is trapped upstairs and we got more companies trapped upstairs." He goes, "If you got anything left, come with me."

We run up the stairs. We started going back up. Now all these firemen are evacuating the building, we start going back up the B stairwell. We made it to the 5th floor and then there was a report of major gas, a gas leak on the 5th floor. So now I'm heading back up the stairs to the 20 something floor and there was some sort of gas leak on the 5th floor. I smelled it, but I couldn't tell if it was a gas leak or anything, but you definitely smelled something that wasn't there when we were doing the evacuation.

Q. Was there any conversation when you guys were going back up and there were firefighters descending down? Was there any conversation between the two groups?

A. More so through Lieutenants, but, you know, just basically. "Be safe." No one said anything about the tower having gone down. I don't think a lot of people knew that it had gone down. We didn't know.

So when we got up to the 5th floor and we smelled that gas and we saw these guys evacuating, we said, "We better get out of here." So we started heading down again. The guy from Rescue kept going up. He didn't stay with us. I don't know his name. A short, stocky guy.

Q. Was the stairwell lit?

A. We removed an injured civilian at the beginning and a couple of hundred civilians through. You know, getting them through that stairwell. But other than that, we didn't carry anybody out. The civilians were kind of -- once the collapse happened, they were shot. But they weren't panicking, running or anything like that. They were kind of staying calm.

Q. Given the current known status of the missing, the injured, deceased members, who did you see and where did you see them and what were they doing at the time? Was there any verbal interaction? Like I asked before when you guys were up and down the staircase. Did you last see someone?

A. When we came down to the lobby, we saw 28 Engine. We also saw 4 Engine. 4 Engine was in the lobby with us. There was another company that was back -- I don't know what company it was. It was back by the escalators, walking towards the front of the lobby. I think it was an Engine Company. I'm not sure.

We had a guy from 28 Engine, Roy Chelsen, had said, We saw all these jumpers coming down, a lot of glass was coming down, said we should run. Lieutenant Becker and Roy, who is a senior man said, "Let's run." They ran out Tower 1, alongside World Trade 6 and we had said -- 18 Truck conferred too and said, "We should go too." But the thing we were scared about was that the jumpers were coming down and all the glass was coming down. There was a lot more jumpers coming down at that time. And there was a guy under the bridge screaming, "Come on. Come on. Come on." You know. We ran. A couple of jumpers just missed me and the roof man.

We got under the bridge and we stopped, because my hook got caught in Harry's suspenders and his radio. It took me forever to get my hook out of his thing. We thought we were safe at that point. We saw a guy, I think big Port Authority Police or somebody had a guy locked up in handcuffs right in front of us and there was a guy, a rig right there.

Q. You can use the diagram to show us.

A. There was a rig right here. Actually, even closer. It was right as soon you got onto the street. There was a rig and a couple of guys sitting on the back of the rig.

Q. At West and Vesey?

A. Yeah. Right in front of World Trade, right under the bridge. And they were all messed up. You know, like exhausted and they were sitting there. We walked -- now we're walking. This guy, they were locking up this guy a little bit from Vesey, right here. A little bit south of Vesey Street on west. We started walking when the second tower --

Q. They are describing it as the north tower.

A. The north tower came down.

Q. Where did you exit out of?

A. The same place --

Q. The same way you went in? Okay. You went north on West Street?

A. We went north on West Street. We decided not to go to our rig, because we saw a lot of people up here, so we started going towards them. When the tower started -- there was a big explosion that I heard and someone screamed that it was coming down and I looked away and I saw all the windows domino -- you know, dominoeing up and then come down. We were right in front of 6, so we started running and how are you going to outrun the World Trade Center? So we threw our tools and I dove under a rig. The chauffeur Hughey from 18 Truck dove with me. The rest of 18 Truck dove under something else. Not the same rig as us, and then it came down. I don't even think we made it to Vesey Street. We might have been right on the corner of Vesey Street.

Q. And were the guys from 18 safe and accounted for?

A. Well, not at that point, but eventually through the day we found Charlie Maloney who we thought was killed in the lobby. He had made it out himself across to the Financial Center, across the street, and the roof man, Ralph from 18 Truck had gotten hurt and he was found at 7 Engine and 1 Truck later on. About seven hours later.

Q. Anything else you want to add?

A. No.

MR. MURAD/CUNDARI: Okay. So basically this concludes our interview. I would like to thank you, Firefighter Kevin Murray, for this interview which you just gave us.

The time now is 1300 hours and at this time I would like to conclude this interview. Thank you very much.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER MATTHEW LONG

Interview Date: October 9, 2001

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

MR. MURAD: The date is October 9, 2001. The time is 1425 hours and this is Murray Murad and --

MR. CUNDARI: George Cundari.

MR. MURAD: Of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I am conducting an interview with the following firefighter:

A. Matthew Long. Firefighter first rank, Ladder 43.

MR. MURAD: Of the Fire Department of the City of New York. We are currently at Ladder 43 and this is regarding the tragic events on September 11, 2001.

BY MR. MURAD:

Q. If you would please give your accounts of that day, on that tragic day what happened at the World Trade Center regarding your ladder company and personally yourself.

A. Okay. We were at a box. That's when the seconds plane hit and then we took in the Trade Center incident. We came in on West Street and to the best of my knowledge I could see both towers on fire, a lot of smoke. I witnessed people jumping as we were driving down the West Street highway.

Q. If you could draw on the diagram of where your resting place was.

A. I believe we stopped somewhere on Murray Street, almost two blocks from the 6 World Trade and another block from the first tower. At that moment we got off the rig, we got all our equipment together and I started walking towards the command post. We took a minute. Our lieutenant, Glenn Rohan, took a minute, stopped us all and basically gave us a little pep talk. We didn't know what we were getting into here. It was obviously some kind of an attack and that we should conserve energy, get rid of some tools and stay together most of all.

So we started back down West Street towards the Trade Center and I would say we got to between Barclay and Vesey when the first tower came down and it was chaos. It was crazy.

Q. Were all you guys from the truck together at the time that collapse came?

A. We were all together at the time with one extra roof man.

Q. That was the south tower that you're talking about?

A. I believe, yes. I believe it was the first tower. I believe when we were coming down the West Side Highway the both towers were still standing and burning and there was no chaos going on at that point.

So we retreated a little bit I guess, right to about Barclay and we ducked in, possibly, I don't remember, but we possibly ducked in 125 Barclay. We ducked in like an entranceway and just lay on the floor while most of the stuff was blowing by us. And when it seemed to have -- when the cloud of gray and black crap and things going by just seemed to slow down, we tied off a rope and started walking in to go back towards where everything used to be.

Q. You came down West Street from there?

A. Yes. We came down this way, like that (indicating).

Q. Just circle this here and identify this as 125 Barclay. That's where you waited until the debris and everything cleared?

A. Yes.

Q. Was there any communications by radio or was there still command post communications post --

A. At this point it was just -- there was just people running past us and so much chaos. We masked up and we started walking in with a rope. We had a search rope on and at that point I didn't know where we were headed.

Q. Were any other firefighters running you way or did you intercept anybody?

A. There were some cops running our way. There were -- there could have been firemen running, but there were fire trucks everywhere and when we got in further, there was just fire, a lot of rigs on fire.

Q. Were you able to identify the rigs that were on fire, by any chance?

A. No, I didn't recall which rigs were there at that point. But at that point we stretched in. We started climbing over the rubble and the boss said --

Q. What boss was that?

A. Lieutenant Rohan, Glenn Rohan, 43. He was just telling us to get -- he took three guys and said, "Grab a line off that rig and start putting out some of these car fires and rig fires." As he tried to look to see if there was still a command post. So that's what we did. So he split us up into two teams. And that's what we did probably for a while and I don't even remember the second tower coming down. We just kept working and climbing over stuff. I don't remember it coming down. I don't know if it came my direction or it went in the other direction, because it was just black. It had to be -- visibility was horrible for at least 45, 50, 60 minutes. I don't remember the time at that point.

So that's what we kept doing. We kept stretching hose lines. There was a ladder to -- there was a portable ladder up on 6 World Trade, so we were in this area right here just climbing over all sorts of debris. It was crush -- I think Rescue 1 was right about here.

Q. You are identifying the West Side Highway, right off Vesey; right?

A. It was in near Vesey. It was inside of -- it was between 6 and 1 and that's where the foot bridge I believe is.

Q. So that's the pedestrian bridge?

A. That's the pedestrian bridge. So it was right in front of 6.

Q. Okay. So that was Rescue 1.

A. Rescue 1 was right around here. I remember that. And this was down. So this is where we operated from the most, for the first hour, right here. Vesey and West Street. There were rigs everywhere. Rigs were all over here, they were burning. Between Barclay and Vesey there had to be a dozen rigs burning.

Q. At any point did you remove any civilians or a member of the service following any of the collapses? If so, were there any injuries or did you see any firefighters that were injured?

A. No. I didn't encounter any injured firefighters. I didn't leave anyone alone. If I saw them alone, I checked to make sure they were all right. If they weren't, I was looking for their company or looking for their boss.

Q. Were people still running towards you or running away at that point?

A. No. At this point now when we were putting out fires everyone was, you know, was pretty much just scrambling for hose line and doing stuff like that. Then, like I said, the boss went up a ladder that was to the scaffold of 6 World Trade here, where the U.S. Customs building is. He yelled down he needed two stokes, because they had a down fireman up here.

So we went and grabbed two baskets, tied them up and they carried him up the land. At that point is when they were looking for 6 Truck. 6 Truck and 39 Engine, they were saying were missing over the radios?

Q. I don't remember.

A. 6 Truck and 39 were together and they were trapped and they were calling for help on the radio. That's the last radio transmission I heard on channel 1. My boss and Jerry Suden and Todd Frederickson, two firefighters, and Johnny Colon, he was the chauffeur that day. The four of them went through this building and into the rubble of the both towers.

Q. The both towers were down at that point?

A. Yes. Both towers were definitely down at that point. So they went in there and that's the last I heard from them. They switched to channel 5. I didn't hear it given over the radio, for the 43 truck to switch to 5, so I operated with Frank Macchia. He was the second roof man and we teamed up in 6 World Trade with the 40th battalion. And we searched this building top to bottom. That's the 6

World Trade, U.S. Customs building.

Q. Right.

A. So we searched that building top to bottom and just constantly getting dead ends.

Q. At what point do you think you guys hooked up all together as a company? Was that at any point or not at all?

A. I didn't hook back up with the rest of my company until 5:00 or 6:00 o'clock at night. So I operated alone a lot.

Q. Okay. Anything to add?

A. The 7 came down at 4:30, I believe?

Q. Yeah, around that time.

A. Okay. Then I'm wrong. If 7 came down between 4:30 and 5:00, I hooked up with my company. Frank Macchia and I went under this foot bridge and started climbing on top of the rubble. At that point there was like a chain gang of guys and we were trying to get one of the Chiefs that was trapped, they were trying to get closer to him.

Q. Let's highlight that area.

A. Okay. We came under the foot bridge this way and we probably would be on top or in this little courtyard between 1 and 2.

Q. Okay. And this is where --

A. 1 and 2 here. And there was a rubble here. There was like a big 40, 50-foot drop you had to walk down and then back up and we had a little bit of a chain gang trying to pass stuff out and they were supposedly in communication with one Chief and I was probably midway up with Frank Macchia and my boss and Jerry and whoever else was up on top of that rubble. So I waited there and that's when we finally got reunited. And at that point they were worried that 7 was coming down so they were calling for everyone to back out.

So I waited for -- we waited for the boss, Lieutenant Rohan, in the middle of the rubble and we all walked out together back to the West Side Highway and crossed the highway and pretty much hung out by the marina when 7 came down.

Q. Where were you during the first collapse?

A. Walking down West Street. We were walking to the command center.

Q. And then you heard the second collapse, you said; right?

A. I don't remember the second collapse at all. I guess it was just stuff going through my head and whatever else. I'm almost 100% positive -- actually I had a camera on the rig when we were driving on the West Side Highway, I took pictures, but they didn't come out and I can remember both towers burning and we could see people jumping. From then on our minds were just like you didn't know what was going on. Unimaginable.

Q. A lot of talk on the radios or --

A. A tremendous amount of talk on the radios.

Q. Were you able to understand?

A. I mean there was a lot of people yelling. "We're trapped here." "We need tools here." "We need tools here." And nothing was getting answered because rigs were -- there were rig fires and police vehicle fires. They said the ESU units were on fire and they had explosives and weapons. So that was the concern. The amount of stuff that was flying in the air. It wasn't even like smoke. It was like dust or whatever it was. It was just lingering and it stayed there for such a long time. Which led me to believe that the second building collapsed and, you know, they just kept it going.

I mean that's my story pretty much. I mean it was a long time. I was by myself a long time. I didn't try to call them for a while because there was other stuff on the radio and I was all right.

Q. You had nobody with you?

A. I was with one other firefighter, Frank Macchia. The two of us worked.

Q. You were together the whole time?

A. We stayed together after we left the 48th battalion. We worked in that building for a while and the building was totally evacuated. We didn't see anybody and there was some pockets of fire, you know, big holes in it, but we were -- we eventually left him to try to reunite ourselves with our guys.

Q. And you finally found them over where?

A. We found them through this foot bridge, probably right in this area here of the rubble, the center of the rubble. We went through the foot bridge and came up and there were some I beams and there was a big wall. You kind of climbed down a bit and then came back up, and that is where our boss was operating up there, on top of that where they said they possibly had communications with a chief that was trapped. I'm assuming he was one that they left there. Because they were just adamant about 7 coming down immediately. I think we probably got out of that rubble and 18 minutes later is when 7 came down. So I watched -- we watched. There was a command station right here on Vesey. We were here with a whole group of guys. We watched 7 come down and then we went through, I guess this is the morgue now, Merrill Lynch, we went through that building there and there was an atrium we came through to go back on the other side and try to get back in to help.

Q. So you came from North End street then?

A. Yes. We came right through. This is the marina. We went right through -- there is an atrium here and we came through here and there was another command post on this side and we were trying to get back in to see what they were doing. Lieutenant Nigro from 58 Engine was missing and apparently they knew where he was. We were trying to help out there, but by then it was -- by darkness we were all just spent. We were just hanging out.

MR. MURAD: Firefighter Matthew Long, I would like to thank you for sitting down with us for this interview. The time now is 1440 hours and this concludes this portion of the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIRST GRADE FIREFIGHTER GERARD SUDEN

Interview Date: October 9, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. MURAD: Today is October 9, 2001. The time is 1445 hours. I'm Murray Murad.

MR. CUNDARI: I'm George Cundari.

MR. MURAD: Of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

Q. I'm conducting an interview with Firefighter?

A. I'm Gerard Suden, Ladder 43.

Q. Rank and command?

A. First grade Firefighter.

Q. Your assigned command?

A. I'm assigned to 43 Truck.

Q. Okay.

A. Fire Department of the City of New York.

Q. I'm currently at Ladder 43, Engine 53 and this is regarding the tragic events that occurred on September 11, 2001. Gerard, would you like to give an account of that day that you were working or assigned to Ladder 43 on September 11?

A. Sure. To the best of my knowledge I wasn't too familiar with that area before it happened, but from looking at this map, I will try and give you the best account I can.

MR. CUNDARI: Start from like when you came into work that morning or where you got the call, where you were.

A. Like I was telling you guys, it was my first tour back to 43 Truck after a 90 day detail to 2 truck. As you know those guys are gone. That whole truck was wiped out. It was good to be back. I was cleaning the tools on the rig and the next thing I know, guys are yelling from the kitchen and I went in and we were watching it on TV.

It was kind of hard to believe, but what happened was the Engine, 53 Engine got sent down there pretty early on, like before the second plane hit they were en route and I believe from talking to them, they witnessed the plane hit. They were down there. I knew it was bad.

We wished them well when they went down and I think me and the other members of the truck, just the nature of the job, we were chomping at the bit to get down there ourselves. We wanted to help out. They were kind of pulling most of the companies from the area and we were getting the feeling that we weren't going to get to go because they pulled the company north of us and the company south of us.

We wound up getting at some point in the middle of -- wound up getting an EMS run on 42nd Street which is way out of our district, but being that the city was so undermanned, they sent us all the way down there and as we were en route you could see the smoke and people watching it on the streets, executives smoking cigarettes and everybody was looking. We wanted to get there like I said.

We went to assist -- the EMS run was for a guy who had his foot stuck in a revolving door. I remember being a little annoyed, like I want to be down there. We got finished with that and we were pretty much asking the dispatcher to send us, let us help out, we are closer to the area. We weren't getting a response and shortly after we were en route back north towards here, home, we did wind up getting sent. We made way, headed down there --

Q. What was the radio communication at that time after you finished the EMS job, what was the transmissions going over the air?

A. From the back I couldn't hear too much of what was going on in the cab and I recall being at a light on the way north again and we knew, by now you figured out it was a terrorist attack. You see the two planes, and I remember scooters -- motors, one of the guys, a delivery messenger guy listening to a head phone told us they just flew a plane into the Pentagon and that was kind of unbelievable. It was all real pretty surrealistic, but I remember confirming that with another driver, somebody driving a car was listening to his radio so then we were kind of -- believed it.

The radio communication, I'm going to tell you when we got down there I wasn't really clued into the fact that the first building was down and I found out later that that's what the situation was. When we got down there the first building had been down. When I found out later on that there was like 20 something minutes between the collapses, it's a pretty long time not to go with that information, but there was no communication. Not from the air anyway. I think -- we were 10-8. We had less ability to find this out. People that were watching it on TV knew, like I said, at home, but we were just on the air and trying to get down there.

Q. You can draw on that, by the way.

A. That's fine. I will just tell you.

MR. CUNDARI: Mark where you were.

Q. You went south on West Street?

A. We are coming down the West Side Highway and some point, pretty good distance north we jumped out with a good view of the tower and I guess the south towers was down. It was buffered by the north tower, so we really couldn't tell. We just seen the smoke from behind it. We figured the building was there just burning, but looking at the north tower, walking down the block you could see the gaping hole and we were all pretty in awe of it.

We commandeered a bus, kind of stopped a bus because we were a good distance. We were a few blocks. I couldn't even tell you which street, maybe Warren or even further north from what I remember. We wanted to get there even quicker so we jumped on the bus and they dropped us somewhere -- I remember this pedestrian bridge, I remember walking south of that and I can't tell you how close we were but we ran back past that because as we were walking down, the building came down.

Q. That was the north building?

A. That was the north building, which for a while I was arguing with the guy that I wasn't convinced that the other building was down. Like I said I thought that was the first one. I thought somewhere in the midst of that whole noise maybe the second one came down and I couldn't pinpoint when it was, but that was the case. That was the second one coming down.

Q. So you said you heard when you got there that the building came down but you weren't sure, someone said that the building --

A. No, I didn't really -- I wasn't sure at all. After talking about it later on, one of the guys -- a Lieutenant, said that they were debating it on the way in, saying to each other that I think that building is down. We were all talking to each other and talking about we are going to stick together. We knew it was a bad situation we were going into. We were going to be working a long time. I remember the Lieutenant telling us to take an extra minute also. Make sure you don't have any heavy clothing on under your bunker gear, we are going to be here a while.

We stripped down a little bit, so between the guy with his foot stuck in a revolving door and the Lieutenant giving us a good heads up on the way in, who is to say what kept us being there a minute sooner, but we were at a distance when the building came down. We were fortunate. I thought we were going to be sand blasted off the street by the looks of it. We all ran, we were trying to break into a gate. We ran back north, we were trying to break into a gate and get further off the street.

When it passed us, the dust and debris, we were at a decent distance but the visibility was zero so we masked up. You couldn't see. We were starting to get back down the street. We knew people were going to need help. We masked up for a time.

I remember also, we used a rope for a little bit. That became pretty burdensome, you couldn't get far and you have to run back and untie it, but that's how low the visibility was. It started to lighten up. We went down, I guess, to right outside the north building and as we were walking down, all the cars were on fire on West Street, so I remember my Lieutenant telling me and another guy -- well, we all started working on this pumper. It was a Brooklyn pumper, it was a Brooklyn Engine, parked somewhere a little north, maybe to Vesey, maybe the corner of Vesey, but we pulled the line off of that and I remember him telling me stay on this line, me and another guy I was with, Mike Regan, that was working with us that day, we stayed together on the line and he took the rest of the crew. I can't tell you exactly what he did in the time that we were putting out the car fires, but I remember -- the visibility -- putting out the car fires, it wasn't exactly what I am normally doing, working in a truck company, but all bets were off. He told us to stay with that line. It needed to be done.

We put out I believe it was Rescue 1. Some of the rigs, I mean there was rigs also. I can't even tell you how many car fires there was, but we are putting them out and you realize the visibility was getting somewhat better. I mean it needed to be done.

Q. You worked your way south on West Street?

A. Worked our way south putting out fires. We even went further south of tower one putting them out and coming back and we had a lot of help along from other guys, stretching the line and the debris in the street was just tough going over.

Q. People still running by you at that point?

A. Yes, stretchers are being carried out. Guys are on top of -- there was some scaffolding there on what building. I'm not sure. Maybe it was 6 World Trade Center. I thought it was just west of the tower. Maybe it was the lower portion. Like I said I wasn't that familiar with the area to begin with. There was stretchers coming out.

After putting out the car fires I was trying to find the Lieutenant again. The original plan was stick together. They weren't all put out either but just there was enough Engine companies there. I wanted to group back up with the Lieutenant. I wound up finding him and he had -- I helped carry a couple of stretchers. I learned later that one of the stretchers I carried was a friend of mine actually. I didn't know at the time.

Q. It was a Firefighter?

A. It was Lieutenant Desperito from Engine 1, where I used to be assigned. I was telling one of the guys in 22 Engine and they took it hard, a company south of us, I was telling him about it, because he was there and I remembered seeing him and I was telling him hey, I saw you and he said oh, yes, that was Lieutenant. I found out later that --

Q. Was that after coming out of the north tower or was that from the south tower, where was it basically?

A. He was being taken down, I believe he was in the north tower and they were taking him out. I just gave a hand. So after doing that, time was, I couldn't believe when everything was done later in the day. You lose kind of track of time with the adrenaline going and all. It seemed like it went faster than it did and then looking back on it sometimes it seems slow. But at the time, I don't know how much time was in between.

But when I hooked up with the Lieutenant again, I heard later they had been helping people out also, helping bring out victims, but he had gotten an assignment. He had commandeered a Chief and said I need an assignment. He got us an assignment and it was to follow a Mayday that was coming from Chief Picciotto from the 11th Battalion. They were trapped inside the north tower, 1 World Trade Center. I didn't mention also when we were on the way down, like I said I was pretty clueless of the building being down and some of the things I do remember were the Maydays, one of the guys was saying he was in the rig, I don't know how much longer I am going to be able to breathe. You heard a lot of commotion on the radio.

Q. I'm in the rig, he said that. He was in the rig?

A. Yes, one of the guys was saying he was in the rig. I think he even gave the company and where he was. I don't remember all the information. I just remember, there was a lot of screaming and a lot of -- you knew it was bad.

So now at this time, I hooked back up with the Lieutenant. It was the original crew, Matt Long, Frank Macchia, me and Mike Regan, who were originally on the line, we are crewed back up with these guys and there was also -- it was a little confusing because by now, the recall, there was guys from our company that weren't working that day but they were also with us. They somehow -- we found each other, you know.

Now we have our guys, even more guys, and we have Chief Ferran from the 12th Battalion, is a Chief that my Lieutenant, who is Rohan, Lieutenant Rohan, from 43, a regular assignment Lieutenant, they were leading the rescue to follow the Mayday. Ferran had led us -- I don't know the buildings but he led us through a building that I believe wasn't 1 World Trade Center. Thinking the next day I thought maybe it was part of the outskirts but it couldn't have been from the way the pancaking and being back there.

So we are from another building, we went down and they knew where the one Trade was at. I wasn't familiar with it but we went down an escalator and came to a shopping mall area, like a concourse or whatever, and I remember passing these stores and I remember walking and thinking there is a wall -- we saw some more escalators that went down and up after we crossed this long hallway, as best as I can recall.

I remember at first thinking well, there is a wall running into it. But after looking at it I realized it was a big section of the ceiling that just like leaned to and collapsed. Like it only collapsed down and it was resting right on the bottom of the escalators, so there was this big slap of concrete and you couldn't just walk. You had to go under this slab from the ceiling to get into the escalator stairs and we were looking at each of them, looking for victims and also the main objective, was like I said, Ferran had radio contact with Picciotto, who was trapped somewhere in the north tower and that's what we were en route to.

Some guys got separated. We found some injured guys. I don't remember everything that went on. I remember my big objective was just to stay with the Lieutenant at this point. So I was pretty much sticking with him and some guys I guess, they brought out some more people so we got a little separated. Some rescues were going on. But Ferran and Rohan and me, we were going out on to the rubble and who else followed, Picciotto had a bull horn, he had a siren, so not only was he making radio contact but he would say okay, I'm going to hit this siren now. Maybe you can hear abouts where I am.

It had to be hundreds of yards away but by the time we got up and climbed up a little bit and knew which way one tower was, we did start to hear the siren, but it was such an open area that we weren't sure if it was coming -- it seemed like it was coming from the left or straight ahead. We weren't sure, and to the right of us whatever building it was, I'm not sure, there was a really good fire going.

Visibility was really low. I remember we kept saying to each other wow, look at the (inaudible).

Q. Building 7?

A. I would think so. I would think that would probably be it before it fell. I remember it was bad and I'm going to get to a point where we came back that way on the way up. We couldn't even go that way, that's how bad the fire was, but by the time I was coming back it was rolling, more than a couple of floors, just fully involved, rolling.

Anyway, we hear this bull horn and some guys got separated, so by now it's Ferran and some of our guys are still there but ultimately what happened was me, Lieutenant Rohan, Jimmy Lanza, Tommy Corrigan, that's the 4 of our guys. Rohan, me, Tommy Corrigan and Jimmy Lanza, were the 4 guys that continued on. I remember we had radio contact so I remember I really -- I was chomping at the bit to get to this guy, feeling like you are going to do something good now. We are going to go.

I remember Ferran asking us to stick tight and I was getting somewhat insubordinate but I didn't want to get cut off from going and making the push, so I remember walking ahead and like kind of just keep my back turned to him, because I knew Rohan and the guys, we wanted to go, but I think it probably would have been deemed too dangerous to do, but like I said, you hear your brother calling.

So at one point, Ferran I think was going to cut it off, but I walked far enough ahead and got through one of the big pieces of steel that were still resembling a Trade Center. There was very little that resembled anything any more, but one of those big pieces of steel with like an hourglass shape on the bottom, I got through that and I guess that's at the point where Ferran said let some of us go and continue through.

We all got together and kept going. I lost track of time. I don't know how long that took either. That had to be a good little while, maybe an hour of hiking and following this bull horn still. It was all craters and beams and what not. Not that we lost, but we separated from the original amount of guys. So now it's us 4 and we are walking towards it and I remember it would have at one point been an easier path to go towards our right, but being building 7 -- that must have been building 7 I'm guessing with that fire, we decided to stay away from that because things were just crackling, falling and what not.

So we decided to go straight and which kind of made us like go down craters and up. After climbing beams for a while as we got closer, he was saying he sees light and we are trying to figure out he where he is still. He says he sees light and things are starting to clear up a little bit. He was seeing daylight. He had started to mention he was seeing daylight. I was going ahead a little more and at one point we asked him do you see anything that resembles anything.

We asked him -- there was another wall ahead that resembled I guess, like I said the hourglass, there was another piece of steel there and we said do you see that. He said yes it's right in front of me, so we knew he was on the other side of that looking at it towards us. We were there. So we said we are almost there. I guess it was comforting, like, he knew we were coming and so we had an idea, the bull horn was coming in clearer now.

So I went ahead, when I got through that steel and up a little further, I saw through and the smoke was moving like clouds, so one second you would see a little better and I remember yelling back and saying I see them. The first person I saw was a civilian and where they were was at the highest point in the rubble of what was left of the stairwell they were in. I think he said it was the C stairwell. I'm not sure. That was the highest point of the rubble and the only thing that -- the only void above the top of the pile and that's where they were; Picciotto, the Chief, was in, like, under the ceiling, under the very top of that, which was just rubble on top of pancaked stair slabs, the landings of the stairwell.

You could see straight through the stairs but like I said, the first thing, I didn't even see them. The first thing I saw with the clouds and through the smoke was this civilian and I remember saying -- I thought it was a fireman. One of the guys (inaudible). He was sitting on top of the pile with a pole or probably what was the stand pipe coming out at an angle. He was kind of holding on to that ready to slide off the top of that.

I remember yelling from 30 yards away, hey, I see you. I have a personal rope in my pocket. Don't worry. I will give it to you. You can -- you will be able to slide down. Then I started to see Picciotto and those guys. I am like hey. Then as I get closer I realize, I'm talking to Charley and I realize that that guy is a civilian so I'm not going to be able to give him a rope. He is not going to be able -- he doesn't have a harness like we wear or whatever. I told him to sit tight, we will whatever, something will come, a ladder or a rope.

Picciotto, in the meantime, they were shook up. There was him and a few other guys standing there, so later on we learned how many people and who was who and there was a couple of civilians in there too. But Picciotto passed me a rope. There was a big crater in front of them. They were on the stairwell. It became almost like a balcony for them because the wall was blown out on the front side while I was looking at them. There was a big hole there, so they were reluctant to start moving out of there by themselves and you couldn't see.

Things were starting to get a little better when we got -- so he passes me a rope and I'm spotting him and they are coming out over that hole. By this time, my Lieutenant and the other guys come up and my Lieutenant told me that these guys that were able to walk, lead them out. Bring them back to where we were.

As it turns out there was an injured civilian, a remember the black lady, I remember seeing her, and I remember Picciotto saying that I have contact with the Second Battalion. He's hurt bad. That was important to him. He was saying he had been speaking to the Chief, whose name was Prunty from the Second Battalion in floors below who later on died, he didn't make it out.

I remember him saying that, but as it turns out, there was a Port Authority cop who I thought was an ESU cop at the time. Not important, but he was able to climb and walk, Picciotto was able to climb and walk. I remember them asking me how is the walk? I said it's rough climbing, but we can do it. We are going to get out of here. I know the way back out. My Lieutenant asked me to go back out that way.

So I started a little bit of a conga line and there was a couple of guys from 6 truck I remember, so I start going out with Picciotto and I think the guy's name was Dave Lynn, the Port Authority cop. They were the closest to me and we are making a line and I'm ahead and I'm going back out, showing them the way out that I came in.

So as I'm going back, that fire that was on my right is now on my left. I'm backtracking and that fire is really going and on the hike towards there, we put down our masks, which at this point I started to realize maybe it would have been a good thing if we had this mask on the way back, but then again, between the fire and about halfway when I was on the way back, I got a radio call from the guys that we left and it was Johnny Colon, the chauffeur of 43, who was effecting a different rescue. He was carrying somebody out.

He had called me and said hey, Jerry, don't try and get back out the way you went in, which was a big heads up move, because he said that building was rolling on top of the building that we were passing. That building was on fire and likely to collapse more too.

Between Picciotto asking me are you sure we can get out this way because it really didn't look good with that fire and my guy telling me that you better not because of the area where we crawled in was unattainable now too. I said to Picciotto finally, who was questioning the whole time, I said yes, I guess you are right. We are going to find a different way. So we started going back the other way.

Q. Would that be towards West Street?

A. That would have been back towards what I know is the Winter Garden, because I will tell you in a minute.

Q. Here's the Winter Garden over here. On the other side of West Street?

A. So instead of going back, like backtracking the way we came in, I kind of was trying to the best I think I went as the crow flies, the opposite direction, straight out the other way back past the stairwell where they originally came out, maybe not to touch it, but to the right of it I believe it was and out that way and it was a good while going back that way before we really knew what was even there. What we were going to see if we were going to get out, what was there.

So after going past the stairwell and we realized that that was a better way out. We went down, I remember another crater. However many yards. It was hundreds of yards all together, but down to the crater. When I finally reached a certain point, I saw when I came back up a hill, it's all beams. I saw guys, I saw firefighters and it was clear enough to see that we are going to get out this way now.

There was guys with hose lines but they were still hundreds of yards down. No one was really at this point. I know there was Chiefs down there, I learned later, that were telling the guys not to go too far into the rubble, trying to -- some guys eventually did. It was funny that the first guys I saw on the way out were guys from our company, from the Engine Company.

Anyway, so when I yelled back to Picciotto, I said Chief, we are going to get out this way. Relax them and Dave and the guys. I remember thinking at that point I need a drink. I want to get back to my Lieutenant, who told me he is going to stay with the injured civilian, who was a black lady. However much I'm skipping.

The gist of it is from there Picciotto was good, those guys were good, we knew we were getting out. Picciotto said go and I went and I tried to get a drink. The first thing I did was as I got down more yards, got down a ways, they were trying to move in with a line and I took a drink out of the nozzle thinking I could get refreshed enough that way to go back and do some good with my Lieutenant again. I knew we were going to be working on the Second Battalion and whoever else might be in there.

I remember trying to call him and I couldn't reach him. I guess because what they were doing -- what I found out later what they were doing was going down lower through confined spaces under that stairwell to find guys who were down there, to find the Second Battalion Chief. So I couldn't reach him.

The saltwater I drank out of the nozzle did me worse than good, so I wound up walking out until I could finally get something to drink and in that Winter Garden, I just grabbed the spritzer, hit number 1, took a drink of what I guess was 7 Up and when I was walking on my way back in now after drinking about a gallon of 7 Up, when I was walking on the way back in I started getting a radio transmission from one of the guys that we left who was originally on the rig, had I believe the irons position, Todd, from my company, Todd Frederickson.

He is calling me, saying Jerry where are you. I said listen. I didn't go out the way I came in. I went straight out. As soon as I spoke to Todd, I guess he was with Ferran, who originally started the push to follow the Mayday for Picciotto. So Ferran must have took his radio right away. I guess they had been trying to reach me for a while, anybody of us, the original five, so Ferran took it and starts talking to me and says where are you? I said well, I didn't go out the way I went in. I went straight the opposite direction. He said well, where are you? I want to lead a rescue team to get in there, because I told him about the injured civilian, my Lieutenant staying there, the Second Battalion Chief probably being in trouble from what Picciotto said.

I guess I was just saying a lot of things. What I forgot was I should have just told him was that as I walked out more past these people, I had told rescue companies, I remember seeing the Captain of Rescue 2 even and him grilling me when I told him, him grilling me even further, where, there, I said yes. That stairwell. You see a beam coming out on an angle, so you got to get your guys up there.

There is a guy, I remember I was describing and I was joking, I said you got a civilian on the top of that pile hanging on a flag pole just being dramatic. Describing it, that's really what it seemed like. That guy, I would love to meet him some day. I said you got an injured civilian in the stairway. You got my Lieutenant's back down there. Supposedly the Second Battalion is in, so I told rescue guys and I told everybody I was trying to gather guys to go back. That's where you got to go. It seemed like nobody was really making it that far. But actually I remember seeing Kevin Joos and Kevin Toorey and Al Schickler, I think they were like the first guys, as far as towards that stairwell, and they are from 53 Engine, and I told them where to go too.

What I could have told Ferran looking back -- everyone made mistakes and everyone wished we could have done more, but I should have told him I already put some guys on the trip to where to go. I could have said the Captain of Rescue 2, but he was being really demanding and I was trying to describe where I was. He kept asking, well, where are you, what do you see. I said I went straight past where I went and I'm thinking to myself, there is no street signs around here and I'm trying not to be insubordinate, but I think at the last transmission I made I had offered to go out past,, because what I did to get a drink, I followed the line out to what you thought would be a street eventually, but I dead stopped in this bar in the Winter Garden, grabbed a board and went back out.

I went back out past that bar and told them I see a marina. If you want me to wait here, you know, I remember saying that. I see boats. I remember him saying boats, where are boats. Eventually I wound up telling him, I don't know where the fuck I am. I'm going to back to (inaudible).

I waited about as long as I could. I said guys are on it. I have been trying to gather guys up. I tried to describe it as best as I could. I walked back. I remember when I got back to where the Captain of Rescue 2 was and I was going to go back in, I remember the Captain telling me we don't need more guys up there that we are going to possibly have to get out, so don't go.

I hesitated about a second and turned my back on him and I'm going to go, like I said, and stick with the Lieutenant. I was a little upset we got separated a couple of times. I went back, I made it a little side step, went back down. Rolled back up to them. By the time I got up there they had the black lady on a Stokes. They were rescue guys. They had the guy down. Some of the rescue guys that got there later had effected getting that guy down with a rope.

The stairwell was filled with a couple of rescue guys and my Lieutenant. I went back to this stairwell, then you had to go around it to the other side to get back in it through that hole. Anyway, they were down.

Q. What point are we at now?

A. After Picciotto is out and the Port Authority cop and the guys from 6 Truck, the guys that were able to walk out at first, what I found out later was that my Lieutenant helped get -- there was guys from 39 Engine and 16 Truck and I don't know all the names, and eventually we will all talk with each other I guess, but they were trapped down low and Rohan had breached a wall to help them get out of the confined space below and stairwells.

At this point that was done. Those guys walked out, they followed the conga line, whatever, there was enough guys there to lead everybody out. When I got back the only thing that was being done now was unfortunately, Chief Prunty of the Second Battalion was dead now. We hadn't had a pulse on him from what I learned from the guys for a while. We were trying to effectively get him out of a confined space.

I found out later that Mark Carpiniello had went down a couple of confined spaces to find this guy. When we found him, my Lieutenant -- when I went back my Lieutenant, Mark Carpiniello, Jimmy Lanza. Mark Carpiniello is from 53 Engine. He is the guy that was there on his own time. He is also one of the first guys that came up. Jimmy Lanza, a guy from rescue 4, I think his name was Dave, real nice guy. The guy from Rescue 4, I guess, set up a high angle thing and was trying to move this guy now, so everyone that was alive and ambulatory -- and even that was not able to walk, but that was alive. They got the one lady out on a stretcher.

One of the guys from 6 Truck too, when we first started walking out, the reason Prunty asked me how is the climbing is this guy from 6 Truck Prunty even knew, he has got a concussion. He got hit in the head bad, but they were able to hold him and walk him out and he was following behind. That was what was left to do.

I went down there. I was asking, give me a shot. Maybe I can lift this guy up, we had the rope. We were trying to get him out of this confined space, but the thing is even after we got him out of that space, we knew there was two more really tight spots to get through down the hallway and then back up. We actually crawled up a slab of stairs that was actually on an angle. That was the slab that was down a floor or two from the original stairwell that Prunty walked out of. It was below grade what was there, the pile, where the stand pipe was. There was a few really tight areas to get this guy out that we went through. We had to climb high to get between two door jams and I think the door jams were about the only thing holding that place up where Prunty was. We would have had to get him out of that spot and then lift him high enough to get him between those doors and then another hole and we would have been happy to do all that, but we were being told for a while after I was back, and I think they were telling me even before I got back we got to get out of here, because it's still shifting and it's smoky and things are still clanging, falling around.

Q. Did 7 collapse yet?

A. 7 hasn't collapsed yet. We were being told by -- I guess everybody was being a little insubordinate that day. Everyone wanted to do as much as they could, but we were told 5 minutes, I don't know how many times. It was a long while before we gave up and we finally came to the conclusion and the rescue guy agreed, we all agreed, it's irretrievable. It's not a rescue. I regret to say we left him there knowing that we would get him eventually and I heard that they got him out a couple of days later. Thanks to the information, we told him where he was.

Q. Okay, pretty much everything?

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT SORAYA O'DONNELL

Interview Date: October 10, 2001

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

SORAYA O'DONNELL

LIEUTENANT FEILER: Today's date is October 10, 2001. The time now is 808 hours and this is Lieutenant Monte Feller of the New York City Fire Department Investigations and Trials. I am conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name, rank and assignment.

A. EMT Soraya O'Donnell.

Q. Of the New York City Fire Department. We are conducting the interview of Battalion 52 in Flushing regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

Also for the record, can you please state your name.

MR. QUEVEDO: Investigator Quevedo of the Bureau of Investigations and Trials.

Q. Basically what we need you to do is just give us a scenario of the events on the morning of September 11, as it relates to the World Trade Center incident.

A. I come in at 9:00 o'clock. I was on my way in. I was driving up to the battalion. My partner ran to my car and told me that the World Trade Center was hit by a plane and I parked the car and then he told me that tour 1, who was sitting at the garage, got the job. So I ran upstairs. I got my equipment and we usually take their late job. We jumped on and we went 63. We never logged off tour one, because they were already 63. So you can't log off. So we went as tour 1. We called -- we tried to call RCC Queens to let them know where we were from, but it was too busy.

So we called to let the lieutenant know that we were tour 2 going to the World Trade Center.

Q. Who was your partner that day?

A. Richard Erdy.

Q. Did you know who the EMT's were that you were --

A. That we took the job for? It was Rebecca Bird and Brian Harin. He is a new guy.

Q. Do you know if they responded to the call?

A. No, they didn't. They went home.

Q. You said that you called. How did you call?

A. We called on the cell phone. We called RCC and we called the Queens dispatcher while we were 63. The dispatcher told us to respond to -- to go to citywide. She told us to respond to the 59th Street bridge and once we were there she would tell us where to go. So I took the LIE. There was a lot of traffic. I took the Grand Central to the last exit, got off at 21st Street, took that to the 59th Street bridge. I told the dispatcher I was there. From there I could see already the smoke and traffic was beginning to build up. She told me to respond to Vesey and West.

So I took the FDR drive. I was still in a little bit of traffic. You know, it was sporadic. Like sometimes there would be traffic and then the cops would have something closed and then it would move. It was just like a caravan of ambulances in front of me and in back of me there was a whole bunch of ambulances.

I got off, I just followed them all the way there. I don't really know where I was, but then again we came to a stop. We were like a few blocks away from the World Trade Center. We came to a stop and it was slowing down, the caravan. Then I heard on the radio someone say there is a fireman down, there is a fireman down on this and this street and I'm looking around to see where I am and I see a fireman turn the corner and he's waving his hands.

So I look behind me. There is buses behind me, there is buses in front of me that could easily get to him, but they're not moving so I started like maneuvering myself and made kind of like a, what do you call it? A K-turn. And I went over there. We took out the stretcher and they had a fireman, they was doing CPR.

Q. Do you know where you were at that time, the street location?

A. I think I was on West Street, a few blocks -- I was heading north, you know, as you come off the FDR drive, the tunnel. So I think I was heading north and I was a couple of blocks south of the --

Q. Both buildings were still standing at that time?

A. Yes.

Q. Had both buildings been hit at that time?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you see the airplanes hit the buildings?

A. No, no. When I left the battalion, when I was 63, we heard someone say over the radio, we heard a bomb went off in the other building. We're not sure if it's a bomb and they were trying to confirm it's another building -- it's another airplane.

Q. Do you know approximately what time you arrived at that location where you met up with the firefighter?

A. No. But in my unit history I went 82 to the hospital at 1001, I believe, and that was because the KDT was backing up also. Nothing was going through. So I remember I kept hitting the button, hitting the button on the way to the hospital. Anyway, so we went and they were doing CPR on the fireman. We put the long board and everything on the stretcher. We went over there and we continued to do CPR. We put him on the bus. Dr. Kelly was there. She came over and a paramedic came over. I don't know who he was.

Q. EMS? The Fire Department?

A. The paramedic? I don't know.

Q. Do you know who he is?

A. No.

Q. Okay.

A. They tried to intubate him. They couldn't get a tube in. So they left because they saw really he wasn't gonna be viable, and we transported him to the hospital with two of the firemen from his company.

Q. Which hospital did you go to?

A. We went to Bellevue. I asked P.D. for an escort and a highway and a motorcycle cop gave me an escort to the hospital.

Q. The firefighter that you did CPR on, do you know his name?

A. Yes.

Q. What was his name?

A. Brian Suhr. Was it Brian? Engine Company 216 from Brooklyn.

Q. The firefighters that accompanied you, were they from the same --

A. I don't remember their names. The other one I don't know.

Q. Okay.

A. Anyway, we went to Bellevue. Once I got to Bellevue we took him out and they told me you gotta move the bus. You can't leave it there. And I had a lot of BBP in the back. So I said, where do I go? So I said, let me go to the battalion, to Bellevue station to clean up.

I went over there, I grabbed a few of the things that belonged to the firemen. I brought it to the hospital, to the Emergency Room. I told one of the maintenance guys at Bellevue what I needed and I gave my partner the ACR.

I went back, I started cleaning up. The maintenance guy was helping me clean up. He cleaned up the ambulance and I restocked. I went back to meet up with my partner and he couldn't get any information from the firemen, because they were refusing to give us any name or anything, because they didn't want the media to get a hold of anything. Which we understood. So we said fine.

We finished the paperwork, we went back into the ambulance. While we were finishing up, restocking, a -- I think it was an EMT nun asked if she could come back with us. She wanted to volunteer. We said okay. Another doctor from the ER wanted to come also. He was a paramedic and a PA student.

Q. The EMT? She worked for the Fire Department?

A. No. She worked for Bellevue.

Q. As an EMT?

A. No. It was a nun. She was a nun.

Q. Oh, a nun. I'm sorry. I thought you said EMT.

A. A nun. So they came in the back with us. We went back to the World Trade Center. We told the dispatcher we were out of Bellevue, where does she want us. I forget what she told us. I think it was Battery Park she wanted us to go to, triage.

When we were heading there my partner said, "Someone told me that one of the towers collapsed." I'm like "Yeah, yeah." We were like it's a joke. There were probably people exaggerating. So what happened was we were heading back and we see just a cloud of smoke. We don't see the towers anymore.

Q. How did you head back there?

A. We took the same way, the FDR drive.

Q. Southbound?

A. Yes. And we didn't see the towers. So that's when we realized that the towers had collapsed.

Q. Both of them?

A. Both of them. It was just a lot of smoke. And we kept hearing transmissions on the radio. You know, stuff that was going on. People saying they were trapped. We headed back. When we got back there it was a whole totally different scene. We didn't see people around like we did before. We couldn't find any ambulances. We were just driving around. Of course we couldn't believe what was going on. We drove around for a little while. We saw an EMT, one of our guys, coming out of this cloud of smoke. He was holding his EMT bag and helmet. We asked him, "Where is your partner?" He goes, "I left him. I'm looking for my father. He was in the World Trade Center."

Q. Do you know his name?

A. And he had been crying. No, we didn't get anything. So we said, "well, why don't you get in the back with us?" We had a nun in the back. We figured she could talk to him.

Q. Right.

A. He got in the back. We went around -- I don't know. I think it was Battery Park, by the water. They were ferrying everyone away. We pulled over over there, because we saw a lot of buses and we said, let's go see if that's where we are supposed to be, what's going on.

We went over there and I think there was only one more unit there.

Q. Do you know which unit that was?

A. No.

Q. Fire Department?

A. It was volunteer. It was a volunteer. They said that nothing was going on. They were just ferrying people. So when we went back to the ambulance the kid was gone. The EMT left. So we didn't know where he went, we didn't get a name, nothing.

Q. When you say you were at Battery Park, that was south of the Battery Tunnel where the fort is or where Marine Company 1 is?

A. Do you have a map?

Q. Yes, I do. If you can just mark the first time you arrived where you were and the second time.

A. I think -- I don't know. I can't. This looks confusing to me. Which is the north tower?

Q. This would be north. Here is the West Side Highway, here is West Street and here are the towers.

A. I think it was somewhere around here.

Q. At Battery Park City?

A. Yes.

Q. By the buildings?

A. No, it wasn't here. I don't know. I'm not gonna say. Then we drove around a little more and we found a fireman who was hurt. His eyes were bloodshot. We irrigated him. He wanted to go back but he couldn't see, so we took him back to Bellevue.

Q. Do you know his name?

A. No, I don't know it, but I got it. He gave us his name. We got an ACR.

Q. Do you know what company he was it from?

A. No, no. We took him to Bellevue, we came back.

Q. You were able to get through to the dispatcher?

A. I couldn't get any signals, no and the radio was so busy I couldn't tell her anything. So I just came and went.

Q. What frequency were you on at that time?

A. Manhattan south.

Q. You were told to switch over to south?

A. We were told to switch over. Only certain people were allowed to stay on citywide. Then we came back. The same thing. We couldn't find anyone. We told the dispatcher we just came out of Bellevue. She told us to go to, I don't know, I think it was Chelsea Piers. But we were already here. So as we didn't know, I didn't know how to get to Chelsea Piers so I kept asking all the cops and they didn't know.

Then I ran into an off-duty EMT or paramedic and he told me, "They're setting up a triage center at the Staten Island Ferry." So I said, "Okay." No, no. Before I even ran into him there was an old man leaning against a fence having difficulty breathing. We pulled over, we put him on the stretcher and his wife and we gave them oxygen. That's when I ran into the guy. So we headed over there to bring the old couple over there.

Q. The person that directed you to the Staten Island Ferry, do you know who that was?

A. A paramedic.

Q. Do you know from what agency?

A. No, no. I know he worked for the Fire Department.

Q. The Fire Department?

A. Yes.

Q. Did he come with you to the Staten Island

Ferry?

A. No, but I saw him later. Later on I saw him there. This is the name of the other fireman. We gave it to the hospital.

Q. Can you just read it?

A. Tony Sansobino.

Q. And he came with the firefighter who was in arrest?

A. Yes -- To the hospital.

Q. Did you bring him back to the scene or they stayed at the scene?

A. They stayed at the hospital.

Q. They stayed at the hospital?

A. Yes.

Q. About what time was that, do you think?

A. Around 11:30. We went back. So then I found the Staten Island Ferry and there was a Lieutenant there. My partner knows his name. I forgot. Anyway, he told us, park the vehicle here, grab your O2 and all your water and bring it upstairs. Upstairs they were setting the up the triage. We helped out with the triage. We were just basically waiting, waiting for patients to come. No one was coming. We were getting antsy and we said, "Do we go outside and pick up patients?" They said, "No. You gotta stay here." So we just waited. We tried to call our families while we were over there.

I don't know about what time Chief Brown, Bobby Brown, came in and he had been underneath the rubble. He came in. He was all dirty. He used to be our Captain here. So I'm looking at him and I said, "oh, my God. That's Bobby Brown. Oh, my God." So I went over to him and his eyes, we irrigated his eyes. We gave him O-2, we took his vitals and he needed to go to the hospital. So someone asked him what hospital. He said Peninsula General, that's where his wife works. So my partner and I took him to the hospital.

Q. Who was the supervisor at that triage? You don't know? Male? Female?

A. I don't even know. There were a couple of supervisors there.

Q. When you left and when you were turning back to the scene after somebody told that you the building had collapsed, both buildings had collapsed at that time?

A. Both buildings had collapsed.

Q. But you didn't see them collapse?

A. No, no. I just saw a lot of smoke.

Q. Do you know what time that was about?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever enter any of the buildings?

A. No.

Q. You never had an opportunity to go in?

A. No.

Q. Was there anybody else that you saw that you recognized that you could name? The EMS people? The Fire Department people?

A. I saw -- his name will come. He works for St. John -- he works for the privates -- St. John's, and he was working for St. Vinny's. What's his name? I saw him when I was driving around and we didn't know where to go. We looked at the ambulances and I saw that ambulance. So we pulled up next to each other and we said, "Where is everybody?" And they said, "we don't know."

Q. St. Vincent's ambulance?

A. St. Vinny's ambulance.

Q. Do you remember the unit number?

A. His name will come back. I'll take my time. Anyway.

Q. Okay.

A. So he was in the same place where I was. He didn't know where everybody was. So we took Bobby Brown to Peninsula General in Rockaway. My partner came with me and another girl that I thought was his aide, but she wasn't. She is from Division 4. She's in sick, limited. She came with us. I think she just wanted a ride back to Queens or something.

Q. She wasn't injured?

A. She wasn't injured.

Q. Your partner, what is his name?

A. Richard Erdy.

Q. He stayed with you the entire time?

A. Yes.

Q. You never separated?

0

A. We separated at Bellevue when we brought in the firefighter and I went to BBP.

Q. Other than that --

A. That was the only time.

Q. Is there anything else that you think is important?

A. Yes. The fireman that was in cardiac arrest, we were trying to find out who he was, because we felt like, wow, If we didn't get flagged for this guy, we would have been there when they collapsed. So we kept reading articles and found the reason he went into cardiac arrest was because a body landed on him. His Engine Company pulled him -- they were doing construction on the building, they pulled him over the scaffolding. So that's where we found him. We found his name, we found where he was from. My partner spoke to another fireman who knows. We found out the company he was from. We called the company and we went over there one day, the second Thursday after the World Trade Center and we spoke to one of the guys that came to the hospital with us and he told us basically what happened. That when we left to go to the hospital we closed the doors and we left and that's when the building came down.

The other two guys that stayed from his company thought that the ambulance got crushed. So they thought that the three guys were dead basically and we were dead. Because they said as soon as we took off the building came down. When we got to the hospital and they were there for a while, that's when they found out the towers collapsed. They thought that the two guys they left were dead, because they left them there. They were on their way back to the building.

So they ended up meeting up and they couldn't believe each other were alive. The other two guys that we left at the scene said that they went back to get their equipment so they could go back into the building. That's when the towers collapsed. They went back underneath the scaffolding and they ran into the building.

Q. This is the first building that collapsed or the second? Do you know?

A. The first building.

Q. So you were right at the perimeter of the building?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know whether you were northeast, south or West?

A. I have no idea. I think I was north.

Q. Where was the firefighter exactly?

A. What do you mean?

Q. Where did you find him?

A. We found him -- this is the corner. I think I was on West Street and he turned the corner.

I saw him, I made a maneuver, I came -- so it was on West Street. And there was a Church and there was like a scaffolding here. That's where we put him on the stretcher and everything. And that's it.

Q. Anything else?

A. That's it. And we couldn't transmit. The radios were so busy. We couldn't give signals and we couldn't give -- the KDT was down.

In our log, in our history, we couldn't get anything.

Q. You were originally on Queens east?

A. Yes.

Q. When you were asked to switch over to --

A. Citywide.

Q. And then --

A. And then Manhattan south I think it was they sent us to. North -- I think it was south.

LIEUTENANT FEILER: We will conclude the interview and I want to thank you for your time helping us with this endeavor and it is now 8:28 a.m. and this will conclude the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

RICHARD ERDEY

Interview Date: October 10, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

LIEUTENANT FEILER: Today's date is October 10th, 2001. The time now is 0835 hours. This is Lieutenant Monty Feiler of the Fire Department of the City of New York, Investigations and Trials. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual:

Q. Please state your name, rank and command.

A. Richard L. Erdey, EMTD, Shield No. 1569.

Q. Of the New York City Fire Department, Battalion 52, regarding the events of September 11th, 2001. Also present is:

MS. QUEVEDO: Investigator Fabiola Quevedo of the Bureau of Investigations and Trials.

Q. What I need you to do, sir, is just give me a scenario of how you first became involved in the events of September 11th, where you were and how you responded.

A. I was standing there at the battalion and they were calling a series of people to the job. The night tour was about to get off. They called 52 Boy. So I said, if Soraya don't come here in one minute, you guys are going out today, and this was only when the first tower was hit. I said you'll spend at least 24 hours there easy, so that's a few hundred dollars, no problem.

So Solano pulled up. I said the World Trade Center was hit by a plane. She jumped in, got everything real quick, jumped in the vehicle and we went.

Q. Did you partner with Solano?

A. No, no.

Q. And the two people that you relieved, do you know their names?

A. Rebecca Bird and Jim Horan.

Q. Did they respond, as far as you know?

A. No.

Q. You were driving or teching?

A. Teching.

Q. How did you get there?

A. By ambulance No. 377.

Q. What route did you take?

A. [redacted]

Q. About what time was this?

A. 8:59.

Q. So the first plane had just hit?

A. Yes.

Q. When you were originally assigned to the call, was this on -- which frequency was it?

A. Queens 2.

Q. That's east?

A. Queens east.

Q. Did they give you any direction?

A. No.

Q. They just told you to go down to the World Trade Center?

A. That's right.

Q. You don't recall what route you took?

A. No, I don't.

Q. When you were entering Manhattan, did you see the skyline?

A. Yes.

Q. What did you see?

A. We saw the Twin Towers. I couldn't tell both towers were hit because the way the wind was blowing. But as we got closer, I saw both towers were hit and I said this is definitely no accident. But I didn't know another plane hit the other tower.

Q. You saw both buildings were still standing at that time?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember, were you still in Queens or in Manhattan when you saw that?

A. No.

Q. Then what happened?

A. We continued to drive down there. There was a New York Presbyterian bus in front of us. As we were going down there, he came out a few times because it was stop-and-go traffic because the other two lanes were blocked with civilian cars. So we were discussing the best route to go to. I memorized his number, this way I'd know who he was.

Q. Which was that?

A. Right now I don't have it in my head. I tried to sweep most of the stuff away.

Q. Okay.

A. We rode down there. Then I had the idea, because I see cars were trying to jump in between us, so I got on the PA and I told people stay in your lane, this is for emergency vehicles only, because nobody else seemed to be doing that. Everybody was headed towards one focus.

Q. Were you on a highway at that point?

A. We definitely were on a highway.

Q. You were still on the Queens frequency?

A. No. I think it changed to Citywide. I don't know when they told us to change to Manhattan south, but we were on Citywide.

Q. How long do you think it took you to get down to the World Trade Center?

A. No concept of time.

Q. When you arrived down at the general vicinity, do you know where you stopped initially, what street you were at or proximity to the buildings?

A. I was told by Engine 216 we were at the tower.

Q. Tower 1 or Tower 2? The south tower or the north tower?

A. I believe the first tower that fell because they said that we were one minute away when the tower fell.

Q. Okay.

A. Wherever Daniel Suhr was hit by that body, that's where we were.

Q. Who was that?

A. That was the fireman from Engine 216, probably the first casualty, the first known casualty, because Dr. Kelly was in that ambulance and a medic was in the ambulance with us.

Q. Do you know who the medic was?

A. I have no idea.

Q. On-duty FDNY medic or --

A. I have no idea.

Q. How did you come into contact with that firefighter? Do you remember the events surrounding that?

A. I'm sitting there and I was amazed with this vehicle that was half there and half disintegrated and, you know, you're in amazement. I didn't see the body parts. Somehow my mind blocked that out. But my partner said she saw body parts. So we hear over the air that a fireman is in cardiac arrest. You hear it. You don't know where. I'm not a big traveler in Manhattan. So I looked around and I'm not seeing a fireman in arrest. So I ran around -- and you've got to understand now, even though it's sunny, there's black at the bottom. So I had no clue we were at the tower.

So this fireman turns around, yo, yo, and he's waving. The ambulance behind us could have pulled out and went over to him. I guess they're so intent on going straight. So I had to back up, go over, go up and over the divide. Then we got to this yellow barrier. I said go through. She went through. We went under the scaffolding. So whatever tower had scaffolding, unless both of them did.

This photographer is there. I'll tell you one photographer probably didn't make it because that one definitely would have made the news because he was right in the guy's face. Firemen are very quick to not let you treat, just run. So they're running ahead of us with us going, and we finally get in the ambulance and we're doing all that we can. Dr. Kelly came in, who I didn't know it was Dr. Kelly at the time, but I knew she was from BHS. She looked familiar. But I'm not going to say, hey, you look familiar, not at a time like that. A medic walked in, so I just did compressions. They were trying to get an airway. All of a sudden they looked at each other, couldn't get an airway, and she said transport.

Now, I know the way they looked at each other he wasn't going to make it. He didn't make it. He's dead. His neck was snapped. Anybody hit with a body from 70 stories up. So you're not going to tell a bunch of firemen, this guy is dead, we're not transporting him. So we transported him.

Q. Did anybody accompany you?

A. Two firemen.

Q. Do you know who they were, their names or what company?

A. No. Solano wrote one name down. They're both from Engine 216.

Q. Okay.

A. They kept yelling, Danny, Danny, Danny. I said suction. I think it was brains coming out of his nose I'm pretty sure. You could tell his neck was snapped because every time you hit a bump, a head don't have that type of movement.

Q. Right.

A. So the kid was staring at us. Now, I know from watching my father die and even during -- my father died right after I got this job, the day after I got the job. Images burn in my head. Sometimes they play with my head. So the way they were staring into him, I said, look. I'm saying should I tell them? Should I not tell them? How can I tell them tactfully? So I said, look, we're doing the CPR for that small glimmer of hope, but I'll tell you what they're going to do. They're going to call it at the hospital. Please stop staring at him. You're going to burn this image in your head. I want you to remember a better image. At first they didn't want to believe -- not that they argued, but you could tell.

Q. Right.

A. Then they started saying he has a daughter of two. I just said continue CPR, continue suction. The other guy took over compressions for me. I mean, even though it was a short ride, it felt like the longest ride. We got to the hospital. A priest looked at me. I said give him last rights. They gave him last rights and they called it.

Now, I told the firemen on the ride there that, if they happen to call it while they're still there, don't start staring, though it's tempting. You're going to burn that image in your head, too, and that's now how you want to remember Danny. So after he called last rights, I turned and I saw the two firemen standing there. I turned around and kind of pushed them out.

Q. What hospital did you go to?

A. I believe it's Bellevue.

Q. What did you do after that?

A. My partner had to take the truck because they didn't want any trucks there at triage. So now I was cut off from Solano. So I got the two firemen out of there. I wanted to make sure they were mentally okay because I don't know if they're going back or what's going on. Their brother just died. I know if my partner just died, I'd be mentally all whatever.

Q. Right?

A. So I made sure they got out of there and I said, doc, make sure that they don't -- because the dude was messed up. He got hit with a body. So I went back out, I walked around, reporters are shooting with their cameras, and I said to this Metro Care ambulance, you seen my partner, a little Hispanic girl? Oh, she left. I thought, oh, no. I thought they chased her out of the whole place. So I saw another FDNY ambulance, they brought people out, and I says, I think my partner left. I'm going with you guys because I want to go back in, there's more help to do. Just as I was waiting for them, my partner grabbed me. She was around the other side cleaning because the thing was full of blood now. We're not going to pick up more patients when we're full of blood and the suction is full and all.

Q. Now, the EMTs that you ran into at that point, do you know who they were? Fire Department EMS?

A. They were Fire Department EMS.

Q. You went back to the scene after that?

A. We went back. As we're driving up into the gray, I saw the black. Well, as we were driving back, I'm looking -- oh, let me bring it back. As we were there, whatever battalion is at Bellevue said you're taking a volunteer with you. I said I have no problem taking a volunteer. I just want you to know this could be their last ride. We're not going to go pussyfooting around. We're going back in.

Because I already made a joke to my partner because I have military training, I was a peace officer for York College, and even though it was a rent-a-cop type of outfit, they had very highly -- police and other people, people at the Olympics where they had the bombing. They told us there's always secondary devices. When we were coming to this area, I said to my partner, we'll never feel it. The underground will blow up from us and we'll be dead. Because nobody's counting on a secondary device, and whatever bonehead had us lined up around the World Trade Center, after hindsight, 20/20, that ain't too bright either because there's usually a secondary device. The Olympics showed that in Atlanta. Most bombings show that. There's always something for the people and then, when everybody comes rushing in, there's a little something extra. But we didn't expect that the building was going to be the something extra. So I was realistic.

So it happened to be the volunteer happened to be a nun, who was older, and I said to her, look. You understand, ma'am, we might not come back from this. Oh, I understand. I said, no, I'm serious. We could die. I said, and you're a volunteer. At least my wife gets a little cash, goes back to Brazil, makes a hundred grand because she now knows English. I said, but you've got to understand that there could be something lost.

I don't know if we picked up another volunteer on the first time going in or the second time because we went in twice. It was a white dude, he was young, he could have had children but he said no, and I told him the same thing. Any volunteers I picked up, I told them this could be their last ride. Now, from that point we cleaned up, we went back, we took our volunteers.

Q. Do you know their names?

A. Nope. Names to me weren't important. I was just -- I call it the zone. When I'm doing work, it's the zone. If I had five patients, I'm in the zone for five patients. If you want to come behind me and take a potshot, you could very well do it, and most times you couldn't. I'm in the zone for those five patients and I do my work. So when I'm in the zone, too, all right, I'm going to pick up casualties, that's all I'm going to do. So there could be a hundred people on my bus, they could all be celebrities, that doesn't mean jack to me at that point.

Q. When you returned back to the scene, where did you go? Where were you directed to?

A. Well, you know, they were giving us direction, but it was so damn gray and dark and you had to ride over this and that and ride around this because cars stopped in the middle, and [redacted] So, you know, she did her best. I'm very honest with you. I mean, I look at this now, it's very big and nice. But those little maps, especially when it's bumpy, I don't even try and, you know, I'm full of amazement, like wow. In my mind, I'm dreaming and this didn't happen.

So we rode down there and there was a big black area. I said, whatever you do, don't drive into the black area because if we get a flat tire we're useless to everyone. We could barely see where we are now. She agreed that was a smart move. So we rode as close as we can when things are gray but clear, and then out of the black comes this EMT from the Fire Department. I wish I knew his name because he's alive, and I remember his face, and there's only two EMTs that died. He came out with his orange helmet, eyes were red, and I said, dude, what are you doing here? I saw private ambulances. I didn't see a Fire Department ambulance. He said, I'm looking for my father. I said, where's your father? He said, in the World Trade Center.

So I told him to get in the ambulance because he was still susceptible to orders. He wasn't in a denial/agitation stage. So I had him back there and I figured the nun -- I said to him there's a nun back here who's an EMT would talk to him. She talks to people for her life day in and day out. So our survivor is back there and we're picking up old people and stragglers, people that couldn't breathe, people that couldn't make it to the ferry. Because a block or two away was the ferry, and if you got to the ferry, you could see the water, sky blue and everything was beautiful. It was on the corner. I forgot which ferry it was. Solano would know. I got on the PA and I said -- because walking around was senseless because people had shields, you don't know who was a patient, who was a cop. I said, anybody that needs medical attention, come this way.

Then I went to a grocery store and they opened the doors because the power was out and I said, I need water, because I had and old cup. I grabbed a jug of water and I said, I'm not buying it, I'm taking it. No, I understand. Because it was for a patient. It wasn't for me. So I gave her water. I came back in there and I said where's the EMT? Gone. I was furious because now he went back in there. I wish I knew his name.

Q. Do you know where he was from, what battalion? What was the status of the buildings at that point?

A. They're gone.

Q. Did you see them collapse?

A. No. Somebody said a tower collapsed while we were cleaning up. I'm thinking, what's he talking about? On our ride back down there, I'm looking and I said, wow, it's really on fire now. I'm looking and I said, not for nothing, but I think the World Trade Center is down. I said, I'll tell you when I get up to the New York Telephone building. I looked again and I says it's down because my eyes watered up and I turned back to the window and I said, sister, if you look to your left, that's where the World Trade Center used to be, and she says you're kidding me.

Q. Did it look like one had collapsed or both of them?

A. They were both gone. Both of them.

Q. Do you know what time about that was?

A. We didn't even know that we were one minute from the tower collapsing if it wasn't for that engine company telling us. We went to the engine company to get closure, to 216. It's funny how people need closure. I especially need closure. We needed closure and we went down there and we brought flowers to Quinn, to them, and to 49 for Carlos, and one of the guys was there and he said, I recognize your voice. The other guy was there and he goes, you know, we talked about you guys for four days. So they talked about us and we talked about them. So we said, what happened? Well, he got hit with a body, which we already knew, and he said, he saved us. I spoke to Ken Fried, who was not there, but I was speaking to him on-line and I asked to make sure all my brothers who went to the Fire side were alive. I said I picked up the guy who got hit with the body, and he said, oh, that's Danny Suhr. So that's how I found out his name.

Q. Who is Ken?

A. Ken Fried. He's a fireman. He was not there at that time, but he's on the Fire side. I had five or six people who I was partners with that went to be firemen.

Q. Oh, okay.

A. So I wanted to know if they all lived, so every time I saw a name on-line, are you there? You know, it could be their father or their mother. So that's how I found out the fireman's name. I also found out that Ken's father came from Engine 216, so that's how they knew the fireman. He told us that he didn't save just you, he saved the battalion, that fire engine company. I was like wow. So when we went down there, that same day the picture of him was in the Post. I said, that was him. They saw us, we spoke, we found out from Engine 216, from those two young guys, we were one minute away from, I believe that tower, and he saved that company because they all followed us, which I didn't know. The cop who escorted us knows. I don't know if you were there, but that was some caravan that was in the way.

Before that you asked me about the New York

Presbyterian ambulance and the number. I don't have the number. I have it written down at home. But I called up New York Presbyterian. I said tell me what happened to number so-and-so. I can't think of the number. They said, I can't tell you what happened to the people, because I asked what happened to the people. I told them who I was. I said, I'm EMT Erdey from the Fire Department. I was memorizing their number in case I met up with them. They came out to talk to us. Please tell me about those people. I can't tell you about those people. All right. So I said, then listen to what I'm saying. Don't tell me about the people; tell me about the ambulance itself. How is ambulance such-and-such number? It was three numbers. She said, I can't tell you about the people. I said, no, listen to what I'm saying. Tell me about the ambulance. She said the ambulance disintegrated. [redacted] I saw a New York Presbyterian ambulance. Now I have to know about it. If you want the number, you leave me your number and I'll call you. Okay. But I said what happened to this number? Oh, well, those two people, one put on his helmet, crashed through the window, broke both his legs, and the other one ran over him to get inside. They both lived. I gave that dude my number to give to that dude who was driving because that's the dude that came out, and I said, please have that dude call me. Well, I never got a phone call from that dude. Otherwise I'd have the name for you. But those two guys lived. Those two guys you might want to speak to because both his legs got broke. He was there and stayed there. But he hasn't called me.

I'm kind of pissed I didn't get that guy's name, who came out of that smoke. If there's one image that's burned through my head, it's Danny with his teeth loose and that kid coming out of the black smoke.

Q. Is there anything else that you recall?

A. No.

LIEUTENANT FEILER: Okay. We'll conclude the interview. I want to thank you for the time and your participation in this event. It's really, really important. The time now is 0857 hours and we'll conclude the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT ERIC HANSEN

Interview Date: October 10, 2002

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

LIEUTENANT FEILER: Today's date is October 10, 2001. The time now is 1013 hours. I am Lieutenant Monte Feiler with the New York City Fire Department Investigations and Trials. I am conducting an interview with the following individual:

Q. Please state your name, rank and command.

A. My name is Eric K. Hansen, badge number 1258 at 22 Battalion, Fifth Division.

Q. EMT?

A. EMT.

Q. We're conducting the interview at interview room A at the Bureau of Investigations and Trials, 9 Metrotech, New York, Brooklyn.

What I need from you, sir, is a scenario of what occurred on the morning of September 11th in response to the World Trade Center incident.

A. Approximately 8:50, 8:55 I was ordered by Captain Olsen of the 22 Battalion to respond with LSU5, which I normally drive, to World Trade Center Tower 1 due to a plane crash accident. I got onto the Verrazano, went into the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel, came out of the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel and

I was on West Street, headed up towards Liberty. Upon there, I saw Chief McCracken of the department running southwards and I saw the Fire Commissioner also running southwards. I saw Chief Gombo directing me to go down a block towards Barclay Street, because there was debris coming down at that time. This was approximately 9:15 or so, a.m.

I proceeded down towards Barclay Street due to the fact Chief Gombo stated there was debris falling out of the windows. It wasn't debris. It was bodies coming down, being pushed out -- coming out of the World Trade Center Tower 1. At that time, I proceeded down towards Barclay Street. There was a traffic tie-up at Barclay Street. I was then directed by police to move my LSU5 out of the way of traffic and to move down towards Murray Street.

I proceeded down, I turned left onto Murray Street to where I stayed there until I got further orders from another EMS or Fire Department personnel. I stayed down there on Murray Street and I was directed to go down towards North End Avenue. I was on the corner of Murray Street and North End Avenue where I parked my rig. At that time, I heard what had sounded like a train, a freight train coming through the streets, and it was one of the building caving down.

At that time, I did not know there was a second plain that hit the second World Trade Center. I was really confused at the sound and the situation until I saw the blevy of dust and smoke coming towards -- up the street and I stayed in the ambulance where I saw Chief Fran Pascale, Chief Fran Pascale asked me to direct all the ambulances out of the area and to move up towards some place like Warren Street.

Q. Where were you at that time when you saw Chief Pascale?

A. I saw Chief Pascale at north -- excuse me. I saw Chief Pascale at North End Avenue and she was -- everybody was running for their lives literally. I left my ambulance parked at the corner of Murray and North End Avenue and I directed all the ambulances to go down towards North End Avenue and Warren to where it would be a little more safer.

We got here at Warren Street to where -- I couldn't find Chief Pascale and I couldn't find the people. There was an ambulance backup because we just couldn't get out of the area. Everything was tied down.

At that time, there was a second freight train. It sounded like a second freight train running through the street. That was Tower 2 collapsing at that time. We were all down a one-way Street, I believe it was on Warren Street, and we ducked both into lobbies of buildings to protect ourselves from the second wave of smoke and dust and gases that were coming out of the World Trade Center. At that time, there was speculations that the World Trade Center had collapsed, but still over the radio communications was very mixed up. Nobody knew where they were going. I wound up at River Terrace, which was right off of Warren Street and I was directed by Captain Abdo, he works in the Division, he just made captain. He used to work here, on the seventh floor.

I was directed by Captain Abdo about a good 45 minutes to an hour later, he stated that there was a possible chance of a gas main leak in the area. People started to scurry. I stayed and remained with the Captain until further orders that he gave me, assisting moving the traffic along. Captain Abdo, then I was directed by Captain Abdo to go to 23rd Street and Chelsea Pier to where I made my way.

It took some time to make my way. I made my way on down there. I was down there approximately 11, 1130.

Q. You took the LSU truck with you?

A. I took the LSU truck with me. It was covered with dust and debris and all that stuff. I took it down there to where doctors and nurses wanted the supplies from my LSU. I said, I cannot give them out until I had permission from the sector commander at that time. I had to wait a good hour until a sector commander gave me permission to offload all my equipment, except for the weapons-of-war kits, the atropine. The atropine, which did I not offload and I kept them on my rig until someone gave me off orders to offload that. Because I carry quite a few bags of those on the LSU.

Q. What kind of equipment were you giving out?

A. I was giving out backboards, I was giving out long boards, I was giving out regulators, splints, traction splints, water, saline. Everything that an ambulance carried, I carried: Suction, portable suctions. I gave out the multilaetor, two of them, and I set up the M tank for an asthma section. That they had already prepared by the pier, which I set up for them so they had an asthma table.

I was told as soon as I finished there, I was directed to go to station 11 to pick up more equipment and supplies and to go to Bellevue and pick up more equipment and supplies and to bring it down to 23rd Street, Chelsea Pier.

Q. When you originally received the call, what frequency did you get it on?

A. I was told by my Captain go to Richmond frequency. I stayed on Richmond frequency until I got onto -- because I was not told by Richmond frequency to switch over to citywide, stay on Richmond frequency.

Q. Who directed you? Which Captain at the battalion?

A. Captain Olsen. I stayed on the Richmond frequency until I hit Vesey Street, Vesey Street and West Street, and I had to call up Richmond and they turned around and said, "your location that you're supposed to be at" -- this was about 9:30. I stayed there until I was ordered by Chief -- this is after Chief Gombo. I just wanted to find out where my new dropoff zone was supposed to be set up.

Q. When you were coming over the Verrazano Bridge, you were by yourself?

A. Yes. I'm a single-man unit.

Q. What did you see?

A. I saw -- the only thing I saw was World Trade Center 1 with smoke coming out of the top of the tower.

Q. Was that the south building or the north building?

A. I have no idea which one it was. I believe it was the north building first.

Q. So when you were coming over the bridge one building was struck?

A. Yes.

Q. Not the second?

A. No, sir.

Q. Were you present when the second building was struck?

A. Definitely.

Q. Did you see the plane hit it?

A. No, sir, I couldn't, because I was down at Ground Zero, which is now Ground Zero, getting directions where to drop off my supplies. My supplies, -- I was getting directions to move further on down, down to Barclay Street to where I was at that time was a shower of debris of human bodies coming down off the building. You.

Q. You said you ran into Chief McCracken. Did you have a conversation with Chief McCracken?

A. I did not have a conversation. I just saw him running south from where I was, off of Vesey Street, and west and I saw the Commissioner running south also, but they were on the Hudson River side of the street and they were running southwards when they turned around and said there was debris coming down from the buildings.

Q. You're talking about Commissioner Von Essen?

A. Von Essen.

Q. You had a conversation with Chief Gombo?

A. Chief Gombo, I said, "Chief, where do you want my LSU?" That's LSU5 from Staten Island. He turned around and said, "Get the rig and get it out of here. There is debris coming down." It was a quick -- that was the extent of the conversation.

Q. Did you have contact with other EMS or firefighters?

A. I had contact with some -- it looked like it was a Battalion Chief who told me to take my rig and get it out of here, get it out of harm's way, because stuff is coming down.

Q. Do you know who he was?

A. No idea. No idea.

Q. Then you got up to, I think you said Barclay?

A. Yes. When I got up to Barclay, I was told to move down towards Murray Street.

Q. Who told you that?

A. Well, the Chief said, "Get it out of here and get it out of harm's way." The Battalion Chief that was standing there right at the engines, and I moved it up towards Murray Street and I was down at Murray and west and then I was told to move up to Murray and -- Murray and North End Avenue. I parked it on the corner and like I said, at that time everything was calm until the freight train rumbled in the streets and it was still not knowing what really took place or what happened.

Q. Did you ever enter any of the buildings?

A. Never entered any of the buildings -- any of the World Trade Center proper, no.

Q. Other than the chiefs that you mentioned, did you run across any other EMS people that you recognized?

A. I ran across Valerie Longo of the 22 Battalion, who had a rig out there.

Q. Where did you see her?

A. She was parked on Murray Street.

Q. Murray and what?

A. Murray and -- between North End Avenue and West Side.

Q. She was taking care of patients?

A. No. They were standing by or parked on a 45-degree angle as we were told to do. There were a whole bunch of ambulances from New Jersey, Hatzolah and a few other places. The Fire Department ambulances, they were parked at a 45-degree angle. I took my LSU knowing that if I had to get out and -- to set up a triage area some place, I had to be ready to go at any moment.

Q. Just for the record, can you just tell me what LSU stands for?

A. Logistics support unit. And that handles supplies for mass casualty incident to a certain number of people.

Q. Did there come a time where you ever did switch over to citywide?

A. There came a time when I switched over to Citywide after I spoke to Chief Abdo -- I mean Captain Abdo of the 5th Division.

Q. Any contact with any other EMS personnel?

A. The only contact I had with other EMS personnel were from other boroughs and I did not know them at that time.

Q. Any voluntaries?

A. I saw voluntary ambulances, Jersey ambulances, and I saw Hatzolah ambulances down there, but I did not recognize anybody.

Q. How about firefighters? Anybody you recognized?

A. There was no firefighters that I did recognize, at all. I mean but there was fire companies down there.

Q. So after you were directed to go up to Chelsea by Chief Pascale, you stayed at the Chelsea Pier area in the triage?

A. Right. Until 8:30 that night.

Q. Did you witness the buildings collapse or you heard it?

A. I did not witness the buildings collapse due to the fact that the other buildings were shadowing the structures from where I was. I was, you know, too close, too far in and right next to the buildings to where you couldn't see anything. But it was just a plume of smoke and dust and debris coming down. My LSU was covered with soot and debris. I had to clear that off and I stood there or my LSU stood, it bears marks, baptized under fire.

Q. Was anybody with you? Did you pick up any personnel?

A. I didn't pick up anybody at all. I just needed my orders to drop my supply load that I had in the back here or where to set up a triage area. When I got my orders to go down to 23rd Street, I was told to set up my triage area at 23rd Street.

Q. By Chief Pascale?

A. By Chief Pascale and Captain Abdo.

Q. When you got to Chelsea Pier, who was in charge there from EMS?

A. I could not recognize anybody from -- I did not recognize anybody. Just because I probably had -- I don't know. I was stunned by the whole situation. Stunned or upset by the whole situation, but I know he was a EMS Captain that told me to drop off --

Q. Male? Female?

A. It was a male. He told me to drop off my supplies there and to help set up 23rd Street as a triage point area.

Q. Did you have any further radio communications with anyone?

A. The only time I had -- my next radio communications were approximately around 5:00 o'clock, when they were trying to take roll call of ambulances in the area. It might have been just a little earlier. I'm not quite sure.

Q. Is there anything else that is important between the time frame that we were talking about that you would like to add?

A. No, not at this time. But it was -- I did dive into buildings and there was one doorman that was -- a doorman that was going to lock the lobby or this door. I don't even know the building because it was like it happened and a Police Officer said, don't lock it, because other people were still coming from the plume of debris and smoke and everybody made a mad dash.

Q. That was before the buildings collapsed?

A. No. This was on the second building that collapsed. The second collapse. I do not know what transpired. I did not know there was a second plane hit. I did not know with that bowl of thunder and the noise, I did not know that the World Trade Center caved in. I was totally unaware until someone said, the World Trade Center collapsed. It was too unbelievable to believe that such a thing could happen.

Q. We are going to conclude the interview. I want to thank you for your time. Thank you for participating in this. It's very important.

A. No problem. No problem.

LIEUTENANT FEILER: We conclude the interview at 1034 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT JUSTIN LIM

Interview Date: October 10, 2001

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

MR. ECCLESTON: Today is October 10, 2001. The time is 8:57 a.m. hours. This is Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department. I am conducting an interview with the following individual:

Q. Please state your name, rank and title and assigned command of the Fire Department of the City of New York regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

A. Justin Lim, Shield 5016, EMT, Battalion 20.

Q. Justin, were you assigned to the World Trade Center disaster on September 11, 2001?

A. Yes.

Q. Enroute to the alarm, can you tell me what you saw?

A. Enroute to the alarm we saw both of the buildings giving up with a lot of smoke and we actually saw a little fire from the West Side Highway.

Q. When you arrived on the scene, where did you park your ambulance?

A. West and Vesey.

Q. Can you indicate on the map with a number

1 where you parked your vehicle.

A. (Complied with request.)

Q. Whom did you first report to when you arrived there?

A. At the time there was no officers, but there were two medics on scene, also from Battalion 20, which told us that we were supposed to park our buses in the opposite direction of the World Trade Center in order for immediate egress.

Q. Were you given a specific assignment by them after you turned your vehicles around?

A. At the time we turned our vehicles around, we started to gather our equipment and we had treated actually several ESU and firefighters for minor injuries before we could actually make it to the Trade Center.

Q. This was on Vesey and West where you treated them in?

A. Yes.

Q. After you treated these injured people, did you transport them anywhere?

A. At the time they didn't really want to leave the scene and we just got a lot of the dust and dirt out of their eyes and we were trying to evaluate them to see how serious their injuries were and at the time there wasn't any major injuries. It was just a lot of dust, minor abrasions, so we let them go on their way because they refused to be transported anywhere.

Q. After they left you, what did you do next?

A. We started gathering our equipment, which consisted of our helmet, our turn out coat and first aid bag, AED and oxygen bag.

Q. And where did you respond?

A. We started walking towards the World Trade Center and at that time that's when the collapse happened.

Q. That's when the first building collapsed?

A. Yes.

Q. What did you do when the first building collapsed?

A. When the first building collapsed, we both started -- my partner and I both started walking back to the vehicle and we opened up one of the compartment doors where we put all our equipment in and as it was coming down, we started seeing a mob of people start running towards us. So we opened up our back doors and we put in as many people as we could and then my partner was kind of motioning to the civilians and the ESU workers, that whoever wanted to get a ride, they just hop in and we would take them.

And this whole time the building was still coming down. It was only halfway down. I proceeded to get into the driver's seat and there were like several people running up to the bus saying, "get out of here." And we actually ended up driving with several people on the hood and people were hanging off the sides of the mirrors, off the back step of the ambulance, and I'd say we probably got about like 30 -- maybe 30 people out of there before it actually came completely down and the smoke came.

Q. Where did you respond to when you had all these people? Where did you drive them to?

A. We started going, I believe it was -- I guess it was Barclay or Murray. One of those two block. It was just before that school or the college. At that time everybody got off and I guess a couple of privates and I believe two FDNY ambulances were there and I guess we started staging around that area.

Q. Can you indicate on the map where you believe the staging area was set up?

A. Between Warren and Murray.

Q. Between Warren and Murray on West?

A. Yes.

Q. You stayed there for how long?

A. We stayed there probably the duration. What happened was there was no officers and I started taking down the people's units. There was like the Jewish hospitals, the private hospitals, a voluntary ambulance there, there was two city FDNY units in there. On a napkin I wrote down all their units and I gave it back to Manhattan South, telling them I had about ten units that were being staged. So that's pretty much where we were.

Q. And you were at this location when the second tower came down also?

A. Actually, when the second tower came down we were probably at Barclay and Murray and then we went to Warren and Murray. We dropped off people here before the second one came. Because that's when they started coming out and they wanted to go back and get their friend or whatever.

Q. So you dropped off people at West and Barclay?

A. Yes, West and Barclay.

Q. And then you proceeded to West and Murray?

A. At this time we were going to try to turn around, I believe it was, and then when we started turning around the second building came down. So we then turned around, and that's how we ended up there.

Q. So when the second building came down, you're indicating you were at Barclay and West?

A. Yes.

Q. Or West between Barclay and Vesey?

A. Right. After that then we were treating some minor aided again. It was all debris and dirt and when the second building came down we, again, took as many people as we could and then we moved here.

Q. You moved to Murray and West?

A. Correct.

Q. Correct?

A. Correct.

Q. Do you remember unit designations from these units that were with you or the names of people who were with you?

A. I know that --

Q. To the best of your memory.

A. I know there was one guy from a Queens hospital. I was in the academy with him and he was there, I believe, with a voluntary ambulance.

Q. Do you remember what his name was?

A. I believe his name was James Mahoney.

Q. James Mahoney?

A. Yes. And then there was another Jewish hospitals there. I think Hatzolah I think it was and then there was another guy that had a gold shield on and he had --

Q. The pais? The curls?

A. Yeah, the curls and he was trying to direct everybody but, you know, but he was still caught in the chaos. He wasn't really doing much. He was yelling at everybody. So he started trying to take people on his own and transport people that haven't even been triaged. So he wasn't any help. And by that time, before they yelled for a gas leak for another evacuation, there were a few lieutenants there and they kind of gave direction, and there were staging areas all over the place.

Q. How long do you believe you remained at Murray and West?

A. I'd probably say maybe 40 minutes. That's actually before -- a couple of minutes before they started assigning the units to the Chelsea Pier. So we treated who we could and we asked everybody if they wanted to be transported and most of them said no, and then they reassigned us to Chelsea Pier.

Q. So from Murray and West you responded to the Chelsea Pier; is that correct?

A. They started assigning people there. We were kind of blocked in and then we -- they said everybody started running towards us and then a few minutes later we heard there was a gas leak. So that's when they wanted us to evacuate. So at that time we took -- I believe we took two firefighters and we went back to Chelsea Pier and we dropped them off half way, because they wanted to get out.

Q. Do you have any idea approximately what time this was?

A. No.

Q. You can use the time line, I don't know if this will help had you at all. The north tower went down at 10:30, 10:29.

A. (No response.)

Q. Was it after 12? Was it before 12? Noon?

A. It was probably around noonish.

Q. Around noonish?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have anything else you would like to add to this, to the events that happened prior to 12:00 noon?

A. As far as criticism?

Q. Anything you want to tell me. Anything you saw, anything you heard, any emotions you felt, any feelings.

A. In the beginning when we first staged by West and Vesey, I had a lot of firefighters that are friends from my department that walked over to the building about ten minutes before we started to and that was the time the building collapsed. They probably just got to the front door. We treated firefighters, lieutenants, captains. Actually the biggest downfall to this whole thing was probably the communications with the private hospitals, because some of them didn't have unit designations, just vehicle ID numbers. They had no clue what to do. [redacted] they basically didn't want to listen. Initially they didn't want to give information. You know, it took me a while to convince them, you know, we have to stage here, because there were a lot of wounded. We were actually trying to stage there and get them treating patients so that we could turn back and see if we could get anybody else. That's when they called the gas leak and everybody had to turn and run.

Q. Anything else you would like to add?

A. That's it.

MR. ECCLESTON: This concludes our interview. The time is 9:09. I thank you very much for your corporation. The counter on the tape is 212.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

PARAMEDIC KEVIN KELLEHER

Interview Date: October 10, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. ECCLESTON: Today's date is October 10, 2001. The time is 833 hours. This is Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name, rank, title and assigned command of the Fire Department of the City of New York regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

A. My name is Kevin Kelleher, paramedic, assigned to Battalion 20.

MR. ECCLESTON: Also present in the room is --

PARAMEDIC MARQUEZ: Paramedic Felix Marquez, assigned to Battalion 20, shield number 1379.

Q. Were you assigned to the World Trade Center disaster on September 11, 2001?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. Responding to the call, can you tell me what you saw?

A. I was responding down the Sheridan Expressway out of the Bronx. We were able to see smoke from both towers. We got on the FDR. As we are heading down the FDR, we started noticing people coming towards us. There was a -- once we got south of the Manhattan Bridge, we couldn't see any -- we could only see one tower in the cloud of smoke.

As we got to the end of the FDR, we tried to get to the west side. We got down to the tunnel at the end and three quarters of that had been closed down. We thought it had collapsed. So we turned around and tried heading east towards the World Trade Center. We responded to the staging area, it was supposed to be Church and Vesey. We were heading west on Maiden Lane, when over the air we started hearing people screaming that the second tower was coming down.

At that time, everything just went black. We got covered in a cloud of dust and debris. We made a quick left-hand turn on Liberty and Trinity Place, I believe it is, right on Liberty south and left on Broadway. We started heading south on Broadway. We got flagged down at Exchange Place and Broadway, where a Police Lieutenant complaining of difficulty breathing. So we stopped the vehicle there and began treatment on him.

Q. What were the extent of his injuries?

A. He was complaining of shortness of breath basically. We had a physician and an EMT with us at the time.

Q. Who were the physician and the EMT, do you recall their names?

A. The EMT was Juan Vega. I don't know who the physician was. I'm not really sure who the physician was. I know he was a pediatrician from Jacobi Hospital.

Q. You brought him with you?

A. Yes.

Q. I didn't recall. Do you know the name of the EMT?

A. The EMT is Juan Vega.

Q. You picked up this police officer and then you proceeded where with him?

A. We proceeded south on Broadway. We were trying to clear the area because we didn't know what else was in danger of coming down. We wanted to get to a safe area. We proceeded down Broadway to Staten Island Ferry Terminal at South Ferry.

Q. When you got down there, what did you do?

A. We got there, we were met by about a thousand civilians. No other public safety personnel. We gathered all the civilians up, got them out of the dust and debris, got them inside the building. After about 15 minutes or so, two more ambulances arrived. Some police arrived.

The police had found a load of busses that were lined up by the Staten Island Ferry, so they moved everybody that was not injured out of the area on the busses.

Q. Do you know where they took those people?

A. North.

PARAMEDIC MARQUEZ: They took them north down the FDR, I believe it was, and they were trying to load up ferries to get people out of Manhattan, into Jersey, and also to Staten Island.

A. They wanted to get everybody out of the area. After we secured the area, anybody that was injured for -- we set up a staging area and a treatment area at the Staten Island Ferry terminal, on the second floor we set the treatment area. Busses were staged outside. That's about it. We stayed there for most of the rest of the day.

Q. Can you just indicate on the map I provided for you the number 1 where you picked up that injured police officer first?

A. Sure.

Q. You picked up the injured police officer on Exchange and Broadway?

A. Yes.

Q. Then you proceeded to where?

A. We proceeded to the Staten Island Ferry terminal. It's not shown on the map. It's south on Broadway.

Q. What vehicle were you in?

A. We were in vehicle 110.

Q. Do you have anything else you would like to add to this?

A. Just that when we were down there, we didn't know if we were cut off from the north. That's why we secured the Staten Island Ferry terminal. If we had patients, the only way we figured we were getting them out of there was on the ferry. So we wanted a secure area so we could treat them and get them out. It was rather eerie not hearing anything on the radio after the second tower came down. The radio was dead. For a long time we didn't know if we were the only people left down there.

PARAMEDIC MARQUEZ: It was amazing how responding before the second tower fell and all the commotion in the street. Once the ball, it looked like a ball, was rolling towards us, this smoke and debris. Once it hit us, everything just became silent. You could see people screaming and yelling but you couldn't hear anybody. Just quiet.

A. (inaudible).

PARAMEDIC MARQUEZ: Everything just became dark, pitch black and quiet. You saw people screaming, yelling and running, but you couldn't hear anything. Just silence, just complete silence. You couldn't hear.

MR. ECCLESTON: I thank you very much for conducting this interview with me. The interview is concluded at 840. The setting on the tape counter is 143.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

PARAMEDIC FELIX MARQUEZ

Interview Date: October 10, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. ECCLESTON: Today's date is October 10, 2001. The time is 819 hours. This is Christopher Eccleston of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name, rank title and assigned command area regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

A. Felix Marquez, paramedic assigned to Battalion 20.

MR. ECCLESTON: Also in the room is?

PARAMEDIC KELLEHER: Paramedic Kevin Kelleher, shield 5044, assigned to Battalion 20.

Q. Were you assigned to the World Trade Center disaster on September 11, 2001?

A. Yes, I was assigned to 03 x-ray. We were dispatched to the World Trade Center.

Q. En route to the alarm, what did you see?

A. En route to the alarm as we was on the Sheridan Expressway, we was able to see the towers on fire. We went down to the World Trade Center, down the FDR, down the east side.

Q. When you arrived at the World Trade Center, where did you park your vehicle and what vehicle was it?

A. It was vehicle 110, I was the driver of the vehicle. We exited off the FDR around Battery Park. We was headed westbound down Maiden Lane when tower two collapsed. When tower two collapsed, we made a left on to Liberty back on to Broadway, trying to make our way away from the tower. It was very hard to see due to all the rubble and the dust. I remember on our radio was people screaming, asking for back up, telling that the tower was collapsing.

We were trying to make our way to help to get people out, but we was unable to so we headed down, south down Broadway where we picked up a police Lieutenant, who was in distress. We put him into the back of the ambulance, me and Kevin, and we proceeded south bound down Broadway.

Q. After you picked up this police officer, where did you respond with him?

A. We headed -- we just kept driving until we got to a safe distance away because we was unable to see due to all the dust and the debris and all the stuff that was falling. We just kept driving down, southbound down Broadway, until you couldn't go more no more. We ended up at South Ferry.

Q. What happened with this police officer, did you --

A. This police officer was at the tower, and he was able to get away. He was complaining of severe respiratory distress, so we got him in the back and we started treating him. As I was driving down, my partner, an EMT named, Juan Vega, was treating the patient. We stopped at South Ferry to proceed with our treatment and care for this police officer.

Q. Did you turn over care and treatment to somebody else? Did you stay with him or did you go back up to the site?

A. No, we stayed with the police officer and since we made South Ferry we realized this was a pretty safe distance away from the tower, a good place to reset staging. So me and my partner, Kevin Kelleher, got on the air and we said staging at South Ferry.

Q. This was basically the first time you parked your vehicle. Can you indicate on the map I provided to you approximately where you stopped and parked your vehicle?

A. Our first stop when we picked up the police officer was about Liberty and -- Exchange, sorry. We came down Maiden Lane down Broadway. We got flagged down around Exchange and Broadway to pick up the police Lieutenant. That was our first stop, when we picked him up.

Q. Can you just indicate on the map with a number 1. Okay. Then the next stop where you stopped your vehicle?

A. It's not on this map. It's at the South Ferry, where the ferry goes to Staten Island.

Q. When you stopped at South Ferry you set up a triage?

A. Yes, we set up staging.

Q. How long did you stay there for?

A. I stayed there for approximately 12 hours. I was there for approximately 12 hours. There was a lot of patients over there complaining of distress. City workers, me and my partner parked the ambulance and started treating patients.

Q. You remained in that staging area, you didn't go back up to Ground Zero to the site?

A. Not until later on that evening.

Q. Not until later on that evening. Okay. Who was the officer running that staging area, do you recall?

A. Yes, after approximately an hour, hour, 45 minutes, an hour, Chief Basile came to the scene.

Q. Where were you when the second tower collapsed?

A. We was by Maiden Lane and Broadway, in that area.

Q. What were you doing there when the tower collapsed?

A. We were responding to a unit in distress screaming for medics.

Q. You were still driving?

A. We were still driving, yes. We was trying to make our way to the corner of Church and Broadway.

Q. Did you make any radio communications that might be important to us?

A. Yes, we let the dispatcher know that that unit that was in distress, and screaming for paramedics, we told him that we would respond to that location. Dispatcher acknowledged it and we proceeded 63 en route to Church and -- I believe it was Church and Broadway. Church and Vesey, sorry. Church and Vesey.

Q. Is there anything else you would like to add to this, any other information you might have, any feelings or emotions, anything you need to add?

A. It was a hectic day. Other than that, we did the best we could do. That's pretty much it.

MR. ECCLESTON: Thank you very much for your time. The time is now 826. This concludes our interview. The setting on the tape recorder is 124.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT PATRICK SCARINGELLO

Interview Date: October 10, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. ECCLESTON: Today is October 10, 2001. The time is 6:16 a.m. This is Christopher Eccleston of the Fire Department of the City of New York conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name, rank and assigned command area of the Fire Department regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

A. My name is Lieutenant Patrick Scaringello, assigned to Battalion 49, Bureau of EMS.

Q. You were assigned to the World Trade Center disaster?

A. Yes.

Q. En route to the alarm, what did you see?

A. I was told to stage at 21 Street and the 59 Street Bridge. Three of my units were already being dispatched across the bridge to respond to the World Trade Center, which would have been 49 Victor, 45 Adam and 49 Henry.

Time frame, as far as I put the time frame, I can't remember exactly. I don't believe they had completely cleared over the bridge when I was told to respond with the units from the staging area, which was 49 Charlie, 46 William, I believe it was William, and 49 x-ray, I believe. I'm not too sure right now what they were.

I was mid span at the 59 Street Bridge when I looked to my left and I saw the both towers were involved midway up. We then proceeded off the bridge and I opted against going down the FDR Drive because I figured that was going to be backed up with traffic. We took the city streets down, local streets, mainly on Broadway. Then I believe it was Second Avenue, we switched back and forth and I was following two unmarked cars. Unmarked law enforcement vehicles.

We got down to Broadway, where originally we were told to stage at Vesey and Church. I couldn't get any of my vehicles down Vesey and Church because there were numerous vehicles parked there. So I parked them on Broadway, I continued down, parked my command car on Cortlandt between Broadway and Church. I then reported to the triage area at Church and Fulton, where I was advised to try to get the units, trying to get things as close as we could to that area.

Then I went back up. I went back up to Broadway and advised the units to follow me down to Fulton, where I staged at Fulton and Broadway and reported down to the triage unit. As I reported back to the triage area, Captain Olszewski had requested that I find some more triage tags, to help in triage. In doing so I was also helping to evacuate people from buildings and they were coming across the street and out of the subway.

I got back to my truck. I got triage tags. I went back down to Fulton and Church, whereupon I found the Captain. Lt. Davila, Lt. Medjuck were elsewhere treating patients. I started to treat patients on my own when I heard the explosion from up above. I looked up, I saw smoke and flame and then I saw the top tower tilt, start to twist and lean.

With that, there was a massive influx of humanity rushing past me. Most of the people had made it through the triage area. Some had stumbled and fallen. I grabbed them, helped them underneath, and behind a police van, whereupon I put my body over them, about 4 people that I can remember. We rode out the first tower in that location. Once it had lightened up, because the smoke and ash had darkened everything down, once it had lightened up, I instructed all four people to hold my hand. We crossed over on Fulton against the wall from Saint Pauls cemetery and I instructed them to follow me up to Broadway against, on the sidewalk against the wall.

Halfway up, someone met us there, I believe from the Police Department, I handed them off to them and returned back into Fulton and Church. I was assisting in pulling more people out from debris, when I heard the second tower explode. When I tried to evacuate the area, by running up Fulton, got halfway up. I couldn't get into any doorway, where I found a window that was partially broken, I broke the rest of the glass and went through and into the building.

Found myself in a lobby of sorts, I believe it was the Thompson's Financial Building. I entered into the lobby. I found approximately 50 people. I announced who I was, asked if there was any police officers or firemen in the building or in the lobby. I had one fireman I identified complaining of a laceration to the back of his left leg. There was a Port Authority police officer, myself and the police officer tried to bandage the fireman's leg as best we could, with whatever we could find. I then instructed all the people there that -- once the outside cleared from the smoke and debris from the second tower, I walked them out the door, again holding hands across the street.

When we got across Broadway, I told them to make a left and head north on Broadway. Once all the police had evacuated that building, I went back down Fulton and again continued to try to find people in the rubble.

Q. Can you just indicate on the map exactly where you parked your vehicle or to the best of your knowledge when you arrived on the scene?

A. When I first arrived on the scene, I was halfway down Cortlandt Street, reported to the triage area, which was in front of the Millennium Hotel. I ran down Cortlandt to Church and up Church to the Millennium, where they advised me to restage my vehicles on Broadway. I went back to my vehicle. Made a u-turn on Cortlandt, came up to Broadway, and parked it on the corner of Fulton and Broadway and then reported back down to the triage area.

Q. Can you just put a number 1 where you first parked your vehicle and number 2 where you moved your vehicle to? Do you happen to remember which vehicle number this was?

A. 840.

Q. 840. Did you ever enter any of the World Trade Center buildings prior to their collapse?

A. No, never got a chance to. I was involved in patient care at the triage area.

Q. Did you remove any civilians to hospitals or just away from the scene?

A. Just away from the scene. Most of the civilians that I did see, did have contact with were walking wounded. They were very ambulatory. Most who had any sort of injury did not affect them moving away from the scene.

Q. You had told me when you were traveling there you had several units with you. Can you tell me the personnel there were on those units, to the best of your recollection?

A. Two of the units were voluntary units. I think it was 49 x-ray or 49 William. The other one was 46, either a 46 William, one was a William, one was a (inaudible).

Q. Do you know the names of the people that were on that unit?

A. No.

Q. How about any Fire Department units?

A. 49 Charlie was behind me. That was Brendon Mulroy and I think his partner was Mario, I'm not sure now. I think it was Mario Ramirez.

Q. That was the only Fire Department unit you had with you?

A. That was 49 Charlie, yes. The other three already went over the bridge. That was 9 Victor, 5 Adam and 9 Henry. They were already ahead of us.

Q. Okay. Was there any important radio communications that you made?

A. None other than advising Citywide where we were staged and what I had there and them telling me to respond. We responded I believe right after the second tower was hit. I think Citywide just pulled the pin.

No, I don't even think it was Citywide. I think we were still on Queens. Queens just said respond in, send everything in.

Q. Is there anything else you would like to add to this interview?

A. What else do you need?

Q. Anything else you would like to add, any feelings, emotions, anything?

A. I did stay in the area. In fact I worked my way up because there was nobody else around, no EMS personnel, I worked my way up eventually to Church -- to Chambers and West, where they had a command post.

Q. What kind of command post is that?

A. A haphazard one. Everybody was looking for some sort of direction to go in, but they were trying to regroup at the time.

Q. Do you remember who was in charge of the command post there?

A. Pick a Chief. Pick a Chief. They were all there and everybody had something to say. I inquired 4 or 5 times where my partner was.

Q. Can you tell me which Chiefs were there that you remember seeing?

A. J.P. Martin, Perrugia, Carassquillo. That's about all I can remember right now. But I was able to work my way back down West Street and I did find my partner, Lieutenant Yioras.

Q. Do you know about what time this was that you got to this command post?

A. It was well after tower one fell, which was the second tower.

Q. Well after meaning an hour, two hours, three hours?

A. No, I don't think it was an hour. It may have been maybe 40 minutes at most. I did find my partner. We then worked our way up West Street or down West Street toward the center again, where we came upon a Captain, Captain McFarland. She instructed us that she was looking for some of our people that were there and she had instructed Lieutenant Yioras and I to work our way back up toward Church to see if anybody was there. We did go past -- we went up Church, we went up Vesey, past 7 Trade, which at the time didn't look like it was involved, but we found later on that it was. We crossed over. Then we wound up on Barclay. No, we wound up -- came up Vesey.

There was a -- they started setting up a medical triage treatment area in a building, an office building, lobby of an office building there. Chief Wells was there. Lieutenant Race, Chief Wells instructed me to set up transport and staging, which I did on Vesey. About that time is when Lieutenant Yioras advised me that he started getting chest pains.

We had it checked out. I then set up -- I brought a unit up, and was ready to have him transported along with EMT Adams, Paul Adams, who was also complaining of more pain. They were placed in an ambulance and they were dispatched to hospital 71. This is the part that steams me. Somewhere between where we sent them out from that section to hospital 71, the ambulance was stopped by one of our Lieutenants. Told both of them to step out of the ambulance, that it wasn't an emergency, commandeered the ambulance and they were later on placed in another ambulance and then brought to hospital 71. Okay.

At that time, after they were gone, I worked my way back down with the voluntary units, I don't remember which ones they were, where I set up the voluntary units in the staging. I worked my way down to the corner of Church and Vesey, where I was told they brought a patient into the Church, which later I found out to be Father Judge.

They worked on Father Judge in the church where he expired. We then had a unit standing by. We put his body in an ambulance and dispatched that ambulance out. We then were told by PD that the area was possibly in a collapse zone because of tower 7. We evacuated the church. As I was leaving the church there was a small man sitting on one of the pews. I ran back in the Church. I found it to be one of the Fathers, a priest, saying his rosary. I went in and I excused myself for interrupting him in the middle of his rosary. I advised him we were in a collapse zone and we had to leave, which we did. Just before we left the church he advised me that the sacrament was still in the tabernacle. I told him that I would try to find somebody to remove it. I then escorted him down the stairs. I handed him off to another person, to another set of EMTs, who walked him up the street.

Went back in the Church. I went up to the altar. I was looking, yelling for somebody who was there. No response. I quickly left the building because of the possibility of being in a collapse zone.

I then stayed down in that corner helping to evacuate people that came out of any of the other buildings.

Q. Do you know about what time we are talking now, time frame?

A. I would say probably about 45 minutes to an hour before 7 dropped, because when tower 7 dropped, I was on Vesey and Church.

Q. This was before tower 7 dropped?

A. This is just before tower 7 dropped.

Q. Tower 7 fell at approximately 5:25.

A. Like I said, I spent the majority of my time with the exception of the time that I went up to Chambers, all my time was spent on the east side of 7, because that's where my first three units came in on the west side. The three units I brought in were on the east side. I tried to make sure those people were accounted for.

I got halfway up to the corner of Church and Vesey when tower 7 dropped, which basically the concussion just blew me across the street and I came up again besides, past Saint Pauls and it was already late at night and it was dark. The smoke didn't help it any, the dust and everything else. I was hit in the back of the head with something that came out of one of the buildings, which later I found out to be a water pitcher.

They had evacuated that medical zone earlier, which I was involved in making sure my vehicles were out of there, again, just making sure that nobody was in the area. They told me that they were relocating to Pace. I had started to come up, I tried to find my command car, which I knew where I left. Unfortunately it wasn't there. I came walking back. I went as far as Cortlandt and all the way back down to Barclay. I kept saying I knew where I left my command car, that's when I realized somebody had stolen my command car.

Q. Did you ever retrieve your command car?

A. From what I understood the next day somebody said that they had called here asking if that was ours, they found it on 14 Street and Irving Avenue.

Q. We are going to try to concern with anything that happened before noon. That's what we are trying to concentrate on, not the later part of the day. Is there anything you need to add to this on anything that happened before 12 noon?

A. You know, I tell you the God's honest truth, Chris, once you got there I didn't even notice the time. Couldn't even tell time. Once the first tower came down, there was no such thing as a watch. My main function was looking for people, pulling people out and making sure they were safe. We never got into any building. The only thing I dealt with was from Cortlandt to Barclay, from Broadway to I guess West. That area was my main concentration, with the exception of the way I worked my way around to Chambers.

There was -- after both towers, I was still looking for people, I did run into Lieutenant Davila and another -- I'm sorry, not Davila, Lieutenant Medjuck and one of our telemetry doctors, I believe, they were telling me I had to go to -- they had to report to the Battery. When they started walking north and I kept telling them, no, you're going the wrong way. They in turn walked back. We did go down to -- we did walk down to Beekman Downtown.

I went into the ER to check to see if any of our people were there. I came back out. They were gone. So I worked my way back into this area to get to try to reestablish something and find out who was there. I never again saw Captain Olszewski. I don't know what ever happened to her or where she went. I seemed to be the only one in this area. Everyone else I would imagine was gathered on the south, they were all around here.

Q. Along the west side?

A. Along the west side, because I think that's where the main body of people were advised to report to.

Q. Is there anything else you feel you need to add to this?

A. No, just that this was the big one everybody trains for.

MR. ECCLESTON: It certainly was. I thank you very much for the interview. The time is 6:41. The counter on the tape player is 375.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER RICHARD BILLY

Interview Date: October 10, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. CASTORINA: Today's date is October 10, 2001. My name is Ron Castorina. I'm at Engine 24. Accompanied with me is --

MR. McCOURT: Tom McCourt.

Q. We are here to interview --

A. Firefighter Richard Billy, Engine Company 24.

Q. Firefighter Billy, on September 11, can you tell us about that day, where you were and what happened?

A. We got a call for an explosion in the World Trade Center number 1, roughly about a quarter to nine, around there. Got there a few minutes later. I think we parked the rig on West and Vesey.

MR. CASTORINA: Excuse me one second. The time is 1123. Sorry. Go ahead.

A. Okay. Then we entered the north tower on the map there for 1 World Trade Center. We were in the lobby for a minute or two. We followed, our company followed Ladder 20. I believe it was Ladder 20. I don't remember this stairwell, but I believe we followed Ladder 20. We basically were going up with our rollups and our equipment. We took a breather on floor number 29 and with Ladder 20 also.

After a while, we were there for a couple of minutes and then taking a breather. Lieutenant Hansson of my -- of Engine Company 24 told me there was a civilian, a handicapped person with a friend of his on the 29th floor. He told me to stay with him because we were riding heavy. We had an extra guy. I had a radio. He told me to stay with him. They went up to a couple of more floors to the staging area, I believe they went to 35, I'm not sure. I was with them for a few minutes.

What happens is a couple of other people came by, they wanted to look at their office, I don't know why, but for some reason. About that time, I don't know exactly what time, I don't have the times down, but there was a collapse. At this time, I never knew that number 2 World Trade Center was ever hit at this point. I'm thinking it's the top of our floor, our building, number 1. That's what I'm thinking.

At that moment, of the collapse, there was a Captain from the 21 Engine named William Burke. I happened to know him because he used to be a fireman at 24. He shows up at that time. I'm with this handicapped person alone. William Burke, Captain William Burke and his men show him up and I told him I have this handicapped. I'm with him alone. He took over for me at that moment. He was to go with the handicapped person and his friend.

At about that moment, Lieutenant Hansson came down and the other men from 24 came down and said Rich, let's go. We started proceeding down from the 29th floor.

Q. Were you getting any radio transmissions, because you said you had a radio?

A. I had a radio but I really can't recall hearing anything. He just told me we had to leave. Got to about the second or third floor and there was a fireman from Squad 18 named Pat Kelly. He said he needed help. There was another person who couldn't walk. I think he had broken legs, I'm not sure. What we did was we split up. Me and Lieutenant Hansson and Firefighter Sterling went with Pat Kelly. The other two I think continued down that stairwell, wherever that was.

We went through the building into -- with Firefighter Kelly from 18, to help with this other handicapped. I don't think he was handicapped. I think he had broken legs. I'm not sure. He couldn't walk.

Q. Was he a heavy set male?

A. Yes, very heavy, and we had Port Authority cops with us too, so we got him down another flight of stairs I guess in to some kind of lobby. We dragged him across, got to the entrance or the exit, building number 1.

Q. Do you want to mark it off.

A. Somewhere around here. Whatever the exit is here. We ran across to building number 6. Us, three from 24 Engine, Lieutenant Hansson, me and Sterling, Pat Kelly, another fireman and a couple of PA cops ran. At that point they had enough men between the PA and they had enough men to take care of him. We had way too many men. We started to leave, 24.

At that moment the collapse came. As I found out, that would be in our building. We went across, we ran across over here. It started collapsing. After that, we couldn't see anything. It was all very dark and brown. Couldn't see anything. We are just waiting. I'm thinking we are trapped. I was giving a Mayday, I believe. I think the only response --

Q. Did you take cover somewhere?

A. We went back into the building. After we came down, the building overhang, because the building had an overhang.

Q. As it was coming down where were you?

A. I was about here.

Q. You had an overhang over here?

A. There was an overhang, kind of like an overhang. That's it. We survived. I found Sterling but I couldn't find Hansson. I thought he was dead. I went back in here a little bit and came back out. I thought we were trapped, so I gave Maydays out. I don't think I heard -- somebody responded, what ended up being Hansson I think. I thought he was there. I thought it was somebody else from 24. I don't think we were trapped. After a while it lifted. We saw some light here.

Q. Did you get injured in any way, anybody get injured?

A. No, only abrasions of the eyes. So I ran over here, and there is sort of like a 30 foot drop so I didn't want to jump.

Q. What street is that?

A. Vesey, like a 30 foot drop. If I had to I would have jumped. But I waited a little bit more. We found stairs over here. There were stairs here that led to the street around here, somewhere around here there is stairs, outside stairs. Went down, then I came out. Actually I came out with Pat Kelly and some other fireman. I found out later I think Sterling must have jumped over here. I'm not sure. Hansson I thought was missing. When I came out of here --

Q. Once you came out where did you end up?

A. I saw some kind of command post outside, somewhere, maybe around here. I'm not sure.

Q. You worked your way over there?

A. Yes. Then I'm like in a daze, so I kept walking around, then I found some other guys from 24 that came in on their own.

Q. Then you started meeting up with people?

A. Then I was taken to the hospital. Because I couldn't --

Q. Eyes --

A. My eyes were killing me.

Q. How was your breathing?

A. My breathing was all right.

Q. So you were treated and released?

A. Yes.

Q. What hospital did you go to?

A. The NYU downtown, right by Pace University.

Q. Anything else you remember or want to add? You have pretty much covered everything. If there is anything else you want to add. How was the lighting in the stairs and the smoke conditions initially when you were in the building?

A. There was no smoke. You mean going up?

Q. Yes, when you were going up. When you were on the 20th floor helping --

A. 29th.

Q. 29th. How was that floor? Was there any smoke or anything?

A. No.

Q. Everything looked normal?

A. Everything looked normal. Never knew the other tower was hit.

Q. When the building started collapsing you heard the rumble and --

A. Which building, the other one?

Q. Yes.

A. I heard that, I never --

Q. Where were you at that point?

A. On the 29 floor.

Q. On the 29 floor. In other words, when you got the signal from Lieutenant Hansson let's go, you were up in the 29th?

A. Yes, with the handicapped person. That was taken over by Captain Burke and his men.

Q. Okay. Anything else you want to add?

A. No.

MR. CASTORINA: Okay. This concludes the interview. The time now is 11:33 a.m.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER RICHARD SARACELLI

Interview Date: October 10, 2001

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

MR. MURAD: The time is 1000 hours and I am Murray Murad with Richard Dunn of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I am conducting an interview with Lieutenant --

A. Richard Saracelli, Ladder 49, Bronx. I have 32 years on the job.

MR. MURAD: The location of the interview is being conducted at Engine 68, located at 1160 Ogden Avenue in the borough of the Bronx. This is regarding the tragic event on September 11, 2001.

Q. Lieutenant, give us your perspective on what happened that day and your involvement with your unit that responded.

A. As I understand it, you're looking for a historical perspective on the incidents of September 11th. I came in for the recall. I was off duty that morning. I came for the recall and that evening we went down and acted as Ladder 1 for the next four days.

My interest in the historical perspective of this goes back to the mid 60s when that building was commissioned, designed, and built. I want to know what the building industry is doing building buildings 110 stories tall with no way for us to effectively fight a fire on an upper floor and no way for people in those buildings to evacuate in a serious fire incident.

A lot of what is going to come down to rest here is why were those buildings built so far beyond the human scale? Why did the City of New York allow them to be built not under New York City building code. Why do people build buildings that people cannot evacuate from and that the Fire Department cannot fight fires in on an upper floor. It just makes no sense.

When I watched those buildings being constructed and since their construction, I've been up in them, I've looked at them and they were always dangerous looking to me. I would never, ever have worked in a building like that. It's just common sense that those things cannot be evacuated in a serious incident. This has to be looked into. We cannot allow the building industry to keep putting buildings up like that where we can't deal with it. Where it's so far beyond human scale that humans cannot deal with a tragedy when it takes place.

That's all I'm going to say.

MR. MURAD: This concludes the interview. The time now is 1003 hours. I would like to thank the lieutenant for this interview and this now concludes the interview at Engine 68 and Ladder 49.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT JOHN ZANAT

Interview Date: October 10, 2001

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

MR. MURAD: Today is October 10, 2001. The time is 0940 hours and my name is Murray Murad with Richard Dun of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I am conducting an interview with Lieutenant --

A. My name is Lieutenant John Zanat and I'm covering Engine 68.

MR. MURAD: The location of the interview is at 1160 Ogden Avenue in the borough of the Bronx.

Q. Lieutenant, can you give a scenario of what took place and the actions involved with Engine 68 were on that day?

A. We were assigned on the fifth alarm, special call on the fifth alarm. We reported first to Engine 35 in Manhattan. A number of engine companies from the Bronx were assigned there. When all of us arrived there, the dispatcher sent us down to the World Trade Center, to report to the command center on West End Avenue and Vesey Street.

Q. There is a map here. Just highlight the area where, if you recall, the apparatus -- where you actually responded to.

A. Okay. This is -- let's see. This is where we were told, West and Vesey, to report. This is where we were told the command center was.

Q. That was the command center?

A. Right. That's where we were told to report to. That's where I believe the command center was. Our apparatus was parked way back here, past Chambers Street. As we were coming down West End Avenue, I could see the first plane had hit. It must have been -- it looked like, to me, it looked like 4 or 5 stories.

Q. You are describing the north tower?

A. The north tower. There were flames coming out, smoke, everything. At that time I didn't even know that the south tower had come down already. It had come down previous to us even getting that close.

Q. What time do you estimate you arrived on the scene?

A. Between 10:00 and 10:30 sometime.

Q. Because I think the south tower went down at like 10:00.

A. We were on our way down when it came down. We were coming from Engine 35, which is 125th and Third Avenue. So we were on our way down when that tower probably came down. We didn't know it at the time. When we arrived on West End Avenue, we were coming south towards it, you could see the north tower, but not the south tower. I just thought it was obscured from the north tower being there and all the smoke and flames.

As far as anything being in the street, we didn't notice anything on West End. We parked way back here past Chambers Street and we were just walking up to the command post, because all the other apparatus were ahead of us. And we probably were right about somewhere between Murray and Vesey Street when we heard the rumbling of the north tower.

Once we heard that rumble, it was like, it's coming down. And everybody just turned around and hightailed it. We got probably up to about Chambers Street when the dust pile finally caught up to us and some like us went into a building right on the corner of Chambers Street and some just kept running straight.

Q. Was there any radio contact or were you told to switch to a certain channel?

A. Not at that time and if there was, I really wasn't paying attention. At this time, we thought we were running for our lives. We didn't know how close we were. We didn't know if anything from the tower, any debris from the tower it was going to be coming down hitting us.

Q. This is where you heard where the -- you guys were Engine 68?

A. No.

Q. I'm making an arrow just to --

A. All right. I was more concerned about my guys and what was happening when I was running as opposed to what was happening on the radio.

Q. After the second tower came down, what did you guys do?

A. I was regrouping. Actually, I had -- one of my men got separated. I was looking for him.

Q. Did you account for everybody?

A. Eventually -- Yes. I accounted for everybody. And then we were together. I got my guys together and told Chief Daly and he was telling us, "Okay. You guys were here during the first --

Actually, I thought it was the first collapse. I didn't know that the first building had come down. So I told them we were here for the first collapse.

He said, "Okay. Go sit on the side." Everybody was telling me, "Go sit on the side." They wouldn't let us do anything.

At the time a couple of my guys were kind of shaken up and probably wouldn't have been too good as far as doing any work anyway. At this time, when we were turning, I just told him we were turning around and running. It was feeling like we were running for our lives actually.

Q. I was there that day too. I was at 10/10 house. I heard the plane first coming over the firehouse.

A. Actually, I saw that on tape when the second plane hit. I seen it on tape here at the firehouse. I wasn't that excited over it. I didn't realize the magnitude of it.

Q. So the second tower came down. You guys had a safe location and -- do you remember the Chief's name at all or --

A. Everybody was running. Nobody knew what was going on.

MR. MURAD: I would like to thank Lieutenant Zanat for the interview. It is now 0945 hours and this concludes this portion of the interview. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

PARAMEDIC DANIEL RIVERA

Interview Date: October 10, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Today is October 10th, 2001. The time is 1520 hours. My name is Chris Bastedenbeck. I work for the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name, your rank, your title, where you're assigned.

PARAMEDIC RIVERA: Daniel Rivera, paramedic. I'm assigned to Battalion 31, Station 36 in Brooklyn.

Q. I'd just like you to give me the events of September 11th, 2001.

A. Okay. I basically started my -- we were gassing up at Tillary and Gold Street, which is two blocks away from the Brooklyn Bridge, when we heard the commotion over the PD radio that a plane just hit one of the towers.

We got on the bridge, because we were, again, two blocks away from there, and called the dispatcher over the radio -- actually over the phone cause the radio was really bad, and let them know that we were on our way to that call. She said 10-4, and she assigned us the job. That was two minutes after the first plane hit.

Q. The dispatcher that you spoke to was the Brooklyn dispatcher?

A. Yes, Brooklyn.

So it took us about four minutes to get to the scene, because we were really, really close. We parked in front of the south tower right in front of the building.

Q. When you say "Right in front of the building" --

A. Right here. Actually in front of Four World Trade Center and in back of the south tower building.

Q. Okay. So somewhere right in the complex?

A. Right in the front right here. Maybe about one yard away from the south tower building.

Q. So that was when you first arrived?

A. Right.

There was a lot of people running just every direction, and several people were hurt. At that time I was treating one patient who was on the ground with a laceration to his forehead, and actually I think it was a total of three patients, one asthmatic and I don't remember the other patient.

As I was treating the patient with the laceration and the asthmatic patient, that's when the second plane hit. All I heard was just a thunderous noise. As I looked up, I saw a ball of flames coming down. So everyone ran, the patients and everyone.

I ran not too far, a couple steps behind me, next to this doughnut cart, and hid under there until everything was clear and we went right back. Basically that's when I realized it was a terrorist attack.

Basically there were too many patients at the time, and you really couldn't triage anyone. It was just too dangerous. The scene wasn't safe. So we were just basically helping -- at that point I don't know what I'm talking about. Everyone pretty much split up.

Then I went and I started directing people from the building, from the south tower, to get out, because as they were coming out of the building, they were getting on their phones and talking and blocking the entrance. So we just said, "Let's go. You've got to go."

Q. Did you go into the building actually?

A. Yes, I went into the south tower building, but came right out right by the doors. I was trying to figure out why there wasn't too many people coming out. Like I said, there was a lot of people on their cell phones. I guess when they got to the lobby they thought it was safe and they decided to just get on their cell phones and talk and block the entrances. I was making sure that the entrances were clear so everyone can pass.

Q. The south tower, do you know if you were out on Liberty Street?

A. I don't remember.

Q. You don't remember. Okay.

A. I don't remember. You know what, I could have been on this side. I don't remember that.

Basically once I did that, I got together with my partner, and he moved the vehicle two blocks behind, somewhere around here somewhere, behind Four World Trade Center, I think.

Q. Like by Trinity?

A. Yeah, around here, somewhere around -- yeah, Liberty and around here somewhere, Trinity and Liberty around here, I think.

Once we saw all that happening, we needed to move the bus.

Q. Okay.

A. So what else happened?

Q. When you moved out the bus out to there, did you see anybody? Any EMS supervisors or firemen supervisors?

A. There was a supervisor, but he was pretty much overwhelmed, but don't I remember his name. He was pretty much overwhelmed. It wasn't textbook. It was basically everyone for themselves after the second explosion.

I saw Manny Delgado. I saw some other people. Like I said, it was crazy, really crazy.

Everything pretty much calmed down. Once the second plane hit, it wasn't too bad. People still running out of the building. Body parts, I think that was the worst. Every three seconds I was counting -- I counted about 26 bodies when I was there. Every three seconds somebody was jumping.

At that point we were triage -- we were what they call front line medics. There was a captain there -- I don't know his name -- from EMS. He was setting everyone up, saying the medics were going to go in first, the EMTs were going in behind us.

They didn't let us go in because it was dangerous. We were right in front of the building still. We had no idea the buildings were going to collapse. That was dangerous where we were anyway.

I think it took about 30 minutes or 40 minutes after the second collapse. After the second plane hit the south tower building, and then the building collapsed.

Q. When the building collapsed where were you?

A. I was right in front of the building, right in front.

Q. You were still --

A. Right, because what happened was that --

Q. -- up near Trinity and Liberty?

A. No, we moved the bus to Trinity, but we went back to right in front of south tower, because triage -- I'm not too sure if it was over here. I think it was over here somewhere. Triage was still right in front of the south tower building.

Q. So you parked your vehicle?

A. My partner parked the vehicle, so I'm not too sure exactly where he parked it. I know he parked it two blocks up.

Q. And then you both went back into the complex?

A. I think it was around here somewhere. Around here somewhere we had triage. I know it was either this building or this building. I think it was over here we were triaging or over here. I'm not too sure. This is the south tower; right? This is the first one that collapsed. Yeah.

So we were pretty much -- most of the workers were inside this building. Like I said, I don't know if it's Five World Trade Center or Four World Trade Center. Most of them were in the building because the chief or the captain said if you want you can stay inside that building. But I didn't feel safe, because I knew it was a terrorist attack, so I was scared. Every time you hear a plane, everyone would run. So I pretty much stood around here somewhere. I would see triage, but I was pretty much in between the two buildings.

Then that's when -- I kept on walking close to the south tower, and that's when that building collapsed.

Q. How did you know that it was coming down?

A. That noise. It was a noise.

Q. What did you hear? What did you see?

A. It was a frigging noise. At first I thought it was -- do you ever see professional demolition where they set the charges on certain floors and then you hear "Pop, pop, pop, pop, pop"? That's exactly what -- because I thought it was that. When I heard that frigging noise, that's when I saw the building coming down.

Q. What did you do?

A. Run. Most of the people ran into the building, but I was just too far from the building to run into this triage building. I basically just ran up this way, right up here. I don't know if I was here or I was here. But I ran up -- I was really close. I thought I was dead because it was just too close to the building. It was just too close. I said, this is I don't know how many stories.

I ran as fast as I could maybe half a block and then hid between a building that had some kind of indention like this, just hid like that. Actually I found a stretcher. I covered myself with a stretcher. That's when everything came down.

It was very dark for a few minutes. I think at that time my partner went under the fire truck, he was telling me. Everyone pretty much went on their own.

So once that cleared, I went right back and started pulling out people. Basically everyone was dead at that time with the first collapse.

Q. When that dust cleared and you went back, where did you go back to?

A. Right back to the triage, to triage.

Q. So in front of this building again?

A. Right, right here.

Q. In front of the World Trade Center, the northeast corner?

A. But there was nobody in there. Apparently everyone ran and came out through here. So I ran in here. There was basically no one around just a few firefighters in shock. Then the next thing you know, the next building collapsed. I was right in front of that building.

Q. So you were still over there when the second building collapsed?

A. Right, because I ran back. Not too bright of me, of course. I ran right back in, and I was right -- I could actually touch the building when it collapsed, the second time when it collapsed.

But again, I was prepared because I heard that same noise. It was like a waterfall noise. That's when I ran. As I ran in here, I didn't run too far. Again, it was like a little indention in the building where the same thing again. That's when I jumped, because it was just too close. That one got me pretty good.

Q. So you were outside. You never ran inside a building when either one of the towers collapsed?

A. No. The first, south tower -- after the second plane hit, just to clear the doorway, and then I came running back out. I didn't stay there too long.

Q. As the collapses were going on, you never --

A. No, I was thinking about going into a building, because as I saw the first building collapse, I noticed that the first three or four floors, they were still pretty good. That was on my mind, wow, they were still pretty good. So when the second building collapsed, I was thinking of standing between the doors of the second collapse. Something told me no, just ran back.

Again, I ran up against one of the buildings there. Once everything settled again, it was dark again. Deja vu, you know. But I was really lucky because that building had damage on top of me. Everything around me was destroyed. The fire truck in front of me was destroyed. Everything. I had to touch myself to see if I was alive.

Then I ran right back, because there wasn't much too run, and that's when you hear on the radio EMS people down, fire down. I ran there, and then I ran back over here, because I think they started another triage point around here somewhere, triage center. I ran back in there.

Then they said there was a lot of people trapped inside. That's when I right back in, after both buildings collapsed. There were several firefighters down there and battalion chiefs. I didn't know they were battalion chiefs, but they were when we pulled them out.

Q. So after the second building collapsed, you ended up over here by Trinity Street?

A. I was over here, right, and then I ran back over here somewhere. Because after the first collapse they pretty much set another triage center around here somewhere. I'm not too sure if it's over here. Then when the second building collapsed, I couldn't run far because it was right there. Then once everything settled I ran right back to the triage area.

Q. And the triage was, you think --

A. Somewhere, right.

Q. -- somewhere by Trinity, about midway through the --

A. Right, I'm not too -- right.

Then that's when we found out -- basically I was looking for my partner. I couldn't find my partner. When I went back in there, he was there. He needed some oxygen because he had stuff all over his face. Then that's when the radio call came in that we had EMS and fire trapped. I ran back in here, somewhere over there.

There was just no one around. It was very, very bad. You couldn't breathe too good. That's when I saw several firefighters who were out. So we pulled out about three firefighters that were covered in rubble.

Q. What happened to them; do you know?

A. One guy -- I can't forget him because he was pretty heavy. I'll probably get in trouble. He weighed 400 pounds. The worst part about this, when this building collapsed, it was very difficult to walk through all this.

Q. When the south tower came down?

A. The south tower, right. So when this building collapsed, pretty much everything here you couldn't recognize it anymore. So it took a while before you could actually walk from this point here all the way back here. This is where we had several trapped firefighters here.

Q. Over by --

A. Firefighters, right. There were lots of firefighters here. There was --

Q. By the customs building?

A. Right, but more -- right, right. Right around in between and Five World Trade Center. This tower here, you saw about 20 ESU guys on the second floor. Don't ask me how they got there. They were climbing down. So it looks like they were there when it collapsed. There was a ladder here. They were repelling down.

I was shocked because I tried to figure out how they made it, because they went from I think second or third floor and they were repelling.

Q. This is where you ended up staying the rest of the day?

A. No, this is crazy. You couldn't stay here, because you had -- everything was destroyed pretty much around here. Again, don't ask me why I went back in. It was really bad. I pretty much went back to this original spot here at Church and Trinity, I think. Then they directed us somewhere else around here.

Q. Who directed you? A supervisor?

A. Right, some supervisor.

Q. Do you know where you ended up?

A. By the water somewhere around here.

Q. By Battery Park?

A. Right, somewhere around here somewhere. Then they said that there was a gas leak and that was too dangerous, so we walked from -- we were here somewhere. Then they took us all the way to -- not Chambers. What's that place on the west side. Pier 94.

Q. That's where you ended up after all that stuff?

A. After all that.

Q. So you ended up at Pier 94.

A. Right.

Q. I forgot what I was going to ask you.

What happened to your vehicle?

A. We moved the vehicle. It had several holes. We had no idea it had several holes.

Q. So it ended up staying there and got damaged?

A. Staying there and then moving it, right. Basically every time it would collapse, my partner would go in the vehicle and move it. So that's why our vehicle was the only one pretty much that made it. There was another vehicle I think too.

One of the news channels -- I saw I think it was the south building somebody with a camera running out of the south tower building. You actually could see my vehicle right in front of the tower, right in front. But that's before the second collapse -- the second airplane hit. So we pretty much moved everything.

Q. You said at the end of the day you and your partner were together with your vehicle?

A. Yes. We picked up another ALS unit who lost their vehicle. So we had two ALS unit in one vehicle. We went to triage at that point at Pier 95 I think.

Q. Anything else you want to add to this?

A. I'm looking at the times here. It felt more like five minutes, the whole thing.

Q. That's the kind of stuff I want you to say, how you perceived everything.

A. Like I say, once I saw the second plane, then I knew, that's it. It wasn't by accident. Then I started thinking about the World Trade Center, how everyone lined up, the ambulances and the fire trucks and I thought, the terrorists know exactly how we lined up last time, and we're doing it again. We pretty much did, line up exactly the same way as the last time. That was my wording.

At that point honestly there was no one to rescue at the two buildings. The worst part was when a surgeon came up to me as we were traveling and he's like, "Guys, listen, medics, we've got four surgeons, 18 doctors, and they were setting up a triage point." I told him that's nice but I don't think anyone's going to come.

Because I was one of the few units that came out of there, and when we saw what happened -- that's why I left, because basically there was no one alive. We just pulled out several firefighters and that's it. We went back. There was nothing else to do. We were crazy to stay there, because you still had this thing about airplanes going to hit other buildings, and the other buildings around you weren't safe, because the building I was hiding next to, that one was leaning and I heard that one collapsed too.

It was bad. That's pretty much it.

Q. All right. You have nothing else you want to add; right?

A. No. I hope you can understand what I say because I talk kind of fast.

MS. BASTEDENBECK: This concludes the interview with paramedic --

PARAMEDIC RIVERA: Daniel Rivera.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT-P ANDRE CHERRINGTON

Interview Date: October 10, 2001

A. CHERRINGTON

A. CHERRINGTON

CHRISTINE BASTEDENBECK: Today's date is October 10, 2001. The time is 1712 hours. My name is Christine Bastedenbeck, I work with the New York City Fire Department. Today I'm conducting and interview with the following individual,

ANDRE CHERRINGTON: Paramedic Andre Cherrington, from battalion 31, unit 31 Victor, tour 2

Q: Okay, I'm just gonna ask you to tell me about the events of the morning of September 11th, 2001

A: Okay.

Q: In your words.

A: Alright, what happened was, I logged on. I started work at 8:30, and I was working with a gentleman who was doing overtime, so we were on our way to get some breakfast, and we looked to our left as we were pulling out of the garage, and we saw like a blast. But it didn't seem like anything major. But then we saw the World Trade Center like, catch on fire. So I turned on 1010 W.I.N.S. to see if there was any news and they said that a plane hit. So we were thinking maybe a small plane ran out of gas and hit the building. So we were like okay, let's call the dispatcher. The dispatcher had already started sending units. So we said well listen, 31 Victor, we are able to go. Can you send us? So they sent us over there. So we went on the Brooklyn Bridge, I was driving, we went on the Brooklyn bridge and I'm seeing people already coming across. So we got across over there, I'd say by city hall park and I saw a Lieutenant, Brynes from Battalion 57. And I was talking to him, he stopped us and people were coming to the ambulance. Nothing major, just people with minor cuts and scrapes. He had another unit there, so we triaged a couple of patients, then I requested to go more towards where it seemed more people would be hurt. I said to the Lieutenant, well I'm a paramedic, they probably might need me more in there. So he released us, said okay, find someone closer to the area, another lieutenant. So we went down Broadway, and as I'm driving down Broadway, everyone's stopping the ambulance and coming up to us and saying so-and-so is hurt, and so-and-so is having a heart attack. So we stopped by each patient and pulled out the triage tags. Everyone was basically a green tag, so we just kept triaging people en route to the World Trade Center. When we got there, we got there, I guess 9:00, 9:05, whatever, and I seen Phil Ashby there and he was doing triage from inside the building. We started triaging right away. I was taking care of a patient who was having a hard time breathing and my Partner was taking care of another patient. That patient jumped on, Metropolitan actually took that patient to the hospital. While Metropolitan took that person to the hospital, somebody came to my partner and said we have another person who's burnt up in the building.

Q: At this point, had the second plane crashed into the second building?

A: In all honesty, everything happened so fast, and it was so hectic that I wasn't really paying attention to it. It seemed like, you know, all the ashes were falling, it was just a big mess. Everybody was screaming, so I don't really know. I just know what was going on as far as me and my partner were concerned. So, when we went to the second building, I think it was the second building, and we seen a guy burnt up, downstairs in the lobby. So we carried him, and we brought him on our stretcher, it was parked by the ambulance. We put him in the stretcher, while we're taking care of him we're seeing everybody running out of the second building and it was just like everybody running, everybody trying to just get outta there. So it's like, okay, fine, we're taking care of this guy. We had to just cool down his wounds. He was burnt up, he had like 90% burns over his body. Like first, second degree burns. A couple third degree burns also. So we took care of him, got an IV in him, and were ready to transport him. The Lieutenant on the scene said don't take him yet cause there's more patients coming down. I waited for a few minutes, maybe five minutes. And it was like a cluster, so -- I just decided, you know, let me take this guy, cause he started having shortness of breath. I couldn't call for anything to stabilize him, cause there was a mess there, you know, before I intubated him. So I said, let me take him to the hospital. So as I was pulling off, I'd say about half a block away, we heard a big boom, and we seen a whole bunch of ashes, everything just started coming towards us. So I actually stopped the ambulance for thirty seconds and I looked. My partner was in the back he said stop the ambulance. So I stopped and I looked, and I seen all the debris coming. So I said close the bus. Cause at this point everyone started running towards the ambulance, I mean, you know, we had one critical patient there, so I said let me just get this guy to the hospital. So he closed the ambulance. And as I'm driving, people are running and debris is coming down. Debris is coming down and hitting the bus. I'm just driving, driving, I drove up a one-way, I think it was Second Avenue. One of those major avenues. And I drove halfway up to Cornell, and then I got on the right way, and I drove the rest of the way up to Cornell. When we got to Cornell, I think I gave a notification, when I got to Cornell, they immediately took the patient in and they intubated the patient. As I was leaving they said the second building fell. When the second building fell, I said well, we gotta get back there. So we went back there, where they told us to go to Battery Park triage. So we went to Battery Park. When we went there now, they said that there was a gas leak. So I had the ambulance parked, and I was actually on the other side of the street, they said that there's a gas leak, get outta there. I didn't have enough time to jump into the ambulance, so I just started going towards--with the crowd, running more or less until there was a bus that me and my partner jumped in and we went to Pier 94. When we got to Pier 94, it seemed like it was a false alarm.

Q: Do you know whos vehicle it was you jumped into?

A: My partner knew who it was, but I think they were from Manhattan. I'd never seen the guy before.

Q: Was it a Fire Department vehicle?

A: It was EMS, yeah, EMS vehicle.

Q: Who was your partner that day?

A: Suarez, he's a new paramedic. And we jumped in that ambulance, and whoever the guy was drove all the way to Pier 94. All three of us were in the front. When we got there, we found out that it was more or less a false alarm, so I walked back towards my vehicle, but they wouldn't let us over there. By the time I got over there the vehicle was already gone. So I said, oh well, you know. So I jumped in with 31 Young, who is Paramedic Smiley and Paramedic Rivera. And basically I stayed with them all day, and what we did is we went back towards City Hall Park to see if anyone was needing triage, if anybody needed us. But by then they already had a major triage center set up, so nobody needed us. We were trying to go where we were needed. Cause you know, we didn't really have anybody really telling us what to do over the airway so, we finally wound up on the backside of BMCC where we set up a triage center, us and a couple BLS. Finally some lieutenants came over and they said okay, you guys stay over here, just in case, cause one of the buildings was on fire. The last building to fall was on fire. He said it might drop. So we waited there to see if anything was going to happen. The only thing that happened was that the building dropped. We waited to see if anybody was hurt, but everybody seemed to be evacuated, everything was fine. So from there, we stayed there for a few hours. You know, just triaging, waiting. And after that, it seemed like it was okay. So another lieutenant came there and said well, they might need some paramedics at Ground Zero. They were saying something about there were amputated patients there who, once they get them out of the rubble, they're gonna need us to start lines, whatever and get them to the nearest hospital. So we went back to Ground Zero. There we reported to another Lieutenant who I really, I really didn't keep any names. But I know that it was really hectic over there. So we reported there, all four paramedics, and we were like, okay, we're here and we're ready to help if anybody needs any help from us. And we basically just stood there, and what we did there was, if anybody got cut…it was minor triage more or less. The seemed to have everything under control there. So basically, we just stayed there waiting, just on stand-by. We pulled our ambulance into their little bay, into their bay, and we just waited there. But around 2:30, you know, I realized there's nothing we can really do here. There's nothing going on here, it was more like a BLS thing, you know, minor cuts, abrasions, whatever. By then, my partner already worked over 30 hours so he was really tired. So I talked to the lieutenant, I said, you know, we're really not needed here. I've been here since 8:30 this morning, you know, can you release us? So basically…

Q: This is 2:30 in the morning?

A: 2:30 in the morning, yeah. So basically after that, we seen that there's nothing that we could do, so he released us and we came back to Brooklyn. That was it. So you know, that day I thank my lucky stars. Cause you know, I think that if I would have actually waited around for more patients, I think instead of seeing the rubble coming towards me and I'm booking, I think the rubble would've actually hit the bus with the guy in there. I think it would have been a very bad situation. So for some reason I said, you know, I'm not staying, I'm leaving. It was kind of like a free-for-all, because, you know, what happened was, when we got there, we thought everything was okay, everything is calm. Maybe the little plane hit and it's causing all this. But I guess when the second plane hit, that's when all hell broke loose. And that's when everybody realized, you know, nothing's calm. Everything just went crazy after that. I mean, I did what I had to do, I took one patient, we took care of it and got him to the hospital. And you know, I did say, well I saved one person. I know I did save one person, and that's all that matters. I was there for X Amount of hours and I did one good thing. And my partner too.

Q: Everything you did was good.

A: Well, yeah. I mean, you know, everything I did was good. But I feel good that I did get that guy to the hospital. As a matter of fact, I looked at the ACR and the guy lived not far from where I lived. So I think that two days later I went over to the address and I thought his wife was there, but it was his mother. And his mother happens to be a nurse at Methodist Hospital. I approached here. Because I heard on the news that they said, well we don't know what's going on. A lot of family members, they don't know what's going on with the people in the building. So I said, let me go over there and let her know where her son is, where her husband is (I thought it was his wife.) When I got there, it was the mother. I told her, this is where your son is, this is the condition that he was in. And she was very happy about it, you know she was real happy. And I felt good too, you know, I felt good. Everything worked out. He was pretty bad though, he was real bad. But you know, I never really contacted them again. Maybe one day when everything calms down, hopefully I'll hear that he's still alive and that he's coming out of the hospital, you know? But it was a situation, and at the time, you know, you're not really thinking about it, you know you're just like okay, let me just do what I have to do. And you know, I'm pretty much like, I was in the Army, so I pretty much know how to keep my cool. And the triage also helped a lot. Cause I think if I didn't know that, I probably would have had everybody on my bus. Because everybody had the M.I. or seizures, but it was just, everyone was in shock. They couldn't believe it, you know? So it's like, let me just triage this one, triage, this one, you have an M.I.? Have you had a history before? You take any medicine? No, okay, you get a green tag. And that's all it was. But as we started getting more towards it, it started getting more serious. Then when we got that guy, that guy saved my life too. That's the main thing I tell everybody. I might have saved his life, but he definitely saved me and my partners' life. That's what me and my partner say. It was just a blessing, you know? You know, that's it. That's all I got to say. Yeah, that's it.

A: This concludes my interview with Paramedic Andre Cherrington. The time now is 1725 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT JUAN RIOS

Interview Date: October 10, 2001

JUAN RIOS

CHRISTINE BASTEDENBECK: Today is October 10, 2001. The time is 1430 hours. My name is Christine Bastedenbeck. I work for the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview at Battalion 31, EMS with the following individual…

JUAN RIOS: EMT Juan Rios.

Q: Please state your rank and where you're assigned.

A: EMT, I'm assigned to Battalion 31, Unit 31 David, tour two.

Q: Okay, Mr. Rios, just give us your account of the events of September 11th. You were working that day?

A: Yeah, I was working with my partner, David Blacksburn. We drove up, you know, every morning we go under the Brooklyn bridge and we, you know, we read our newspaper. In front of us, there was a medic unit from Long Island College, so, you know, they look and they saw a plane going into the World Trade Center. On the north side I think it was. Then they make a U-turn, they tell me and my partner, you know, a plane just went inside the World Trade Center, come on, let's go. So we were on the radio, and we're telling them, you know, we're going over there. So we went, we went on the Brooklyn Bridge. We saw, you know, the fire, smoke and everywhere people screaming. So we park on the South Side, on Liberty.

Q: You parked your vehicle at…?

A: At Liberty.

Q: Liberty and what intersection?

A: I think it was West End and Washington.

Q: Okay.

A: And then, when the second plane hit, debris started to fall down, so…

Q: Okay, when you got there and stopped at Washington and Liberty, what was happening around you?

A: People screaming, people just, it was total chaos. People were screaming, debris was falling, I looked up and I saw people just throwing themselves out of the buildings. They were landing on roofs. I heard they were landing on people, and it was just total chaos.

Q: Okay, did you, when you got there, did you report to any supervisor or…?

A: There was a Lieutenant, but I didn't…it was total chaos that everyone was just almost doing their own thing. But, I just saw one Lieutenant there.

Q: Okay, did he approach you, or did you approach him?

A: He approached us and we had a patient in back, and um…

Q: Where did you get the patient from?

A: She ran into us. She was having like, an anxiety attack.

Q: Okay.

A: So we gave her, you know, oxygen and shit.

Q: That was from the World Trade Center?

A: Yeah. So she, she just calmed down. She was on the bus, in the ambulance. Then when the second plane hit, the Lieutenant told us to go to Washington and Albany, which is around the corner. We parked with at least 20 ambulances. So we just went there, we were waiting for people to come so we could take them to the hospital, but nobody was coming.

Q: Okay, what happened to the original patient that you had?

A: When the second one hit, you know, we heard like a loud explosion and debris was coming down. Everyone was like get out, get out and she got scared, she ran out of the bus, and I don't know where she went. We moved the bus, and they told us to park them in two lines, at least ten ambulances in each line. I was in the back waiting, you know, so we could wait for patients and I was hooking up the regulator to the O-2, when I hear people screaming and a loud explosion, and I heard like "sssssssss…" the dust like "sssssssss…" So I come out of the bus, and I look and I see a big cloud of dust and debris coming from the glass… through the condominium, the other building, and like, glass falling. So I just started to run, everybody ran, so I just ran. Our bus, it got totaled.

JUAN RIOS

Yeah, like broken windows, the back was full with debris and dust, other peoples' equipment, they wouldn't even know. So, I just ran to Battery Park with everybody. It was me, my partner, and another voluntary medic, and three or two cops.

Q: Do you know any of their names?

A: No, I don't know any of their names.

Q: Just, the only person you knew was your partner?

A: Yeah. So, we just ran, ran as far…you know, when the second one…we heard it, and more dust came. Not debris, just smoke. All we heard was "Sssssssss…" like a "Sssss" sound. We ran, we ran at least a mile away from the ferry. But there was two chiefs, I don't know their names?

Q: Were they EMS chiefs?

A: EMS chiefs.

Q: Okay.

A: Out of nowhere I seen an ambulance coming. A guy driving with two people in the back. The chief got on the radio asking for boats to come so we could take the people to Jersey City. Whoever had to be treated we treated on the ambulance. Another, I think it was like a, not an ambulance, but another like, van with supplies came over. They brought you know, oxygen, and a whole bunch of stuff.

Q: Okay, was that a fire department vehicle?

A: Yeah, a fire department vehicle.

Q: Was it in like an LSU or something?

A: No, just EMS.

Q: Okay, you don't know? Just a van with all kinds of equipment?

A: Yeah, right, it came with a Lieutenant. Like two Lieutenants and…

Q: And where was that?

JUAN RIOS

A: Battery Park. You know, we treated many people just with asthma. We gave them Albuterol, and we just put them on the boat to Jersey City. After we cleared that up, they had another sector in the ferry, there were a whole bunch of people there.

Q: So basically you ended up at like a triage area in Battery Park?

A: We made our own triage area in Battery Park. After we finished everything, we went to the ferry.

Q: Okay, did you sustain any injuries that day?

A: No, no.

Q: Other than being totally covered in…

A: Covered with um, dirt and…

Q: Okay, you don't have asthma or anything?

A: No, I don't have asthma.

Q: Okay, so you ended up treating patients and…?

A: There were a whole bunch of people who had, you know, the carts. They had water, ice cream, so they were generous enough to give us, they offered that we could take whatever we wanted to take. There were giving people water, soda, ice cream, pretzels, potato chips. They said, whatever you need just take from here.

Q: At any time did you get separated from your partner?

A: No.

Q: Okay, anything else you want to add to your story?

A: It was…I'm never gonna forget the experience, you know? I still think about it, cause I went back on Friday to do overtime.

Q: This past Friday?

A: Yeah, and I was in the same spot I was in when it happened. I saw the windows of the condominium, they were all damaged, you know. Say I just stood there, you never know what could have happened. You know I could just, you know, I could've died. So it just, it brought a lot of memories back, you know? You know, just the bus, in the back got totaled, other people's equipment in there covered with dust and all the broken glass. Cause I was debating should I stay in the back or just run? I saw everybody run, so I ran. I just started. You know, I started at the academy in December of 2000, I just came into the field in February. To have eight months on the job and to see this…

Q: Yeah, something that you never want to see again, I'm sure. Okay Juan, thank you very much. This concludes the interview with EMT Juan Rios, the time now is 1439 hours.

File No. 9110038

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT DANIEL WHITMAN

Interview Date: October 10, 2001

D. WHITMAN

PAUL RADENBERG: The time is 1441 hours, and this is Paul Radenberg with the Fire Department, City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with…

DANIEL WHITMAN: Dan Whitman, Battalion 31, shield number 5300, EMS FDNY.

Q: Okay, Mr. Whitman is an Emergency Medical Technician. We are conducting this interview regarding the events of September 11,2001 at EMS Battalion 51.

A: 31.

Q: Correction, 31. Okay, start basically, with, you know, making your way down to the Trade Center. You were off duty?

A: I was off duty, I made my way down to Ground Zero. I was directed by Police Officers and Traffic Officers to stop by the Battalion station, cause they wouldn't let me walk all the way down to Ground Zero originally. And I was down at the battalion station, I think it was on Warren Street. One of those cross streets by Ground Zero. They just had a plethora of people there. People from all over the Eastern Seaboard. They had medics from Connecticut and tons of people down there, there was lots of people there. I was directed to go to South Ferry. There at South Ferry, it had even more people with very little patience. I was down there for a significant amount of time. Then I was directed down to Ground Zero to treat people. There were firefighters right on site with saline and Visene for our eyes. And, I don't know, I spent about 15 hours there.

D. WHITMAN

Q: Okay, the first station that you stopped at, that was a temporary aid station?

A: Yes.

Q: When you were on your way down there, and that was somewhere around Warren Street, right?

A: Warren Street, right. Warren Street if I recall.

Q: Okay, do you remember who sent you from Warren Street to South Ferry?

A: I couldn't tell you, all I know is that they outranked me.

Q: Was it a fire officer, EMS?

A: It was EMS. He was wearing a blue jacket, it looked like an EMS coat. So I guess it was EMS.

Q: Okay, and then, when you got down to South Ferry, who sent you up from South Ferry?

A: It's not that I was sent up, I couldn't go home anyway, so I got released there, and that's where I spent the majority of my time, at South Ferry. I signed off that I was leaving. I was going through, I got to Ground Zero, and there I was directed to treat the patients with Visene and saline, just to clear their eyes, the firefighters.

Q: Who gave you that direction? Do you remember?

A: Um, I think it was a doctor down there. There was a doctor down there, cause the firefighters were just coming up with the same thing, stuff in their eyes. So they just said we should have people down there, I talked to the medics down there, the army guys, I went down with them. The chief medical officer on scene told us all to go back. I don't know who he was. He was in a firefighter outfit. So after that I was on about my 15th hour, I was getting tired. I walked all the way down from the Bronx to get there. That's about when I went home.

Q: Do you remember seeing any EMS personnel that you recognized that had come in from home in civilian clothes, rather than in uniform?

A: None that I can recall like that. The only one that I did see was Gary Smiley, that I know by name and face. He had a bunch of people in his ambulance with him who I could tell you who they were by face, but by name I couldn't really help you out. But Gary Smiley's the one I really know by name and face.

Q: Okay, did, while you were down there, what point in the job do you remember getting down there? Were you down there between the plane impact and the towers coming down?

A: As the tower was coming down, the second tower.

Q: As the second tower came down?

A: Yes, that's when I got down there.

Q: Do you remember where you were down there when the second tower came down?

D. WHITMAN

A: I was a couple of blocks away. I was close enough for the cloud of smoke to come over me, but, I didn't really feel the direct debris. So three blocks maybe.

Q: So, still north of the trade center?

A: I think so.

Q: Okay, and, you did say before when we were talking that you made your way down with a marine?

A: Yes. From… there was an armory. And I heard over 1010 WINS that all military personnel report to the nearest armory. I'm in the military, so I went over there. And when I got there, that's when the second plane hit. I was released from there because it was a National Guard Unit, and I'm a Reserve Unit. So the Marine and I, we know each other, we decided to go down to Ground Zero, make our way down there.

Q: You don't remember his name by chance?

A: Uh, no. I can tell you what he looks like. Hahaha.

Q: Okay, in your travel from the first aid station up on Warren Street, down to South Ferry, how did you make that trip? That was on foot or…?

A: On foot, yeah.

Q: It was walking?

A: Yeah, actually walking, and maybe 3 or 4 blocks we got picked up by Long Island College, they have this ambulance they call the "Beast." It's just a really big ambulance and awkward looking. They picked us up for a couple blocks. Me, the Marine, a doctor, and 2 nurses. They picked us all up, cause we were all travelling down together. Then they took them down to South Ferry, and we got dropped off at the aid station on Warren. Around that area. So it's about two or three blocks.

Q: Okay, so really other than Gary Smiley, no other EMS names that you recognize?

A: The faces I recognize, not the names

Q: Okay, any other thoughts or impressions on the job? Anything that makes it stand out?

A: Well, an event that kind of stands out, it was weird to me for the Chief Medical Officer to tell me and the other people treating the firefighters on site when they were just walking up to get their eyes washed out, it's just a simple saline solution to wash their eyes out to continue working, for them to get sent all the way up there when you could have people on site. I don't know, he was under a lot of stress, I'm not knocking what he did, but that didn't make sense to me. It was a little chaotic, but we weren't prepared for a situation like this, there's nothing you can really say, but that would be my only thing.

Q: Okay, just to clarify it a little bit, you were at the Warren Street station when the second tower came down?

A: No, I was on my way to Warren Street.

D. WHITMAN

Q: You were on your way? Still on your way?

A: Yeah, I was only a few blocks away and the smoke cloud came through. First I saw people running, and then I saw the cloud behind them. And that's when I started running.

Q: Everybody was running…

A: But it was, I don't know….oh, another thing that I found odd about this, it's a sad comparison…but it was like a video game. Cause every once in a while you'd walk a couple blocks, and on the corner, covered in debris and soot, if you didn't walk into it, there was supplies. Like you know, there was supplies, different stations, different areas, just sitting there. No one knew what they were. Like, pallets of water, but nobody knew they were there. You know? Nobody knew. You had to like, kick off the dirt, or pick up stuff. That's the only thing I found weird, that was kind of weird. Other than that, that's it I guess.

A: Okay, the time is now 1450 hours, interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

PARAMEDIC GARY SMILEY

Interview Date: October 10, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. TAMBASCO: Today is October 10. The time is 1435 hours. My name is Mike Tambasco. I'm an investigator assigned to the World Trade Center Task Force. I'm currently at EMS Battalion 31, conducting an interview with Paramedic Gary Smiley into the events of September 11 at the World Trade Center.

Q. Gary, do me a favor. Give me your name, rank and the unit that you were on and then feel free.

A. Gary Smiley, Paramedic, Battalion 31. That day I was working 31 Young Tour 2, 7 o'clock to 3:00. I heard the initial reports over the radio and we were assigned to the job. We were at Engine 207 at the time getting gas on over on Tillary Street. We started to respond. We went over the Brooklyn Bridge. From the Brooklyn Bridge you could already see the tower burning. It hit you in your mind that this was going to be bad.

We initially responded in to lower Manhattan and ended up responding to Church Street in front of 5 World Trade Center. The only reason I think that is because in 1993 when I responded to that bombing, that's where the initial staging was.

When we pulled up there were two other ambulances there that arrived simultaneously. I took command of those two and informed them to set up triage area across the street on the far side of Church, which from the map would be by St. Pauls cemetery. We got our equipment out. I started to give them direction. The helmets, coats and to get their equipment out. My partner Danny Rivera proceeded on the sidewalk towards the front of 5 World Trade Center because there were people coming out of the building that were hurt and they seemed to be milling around the front doors, so he was giving them instructions to get out of the building and to come off of the plaza and come across Church Street.

Several people came out and they stumbled. He grabbed a couple. As I was coming across the street, across Church Street, is when the second plane hit the south tower, at that point we ran across the street going towards St. Pauls and there was a fire engine on the corner of that corner of Vesey. We hid behind the fire engine and we got hit with a lot of debris.

It took I don't know how long for that to stop. I know it was hot because we all were -- I remember Danny looking at me and saying you are like red as a beet, because we probably got flash burns from the fireball.

At that point there was everybody was running around crazy. A lot of people were coming up to us screaming and I didn't see that many people injured at that time. There was a lot of bodies, bodies came out of the sky at that point. In fact we were hit with debris, which turned out to be human remains.

I remember a gentleman coming up to us with a leg screaming to help him. It wasn't his leg. It was somebody else's leg. We got back in the vehicles and we moved them up Vesey going towards Broadway. I pulled up on the sidewalk. There was like a Cabrini unit there and another EMS unit.

At that point we started to get a lot of hysterical people, a lot of patients. I remember one patient going by us that was already dead that they had on the scoop, that the EMTs had stopped us and asked us and we had said that they were already dead. The guy was basically decapitated.

At that point I made a decision. I told Danny I said, I think the best bet would be to go to West and Vesey, because that's where -- that was the main staging area or the last one. So we thought that would be a good idea, so we took the two units that were with us and came around Broadway down Vesey past 5 and 6.

There was a lot of debris in the street. There was a lot of burning debris in the street. I didn't see many people at that point. There wasn't anybody to stop and help. There was just a lot of emergency vehicles apparently coming down that way. We ended up -- we pulled into Vesey and West. There seemed to be a lot of fire engines already staged there. We met up with Captain Pincus and Chief Goldfarb.

We parked the truck. We were the second vehicle in off of West and Vesey. There was a Citywide ambulance that was the first one, catty corner to the second. Equipment was taken out and they had staged us in the front of 3 World Financial Center on the upper steps of it. There was other units on the lower steps, which was directly in front of 6 and off at the angle of the north tower.

At that point a lot of people were just standing around, I remember Manny Delgado was there, Dr. Cherson, a number of volunteers came up to us asking if they could help. About six or seven EMTs.

They told me to start taking down names and numbers so I started taking down their names and their EMT numbers just to keep track of them. At that point nobody knew what was going on.

There was about -- I think there was 3 ALS units and 7 BLS units. Captain Pincus asked for a BLS and ALS unit that he could designate as fast units to go into the lobby. Me and Danny volunteered. Another BLS crew volunteered. They were just waiting for a final preparation to know when we were going to make it across the street.

At that point, I met up with a couple of other guys from our Battalion who also came down to stage there. EMT Felton, Sean Cunniffe. I remember Felton because we started to notice people coming off the building, coming off the north tower and at first we didn't know what was going on, and then you could see that they were jumping. In fact I had to actually hold Felton because he wanted to run across the street and catch them. He wanted -- he was hysterical and he just wanted to catch them. I told him that he couldn't do that. They were hitting the ground, of course, exploding. It was horrible. We must have -- we probably saw about a dozen people jump.

At that point they took everybody's -- several people coming around taking everybody's name and badge numbers and what units they were, so they knew who was there. There were a slew of vehicles coming in that had already arrived on West Street, private ambulances, our units, proprietary units.

Then we went back. We had gone down to the bottom steps and they went back up the top steps. We were standing by the stretcher. In fact, I think because they were getting ready to send me and Danny in to the forward triage area when the first tower, which would be the south tower, somebody yelled it was collapsing.

We ran up the steps and into the AMEX building, which would be 3 World Financial Center. All the equipment was left, we just dropped everything and we ran. Debris came down, but from that tower, the lobby held, at least the windows held. We were covered with debris but we were in the lobby. Then we heard pounding on the glass for some of the guys that didn't make it in the lobby, so we broke out the windows to the front of 3, American Express building. We got those guys into the lobby.

Chief Carrasquillo was there too. He ended up -- he started taking a head count and he told me to take a head count. There was a lot of people running around that had really -- they were losing it. It was very understandable.

I grabbed as much equipment as I could from the outside and a couple of the other guys and we set up in the back part of the lobby, BLS on one side and ALS on the other side, figuring that we would be getting a lot of patients. The air was not too bad in there, and that's what we basically did. We figured we would get a large influx of people coming in at that point. Nobody started coming in.

At that point Chief Goldfarb said that he smelled gas. Nobody smelled gas except Chief Goldfarb. Chief Goldfarb smelling gas saved about 40 people, because we moved through the back lobby and out the side entrance on to the farther end of Vesey Street going towards North End Avenue.

That's when we started to hear the radio transmissions of Maydays. On our radios we heard EMS Mayday. I knew over Chief Carrasquillo's radio I was hearing FD Maydays. This went on for 5 minutes straight. We heard the units calling, we heard our units, we heard 1 Mary, 6 Mary, 6 Adam.

We asked Captain Pincus about after 5 minutes, we said what are we going to do here. He said I can't force you to go. We said well, we want to go. So me, Danny and another medic who works for us but he was working for New York Hospital that day. I don't know his last name. He works at New York, Carlos.

Q. Do you remember, his first name is Carlos?

A. Yes. He said if you want to go find these guys, we can. It didn't seem like at that point there was really, besides our group, there was nobody else there, at least that was alive. So we took trauma bags and started off and our scoop stretchers off and started off walking back down Vesey and we made the turn on to West Street. We passed the building with the 3, American Express building.

I remember seeing in front of the collapse unit for Rescue 3 there were 3 Battalion Chiefs that were there and I asked the Battalion Chief, did you see any of the guys. I said we can't see anybody. We don't know where they are calling for help for. That was the only firemen I saw. I didn't see anybody else. I don't know how far down, we didn't get too much farther down West Street luckily.

Q. Going south?

A. South, going towards the north pedestrian bridge, when you heard a rumble. That's when you looked up and you saw the second tower coming down. There was no communication at that point. It was -- I just remember turning and running. I know Danny, we eventually found out where everybody ran to, the 3 of us. But I never saw the two other Battalion Chiefs again. I know my partner ended up dragging the one that was alive out.

I ended up running back up the steps towards 3. I made it right to the corner and got knocked down by the blast. I guess it was the gush of wind. I got hit in the back with some cement and I had just made it around the first ambulance and I dove under my truck, which was vehicle 305. That's what a little voice in my head told me to do. I crawled underneath the ambulance and that's where I was for about the next 15 minutes. I remember a lot of debris hitting the truck and I couldn't breathe and I couldn't see.

I don't know how long that went on for. When it sounded as if the debris stopped, I couldn't -- the sides were already covered as if it had snowed, so I started to dig and I cleared enough away that I could see a glow, which I knew was not -- which was fire, because there was fires burning around the vehicles. So I decided it was better to get out and try and make it than burn to death.

So I crawled out from under there and you couldn't see still. I just remembered the same side of the truck I came out of, so I figured if I point myself in the direction I will be going away from the towers. So I just started crawling and I got up and I started walking. You still couldn't see. It was as if you had your head in a sack. I couldn't breathe, I couldn't see.

I tried calling for Danny. Every time I took a deep breath it was just worse. At that point I had dropped the lantern I had. The equipment was gone. I wasn't concerned too much about that. I didn't notice at the time that I had injuries to my leg and stuff like that. I just tried -- my only thought at that point was to get out of there.

I ended up walking across Vesey into a construction area that is in between North End Avenue and the West Side Highway. I found a chain link fence that I bumped into that I decided let me follow the fence and see where it goes. At least I can hold on to something. I was going to climb over the fence and decided just go alongside it. I went alongside the fence for a while. It seemed like forever.

Then I encountered a fireman who was also disoriented. I don't know who he is. I don't remember his name. I don't remember what company. We walked together along the fence. We still couldn't see. We made it around the side of the fence, then we started hearing voices calling, anybody out there. We started -- we just followed the natural turn of the fence and we ended up from what they tell me somewhere near North End Avenue there was a salad bar that was across from 4 Merrill Lynch -- the Merrill Lynch building and there was about seven or eight cops in there, Port Authority guys, a couple of firemen.

The owner and his daughter or his wife, they dragged us in there. Everybody -- the cloud was clearing a little, but there was a lot of fire around there. The parked cars that had been parked there were all on fire and which wasn't on fire was exploding. We didn't know at that point. I know that one of the police officers said that he thought that they were bombs and maybe they rigged them to blow up. Just secondary explosions. We didn't know what to do.

We went towards the back of the restaurant, there was a couple of firemen got in there. One fireman yelling let's get the gas off. So he went into the kitchen area and they killed the gas. They had a couple of hoses that had these big industrial sinks, so we started hosing each other off because the stuff was burning you. I guess it was just because the ash was so hot.

Stayed in there for about 20 minutes. The explosions outside were too much, so we decided to get out of there and we ended up coming out of there and we ended up on North End Avenue. They had set up a field hospital in I don't know what building. They dragged us in there for a while. Then there was a report of a gas leak in there so I decided it would be better if I exit. There were people that were getting treated. They could walk, basically ran out of there. Everybody ran out of there.

It must have been about 50 of us at that point. People started saying let's get some of the vehicles, you know. We had thought at that point that we need something to get out of there. So Emergency Services, I know there was about six or seven ESU cops and they basically told us that they are going to stay in front of us and I don't know what they thought. I think they kind of thought that there were ground troops coming in to kill us next. At least that seemed to be -- they were going to keep us from whatever was coming. It was crazy, people thought that there was -- they were going to bomb everything.

People were running around. FBI people saying that there were bombs in different parks and just running from one area to the next. I remember seeing Captain Rivera there from Manhattan -- from the Bronx. He is now in Queens, who I remember we got to the point where we were actually running out of places to go. We were going to go into the water. I said maybe we should take off our stuff and go into the ocean. We didn't know where else to go.

Because there was, every building was apparently -- the police said there was gas leaks and they said they were going to blow up and we had no place else to go. Somebody actually -- a couple of guys ran back down Vesey and got into some of the vehicles, because mine had pulled up. We had about seven or eight ambulances at that point and a couple of Emergency Services cars.

Basically we didn't do much for a little while. There was not much to do. We were kind of trapped back there. We couldn't get out. I don't remember how we actually got out of there and who directed us to get out of there. We ended up -- I don't know how we ended up -- we ended up on Greenwich Street I guess, like an hour later. About 7 units ended up on Greenwich and Duane and I remember meeting Captain, no, Chief Wells there. He asked me was the Lieutenant with us. I said no, he told me I was a senior guy and he was going to take over that area so we set up on Greenwich Street.

They had about 5 or 6 doctors and they had about 6 ambulances. We spent the better part of I think 6 or 7 hours there doing absolutely nothing until 7 collapsed. We still did nothing because there was no patients. Everybody is still -- there is a lot of trouble breathing. You just kind of ignored it. I knew my leg was bleeding, I had some pretty big cuts on my leg, but I really didn't -- I just bandaged it up. I don't think -- you kind of knew that there was -- you were going to be needed. They said that a lot of people were dead so we didn't even know how many were left.

From there we were asked to respond to the Millennium Hotel later on in the nighttime by Lieutenant Jack Sullivan. One of the volunteers said that they had reports of patients that they found in the Millennium. So we volunteered to go there, so we took the truck around to the Millennium. I remember were driving through the streets, seeing Chief Gombo walking with Russ Terranova and we continued going down towards the Millennium. Ended up not finding anybody at the Millennium.

We brought our trucks around to One Liberty Plaza. We worked there for the next 5 or 6 hours until we were relieved at about 2:00 in the morning. We worked inside that field hospital just taking care of what was coming in.

Throughout the night you couldn't see. You had to wash your eyes out every 5 to 10 minutes. It was pretty blinding. I guess the adrenaline kept going through the whole time, because even at Liberty Plaza there were several times when you just saw the whole block start running. Everybody -- we must have ran up and down that street 5 or 6 times because stuff was coming off the buildings and there were more collapses.

It wasn't till I got released and starting coming back, I guess when we started to like settle down a little bit. By the time I got back to Brooklyn, I couldn't breathe at all. That's when they took me over to Long Island College Hospital. I was admitted for severe respiratory distress, severe smoke inhalation. I had developed (inaudible). They said not so much from being trapped but from the severe dehydration from the dust. I guess from the heat, because it was so hot and you didn't take your turnout coat off and your helmet didn't come off your head, because you were afraid you were going to get hit with something.

I was admitted there and I spent up until Friday in the hospital. I was released. That's about it. I went back down Friday night on my own time to dig with some guys from New York Hospital, because I just felt that I needed to pitch in and see what there was. That about covers the events the way it was.

Q. Gary, unless there is anything else you can think of or want to add to it --

A. Just looking at the questions and stuff, I don't think anybody was intentionally put in any harm's way. There was a lot of volunteers coming up to you, some that I never saw again. I hope to God they didn't get killed, but it seems as if there was a tremendous amount of EMTs that were coming out of nowhere. Not our people, just volunteer EMTs. I don't know what happened to them.

There was no warning when the buildings came down. Even after the first collapse you really didn't even have an inclination that the second tower was going to come down. I don't think anybody was aware. The immediate people that I was with during the collapse, you know, I met up with Danny about half an hour, 45 minutes later. More like an hour later.

Danny had hid in the corner of the AMEX building and wedged himself in by one of the window ledges and he flattened himself out and he found some stretchers and put them on top of himself. That's what cushioned the debris from killing him.

That was it. I know the other medic that was with us got out as well. He ended up running into the lobby and continued in the lobby, because the lobby was crushed. That's what I said before about Goldfarb and the smell of gas. Because from what I have seen of the building, we wouldn't fare too well staying in that lobby. We probably would have all been crushed.

I didn't see anybody that was missing, that are still missing. I guess that about covers it for now. I'm sure if you ask me tomorrow I would have about 500 more things to say. I'm sure you don't want to have a dissertation on my state of mind. I won't give it to you.

Q. All right, if there is anything else that you want to add later on, that's not a problem. We will get it in there.

A. You know, it was just the thing that struck us as strange when we first pulled up was the small amount of people that were coming out of the building. Remember in '93 when we pulled up into the same spot there was a thousand people coming out of that building. When we pulled out there was maybe 100. They were milling in the lobby. I remember we had to scream at them to get out of the lobby and to come across the street.

There were a lot of people who finally listened to us. Thank God, because I'm sure they are still alive today because of that. That was one of the things that really stood out. Where are they? Then of course, after the first one collapsed, it was basically nobody was around. You know, I think everybody you know that was in my immediate group, everybody really stuck together and I got to give them a lot of credit.

I give Goldfarb, Carrasquillo, and Jace Pincus, Captain Pincus, a lot of credit. They kept their heads pretty well. Nothing on their part endangered us at all. Everything that we did we volunteered to do.

I'm sure they were -- you know, they were acting in good faith. Timing was very good for them. It was basically the only thing that stood in the way of us getting killed. Just a couple of minutes.

So that was about it.

MR. TAMBASCO: I thank you. The interview is concluding at 1503 hours. Thanks again.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT ALAN COOKE

Interview Date: October 10, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. TAMBASCO: Today is October 10, 2001. My name is Mike Tambasco, assigned to the World Trade Center Task Force, conducting an interview of the events of September 11 at the World Trade Center. We are interviewing EMT Alan Cooke of Battalion 31 of the EMS. The starting time for this interview is 1737 hours.

Q. Mr. Cooke, I will just ask you to give me your rank and your assignment on that day and feel free to go right ahead.

A. My name is Alan Cooke, EMT D. I was working 32 Adam Tour 2. Initially what I remember or how it started is when I first came into work I saw the smoke when I was walking into the station. I really didn't pay any mind as to what it may have been. Somebody told me a plane crashed into the World Trade Center, so I thought it was a small engine plane. When I get to the parking lot and I saw the first tower burning.

Then while I was standing in the parking lot, that's when I saw the plane crash into the second tower. So my partner and I, Victor Camile, we got our equipment together, got the bus checked out and we were assigned to 333 Rector Street for an asthmatic. That's how we ended up going into Manhattan.

Went into Manhattan. We encountered heavy traffic, which really delayed our response time getting to Rector Street.

Q. How did you go, over the bridge?

A. We went over the Brooklyn Bridge, which was closed off at that time. We got flagged down by a fire Lieutenant so that he could get over the bridge with us. We stopped. He got on. We took him over the bridge. We dropped him off at the foot of the bridge and then went down by Water Street because that's the only way I know to get to the west side. We didn't know exactly what was going on at that time.

Like I said it was heavy traffic. I think we left on that job about 9:30, had to be. We were fighting traffic and by the time we got down there I had no idea what time it was. I asked one of the officers where Rector Street was. She directed us past Rector Street because, you know, she was sending us to the staging. I guess by that time that's when they had all the injuries from the second.

We must have made it to as far as maybe Cedar.

Q. Coming up from the south?

A. Yes, coming from the south, heading north on the West Side Highway. At that time, we stopped and that's when I heard the rumble. I a heard a rumble. Both of us looked up and we saw a part of the building. I saw a part of the building coming down. I had thought it was just one piece of the building coming down. I didn't in my imagination didn't think it was the entire building coming down. And my partner, I guess she realized it before I did. She told me to drive, kept yelling drive, drive. I just yelled back drive where, because I couldn't go forward. That's where everything is happening. Couldn't go back because of the congestion from the crowd.

So somehow I made a U turn. I don't know how. I made the U turn. I drove down the west side and I went to go under the overpass. There is a little underpass.

Q. The tunnel underpass that goes around?

A. Right. I figured if we stopped there we would be all right. But then I said well, I don't know what's happening. We might get trapped in there. Anyway, on the way in that direction going back south, I looked in my rearview mirror and that's when you saw everything coming down. All you saw were people running.

I remember this one cop, she stands out in my mind. One dark little heavy cop running, but you know how you just saw the ball of flame and dirt and everything. It just engulfed everybody. So we drove. I kept telling my partner we got to go back, because I knew there had to be people hurt.

We got to the beginning of the FDR Drive, by the ferry, and I guess because of the way the streets channel everything, one of the fire balls or whatever, had to have made it as far as the South Street Seaport, because what happened at that time, it seemed like an explosion was coming from there. I thought an explosion was coming from there. That's when everybody started running towards us from the Seaport.

Now we had everybody running us from the Seaport and running to us from the west side, so we couldn't go either way. That's when all the ash and everything started coming. We had a couple of people stop us because they were complaining of chest pain.

Q. At that point you were like what, down by where the ferry is?

A. We were down by the ferry at that time. We had a couple of people stop us complaining about chest pain, asthma, couple of pregnant people, mostly about 2 or 3 couples were throwing their kids at us, they wanted to get the kids inside. Nobody could breathe and everybody was trying to climb up on to the wall of the FDR Drive.

This guy fell off the wall and hit the back of his head, so they were calling me for that, so we are trying to treat one woman with chest pain and one woman, she was saying her stomach hurt and she is pregnant and then I would have to go immobilize the guy off the wall, who fell off the wall, and the thing I remember most is when it got dark, when everything just clouded.

I knew at that time there weren't supposed to be any planes flying, but I heard planes flying and at that point I thought I was going to die. I really did. I thought what happened was that there was an explosion at the World Trade Center. Then I thought there was another one at the Seaport. I thought that was a secondary and herding everybody towards the Brooklyn Bridge, because everybody was asking me where should we go, where should we go. I just told them to get on the highway and head north or towards Brooklyn.

Now I'm thinking maybe everybody is heading towards the bridge and now here comes even another plane or a rocket or something to take out the bridge.

Luckily it didn't happen. We treated as many people as we could. Like I said, I immobilized the guy who fell off the wall. We got him to Beekman. I have no idea what time it was.

Q. You were able to transport him in your bus?

A. Yes, we transported about 5 adults and 3 kids. I don't know how we had them situated, but we got everybody to Beekman and as soon as I pulled up to Beekman, going the route that I took, is when I noticed the other, that's when the second tower collapsed. Everything was coming at us as we were trying to get to Beekman.

Q. You were going up, I guess Water Street there?

A. Yes. So we finally made it. We got to Beekman and that's when the cloud and everything was coming towards Beekman. By the time we got all of our patients out we just stopped and helped get everybody in that all the ambulances were pulling up. Beekman needed somebody with a head injury transported to Bellevue, so we transported that gentleman to Bellevue. He didn't make it.

Q. That wasn't the same patient that you --

A. No, it wasn't -- I don't know whatever happened to him. We took the head injury to Bellevue. We were BBP, so what we did was we went to the old Bellevue station, just exchanged equipment and went back up to Ground Zero.

There we encountered a few more people, took them back to Beekman, then we went back up to Ground Zero.

Q. Over, where on the west side now when you went back?

A. Yes. It was like just driving you are going to find somebody. We went back up and that's basically when things were more or less in order. Like I said, I had no frame. I had no idea what time it was during all this. That's when they set up the triage at the terminal, the ferry terminal.

Q. Down by the Staten Island Ferry?

A. Right, and they wanted the ambulance staged in a certain way. I'm going to say I didn't like where they wanted us staged, because it was like an alley, so if one vehicle went down you couldn't get the other vehicles out, so we staged on the corner.

During that time we went back up to Ground

Zero to see if we could help out there. All you saw was, you know, what was left of the vehicles and quiet. It was like a snow storm. There was nothing we could do at that time. We were released from the scene. We came back. Oh, wait, while we were down there staging, you ran into a lot of co-workers.

I mean it was just unbelievable the way we all greeted each other like we knew how lucky we was.

Q. Happy to see each other?

A. Yes, I didn't -- we went to the front and saw like two or three ambulances were completely demolished. I ran into one of my co-workers who had got out just in time. You know, at the end of the day --

Q. Who was it?

A. Jackson. Chris Jackson, I think his name is. Then I saw I can't remember the people's name, Marla, she was there.

Q. Marla?

A. Marla, what is her name. I can't think of her name. I can't think of her name. She works 32 Boy. They were covered. She just looked like a big snowman. So I mean it was fast moving and slowest moving -- slow moving at the same time.

We weren't there when the initial impact, but we got there right before the first tower collapsed. That's about it. We were released from the scene. Came in and luckily they allowed us to go home because we were so covered with everything, you know, fiberglass and whatever else was in there.

That's about the end of my story.

Q. Okay. Anything else that you want to add to it, any feelings, anything at all? Up to you.

A. Well, as far as feelings are concerned I appreciate the way the whole company handled the personnel. I just think a lot of people don't realize what we, EMS, went through. I'm quite sure you have heard that a lot. You know, fire, we might have a lot of people, the Fire Department lost a lot of people, Port Authority lost, but, you know, as far as EMS, I don't think we were recognized as far as our presence on the scene, you know. Besides that, nothing.

I wasn't too happy with the fact that the vehicles were staged around the World Trade Center, especially after the second plane hit.

MR. TAMBASCO: All right Alan, thank you for your interview and the information, and I just -- we will conclude this interview at 1749 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT JARJEAN FELTON

Interview Date: October 10, 2001

J. FELTON

PAUL RADENBERG: The date is October 10, 2001. The time is 1611 hours. This is Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with Jarjean Felton, EMT at Battalion 31. EMS Battalion 31. The Fire Department of the City of New York. We are currently at EMS battalion 31. The interview is regarding the events of September 11, 2001. Why don't you start with when you were assigned to the job.

JARJEAN FELTON: It all started, I mean, me and my partner, we was getting breakfast.

Q: Who were you working with?

A: Sean Cuniffe, 48 David, tour two. Me and Cuniffe, we was getting breakfast right here on Fulton Street, Fulton and Flatbush and I'm not sure if there was already a unit down there when the first plane hit, I'm not sure. We just heard them arguing, or saying help, a plane hit this and that, the World Trade tower. So we asked him to put us on that job cause we heard them calling I guess 31 Adam from our same battalion on the job. So we told them, we told the dispatcher to put 48 David on. We asked to be put on the job, I would say like, we was one of the first 5 units put on the job. Cause if you go over the MR you see 48 David tour 2. We was one of the first units put on the job. This was after the first plane hit, so we're going across the Brooklyn Bridge. We see the fire, we see the hole in there. We're just thinking holy, man, what happened? You know what I'm saying? So we get down there…

Q: When you came over the bridge…

A: We came over the bridge, they had everything blocked off. It was like a motorcade, we just followed all the, I don't know, they was unmarked cars. So I assume the Fire Department, the Feds. We just followed them onto the Brooklyn Bridge and down there. We came down, I think we came down Chambers. No, not Chambers. We came down one of these streets, I would say Fulton. Came down, we went up Vesey Street. I would say Berkley Street on the Westside Highway. They had a triage right in front, I guess on Church Street. I had wanted to go there, but Sean was like "no, no, lets go behind like where they assigned us to", cause it was 2 units there. It was a medic and 31 David. I'm not sure of the medic, but it was 31 David. They're another unit assigned to our station. So I had wanted to go down there, because I knew the guys, so I wanted to give them some support. But he was like, come on, let's go to the back. We went to the back, Vesey Street and Westside Highway. That's exactly where our triage was at. We parked our vehicle right here on Vesey Street. It was a Lieutenant right here taking our keys.

Q: Did you recognize that Lieutenant?

A: No, cause I've only been here like a year. So I don't know all the Lieutenants.

Q: Right.

A: My partner said he knew him. We gave the Lieutenant our keys like we normally do when you go to set up triage, I guess all the ambulance parked right here. It was ambulances, it was fire trucks, it was everything right here on Westside Highway. It was voluntaries-- I seen Fire Patrol. That's where I seen Von Essen, right there on Westside Highway and Vesey Street, right there. We was right here on the Westside, by the American Express Building where they got the make-shift morgue now, he was right under here. This foot bridge.

Q: The pedestrian overpass?

A: The pedestrian overpass. This was probably like, 9. Cause I looked at that MR, the first unit was there at like 8:55. So I would say this was like 9, 10 I would say. I'm not sure the time.

Q: Okay.

A: Give or take a couple minutes, I'm not sure the time. We was there, I would say at least 15 or 10 minutes. There was people jumping, we observed firefighters going in, we observed ESU getting on their Scott Packs, going into buildings and all that. I would say right around that time while we were right under here, under the Westside Highway and pedestrian bridge, I seen a second plane coming. I'm thinking isn't that plane too low? I'm like…then I noticed, I seen it turn. It turned and went right in the building. But we're behind, like this is the building, it went in, and you see the explosion in the front…

Q: On the other side than you?

A: Yeah we see…and I said oh my god, I just sat there with my mouth open like Oh My god, Oh My God. I'm sitting there like Oh My God, and everyone's just running. But I'm like, why are we running it's on the Church side that all that debris and stuff was from, we was on the Westside Highway so, after that they told us to get along this, it was like this little, like a little sidewalk with grass and all that. They told us to move all of our equipment. We had unloaded our bus, we had long board, we had our stretcher, we had our de-fib. We had all our stuff out. We had our jackets and our helmets on. So they told us to move right here along the sidewalk. So after that, after the second plane they told us to move up, cause we was originally in the street. The told us to move after the second plane. Then, five minutes later…

Q: You had to move back towards the water?

A: No, they had us move like, towards the building more.

Q: Okay.

A: Cause we was in the street, we was in the street, then they told us to move towards the building more. Then eventually we ended up in the building lobby.

Q: In the American Express Building?

A: In the American Express Building. We ended up in the lobby. We're in the lobby, they gave us orders to go into the lobby, take all our equipment, whatever into the lobby because the second plane had just hit. There's people jumping, I at least counted more than...I didn't count, but at least, a minimum of 50 people jumping. I seen a minimum of 50 people jump, couples holding hands. But I was just so like, Oh My God. I've never seen nothing like that, cause I've only been here a year. I've never seen nothing like that. So we're in the building, we're in the American Express Building right here, we're in there, so we got all our equipment, all the EMS personnel. There's a lot of people in there.

Q: Right.

A: The Lieutenant told us to take all our equipment and go in there. So I go in there, I try to use my cell phone to let my family and friends know what's going on, tell them if they're coming to the city, no, don't come to the city. Let my fiancé know that I'm alright. So I'm on the phone, then I just hear a commotion of people screaming like "Ahhhhhhhhhh…" My girlfriends like what's going on? What's going on? I'm like, I don't know, I gotta go. So I just dropped the phone and as…this building is like glass, made of glass.

Q: Right.

A: So, that time I just dropped the phone and I run, I see tower number 2 coming down. I jumped over the fence in that building.

Q: Yeah.

A: I jumped over a fence coming down. The glass…there was another fence that I couldn't jump over cause it had spikes. I mean, it had the gate with spikes. I was like, man, I'm not hurting myself. So I went around, and as I went around I'm sitting and watching the building come down. I'm watching the building coming down, and I'm standing there right in front of these guys, but I'm not really, I'm just shocked like, I guess, me and my partner we're in this building. We're in there with 31 Adam, a couple of units from our station. The building's coming down, and I see it, I just stop. I'm just sitting there watching it come down. Sitting in front of all of these guys. Then I just hear somebody call my name "Felton, Felton, come on!" So I just wake up, like out of my trance, like, oh no, and I just start running. We ran right out the door. It's like. PD, a lot of civilians was there too. So PD, they propped the door open, we run out the back of the American Express Building. So we're like right here, the building's coming down, so it's the smoke that's chasing you now. So we ran up this way , we ran up Vesey to the north end. Then they told us to park our vehicles here, on the North end and set up another triage. I notice there's like one or two vehicles left here, 407 was left here cause it wouldn't start. We had EMT Jackson with us, he's 31A. He's the person who just called me and woke me up. So we had him on our bus, drove it right here to the North End, right behind Vesey and North End. So we're right here. The Merv is right here, all of EMS. A lot of ---Fire Department. A lot of department vehicles, ESU, but it was still vehicles like haz-tac units, I seen the haz-tac units, I seen the guys with like the tinfoil suits. I seen a lot of fire trucks left there when the second building came down. The smoke, all the rubble, everything, we have on the masks now. Me, like me and my partner, we just jumped in, we parked right there. So I went down, I went back down. I don't know what made me go right down. I go back down, I'm like, oh man, oh damn, it's like…I still see some people there, but at that time I don't know what possessed me to go back down. I go back down it's like stuff, debris is all over the place. So I go back down to take a look then I just come back up like Yo, it's crazy. We were right here, I'm not really sure what time it is. I'm really not sure what time it is, cause I'm not worried about that. I wasn't worried about the time. I looked for my partner, they was like "Make sure you have your partner, you two stay together." Cause they was stressing that. "Make sure your partner is with you at all times." So, we were together. After that I don't know what happened. I really don't know what's going on. Really, I'm not really sure what's going on. By that time it was, one was still on fire, that was the last one hit, but that was the first one to come down. I would say like, right when I got back to Vesey and North, that's when one came down. At that time, I just left my vehicle and everybody's just running up North End Avenue. Whatever avenue it is, everyone is running up. I remember seeing we're all running, running like -----There's a little park here, we're running alongside there. I seen firemen, I seen everybody. I seen all types of equipment laying down on the ground, I seen Scott Packs making that noise.

Q: The alarm?

A: Yeah, the alarm for like say, somebody got knocked out and they're laying motionless. That alarm is going off. I just heard that, you just seen a whole bunch of equipment all over the place. Everybody just ran, everybody was just running like, yo… so we're along this, we're in the park, we're over here. The first building came down, everybody's like yo. Me and my partner's running together. Then I just turned back and looked like, Oh man. I'm not sure where the hell we went, but I know we was covered with dust after the first one came down. Everyone was like, Oh man. I seen firefighters ----there's still people in there. It's total chaos at this point, total chaos cause nobody would have expected those buildings to come down. It's total chaos, and I noticed that when tower one comes down, that's when the glass in the American Express building breaks. So we're all over here, somehow I go back to get my vehicle. I don't know what possessed me, cause it's right here. I went back, got my vehicle, picked up my partner. We're just like driving around. He's calling his family letting them know that he's alright. Somehow we made it to Chambers, to the high school. The high school that they just took over.

Q: Right, Stuyvesant?

A: Stuyvesant High School, they just took over. That's where we got separated. Cause we had a patient there. We had a patient. He was the driver, I was the tech. We had a patient, we had 2 patients basically. We had an ESU guy who said he just made it out the building. He was alright, he wasn't really worried about his injuries. He was just like, I gotta go back in there, I gotta go get my guys. He was just worried about going to get his guys. He said yo, I lost my guys and this and that. I don't remember his name, but I remember him, because he was on the news like a day or two later saying that he just made it out. ESU, I'm not sure, maybe he's a sargent, I'm not sure. But I remember seeing him on the news saying that. I was like, wow, that was one of my patients. It was him and another civilian contractor. He was having an MI, but he didn't know. So a medic jumped on, hooked him up to an EKG. Like yo, you having an MI. So I took off my jacket, I had my helmet still with me. My partner was like, we're gonna take him to the hospital. I was like you got a medic here, so I'm alright, I'm alright. I'll just go back to the command and just chill out there at Stuyvesant High School. At that time, there was people just raping our bus, just taking all our stuff, like oxygen, taking everything they can get their hands on. Like, we're just gonna take your bus and just, there's a lot of patients and you ain't gonna need all this. It's a restocking station at Bellvue, so just re-stock then come back. So that's basically, I mean, I stayed there the whole time. I was really---cause I didn't know what to think. When I got to Stuyvesant High School, I was like dang, I know there's still people in that building. Cause I seen a lot of people running in the building the time we showed up. Getting in Scott Packs and running in the building. So I know there's people in there, I know there's like, man, nobody would have ever thought them buildings would come down. I'm just sitting there in amazement , the New York City skyline is just depleted now with these two buildings gone. I basically stayed on Chambers. I mean, the only thing that really had me frustrated was they wasn't really trying to let us go back down there.

Q: After the collapse of the second building?

A: Yeah, the second building. They wasn't trying to let us go down there. They had a lot of EMS personnel. I know there was still people around Ground Zero. There had to be some people trapped under trucks, I know that. But they wasn't trying to let us go down. That's the only thing, I really wanted to know why. I understand after it was un-safe. Cause I guess after that 7 came down. Well 7 didn't come down until like 4, 5 o'clock. So I was just wondering, they just kept us cooped up in there for a long time. They would occasionally let us go back out. I went back out, and walked around. It was messed up. Everybody talking about ---around that time--- there's another plane coming. I mean, we didn't know because we didn't have a TV and we didn't have a radio. We was just going our way. We heard it from the FBI agents or agents down there. We see people just running. I mean, I feel really bad for the people that was on the Church side, cause they really took the brunt of the debris on that side. I heard that an ambulance just got crushed on that side. That's why I really thank my partner for being like, let's go to the Vesey side. Cause there was another triage set up on the Church side, and I guess they was hit hard when the buildings collapsed and when that second airplane hit. I really thank him for that. Other than that, we was just cooped up in Stuyvesant High School for the whole time. Occasionally they let people go back down to the American Express Building. Later that night after 7 came down, they had it as a make-shift morgue too. It was a morgue after that. I was down there, I went down there to do morgue duty later on. I was just happy when I seen members from my Battalion come up. I was happy to see members from EMS period. They had city busses for the EMS workers and all that. I was happy to see them. I was just happy to see familiar faces that I know. That was basically all. I'm sorry for not knowing the times.

Q: No, not a problem.

A: I wasn't worried about knowing the times. I was just trying to get up outta there.

J. FELTON

A: That's just the best of my knowledge. I just know that I spent the night down there, that's all I know.

Q: You said in the beginning that when you were starting, you and Sean were getting breakfast on Fulton Street, okay, and you heard 31 Adam. 31 Adam was already in Manhattan?

A: No, as a matter of fact, 31 David was already in Manhattan. 31 David. That was the unit that was already in Manhattan. They was calling 31 Adam.

Q: Oh, to give them the job?

A: To give them the job. So we heard them and we was like, put us on the back too.

Q: Right.

A: Cause we was like, on Fulton and Flatbush. We was right there by the Manhattan or the Brooklyn Bridge. So we was like, give us the job. We made it there before 31 Adam. When we pulled up on Vesey Street, we came down Vesey Street.

Q: Right.

A: Now I really remember. We came down Vesey Street, probably hit Fulton, came down Vesey, and then he made us park right here. So we went up the end of the block, made a U-turn, came back around and parked. That's exactly how I remember it now. We came down Vesey, went up, did a U-turn, parked right here. I would say by the Merryl Lynch Building. Like in between that. We parked right between the American Express Building and the Merryl Lynch. What's that, 4?

Q: Yeah, 4 World Financial. Okay, what was your vehicle number?

A: Um, 94.

Q: 94?

A: Yeah. 94. We was parked right there…

Q: And then you moved it again after the second plane went in they had to move it…

A: No, no. After the second plane came in, they had us move into the American Express Building. It wasn't until after the second building came down that they told us to move right there.

Q: And that's North End Avenue and Murray Street?

A: Yeah. I would say around there.

Q: And you said that vehicle 407 was also that, was that assigned here?

A: Yes, it remained here because it was dead.

Q: That was EMT Jackson's vehicle?

A: Yeah, Jackson, 31 Adam. And EMT Wright. Yeah, Jackson and Wright.

Q: Okay.

A: It remained there the whole, even until the night time. Cause when I came back later on to do more duty, it was still there. It was cleaned out, but it was still there though.

Q: Okay, so when you first got here to the American Express Building, you had no patients?

A: No patients at that point.

Q: So your first patient was when you were up at the high school?

A: Yeah, basically. We had no patients from this side because, well the brunt of the work was being done on the Church side. This was behind, I would say it was Hotzollah, a few MetroCare, a lot of private, and we were there too, right there where we was at. Our EMS Lieutenant took control of their units too.

Q: Do you remember any other EMS personnel from the department that was in the American Express Building?

A: I remember my partner, Jackson, Wright, that's basically it. There was probably like 2 or 3 FDNY, and the rest was private. Along this street, they told us just to wait right there. That's another thing that had me pissed off too. Not pissed off, just kinda upset because we're on this job, we're just sitting here, not doing nothing. I mean, there's patients but we gotta just sit in here. I mean, I guess they did it for a certain reason. I wasn't there to dispute, that's not my job. I just did what they told me to do. They told me to wait right here, wait for patients. But I knew that all of the brunt of the work was on the Church side. That's why I wanted to go there in the first place. Cause I've never seen nothing like this, I'm probably a trauma buff, or something like that. I don't know. We went there, that was our first patient when we got to Stuyvesant High School. I would say 1300 or 1400 hours, I'm not really sure what time it was.

Q: And when you're at the high school, you and your partner split up, right?

A: Before yeah. Right when we got the patient, that's when we split up. Cause he was driving and the medic jumped in the back, and I was like, I mean, I know there's nothing really for me to do except sit here and ride. There's a medic, so I just stayed.

Q: So Sean drove with the medic?

A: Yeah.

Q: Was the medic from the city?

A: He was from the department, yeah. FDNY, yeah. I didn't know him. I mean, I did see a few medics that I knew right before we got the patient. They was like, oh, we just got outta here. We took a patient that was burnt 90% to Cornell. This and that. But when we got our patient, I didn't know the medic. I gave him oxygen, I wiped his face off. He was just shaken up. He's like, I just got outta there with this guy too. I guess him and the ESU guy was on the same floor. He said that he was on the second floor and they had just got him out.

Q: And the ESU cop, do you remember him saying what tower he was in?

A: I'm about to say tower 2. Yeah, tower 2.

Q: He was in Tower 2?

A: Yes. He was in Tower 2.

Q: Okay, and you were treating him after tower one came down, or in between?

A: No this was way after. Way after both buildings came down. I'm not really sure of the time. But this was after both of them came down. This was when they was like, it's unsafe to go down there, everybody come back. That's when all of the buildings in the surrounding area was on fire. That's when they was worried about 7 coming down. This was after they had moved, they had a triage point at Stuyvesant, had a little make-shift hospital there. One of the main triages was at Chelsea Piers.

Q: When you were at the American Express Building, you only saw the one EMS lieutenant?

A: There was a few EMS lieutenants. But he was the one that was directing traffic. It was EMS lieutenants right there at Vesey and Westside Highway. I was mainly right there among the firefighters and all the ESU cops. I specifically seen Von Essen right there at Westside Highway and Vesey. I remember because I was leaning against one of the trucks. I remember somebody saying they was a such-and-such Commissioner of the Fire Department, asking one of the fire patrols for a scout pack. I seen at least 50, 60 guys run in the building. Then it came down. I guess the second plane just caught everybody by surprise, cause everybody just thought it was the first tower, then the second plane hit in a matter of 5 minutes or less. The second tower come down first. Seeing those people jump, cause nobody wanted to burn. Seeing those people jump, it was just horrific, really. Not only seeing them jump, but seeing them land too. It was horrific. I know a lot of those who jumped, at least 50, probably 100 that they can't find. Cause all that rubble is on top of them. That's a high number, I mean, nothing else. Just seeing everybody running, leaving their equipment, leaving their bus, everything. Then going back down there later on that night and just seeing fire trucks in half. The main thing was fire trucks and ESU vehicles. Cause they was right under the pedestrian bridge. Actually, we was right under the pedestrian bridge when the second plane hit. We was right under it, cause they told us to just set up triage. So we had all of our equipment right there, and we walked down. I dunno, I guess they was trying to feel the vibe, or just trying to see what was going on. They was trying to get a better view of what was going on. It was me and my partner being nosey, but we walked down together though. After that, I never seen so many people take off running when the second plane hit. Everybody running, ran in the building, ran out the building, ran into another building. It was late in the day when 7 came down. It was like 3:00 or 4:00 when 7 came down. Still seen a lot of people leave. When we was at Stuyvesant high school, we still seen people running from the smoke, all the way at Chambers Street, and that was far away. That's basically it that I remember about the day. Basically it.

Q: Alright thank you. The time is now 1646, interview is concluded.

File No. 9110042

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

JACE PINKUS

Interview Date: October 11, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

MS. ROM: Today's date is October 11, 2001. The time now is 837 hours, and this is Lieutenant Pat Rom, the Fire Department City of New York.

I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name, rank and title.

A. Captain JACE PINKUS, P-I-N-K-U-S.

Q. And your assigned command area, the Fire Department of the City?

A. MetroTech communications, emergency medical dispatch.

Q. Okay. We're here to discuss the --

MS. ROM: Also present for the interview is --

MS. MAGGI: Diana Maggi, EMT, investigations and trials.

Q. Okay. We're here to discuss regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

If you could describe to us where -- how you first became involved and any details of what transpired for that day.

A. Early Tuesday morning, I was on the 7th Floor in my cubicle, and there were individuals stating that a plane had just crashed into the World Trade Center.

Within a few moments, it was confirmed that there was a plane in one of the towers.

At that point, Commissioner Gregory directed myself, EMT Sam Harris and Captain D'Amato to join him, and we were going to respond to the scene. At that point, we left the 7th Floor, received our equipment and proceeded over the Brooklyn Bridge.

Q. What vehicle were you using?

A. Commissioner Gregory's. Sam Harris was driving, and we responded into Manhattan using the bridge.

Q. Brooklyn Bridge? Manhattan Bridge?

A. Brooklyn Bridge.

Q. Were you responding to any specific location at that point?

A. As we were driving over the bridge, we -- it was confirmed that there was a fire in the north tower. We continued into Manhattan, and we got off at Park Row, made a left-hand turn onto Chambers, and made a left onto West Street, and parked on the corner of Vesey and West Street on the corner of -- I guess that would be the east side.

Q. Parked on Vesey or on West?

A. Right on the corner of Vesey.

Q. So you parked on Vesey?

A. Correct.

We attempted to get our stuff out of the vehicle, and as we looked up, we saw a plane hit the second building, and we noticed that there was a large ball of flame coming from the second building. It was at this point that Commissioner Gregory directed EMT Harris to move the vehicle because there was debris, fire basically covering us on Vesey Street.

EMT Harris moved the vehicle, I believe to the west side of Vesey, and I proceeded along with Commissioner Gregory and Captain D'Amato onto West Street, and I was in the middle of West Street in front of the American Express Building.

At that point, I met up with Lieutenant Davila. There were a couple of units on the corner of -- actually, in the middle of the street on Vesey and West. Within moments --

Q. Two or three would you imagine?

A. I saw at least three or four, and then there was a lot of chaos.

Q. On West?

A. Correct.

There's a median on West Street, West Side

Highway, that would be north of the pedestrian bridge, and at that point we noticed vehicles started to come in numerous directions.

Within moments, I saw Chief Ganci. Commissioner Gregory proceeded on West, south --

Q. Commissioner?

A. Gregory and Captain D'Amato.

Q. You went which way?

A. South on West Street. I saw Chief Nigro. Within a couple of more minutes, Lieutenant Howie Hahn arrived, Dr. Asceda, Dr. Cherson, and then there was another doctor. I forget his name.

Q. Male, female?

A. Male doctor. I think he's one of the fellows.

Q. Where did you see Chief Nigro and --

A. Both of them were walking south on West. We were -- I was a few feet south on West.

Q. Both of them meaning who?

A. Chief Ganci and Chief Nigro.

At that point -- again, must have been another -- a few more moments, Chief Goldfarb I was in contact with. At this point, we attempted -- as units were coming into the scene, and I believe they had started to set up, also there was Lieutenant Brad Mann, Lieutenant John Nevins. The two of them ended up in the intersection of Vesey and West and for better terms they assumed sort of a staging officer.

Q. The two of them?

A. Correct.

There were a couple of Hatzolah ambulances coming into the scene.

Q. One, two, three?

A. I'd say at least two, and there was a large amount of vehicle movement north on West Street as vehicles were coming. To identify them, I couldn't at that point.

As units were parking their vehicles, I believe along Vesey, along West, they were directed by -- making assumption that Lieutenant Mann and Lieutenant Nevins were sending vehicles parking along Vesey, parking them along West, and units started to walk up with their stretchers and equipment.

Within a few minutes, I had a conversation with Chief Goldfarb that if needed we would be going to -- we identified American Express to be an area of triage. Time frame maybe ten minutes, fifteen minutes from the time I arrived.

Q. That you talked to Chief Goldfarb?

A. Correct. I had a conversation with the one doctor I had mentioned earlier. He had asked me should he get the antidote kit. I said to him yes.

I believe he left to go to Dr. Asceda's car to get it. It must have been about another few more minutes went by, and we started to move the units with their stretchers along. I guess it would be in front of American Express Building, which is Three World Financial Center, and again within a period of time the -- I would say maybe about 30 units -- might have been two or three, per stretcher, but municipal voluntary and volunteers.

We noticed as we were standing in the street -- we looked up. We did notice that there were people jumping from the buildings. I personally saw about 20. There was a lot of chaos going on along the building. The M.C.C., which is the local command center for communications, arrived. It was traveling south on West. I believe there was a P.D.T.H.V. also that came.

Q. What is that?

A. The police temporary headquarters vehicle.

I believe there was another three or four

Fire Department apparatus, again traveling south on West.

Q. So the M.C.C. and the P.D. Temp were all traveling south on West; is that my understanding?

A. Correct.

Q. And fire apparatus?

A. Correct.

Q. Approximately --

A. I believe I saw at least two.

Q. Could you identify them in any way?

A. No.

Q. Engine, ladder or anything?

A. No. I would say one was a ladder.

So at this point, it was all the chaos and the debris falling in front of the American Express Building, all on West.

We moved closer to the building. It was at that point that the decision was made between myself and along with Chief Goldfarb that if things went sour, that the units were to take cover into the building, and I started to walk along the line along with Howie Hahn, Lieutenant Hahn.

We took a roll call, writing down units as they arrived. I would say there was about 30 at one point, give or take. Might have been more. The task was given to him to specifically identify what units were there.

Q. Lieutenant Hahn?

A. Correct.

I identified a paramedic unit, and a B.L.S. unit. I called it a fast unit, that if we needed, they would be the first to go, and I kept them right in front of the building. I guess that would be going north on West, but not really on West, but more on the side street of the American Express Building.

We started to line the units up along the building, and at one point the line went west on Vesey, the units that were lined up with their stretchers.

Again maybe 10, 15 minutes goes by. I gave directions that if things were to go sour, that they were to take cover. It was at that point when I personally heard a loud rumbling noise. I thought it was another plane hitting the tower, and that's when the entire street filled with smoke, debris, became totally black, and we ran into the American Express Building.

At some point, I had been told that one of the medics was missing. I found out later that it was Carlos Lillo that was missing. I saw his partner Abrieu -- that's A-B-R-I-E-U.

Then there was other scuffle that there were other people missing, unable to confirm. It was Chief Peruggia that we heard was missing. Chief McCracken, it was reported that he was missing.

This is when we believed that it was a second -- like I said it was the first building that collapsed. We ran into the American Express Building. We took cover. We started to break -- myself, a couple of custodians within the building started to break windows.

A couple of minutes goes by. Chief Carrasquillo, Chief Goldfarb, and I believe there was another chief. I don't recall who it was. Things just became havoc inside the building, people running all over the place, all units that -- pretty much that were all lined up, everybody just ran in between patient care and just -- I don't want to use the word panicking, but, like I said, really got nasty at that point.

We went west of the American Express Building, maybe two exits. There was an exit onto Vesey, and then was a corridor which left out the back, and according to the map, that would be the Merrill Lynch Building.

We attempted to recoup, getting things together. We set up a little triage area in the rear of the American Express Building. There were other people walking around saying their partners were missing. Directions were given to Lieutenant Hahn by myself to try to -- there was a couple of paramedics. There was Paramedic Smiley I had contact with, and as I saw people, I attempted to find out if they knew where their partners were, and that was a combination of -- I'm sorry. Were you going to say something?

We set up a little small triage area within American Express Building. Within a few minutes, we couldn't even stay in the building. We couldn't breathe. That's the reason why the windows were being broken.

I ran out the west side onto Vesey. I heard people screaming that there was a Mayday. We heard a lot of screaming, a lot of yelling. The entire street was like the middle of winter. I noticed people running to their ambulances with their equipment.

I noticed at least two firefighters had ducked underneath the fire apparatus. There was at least five or six. I believe there was two engine companies that were on Vesey, and there was some firefighters ducking on Vesey.

Q. Can you identify them?

A. By number? I believe it was an engine, and I also noticed that there was a -- a suburban, a chief's vehicle.

The ambulances were parked diagonally or they were backed straight in to Vesey. The entire street was just full of smoke and debris, and you really couldn't see in front of you.

Again, I ran back in trying to find out where all my people were. That was one of my main objectives.

Q. And at that point -- who was with you at that time?

A. Lieutenant Hahn, Paramedic Smiley, a couple of paramedics from Metro Care, others I couldn't identify. At one point, I -- there must have been about 20 individuals start to regroup.

Q. Initially, the initial A.L.S. and B.L.S. you had lead, do you know who they were?

A. By name, no. By unit, no, I couldn't identify them.

Q. Okay. And Chief Nigro and Chief Ganci?

A. I had seen them for a few minutes, few minutes at the beginning. I hadn't seen them since.

Q. Okay. That was that first time you saw them walking towards --

A. Chief Ganci asked me something regarding -- he said,"Captain." I don't recall exactly what he said, but it was a moment, not long. Like I said, they all went south onto West.

I believe Chief Martin at one point might even have even showed up in the building, in the American Express Building. They had also set up refreshments and water in the building. As people were running around, people running in, grabbing the water and running out, so I couldn't even identify who they were. They were running.

Like I said, there was a Mayday called. You really couldn't see too much in front of you while we were on Vesey Street. At some point, I started to run into the back of the building, because I was looking for somebody, and then I heard another noise, and that is when I took cover. I was by myself laying on the ground, covered my head, did a lot of praying.

After I felt it was safe, I got back up again. Again, we tried to set up another triage area, but it just didn't -- there was such havoc going on, that there was no control. People were just running, civilians and emergency workers, et cetera. I went over to a fireman I could not identify and gave him some water.

Back on Vesey, and at some point I walked down -- I believe this is North End Avenue to the front of the Embassy Hotel, which would be on North End between Vesey and Murray. I noticed that the Merv was in front of it, a couple of police vehicles, emergency service vehicles. I was talking to one of the cops trying to get another mask. Inside the -- backtrack a little bit. Chief Gombo I had seen earlier.

Q. Was that the one time you saw him?

A. Yeah. No, but I saw him later on. When I got back to the hotel, that's what made me recall seeing him, and Lieutenant Terranova.

I also attempted to call the center a few times, the communications center via cell phone a couple of times. I was able to get through. A couple of times I couldn't get through.

Ended up in the Embassy Hotel. There was Chief Goldfarb, Lieutenant Terranova, Chief Gombo, Chief Pascal, Chief Carrasquillo, Chief Basile. I saw Captain Sickles, Lieutenant Yioras, Y-I-O-R-A-S. I noticed that he started to not feel well, so I went over to him, myself and EMT Harris, took off his coat. Looked like he was exhausted. We sat him down.

Within sometime after that, we were given directions to go along with chief -- myself, EMT Harris, and Chief Pascal were given directions that we were going to Chelsea Piers.

Prior to that, I walked down Vesey again, and I believe at that time the second building collapsed, because again the entire street filled up with smoke, and debris, and again we couldn't see in front of us what was going on. I heard a lot of alarms going off. We didn't know for sure if it was the building, and we heard a pass alarm, which is part of the self-contained breathing apparatus. I heard that from somebody. People just running up and down Vesey Street.

At that point, myself, Chief Pascal and EMT Harris walked down North End Avenue. That would be north. We continued walking down North End. We saw lieutenant -- I don't recall who it was, but there was a trailer. I believe it was on Park Place. We continued walking down to Chambers Street, and at that point, we met up with, again, another lieutenant. I don't recall who it was. Myself, EMT Harris and Chief Pascal got into the rear of a vehicle, an ambulance. We ended up on Westside Highway.

Q. Do you know which ambulance you were in?

A. I don't know.

Q. Or what vehicle?

A. It was a municipal ambulance, but I don't recall who.

Q. Okay. You're in the back of the ambulance?

A. Back of the ambulance. There was no equipment in the back of the ambulance, and as we headed to Chelsea Piers, we were flagged down on maybe 6th Street and Westside Highway. There was a pedestrian struck.

The three of us got out of the vehicle, provided some patient care. Turned out to be the patient was not a pedestrian struck, but was on the 80th Floor of the first building. Spoke to him, talked to him, trying to find out what was going on, comfort him, put him in the back of the ambulance. We strapped him in the captain's chair.

The first vehicle that we were in, and Chief Pascal flagged down another ambulance, turned out to be -- I guess it was a logistics unit, another ambulance full of long boards. That was it. There was an antidote kit laying on the floor in the back. Myself, EMT Harris got into the rear of the vehicle. Chief Pascal got into the passenger side of the cab, and we continued north on Westside Highway until we got to Chelsea Piers, and at that point we met up with Chief Kowalzyk, and the directions that were given to me, me -- and Kevin Mahon was up there also.

We attempted to identify what units were there, and I walked from -- I guess that would be 11th Street up to, say, maybe 24th Street where I met up with Lieutenant Bearman.

Our objective was to move the ambulances south to sort of organize the number of ambulances. That had to be at least 60, if not more, ambulances that were all the way up the Westside Highway.

Q. Okay. So you placed the second building collapsing at what stage?

A. I would say at the point I ran out of the building, out of the American Express Building. Time frame? I couldn't tell you. I would say maybe 20 minutes, a half an hour.

Q. After you arrived?

A. After I arrived. At least, if not more. Time frame itself, specific time frame, I couldn't tell you, but I would say it was at the point I had seen Chief Martin.

Q. At that point, if we could reference it when we were going to Chelsea Piers, was how long before that?

A. I can't tell you. I know I was on the American Express for sometime. It was definitely some time that I had been there. There was a lot of activity going on in the building and along Vesey. There were some other individuals. Dr. Richmond I believe I saw also.

Q. Where would you have seen Dr. Richmond?

A. Well, I know for sure I saw him later on in the evening, but I believe I saw him, you know, I stand corrected. I saw him later on in the day, later in the evening.

Q. We are really focusing on up until the second World Trade Center collapse, what events transpired during that time frame.

At any time were you ever in those buildings?

A. Which buildings?

Q. In the World Trade Center.

A. No.

Q. Your overall impression of what was going on, how --

A. It was something that I definitely never experienced before. I know I had an objective. It changed multiple times. When we first got there, we just thought we had a really bad fire, you know, the first building, and as we got out of the car we saw the second one, and it turned out to -- you know, we first thought that we were going to be waiting for patients to come to you, and that point when the first building collapsed, it all changed.

My main objective was to know where my people were at. But at one point I got scared that I had lost more than, you know -- I was lucky how everything turned out, except for one, you know. At one point, I think I had two or three people there. I had 60 to 70 people, so that was my first objective was to patients who were going to come to me, or my resources were going to go to the patients. It all changed. It was a definite experience that I -- even to this day, you know, still talk about. It was scary, especially when I -- the building -- I heard that noise. I thought for sure there was another building and --

Q. On the reports of Paramedic Lillo, did you ever see him or that's something just told to you?

A. I might have seen him earlier. I mean I know Carlos, I know him for a long time. I might have seen him earlier, but I definitely do recall seeing his partner saying that he was missing.

Q. And you saw his partner at what point?

A. It was in the first 20 minutes maybe I had seen him.

Q. Is there anything else you would like to include as part of this interview?

A. There was a lot of talk going on, because there was -- there was a period of time at the beginning before any real activity was going on with us about the people that were coming in the buildings. There was a lot of comments about that.

MS. ROM: Okay. All right. We would like to thank you for, you know, being a part of this interview with us, and I'm going to say that this concludes our interview. It's now 903 hours, and this concludes our interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMS CAPTAIN FRANK D'AMATO

Interview Date: October 11, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. FEILER: Today's date is October 11, 2001. The time now is 829 hours, this is Lieutenant Monte Feiler of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name, rank and command.

A. Frank D'Amato, EMS Captain, Bureau of Communications.

MR. FEILER: Of the Fire Department of the City of New York. We are conducting this interview in the Investigations and Trials hearing room, fourth floor at 9 Metrotech, New York City Fire Department headquarters. The interview is regarding the events of September 11, 2001. Also present is Investigator Velez.

Q. Please state your name, title and command.

A. My name is George Velez, EMT, also an investigator for the Bureau of Trials and Investigations.

Q. Captain D'Amato, if we can just get a scenario of what occurred that morning of September 11.

A. Well, I started my morning here at headquarters on the 7th floor, communications. I'm going to say I don't know about the first plane hit, but after the first plane hit, I'm guessing 8:30, quarter to nine, we saw a lot of the Citywide tour commanders and their aides running past my desk. I asked them what's going on. They said a plane just hit the Trade Center.

At that time, we all went to the window and we saw flames coming out. At that point I thought actually it was like a small plane, like a sea plane or something. I had no time to think. Then we saw the magnitude of what was going on as far as the flames and Commissioner Gregory asked myself, Captain Pincus and EMT Sam Harris, to get our gear together. We were going down to the scene.

We all got into Commissioner Gregory's car. We went over the Brooklyn Bridge. I'm not really sure which route we took after the bridge, but we came south on West Street and we pulled into Vesey Street facing opposite the water. I guess that's east.

Q. I have a map here.

A. Let me see that. We came down Barclay Street and we made a left on to West and then we made another left on to Vesey, so we stopped the car at the corner of West and Vesey. I guess that's 6 World Trade Center.

When we got out of the vehicle, we opened the trunk, we put our helmets on and our jackets. At that time we heard another explosion which I thought was a secondary explosion, but which I later found it out was a second plane that hit. At that point, Commissioner Gregory instructed Sam Harris to move the car a little bit away from where we had parked it. I believe he parked it on Vesey on the west side of West Street.

At that point I tell you, I don't remember what happened with Sam Harris, or Jace Pincus. All I knew is that me and Commissioner Gregory proceeded south on West Street crossing in front of 1 World Trade Center, making our way to the corner of West and Liberty. There is a barrier that separates the two sides of West Street. We were on the side closer to the twin towers and while we were walking we were getting hit with small fragments of glass. We observed two bodies on the floor, partial bodies. I'm guessing they were jumpers.

As we made our way down West Street to Liberty, there was more and more debris falling. At that point I told Commissioner Gregory I think we should jump over the barrier and walk on the opposite side of West, because we were getting in too close, I was getting really nervous.

Once we got to the corner of West and Liberty, we met up with Chief Barbara, Chief Barbara. They were setting up a command post at the corner. I was there for about 10 minutes or so and what I noticed is we were getting a lot of ambulances starting to pile up on Liberty Street between West and South End Avenue I believe that is. There was no supervision there, so I told Commissioner Gregory I was going to start organizing the vehicles that got there, there had to be almost, about a dozen at the time.

I start setting staging up for some ambulances on the corner of South End and Liberty Street. After about 15 minutes, Chief Kowalczyk pulled up and he whispered to me to just think terrorism. Actually, he said, you know, be alert, just think terrorism. Then I think he might have made his way over to the command post. So again I start setting up the vehicles, I set up a little triage area right at the corner of Liberty and South End.

After about 5 minutes after that, Chief McCracken and Chief Grant came to the location where I was. They took control of the scene. Chief Grant and Chief McCracken instructed the staging to line up on South End off of Liberty so that we were one block west, parallel with the West Side Highway and we set up staging there. They felt it was more safer.

We were setting up. We weren't seeing many patients at this time. The whole area was kind of quiet. I was surprised that we weren't seeing anybody funneling out of the buildings, but I learned later on a lot of people were funneling out like on Church Street and West Broadway because there wasn't many people coming out at all on the West Side Highway from the different towers.

Whatever time it was when that first building started to come down, all we heard was just like a loud thunder that didn't stop. When you looked up you saw the debris starting to fall from the top, and a cloud of smoke on top and it was hard to judge where the debris was going to fall, because it were so high. Your depth perspective.

Everybody started running. Everybody in my area started running down the South End south. A lot of people running into little store fronts on that street. I was afraid to run into the store front because I thought that like the building was going to collapse, like a domino, and I didn't want to be crushed underneath the collapse. Thinking about it now, I don't think I was going to outrun a 110 story building, but I proceeded down South End and I made a right turn on Albany Street and as I turned on Albany I looked over my shoulder and I saw the big cloud of dust that was already on the ground like just making its way down the block, just like a movie.

I continued running down Albany Street and within seconds I was just in total darkness, the dust engulfed me. I had to stop running, I couldn't see where I was and I didn't know what was in front of me, what was around me. Everything was very quiet. Every breath I took in, my mouth was getting filled with debris, dust particles and cement particles. It was turning into like a pasty texture that you could almost chew. I kept spitting it out.

I was having trouble breathing. My eyes were shut. We didn't have any breathing apparatus or anything. I was just leaning up against the building that I was next to and I tried walking, but I kept banging into things in front of me. Again, I couldn't see 2 inches in front of my face. I really said to myself this is how I'm going to die. I can't believe this is how I'm going to die.

I started walking, I'm sure for a very short period of time, I mean seconds, but it felt like it was forever I was standing there. I thought, you know, the dust, it was so dark still. Again I don't know how long it stood pitch black for but it just seemed like it was forever and I just started panicking and I started screaming help, and I heard somebody answer me back. Like they started saying, keep coming, keep coming. Their voice was echoing and I couldn't figure out what was going on.

I started walking a little more just by feel with my right hand against the side of the building. I got to what I thought was the corner of the block, because the building had ended and turned in. It was a step. I stepped up on the step and some guy grabbed my hand and we started walking down and what it was was a parking lot attendant who pulled me into an underground parking garage.

At that point, he had hosed me down, I was full of dust. My eyes, my head, my face, he hosed me down. He put me into a car that he had started up, had an air conditioner running, I guess trying to just get me back to some kind of sense. I mean I was out of it for a little while.

After about 10 minutes, he had -- there was like a little parking lot attendant office there. I went into the office, there was a phone there. I couldn't remember the number to the dispatcher, I was just so out of it. My brother happens to work at 1 Metrotech, where he dispatches for Bear Stearns. So I had called my brother and I told him where I was. I knew where I was because there was a little receipt ticket with the phone number and I said go downstairs to the dispatcher, just tell them where I am, because at this point, I really thought that I was like trapped underneath this garage, because I didn't know that the building just pancaked down. I thought it was just all over the place.

I told him where I was. I gave him the phone number. After about another 5 minutes of sitting down, just catching my breath, I went out a back door of the parking garage. It was visible outside. It was almost like a tannish dust coating. Everything was just covered with dust, 4 or 5 inches deep. It really looked like a war zone. People were just totally covered. It looked almost like sawdust. It was just was just all over there.

I finished walking Albany and now I was on -- like a little pier along the water. I don't know even know what it was. Esplanade. I'm looking at this map. But it was a little pier or boardwalk that runs along the water. All I kept hearing was the firefighters, I guess their alarms when they separate from people, just going off and that keeps sticking in my head.

The police that were there, everybody was walking south. They were directing everybody south. We started walking south. I must have been walking maybe about two minutes and I heard the rumble again. Again, it was the same noise, that thunder that didn't stop. It was the second tower coming down. It was the same scenario. Here comes a big cloud of smoke. Everybody starts running south on this little boardwalk. The people weren't knocking each other over, but I think there were spots where there was a lot of people, people were tripping and falling. I remember seeing like parents holding children in their hand, like covering their mouth and trying to run with them. One or two people fell that were helped up, not by me, but by people next to them. Civilians, police officers, and the smoke hit us again.

It wasn't as dense as the first building, but it was still very difficult to breathe. I'm looking at the map. I wound up running into a little lobby of -- I don't know if it was an office building or a high rise, somewhere around I'm going to say Rector Place, looking at this map, or maybe one more block south and once I was in there they provided us with bathrooms. We were rinsing our eyes and rinsing our face. Again took about 10 minutes to get your composure back after going through this again.

When I came out it was like a big area. I'm going to say it was maybe this Rector Place area. There is a lot of grass. That's where I met back up with Chief McCracken and Chief Grant. At that point there was police boats, fire boats, tug boats. We started loading people on to the boat, who were civilians from that area on to the boats. The boats were taking people I believe to Liberty Island, Liberty State Park and Staten Island.

It took us about 20 minutes to clear that area. The people, they didn't want to get on the boats. They thought those locations weren't convenient or whatever. After we cleared that area, I was also with Lieutenant -- her name will come to me. She's from operations at the time. After we cleared the area an EMT, I don't know his name, pulled up in like a golf cart. Pauline Cronin. She was with us.

At that time, Chief McCracken, Chief Grant, Lieutenant Cronin and myself, we jumped into the golf cart after the area was cleared of civilians. We went to the Staten Island Ferry terminal. That's where we had a triage set up. Once I got there, I was actually treated for about 45 minutes with oxygen and my eyes were irrigated. That's pretty much where I stood up until about 8:30 at night.

Chief McCracken and Chief Grant had left that area. They had to attend a meeting, operations meeting on the scene. I don't know where that meeting was. They had left and Chief Villani was then there. I don't know what time he showed up. Chief Steffens came into the area where I was. I know Chief Brown came there. He was treated and transported. Again most of the patients we saw there were firefighters. Most of it was just eye irrigation. There was a lot of employees from the Department on duty and off duty at this location. A lot of doctors were coming down from the surrounding emergency rooms. We had an overabundance of people.

I stayed there until about 8:30. Chief Villani sent me down to One Liberty Plaza about 8:30, there was some operation going on over there. Again we weren't seeing much patients. They sent me back to be more useful over there. I went over to One Liberty Plaza. I was driven there by -- I don't know -- some vehicle, some pick up or SUV. They had a big staging going on, a treatment center over there. There were reports that they might have to be cutting limbs off, people that were trapped and they had a whole big triage center there. I'm not sure who the supervisors were there. I'm not familiar with them, but everything was running fine there.

My eyes, from being right next to Ground Zero, the Trade Centers, now again, were getting irritated. I couldn't see, my eyes were burning. So I wound up transporting a patient with another BLS unit to Bellevue Hospital at around about midnight. This unit was -- I don't know -- if they were Midwood ambulance company, because they were going back into Brooklyn after we dropped the patient off. They provided me a ride after we went to Bellevue. They provided me a ride to Metrotech.

Because again I went down with Commissioner

Gregory to get the ride down there. They dropped me back off at Metrotech. I got back to Metrotech about 12:30. That's where I met back up with Commissioner Gregory. At that time he told me that Sam and himself, Sam Harris, Jace Pincus had made their way north. I believe they were in Chelsea. That is where we had got separated. When I went south, they had went north.

That was my experience for the day. I must have went home about one o'clock that morning.

Q. I just want to retrace a few things. At the very beginning you say when you first found out about it, were you able to see the building burning from headquarters here or how did you get that information?

A. The Citywide tour commander aides said that you can see it. I remember him saying you can see it from Chief Ganci's office. Chief Ganci is around the corridor from me. I went over to Commissioner Gregory's office. I couldn't see what was going on. I really didn't see what was going on until we were on the Brooklyn Bridge going into Manhattan. It was just an amazing sight.

Q. Were you directed to any specific area by communications or you went on the direction of Commissioner Gregory?

A. I went on the direction of Commissioner Gregory. I was assuming we were going to help out anyway we could. We don't have radio designations, myself, Captain Pincus, Sam Harris. I guess we were going to be more of an aide to Commissioner Gregory, who is the commissioner liaison and help out in any way we could. We were not directed in anyway by operations or had any task assigned to us at the scene.

Q. When you met up with Chief McCracken and Chief Grant, after they directed you to take, you had already set up staging?

A. I had initialized staging till there was another officer on the scene.

Q. Do you know who that officer was?

A. There was no other officer on the scene. That's why I started. I don't know how those ambulances were sent to that location.

Q. Right.

A. But when I saw there was no supervision, I told Commissioner Gregory I was going to take control of what was going on here, because there was just no direction. I started organizing and then once Chief Grant got there, I believe he may have gotten there a little before Lieutenant Cronin and Chief McCracken.

He advised me that he was taking control of the scene. He directed me to have all the ambulances move a little further down and all on one side of the street. This way they have egress.

Q. Did the Chiefs remain there with you?

A. The Chiefs remained there with me. I got separated from them when we all started running when the first building started to come down.

Q. Was Lieutenant Cronin was present with you there too?

A. Lieutenant Cronin was present there also.

Q. What about the crews from the ambulances?

A. There was a lot of Hatzolah ambulances, Hatzolah also had what looked like a MERV there at this location. There were numerous vehicles -- Long Island College Hospital, lot of municipal FDNY vehicles. I had written the units down on paper. I don't know where that paper is. I must have dropped it while I was running. I don't know. I don't want to start rambling off units that I'm not sure. There was, even the people there, the faces I recognize, but I couldn't put a name to them. I can't give you names.

Q. At any time, did you have an opportunity to enter any of the buildings?

A. World Trade Center buildings?

Q. Yes.

A. No, the only buildings I ever ran into was the underground parking garage and then later on during the second collapse I was able to get into another lobby of again, I don't know if it was an office or if it was like an apartment building.

Q. Did you have a handy talky on you?

A. I had a handy talky, the UHF, EMS radio. I didn't need to make any radio communications while I was setting staging up. There was a lot of stuff going on again, Chief Kowalcyzk knew where I was. I didn't make any radio communications because again I wasn't in control of that sector very long once the Chiefs had gotten there. So no, I didn't make any radio communications.

Q. Other than the people that you told me about, the Chiefs, Lieutenant Cronin, were there any other EMTs, fire officers, anybody from our service that you can specifically recognize and put a location to them?

A. The last -- I -- again I said earlier, when me and Commissioner Gregory got to the corner of Liberty Street and West Street, Chief Barbara was at that location. They had started setting up a command post at that location.

I remember seeing when I first exited the car that we parked on Vesey and West while we were walking down the west side, I remember seeing Steve -- Chief Ganci's aide. Steve Mosiello. He was getting stuff out of his vehicle. I didn't see Chief Ganci but I saw Steve.

Q. Where was that?

A. That was on West Street between Vesey and Liberty. His car was parked more towards Vesey. Looking at the map, I guess on the west side of West Street.

Q. Is there anything else that you think is important that you would like to include before we conclude?

A. No.

MR. FEILER: Okay. I am going to conclude the interview. I want to thank you for your time in assisting us in this endeavor. The time now is 852 hours. We are concluding the interview now.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT PASQUALE FELITTI

P. FELITTI

CHRISTOPHER ECCLESTON: Today's date is October 11, 2001. The time is 9:57. My name is Christopher Eccleston of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting and interview with the following individual. Please state your name, title, rank, and assigned command area of the Fire Department of the City of New York regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

PASQUALE FELITTI: My name is Pasquale Felitti, I'm an EMT assigned to EMS Battalion 4.

Q: Were you assigned to the World Trade Center disaster on September 11th, 2001?

A: Yes.

Q: En route to this call, what did you see?

A: You could see the North Tower with a big hole in the side of it. It was kind of chaotic, people running away from it.

Q: When you arrived on the scene, where did you park your vehicle?

A: Parked in between Fulton and Dey street on Church Street.

Q: Can you indicate on the map we provided for you with a 1, the location where you were? Okay? And what vehicle were you in?

A: Vehicle 108.

Q: Vehicle 108, okay. When you arrived there, did any civilians report anything to you?

P. FELITTI

A: No, they just kind pointed us over to another EMS crew where there was people hurt.

Q: Whom did you first report to when you arrived?

A: When we first got there, we didn't report to anybody, there was no one there. It was us, a New York Downtown unit, 4 Henry was on the scene, and 1 Adam. We went over to medic unit, the Downtown unit, and we helped out over there. When the second plane hit, me and my partner were separated. I wound up going with Lt. Melarango towards the South tower to get people out. We didn't go into it but towards there. My partner went with a cop who led him over to a church. There were patients over there. We got separated until the following day.

Q: Okay, what time approximately did you arrive on the scene?

A: We were coming out of New York downtown hospital when the first plane hit. I think we were actually 98.

Q: So the first plane crashed in at 9:06. So it was shortly after that?

A: Yeah, right away. Right after the first plane hit.

Q: 8:48, so you arrived shortly after that? Okay, I'm sorry. What did you do between the time the first plane hit and the second plane hit?

A: We were treating the ambulatory patients. Whoever was left in the area after walking wounded, we just picked up, put them in a bus and got them out of there.

P. FELITTI

Q: Then you said after the second plane hit you went somewhere with Lieutenant…?

A: Melarango

Q: Where did you go?

A: Towards the south tower, which was just hit. We came in between building 5 and building 4. Cause people were coming out. We were just directing traffic. Telling them "walk that way", up towards Church Street, Dey Street, over there.

Q: What did you do once you got over there?

A: Just directed traffic and stuff. That was after the second plane hit. Then they sent me back to go find my partner. When I came back, me and (inaudible) were separated, so I wound up moving the vehicle around to the staging area, which was Vesey and West Street.

Q: Okay, so just indicate on the map with a number 2, where you moved the vehicle to?

A: Okay, I never actually got to Vesey street. I was blocked by fire apparatus on the Westside Highway.

Q: So you never entered any of the World Trade Center buildings?

A: No, we didn't go into them.

Q: What happened after you got over to Vesey and West?

P. FELITTI

A: I was at the first triage center, which is on the corner of West and Vesey Street. I was with Mike D'Angelo, who is one of the communications guys that was there. I was triaging over there, when the first tower started to collapse. When the South Tower collapsed, we evacuated up Vesey Street towards Fulton. Yeah, when the first tower went down, we were right on Vesey Street.

Q: And what did you do in between the time when the first tower collapsed and the second tower?

A: Just re-grouped, there was a lot of dust, you know, a lot of people walking around. They started to set up a triage in a second building in between Vesey and Murray Street, around that area. A fireman was complaining of back pain. He said he was hit by debris and stuff that was falling from the first one. So as we started to triage him, it was awhile after the first building fell, they were like an hour apart, so I guess it was about 15 or 20 minutes after the first one fell that he made his way out to us. As we were assesing him, he said the second building was starting to fall. So me and, I forget the guys name, me and a MetroCare paramedic, we put him into a St. Luke's ambulance that was running, and we transported him to St. Vincent's Hospital. That was after the second building collapsed. His injuries were--he had broken ribs. We think it was a punctured lung because he had no lung sounds on the right side. So we transported him to 21 after the second building collapsed.

Q: You weren't with the St. Luke's crew?

P. FELITTI

A: No, the St. Luke's Crew wasn't there, they left the bus running. Cause what happened when the first building collapsed, the Lieutenants and stuff along the side on Vesey Street said take any ambulance that's running and move it. So people moving them. We got the patient. There was a St. Lukes bus there. It was running. So we just loaded him up and took off.

Q: Who is the person you were with?

A: It was myself. I was driving, and the paramedic from MetroCare. Paul, I think his name was.

Q: Okay. Do you know approximately what time this was? This was after the Second Tower?

A: After the Second Collapse.

Q: Okay, the Second Tower collapsed at 10:29.

A: Between 10:30 and 10:40 is when we left. Cause there was still dust everywhere. You couldn't see where you were going.

Q: Okay, and you brought this patient to hospital…?

A: 21, St. Vincent's.

Q: Okay, and from St. Vincent's?

A: From St. Vincent's we went back down to the Chelsea Pier's staging. That's where they had all the ambulances staging.

Q: Do you know about what time you got back to Chelsea Piers?

A: Probably between 10:45 and 11:00, give or take.

P. FELITTI

Q: Okay.

A: Yeah, around that time.

Q: Okay, and what did you do after you got to the Chelsea station?

A: I reported to the Lieutenant there, I forget who it was. I told him I was half crew. We wound up taking a group of doctors from there to South Street, the ferry where they had set up another triage area. So me and a guy from the Bronx, who was just one of the vehicle movers or something like that. Me and him took the doctors over to the ferry. They sent--they left me over there. That's where I spent the remainder of the day from there from about 11:00 to 4 or 5 in the afternoon.

Q: And what did you see over at the triage area?

A: At the triage they did—walking wounded. I think they brought in a couple of firemen and police officers. Stuff like that. Not much came through there. Yeah firefighters and some police.

Q: Do you remember what any of their names were?

A: No, I don't remember.

Q: Okay, that's fine. Is there anything else you would like to tell me about the events that happened up until approximately 12 noon on this day?

A: Not much, I mean, I think we did triage a little too close to the actual MCI. I mean, nobody knew the building was gonna fall like that, but, I mean, I think the engineers or somebody should have gotten there faster keep the firemen out. Like they said on the news about the jet fuel, it burns at 3,000 degrees or something. I mean, no one ever expected something like this, so you can't say the Fire Department got caught without their pants.

Q: Did you make any radio communications during this time that would be important for us to know about?

A: Just that we were transporting one to St. Vincent's.

Q: Okay, anything else that you would like to add?

A: No.

Q: Okay, I thank you very much for having this interview with me. This interview is concluded at 10:06 AM. The counter on the cassette player is 169.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT WILLIAM MELARANGO

Interview Date: October 11, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. ECCLESTON: Today's date is October 11th, 2001. The time is 10:20. This is Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name, rank, title and assigned command area of the Fire Department of the City of New York regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

LIEUTENANT MELARANGO: Lieutenant William Melarango shield number 407 assigned to Battalion 4 on September 11th.

Q. Were you assigned to the World Trade Center disaster on September 11th, 2001?

A. Yes.

Q. In route to the alarm, what did you see?

A. I saw the north tower, smoke coming from the north tower.

Q. Upon arrival where did you park your vehicle?

A. I parked my command car on Broadway and Fulton, facing westbound.

Q. Can you just indicate on the map with a

1 where you had parked your vehicle.

A. I did.

Q. On arrival did any civilians report anything to you?

A. No, not directly towards me. Civilians were running away from the scene.

Q. Did you report to anybody when you first arrived there?

A. I saw a treatment area that was established in front of the Millennium Hotel on Church and Fulton Street.

Q. You went to this triage area?

A. I went to the treatment area and saw Lieutenant Medjuck and Captain Olszewski and Lieutenant Davila.

Q. What did you do at this point?

A. Just assisted with patient care details. There was a supply truck that pulled up with some additional oxygen tanks and back boards, which I helped off-load. Trying to get personnel established, make sure everybody had helmets on, safety considerations.

Q. About what time did you arrive on the scene?

A. I heard the explosion. I didn't see the second plane hit. I'm looking at your schedule here. So it had to be 9:05, 9:06 a.m. when I got to the building.

Q. What did you do next?

A. We assisted with patient care. We assisted trying to get patients treated and triaged and transported. Also citywide came on, asking to respond up to Park Row. There was a unit there that was involved in an MVA. I walked up there. I determined the MVA was minor. I told the unit, "Just go back to your staging area and the paperwork will be taken care of afterwards and I reported back down to the treatment area."

Q. Okay. What happened next?

A. Patients were coming in. I was mainly concerned about falling debris. There were bodies and body parts falling, but there was also parts of the building that were coming down. We were starting to think about moving the triage area to a safer location, to the lobby of the hotel.

At some point we heard the rumble, and the building came down and everybody scrambled.

Q. You were in front of what building?

A. The Millennium Hotel.

Q. The Millennium Hotel.

At any time did you go into any of the World Trade Center buildings prior to their collapse?

A. I tried getting into Five World Trade Center to see if there was a triage area established in there initially. I couldn't get in. There were too many people coming out. So I really couldn't get in there.

Q. What did you do after the first collapse?

A. After the first collapse I had gone back down to Church Street because I was concerned about two of my crew members that were there. They had pulled up in an ambulance, vehicle 219. When I got back down to Church Street, the vehicle was on fire. I didn't see anybody in the truck. I was concerned about the oxygen tanks exploding, so I backed off.

A couple minutes after that a couple firemen brought an ESU cop whose arm was badly injured. I saw a van and ambulance up on Vesey and Church. We brought him over there, and I started to dress up his arm.

At that time a fireman brought a DOA over to the ambulance, which I believe was Father Doyle.

Q. Father Judge?

A. Judge, I'm sorry, Father Judge.

I was treating the police officer's arm. We were wrapping it up when we heard the rumble from the second building and it start to collapse. We scrambled again.

Q. Then the second building came down.

A. The second building came down. I didn't go back down to -- I didn't go back down to Church Street after that. I went up to Broadway by City Hall Park. There was a couple of municipal ambulances there which set up a temporary treatment area. There were a lot of firemen coming to us with debris in their eyes.

Q. What was this location?

A. It was right across the street from City Hall Park on Broadway by the Duane Reade store. I'm not sure what the street is.

There were two ambulances there, two municipal ambulances there. We set up like a little mini treatment area. We had several firemen come up to us, several police officers. We flushed their eyes out, put them on oxygen if they were having some trouble breathing.

After I think maybe about 30, 45 minutes EMS citywide came up on the air and requested a supervisor, if there were any supervisors on the air. They made the request several times. Nobody answered. I came up on the air and told them I was available.

They asked me to report to -- establish a staging area at West Broadway and Chambers, which I did. I went up to Broadway and Chambers. When I got there, there was approximately maybe 20, 25 ambulances there mixed: municipal, voluntary, volunteer ambulances. We started establishing a treatment area there.

A few minutes after that a police officer came up to me and told me that the facade in front of Seven World Trade Center was gone and they thought there was an imminent collapse of Seven World Trade Center. I felt the location we were at was too close to Seven World Trade Center.

So we advised citywide we were moving the staging area to North End and Greenwich Street.

Q. Okay.

A. At North End and Greenwich Street we established -- myself and Lieutenant Eppinger from Battalion 08.

Q. Approximately what time was this that you moved?

A. Probably around 11, 11:30. We reestablished at North End and Greenwich Street. We had a new staging area set up over there.

During the course of the day, assets just started showing up at the location. We didn't request them; they just started showing up. I had two bus loads of doctors and PAs. I think they might have just been driving by. I don't know. Or else citywide assigned them over there. But they came. They came with some medical equipment.

We set up a triage and treatment area in front one of the office plazas. We had set up a hazmat sector, a morgue sector. It just became a larger operation as time went on. At any given time I probably had about 40 ambulances. We were ready to do even minor surgery at the location.

A camera crew came up to me, one of the production crews from some film company. We established and had lights set up in case we were going to be operating at night, which was a possibility. We also set up some sky lights for night.

We treated approximately maybe 20 patients, all secondary to the event. They were all respiratory. We had some cardiac patients. Not directly related to the event. They were transported, treated and transported.

About 10 or 11:00 I went back down to the command center at Chambers and West and said I thought the assets were not being utilized and recommended that they downsize that operation and close it down. They agreed.

Q. What time was this?

A. About 10 or 11:00 that night. Like I said, we treated 20 patients, but that was in the first couple of hours that we were there. As time went on, we weren't getting any patients at our sector.

So I went down to Chambers and West and spoke to Chief Kowalczyk, and I recommended they close it down. He concurred. We released the ambulances back up to the Chelsea Piers. I also had MERV 3 at that location, Queens north. Myself and Lieutenant Eppinger and one physician and a couple of EMTs were responding to Battery Park City at the south end. We stayed there and we established -- there was a treatment area established.

Captain Parra was there. We stayed there. I was finally relieved around 3:00 in the morning.

Q. Is there anything else you'd like to add to this in regard to the events that happened from the time the first plane went in to approximately 12 noon?

A. Well, it was just a very large event. The EMS assets were just initially overwhelmed with patients, so there really wasn't time to get a regular ICS going. There were several sectors that were established.

There was very little command and control, I felt, in the initial first hour. There was no clear incident commander or chain of command. I thought there was a lot of free-lancing going on, especially there was a lot of free-lancing going on with voluntaries that belonged to hospitals, private hospitals. A lot of these people are not familiar with EMAP and the ICS system. So they weren't really reporting to anybody. They were just grabbing people to and going.

I think had the incident -- had the buildings not come down, the incident would have been allowed to work itself out. I think the EMAP and ICS would have eventually kicked in. There wasn't any time.

As far as any incidents like this again, the preplan staging was that we were supposed to stage inside the building and establish a forward triage area. It was just a very large incident. There just wasn't any time to get the ICS and EMAP.

Q. Is there anything else you'd like to add?

A. No.

Q. Thank you very much for conducting this interview with me.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT BRIAN CIRILLO

Interview Date: October 11, 2001

CHRISTOPHER ECCLESTON: Today is October 11, 2001. The time is 9:22 AM. This is Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department. I am conducting an interview with the following individual…please state your name, rank, title, and assigned command area of the Fire Department of the City of New York regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

BRIAN CIRILLO: Brian Cirillo, EMT, Battalion 4, 5523.

Q: Brian, did you respond to the World Trade disaster on September 11, 2001?

A: Yes I did.

Q: En route to the alarm, what did you see?

A: En route to the alarm, I saw the first building had been hit by a plane and smoke was coming out of the top of the building. So I turned my vehicle around and went towards it.

Q: So you were on your way home?

A: Yes, correct.

Q: Correct? So you were in your personal vehicle and you parked your vehicle and began to respond on foot?

A: Correct.

Q: Okay. Where did you park your car?

A: I parked my car underneath, right outside the Battery Tunnel exit on the Manhattan side.

Q: On arrival at the World Trade Center, did any civilians report anything to you?

A: No civilians. A firefighter actually approached me and told me they were setting up triage across the street while I was in front of the building. And they told me they were sitting up triage across the street, so I went over there.

Q: So whom did you report to when you arrived?

A: When I went across the street, there was no real commander over there. There was a female Lieutenant over there, I never even got the name. She had a command board. We would just wait for anyone to come out. Anyone who needed any help.

Q: Were you given a specific assignment?

A: Not a specific assignment. We were to hold still and wait for the people to come out.

Q: Were you asked to assist any specific units?

A: No.

Q: What was the exact location, to the best of your memory, of this staging area?

A: In front of the American Express Building. Westside Highway, more towards the divider of the Westside Highway in front of that building?

Q: Did you ever enter any of the buildings prior to their collapse?

A: No, I got in front of the building and a firefighter had told me that they were setting up triage across the street, so I went over there.

Q: Okay. Can you tell me what happened next? You were at this staging area, what happened after that?

A: What happened next was we were waiting for people to come out, just trying to do whatever we could, just witnessing everything that was going on. People trying to get out of the buildings and people actually jumping out of the buildings. After maybe 20 minutes, 30 minutes that we were there, one of the buildings came down.

Q: Where were you when the first building came down?

A: Same spot. Right in front of the AMEX building.

Q: And who were you with?

A: I was with a group of EMTs and paramedics just waiting. No one really got anyone's name. We just kind of waited, kind of shocked, not really talking that much.

Q: What happened after the first building came down?

A: The first building came down, we basically ran up Vesey street towards the water. I had to duck behind a car to protect myself from anything falling. Once the smoked cleared out a little bit, we got up and started looking for people. We found a few people and we set up another triage, I guess on North End. I forget what building, it wasn't the Merril Lynch Building, it was the one on the opposite side. We were bringing people there, inside the building. It was still running, there was water there, there was a big open space that we could feel protected in.

Q: Okay.

A: We were just going back and forth to the front of the building, trying to take anyone who needed any kind of help, bring them over there.

Q: Okay. And you continued doing this…

A: We continued doing that until I actually, what happened was, I started walking back. I got to pretty much the same spot I was before when we heard the other crash and the other building started coming down. And we had to do the same thing we did the first time, just take off. I wound up diving into the front of the AMEX building, which wasn't great cover cause all the windows had blown out. But it was the first place we found.

Q: Okay. Who were you with? At this point do you know who you were with?

A: I believe around this time, the only man I remember being there, the only name I got was Chief Wells. I didn't get anyone else.

Q: Okay. Did you remove any injured civilians or members of the service?

A: Yeah, after about 20 or 30 minutes of doing what we were doing, we had commandeered an ambulance that was sitting there. It was pretty much the only one still intact, and the keys happened to still be in it. We found two firemen and another civilian who suffered I guess, smoke inhalation and couldn't breathe very well. We put them in there and tried to head uptown to the hospital.

Q: And this was about what time? You said after the second tower went down?

A: After the second tower went down. After the second tower went down, we continued looking, digging through whatever we could dig through. We looked in the AMEX building to see if anyone was left in there, went over to the front of the World Trade Building, pretty much all that was around us was firefighters. There still was a lot of smoke. Across the street happened to be a parking lot. The parking lot seemed to be pretty much on fire. Every car in there just looked like it was on fire. There was black smoke covering everything. So I couldn't stay that long with no breathing devise. Looking for whoever we could find. We happened to find 2, 3. I think three.

Q: So then you loaded them in an ambulance. Did you have a partner at that time?

A: No, I didn't have a partner. The chief who happened to be there with me said take them uptown, to the furthest hospital. Cause what was around was basically jam-packed. I did that. I dropped them off. At that time I asked them to flush my eyes out with saline solution, and I went back.

Q: Okay. Did you know what time you got back…approximately?

A: Approximately 2:00.

Q: About two o'clock?

A: Yeah. Give or take, you know..

Q: Okay, is there anything you would like to add to this, to the events that happened prior to 12 noon.

A Prior to12 noon? That was after the towers collapsed, no?

Q: Correct. Well, the North Tower collapsed, which was the second tower at 10:29. And then you said about 20 minutes later, so that would be a little bit before 11, you transported two patients.

A: Yeah. Give or take, it might have been longer. Well, personally, it was just horrible. I felt helpless unfortunately, people who really needed the help were upstairs and we couldn't get to them. It was a bad situation all around, I couldn't do anything for anyone really.

Q: Okay, thank you for doing this interview with me. This interview is concluded at 9:31 hours. The counter on the recorder is at 163.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT ALLEN CRUZ

A. CRUZ

CHRISTOPHER ECCLESTON: Today's date is October 11, 2001. The time is 10:23 and I am Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department. I am conducting an interview with the following individual…please state your name, rank, title, assigned command area, shield number of the Fire Department of the City of New York regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

ALLEN CRUZ: Hi, my name is Allen Cruz. My shield number is 3361 and I work for the New York City Fire Department, Emergency Medical Services and my title is LSU and de-con specialist.

Q: Were you assigned to the World Trade Center disaster on September 11, 2001?

A: Yes, I was.

Q: En route to the alarm, what did you see?

A: Well, I got there after the first crash, just before the second crash. I went down Fulton Street, and I parked my vehicle on Fulton at the corner of Church street.

Q: Can you indicate on the map where you parked your vehicle with a number "1?"

A: Sure. A number 1? Right here.

Q: Okay. Upon arrival did any civilians report anything to you?

A: No, not at all. Everyone was there screaming and running for their lives.

Q: Whom did you first report to when you arrived there?

A: I reported to no one.

Q: To no one?

A: Right.

Q: What did you do when you arrived there?

A: When I got there, I couldn't believe what I was seeing. I got to the corner of Fulton and Church, I saw a couple of my vehicles parked on Church Street, right in front of the World Trade Center. As I exited my vehicle, I saw this huge fire up on the building you know? Numerous people running out and running up the block towards me, towards my vehicle screaming and hollering in panic.

Q: What did you do next?

A: I did…again, I couldn't believe what I was seeing. I was in shock and what I did was I helped some of the people get up off the floor, cause they were falling and tripping all over themselves, and I kept telling them to keep on running. A lot of people, they thought they were safe. They ran out of the building, across the street and like myself, they thought it was just the average fire. They proceeded to just stand there and look up, and again, they thought they were safe because they had crossed the street by my vehicle. As myself, I thought I was safe, and we just stood there in awe, just looking up. Again, while I was there looking up, there were still people running and falling and I proceeded to run to them, pick them up and shove them and tell them keep running, please, keep moving, keep moving. Just stood there like everybody else, just watching this unfold.

Q: Okay, how long did you do this for approximately?

A: I did that up until the second plane hit.

Q: When the second plane hit, what did you do?

A: Well, I was standing, again, helping these people get up, looking up, watching these people jump out of the windows. Really, I was in shock. I couldn't believe what I was seeing. Or maybe I didn't want to believe what I was seeing. As I was standing, there was a bunch of people hiding behind and around my vehicle. As we were standing there, this one lady to my left grabbed me really really tight, my forearm, my left forearm, and we were both looking up at this fire. We both hear this rumble, and I felt a vibration, we looked slightly to the left, all of us, there's a whole bunch of us right next to my vehicle, and here comes this plane, a huge plane. The lady next to me says Oh my God, it's gonna hit the building. I didn't want to give her false information so I said Gee, I don't think so, well I hope not. I mean we're looking at it sort of in three dimensions, so I'm thinking it's gonna go behind the building. From where we're standing, it's gonna go right behind it, but it was too big and far too low. At that moment I said it's gonna hit, it's actually gonna hit. And it hit. She screamed, she said oh my god. At which point I said everybody just run, and there were some curse words. I told everybody you gotta run, run, run. They proceeded to run. I in turn, jumped into my vehicle and a whole bunch of debris just came crashing down on top of my vehicle at which point I said no, I exited my vehicle, and I too ran behind my vehicle. Unbeknownst to me, there were still people hiding not only behind, but underneath my vehicle. A few seconds, a few minutes maybe went by and we gathered our thoughts and I came out from behind my vehicle and I told everyone who was behind my vehicle and in the streets to run, to keep running. At which time, I ran towards the building, to Church Street. Some of the EMS people were there, and I said, everybody drop what you're doing and just get the hell out of here. Run, run, just leave everything, just go, run, run. At the same time, there was a lot of debris coming down, and they did. They dropped what they were doing, and they just scattered all over the place. Again, people were just falling and stumbling, and I kept picking them up and pushing them to run. Then I started picking up all the equipment that the guys left behind. I started gathering stuff off the street, I started putting it by my vehicle, on the street corner. I wanted to compile everything in one neat little corner. Maybe it's a habit. That's what I do, that's my job. I retrieve equipment. I didn't want to abandon everything, so I started moving all the equipment out of the street, towards my side of the street, when the building collapsed.

Q: This is when the first building collapsed?

A: Yes.

Q: Okay. What did you do after the first building collapsed?

A: I ran like hell. I left everything there and I ran like hell. I ran to my vehicle, and I jumped inside. Just as I was about to go into gear, I noticed that there were feet underneath my vehicle. So I left it in park, jumped out, and there were people still hiding underneath it. At which time I said you people gotta go, you cannot stay here, you gotta go. The rumbling's coming down. They got up out, I dragged the lady out from underneath, there were still people around and behind it, I told them you all gotta run, and they did. At which time the thing came down, a big wall of smoke came and I hid behind my vehicle. I just took a big breath and just waited for it to pass.

Q: You stayed there? What happened next?

A: I don't know how much time elapsed, but it got really dark and I couldn't breath. I was covered in soot. Again, I don't know how long it lasted.

Q: Were you there when the second tower collapsed?

A: Not in that location, no.

Q: Okay, where did you go between from when the first tower collapsed to the second tower?

A: I got back in my vehicle when I thought it was safe. Again, I was facing Church street. So what I did was, I made a right onto Church, stunned. I was stunned, I still could not believe what was happening.

Q: I'm sure.

A: I made a left on Vesey. Vesey and Vestry always get me confused.

Q: You came up, you turned onto Church…

A: Vestry? Vesey. I came down here, I made a left on Vesey. And I proceeded to go between number five World Trade and number seven World Trade.

Q: Approximately right here?

A: I came across here, right. Crossing West Street. Somewhere around here, I don't recall. They say I parked somewhere alongside on the right side of this street here. There were ambulances all parked on the left, and I parked on the right.

Q: So you parked approximately right here?

A: Right about, I believe so.

Q: Which is in front of 7 World Trade Center, is that correct?

A: No. We passed 7.

Q: Here's 7.

A: Oh, 7. Ok, West street. Sorry, forgive me. Here's West.

Q: This is Vesey.

A: No, we passed this. Somewhere along this street, before West Side Highway.

Q: Okay, so by the telephone company building?

A: Yeah, I would have to assume.

Q: So you were on Vesey Street, just before West. Is that correct?

A: Just before West.

Q: So you were approximately right here?

A: Yeah.

Q: Okay. The map is gonna indicate a 2 where the LSU is moved to next. Correct?

A: Yeah.

Q: Okay, after you got there…

A: Would this be North End Street here, the West Side Highway?

Q: This would be the West Side Highway.

A: Okay.

Q: North End is over here

A: Okay, I got it. Right about there.

Q: So after you parked there, the first tower has already come down. The second tower has not come down yet, is that correct?

A: Right, that is correct.

Q: You parked here, what did you do next?

A: Here, again, I don't recall.

Q: Do your best.

A: Again, there was a bunch of guys there. There was a bunch of guys there. All of the ambulances, like seven of them parked on one side of the street and I was on the other side. Again, I was the only vehicle parked there. We came out, we couldn't believe what was happening. We started to treat people, they were treating people here. I recall that. Then somebody said run, the other building's gonna fall. Again, I don't know. I don't recall if the other building fell at this point, or as we left. There's a moment there where I don't remember.

Q: To the best of your memory, I don't want to pressure you.

A: I think they said to move cause there's a threat of the building falling, or a threat of another plane. They said another plane was gonna hit, so run. So we proceeded, everyone got into their vehicles and we proceeded to go up to West End Street. The Lieutenant was standing there facing the units.

Everyone got into their vehicles and we abandoned that area. There was a threat of the building falling, or another plane was gonna hit. We proceeded towards North End Street.

Q: North End, okay, this is North End Street.

A: As we approached the Lieutenant, he had all the vehicles. He was telling them all to go to the left, go to the left. He told me to go to the right, which is towards North End I guess, by the marina. There's a marina there somewhere.

Q: The marina would be right here.

A: Okay, so we came up here, this street. Everybody went this way, and I went that way. Right over here somewhere, cause I remember there's a building in front of us.

Q: So right here on North End, just south of Vesey is where you parked your vehicle next?

A: Yes.

Q: Okay, the map is gonna indicate with a number 3 where your LSU was parked next. Okay, so now you parked over here, has the second tower come down yet? Or you're not sure? If you're not sure that's fine.

A: A building came down, only I don't know if it was number 7 or number 2.

Q: Okay, number 7 didn't come down till much later.

A: So then it was number 2 that came down.

Q: So then number 2 came down…

A: Yeah. Well, it didn't come down that time. The guys were setting up triage at some hotel over here, and we were treating people here. We were treating an awful lot of people here.

Q: On North End, just south of Vesey, you were treating people?

A: As we were doing that, somebody said, there's another plane. That's it, another plane is coming, another plane is gonna crash. We heard this rumble, that's when the building came down. We all thought it was a plane. Everybody just, firefighters, myself, we were treating people, everybody just threw themselves down to the floor, and they hid all around my vehicle. You know, anything they could find, they just threw themselves down. We actually thought it was another plane. That's right. That's when the other building came down. Because we heard the rumble (BOOM). Just crashing down, I thought it was another plane. Yeah, exactly, that's what happened.

Q: Tower two came down, then what happened next? What did you do? What did you see?

A: Tower 2 came down, everybody evacuated the hotel area where they had the temporary triage center. Everybody got in their vehicle. Actually, they didn't get in their vehicles, they ran. Everybody just evacuated. They said run, clear, and everybody just took off. I again, stood. I stood there. I went to the hotel, it was empty. See, I wouldn't leave the vehicle cause I have to stay with that vehicle at all times. I have all the extra equipment in case the guys need something. Plus, my portable radio was going dead. If they needed me, I needed to be on the air, so what I kept doing was going into my vehicle and monitoring the radio in my vehicle, instead of my portable, so I kept switching back and forth. The building came down, everyone took off, I hid behind my vehicle. I hid outside my vehicle, I was looking up this street here.

Q: Up Vesey Street?

A: Vesey. I just saw this huge ball of smoke coming at me. So I was trying to time it. I was trying to wait for it and time it. I escaped the first one, so I figured, okay, no sweat. I took a deep breath, get down, and just wait for it to pass. But unbeknownst to me, I'm looking up the street her, I hear this rumbling sound coming from behind me. As I'm crouched down, and as I turned around, I see this huge ball of smoke coming. I didn't expect it to come from behind me. It came around the building, and it came from behind me, so it kind of caught me off guard. So I just laid myself down on the floor, by the tire, I took a deep breath and I just waited. It blew past me, and I waited a few seconds. I found my door, I couldn't see anything. I found my door, and I jumped into my vehicle. While doing so, I bumped my head up against the steering wheel. So I crouched myself underneath my steering wheel, by the pedals, and I just crouched and waited. I don't know how long, but I just waited there until I was able to see light. Then I got out of my vehicle, there was people still scurrying around, but it was somewhat deserted, very dismal. I walked over to the temporary triage center, and there was absolutely nobody, not even anybody in the hotel, in the lobby. A moment ago there was people there, but now there was nobody. There was like, seven vehicles parked in front, and no body. So everybody ran towards Chambers Street.

Q: So they ran North on North End Street, towards Chambers?

A: Right, then at this point, I noticed that some of the vehicles had their ignition keys still in the ignition. So I jumped in the vehicle, I turned it on, and I drove it to where everybody was staging at Chambers Street. Then I walked all the way back, got another vehicle, and took it over there and parked it. Came back, the third vehicle wouldn't start, it had the keys in it and it was dead. So I walked back to my truck, my LSU and I went straight over to where that vehicle was, took out my cables, and I jumped it, jump started it. I legally parked my vehicle, to this day it bothers me, cause the street was deserted. Instead of just leaving my vehicle there once I got that vehicle started, I actually got into my vehicle and legally parked it. I proceeded to move that vehicle, I jumped it. I moved two, I jumped two. Then all the other people were here.

Q: Other people were on Chambers and North End?

A: Yeah. Then one of the fellows that was here said that he had left his vehicle in front of mine, vehicle 240. I remember seeing it in front of me. So I said okay, give me your keys and I'll go and get your vehicle. He said please don't got there, don't go, it's dangerous. I said look, you need the vehicle, I'll go get it for you. I can walk faster than you it's no big deal, it's no problem, I will handle it. He gave me the keys and I walked all the way back and I got his vehicle. Actually, I didn't get his vehicle. When I got to his vehicle, he had given me the wrong key. That pissed me off. I had to walk all the way back to him, that was his vehicle. I said look, you gave me the wrong damn key, at which point he said I'm going with you. I said okay, fine. So we both walked all the way back, he got into his vehicle, I got into mine, and I waited for him to start his vehicle up in case he needed my help, in case he needed my jump. He got it started, the lights came on, he made a U-turn, he pulled out, and I pulled out with him. We all met at Chambers Street.

Q: Do you know about what time this was that you finally got up there?

A: Honestly, no sir. I could not tell you. The time I couldn't tell you.

Q: I'm sure it was all a blur.

A: Yeah, I was lost for time. I didn't think of looking at my watch or nothing.

Q: After you got to Chambers and North End, what did you do up there?

A: At which time I proceeded down Chambers Street and I parked my vehicle on the corner of Chambers and West.

Q: Okay. Right here?

A: Chambers and West Street, right on this side of the street. Actually, I parked it right in front of I think it was the BMCC College.

Q: Okay, so the number 4 indicates where your vehicle was parked next, on West and Chambers. When you got there, what happened next?

A: I stood there with my vehicle, I stood there and I started watching this whole operation unfold. Units started coming, vehicles started coming, bosses started coming, Police Department, Fire Department, people started coming. They just all convened on that one corner. I just stood there and watched that whole operation unfold. Every time when my EMS people came-- the command truck came and the chiefs came, I reported to them, I said look, I'm parked over here. I said if you need anything, I got the LSU parked on this corner. They said okay, what I need from you Allen (that was my chief) is I need the table that we have that they can write stuff, I have that table.

Q: Like, the command board?

A: Exactly. I went to my vehicle, I got it, I gave it to him. For the next thirty- something hours, I just stood with my truck right there in that corner. I was there until Wednesday, the next day.

Q: Wow, that's a long time. Is there anything else you would like to add to this, anything else you would like to tell me about the events that happened up until about noon that day?

A: Nothing that you haven't already heard or seen, or felt for yourself. I mean there was nothing to really say to describe this whole catastrophe. It's really hard to describe to be perfectly honest,, I mean to see this happening, it's really hard to describe. No, I can honestly tell you, eighteen years plus on this job, and I've seen the worst the city has to offer. But nothing to this magnitude. The feeling was so overwhelming. It was an incredible thing, I'm really lost for words at this time. I really am, forgive me.

Q: No, please, no forgiveness necessary. I thank you very much for allowing me to conduct this interview.

A: You're very welcome.

Q: The time is 11:44, the counter on the tape player is at 322.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT PATRICIA ONDROVIC

P. ONDROVIC

CHRISTOPHER ECCLESTON: Today's date is October 11, 2001. The time is 6:48 AM, and this is Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department. I am conducting an interview with the following individual…please state your name, rank, title, and assigned command area of the Fire Department of the City of New York, regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

PATRICIA ONDROVIC: Patricia Ondrovic, shield 1634, EMTD, assigned to Battalion 8.

Q: Were you assigned to the World Trade Center disaster on September 11, 2001?

A: Yes.

Q: En route to the alarm, what did you see?

A: I saw the two towers burning.

Q: On arrival, did any civilians report anything to you?

A: No.

Q: Where did you park your vehicle when you arrived?

A: In the middle of Vesey Street between West and whatever is East of Vesey.

Q: On this map, can you indicate with a number 1 where you parked your vehicle?

A: Um…it was on Vesey between West and the West Side Highway so, it was, I'm not sure if it was this block or that block.

Q: Okay, just approximate and put a number 1.

A: I guess it was over here.

Q: Okay, and what vehicle were you in?

A: Vehicle 90.

Q: Vehicle 90. Whom did you first report to and where?

A: On Vesey and West, in the middle of the block, there was an EMS captain. I never got his name, I don't know who he was. I said I was 07 Charlie, he said park it over there. That was the last I saw of him.

Q: Were you given a specific assignment?

A: No. Stand by. Take the equipment out of the vehicle and stand by.

Q: Were you asked to assist any specific units?

A: No.

Q: Can you tell me what you did when you arrived at that location?

A: We took the stretcher and all the crash equipment out of the bus and we formed up alongside one of the buildings on Vesey. I don't remember which number it was. We were in a line of several other ambulances. Next to us was a St. Claire's ambulance and a Cabrini Ambulance. I think there was only one other EMS ambulance on that block at the time I was there. That was vehicle 350, 08 David. I didn't know a lot of the people there, I didn't know the EMS captain that was there. There were no patients that we could see at that point. I think they were trying to set up a triage in front of the building that the ambulances were all parked at. I guess we were supposed to be the first on the wave to take patients out, and there was a Tex-Mex restaurant across the street. I went in to use the bathroom, that's where the Police were using their command center. I saw a police captain that I knew, and he came out to me. He looked absolutely terrified, he was shaking, he was pale, he was sweating. I looked at him, I said what's wrong? He said there's another plane headed our way, and they just blew up the Pentagon. I said, another plane? What are you talking about? I hadn't realized that planes had hit this, I thought they just set bombs off. I didn't realize when I got there that planes hit it. I said, what do you mean another plane? He said two planes hit the World Trade Center. So I'm thinking a little Cessena. How can a little Cessena do all that damage? He said no, 757s. I said big things? See I was there for about 25 minutes before I knew that planes had crashed into this. We just got assigned to do stand-by. We didn't know what the stand-by was. I mean, who thinks something like that? You just think they hit it again. So I said, what do you mean there's another one headed this way? He said, it's on the TV, there's a TV in there and it said that the Pentagon has been hit. Then we all went outside cause they had on the police radio that there was another plane headed in our direction, we all went outside and started looking up in the sky. Then the EMS captain said everyone grab your equipment, get to your vehicles and stay with your vehicles. My partner and I grabbed our stretcher, went to put it in the back of our vehicle, and at that time, I think it was the lobby of the building behind us blew out. Everybody started running, I didn't see him again that day. He got thrown one way, I got thrown the other way. I started running towards the West Side Highway, and there was another building on the corner, I guess it was a federal building, cause it was all the green and gray uniforms with the Smokey the Bear hats, the cops in there. I went to run in the lobby cause all of a sudden you couldn't see anything. There was smoke, there was debris, there was everything flying around. I ran into the lobby cause I had no idea what had happened and the cops that were in there were telling everybody get out, get out, get out. Where are you gonna go? Stuff's blowing up. So I ran back out and I started running west again. At that point, there was a car on the corner of I think I was here at that point, on the West Side Highway.

Q: West Side Highway and Vesey?

A: And Vesey, yeah. I was still on Vesey, cause the building that blew up on me was on Vesey, it was on the corner next to the West Side Highway. Cause I know I was running west, I didn't run that way. Thank God, I would have been dead had I run the other way. But I ran towards the West Side Highway, and I kept running up Vesey. As I was running up Vesey, the first car blew up on me on the corner of Vessey and the West Side Highway. That set my turnout coat on fire, that set my hair on fire, and that set my feet on fire. I kept running. I got news for you, those turn out coats need to be called burn out coats, cause this thing caught up in flames. They cut two inches off my hair in less that two minutes, my coat was completely engulfed, and that was the only way I could see where I was running at that point, because I had a glow from my coat.

There's hundreds of cops all running up there, and I ended up running through this park, and I couldn't even see where I was running anymore. I kept running North.

Q: Through North Park?

A: I guess that's North Park. It's a big green, grassy area, and there's nothing there. As I was running up here, two or three more cars exploded on me. They weren't near any buildings at that point, they were just parked on the street. The traffic guys hadn't gotten a chance to tow anything yet, cause this was all during the first hour I guess of this thing happening. So there were still cars parked on the street that were completely independent of that. Three cars blew up on me, stuff was being thrown. I went home all bruised that day. Thank God it was only bruises. I just ran into this park along with a bunch of other people, and stuff was still blowing up, I don't think I looked back, but you couldn't see anything, everything was just black. I was running and I was falling over people, cause people were crawling on the ground cause they couldn't see anymore. I just kept on running north. I could smell water, so I just kept on running towards the water, cause I knew that my coat was on fire, and I figured well, if I can see a boat over the water, I'm just gonna jump onto the boat and take that thing to Jersey, cause no one wants to blow up Jersey. Stuff is still blowing up behind me, as I'm running. I can hear stuff exploding. I could hear rumbling, the street under me was moving like I was in an earthquake. I've been in those, so I know what they feel like. It felt like an earthquake. There was no where safe to go. As I was running north in this park, and then I could start seeing again a little bit, and I just kept looking in the sky. Cause the captain was saying there's another plane heading in our direction, I was looking for another plane. I saw something in the sky, it was a plane, but it was way out. It looked like it was over Jersey or something, then it wasn't there anymore. I saw a small fireball, and it was gone. I saw two other planes. One came in one way, and the other came in the other way, and there was a plane in the middle that was way far off in the distance. Then the plane in the middle just disappeared into a little fire ball. It looked like the size of a golf ball from where I could see it. And the other two planes veered off into opposite directions. I just kept on running north. About fifteen blocks later, I had no idea that that was just the first tower that had come down. I had no idea at that time that that's what that was, and the other buildings were being affected, of course, by that building falling. I found another ambulance, I believe it was the 08 Adam, because it was Valdivia and Jose Perez. Joseph Valdivia used to be my partner on tour 3, and when I finally caught up to them, I told them what was happening. I told them whatever you do, don't go back that way cause they just blew up triage. I thought that they blew up our triage sector, cause that's where the command was and everything. That was the only thing that I had to go by, everybody that was there was gone. Cause a couple of the police officers that are now missing are guys that I had known, and that's where they were. The paramedic from Cabrini, that's where he was. I was just talking to him 20 minutes before everything blew up. I don't know where he ran, I don't know if he ran the wrong way, cause I know I ran the right way. If you ran the opposite way, you were dead. As I got like 15, 20 blocks away, now I'm on the West Side Highway cause I came out of this park and I found the other ambulance. I saw my ex-partner, and I said get in this thing and drive it to Westchester. I told him get the hell out of the city. Get everyone was can get in this, I said shit's still blowing up down there. Whatever you do, don't go in that direction, start driving north. He was like, looking at me like I was insane. Cause I don't know if anyone saw what had happened. All you could see was black smoke and that's all I can see at that point. Now I'm in an area where all the reporters are coming up to me and asking what had happened, and I said I don't thinking I'm allowed to talk about it. Cause I don't know what happened, and I wasn't gonna tell anybody. You know, it was surreal, like it wasn't really happening. So then an EMS Lieutenant comes over, he sees me standing with 8 Adam, and he says okay, you guys are gonna go three blocks south. I looked at him, and I said are you out of your mind? I found another guy from 8 David, Charles Gschlecht and we found each other as we were running. He couldn't find his partner, and I couldn't find mine, so we kind of synched up together, cause at least we knew each other and it's like, okay, we're okay. He said I can't find my partner. I said I can't find mine either, I think he got blown the wrong way. This guy was telling me that his partner went back in to help somebody, and that was the last we saw of either of them for awhile. That was the last I saw my partner for six whole days, cause I didn't come back to work after that.

Q: Who was the lieutenant you saw, do you know?

A: Yeah, Bobby Deleon. Bobby Deleon comes up to me, and I know him cause he used to be a union rep up in the Bronx when I worked up there a million years ago, he tells us to take the vehicle, put me and Charles in the back of the vehicle and go three blocks south. Charles told him, are you out of your mind? We're not safe where we are, let alone three blocks south. Yeah, yeah , yeah, I know, I know. Get in the ambulance and go three blocks south. At that point I got really upset. I said, do you realize they just blew up our triage sector? Everybody back there is dead, everybody back there is gone. There is no reason for us to go back there, we don't have the proper protective equipment, we don't have the proper vehicles. There's no way I'm going back there, there's no reason to go back. Yeah , yeah, yeah, I know, don't be hysterical, just go back three blocks south. I'm not going three blocks south, he's not going three blocks south, this ambulance is not going three blocks south. Sean started telling him we're not safe where we are now, and we were fifteen blocks away. It was certainly not safe there. He was the whole time saying…cause at that point I was screaming at him, cause he wasn't in there. We were telling him what we saw, and he just wouldn't listen. Yeah, yeah, I know. [redacted] I still hadn't realized that the first tower had fallen. [redacted] After I found out what actually happened, cause I found that out about a week ago, that that's what I ran from. So then, I think it was an EMS chief, I'm not sure who it was. Now more people were starting to come to this location, and he says okay, here's what we're gonna do…everybody's gonna go back down that way on the West Side Highway, and it's okay cause we have a police escort.

Q: Back south?

A: Back south on the West Side Highway, it's be okay cause we have a police escort. I don't want any free-lancing, we're all gonna go back in a nice orderly fashion. At that point my chest started to hurt, I couldn't breathe cause all I was breathing in was this black crap, I started coughing up all this black crap, all this stuff that looked like goo, and if I had to run another 15 blocks, I would have been dead. There was no way I could do it. I saw Lieutenant Hanlon, who is a lieutenant out of this station at that point, and I sat in the back of the ambulance. I started getting really scared, and really upset, cause people were telling me to go back in and die. There was nothing else they were telling me to do at that point, cause that was all that was gonna happen. So I sat in the back of the ambulance, I was coughing up, I was coughing up. Everyone kept asking me do you want oxygen? I was like no, I don't want it to get pushed down, I want to bring it up. I took some cold water, I put it on my face, I tried to cough up into it, and my chest really started hurting. Then my left arm started hurting, then the whole left side of my body started hurting, and I was like no, there's no way this is gonna happen. Lieutenant Hanlon came over to me and said are you okay? I said no, and I don't know where my partner is. At that point I was crying cause I had no idea where my partner was, I thought I was having a goddamn heart attack, and these people are telling me to go back in. So then when this EMS chief said what we're gonna do I said no, I have chest pain, I want to go to the hospital. So 8 Adam took me to the hospital, they took me to St. Vincent's. At the time we were setting up, getting ready to take me out, they took my blood pressure, which was a little high at the time, it's never been before in my life, but I think that's a good time for it to be high.

Q: Did you take something?

A: They put me on oxygen, put me in the stretcher. As they put me in the stretcher, somebody came over the EMS radio, said that the North Tower is leaning. As we started driving off, we saw the second tower fall. As we're driving away, debris is hitting the back of the ambulance. We were now about 20 blocks away, debris was hitting the back of the ambulance as we were watching this thing come down, it was just this huge cloud. It was me and Jose Perez in the back of the bus saying, I can't believe we're seeing this. When we saw the towers start coming, I took the oxygen off my face, me and Jose are yelling up to the front to Joe just drive. Put your foot on the floor and drive, drive as fast as you can out of here, it's coming down. Joe was like, I know I see it, and he had his foot on the floor, which meant we were going 30 miles an hour. Stuff was still hitting the back of the ambulance. All I kept thinking of is if this much crap is hitting the back of the bus and we're 20 blocks away, this lieutenant wanted us to go 3 blocks south, and I'm thinking what happened to everybody who listened to this chief and went back? I don't even know if they got a chance to go back. You know? Also, after I was running, I remember running, and I remember somebody yelling on the radio May Day, May Day, I'm trapped! Over the EMS radio. I was thinking May Day? That's not a term we use, you know 10-13 or 85 forthwith, but somebody's yelling May Day, I'm trapped. Then you heard this loud buzz, and you didn't hear anymore transmissions after that until I would venture to guess it was 20 minutes to a half our later, and the first thing I remember hearing was somebody saying the North Tower is leaning. Within five minutes of that statement, the second tower came down. I spent the rest of my day at St. Vincent's hospital.

Q: Okay, is there anything else you would like to add to this?

A: I don't know if it matters, but I took the next three days off after that. I didn't go on [redacted]. [redacted] I was okay with it until the lieutenant wouldn't listen to me, and would not understand that it was dangerous to go back in. He wouldn't accept that from me or the other guy that was with me. So I took the next three days off sick. During that time I went to see two counselors, one that was set-up by the union. Cause needless to say, like everyone else in the city, I did not sleep, I was having nightmares, I think the first full meal I ate was about last week. [redacted]. Then I went to go see an internist cause I started walking down the street and all of a sudden, I couldn't breathe. I was trying to get back in the swing of things, [redacted]. His statements to two of my co-workers, as well as a lieutenant was, it's part of the job. If I can't handle the job, I shouldn't have it. I don't think what any of us responded to that day was part of anyone's job, let alone ours. That was a military operation. Of course, what are you gonna do? It could have been my day off. I could have been shopping at Border's Books. [redacted]. I don't think anyone's ever been exposed to something like this before here. Of course not, but we all know EMS has a high rate of suicide. Not saying that that's gonna be my case cause no, I refuse, I wouldn't let anybody push me to that corner.

Q: I'm glad to hear that.

A: But, this is what happens. This is one of the reasons that I pushed up my resignation date a lot quicker. Cause I was trying to hold out for another 8 months, as soon I can get another job I'm the hell outta here. It's not because of this event, cause other events like this will happen whether I'm on duty or off, it's the way I've been treated since.

Q: I thank you very much for speaking to me, the time is 7:08 and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER DEAN COUTSOUROS

Interview Date: October 11, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. FEILER: Today's date is October 11th, 2001, the time now is 1250 hours, and this is Monty Feiler of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual:

Please state your name, rank and command.

FIREFIGHTER COUTSOUROS: Dean Coutsouros, Firefighter 2nd Grade, Engine 220.

MR. FEILER: Of the New York City Fire Department. We're conducting the interview at the Lieutenant's office of Engine 220. The interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Go ahead.

A. Okay. We arrived, we came over the Brooklyn Bridge and we wound up on the West Side Highway just north of building 7, World Trade Center No. 7. We proceeded to grab cylinders and all our gear and we marched down the West Side Highway to Liberty Street where the pedestrian walkway is. Under the pedestrian walkway we met up with a Chief. The Chief gave my Captain orders for us to go into 2 World Trade Center.

We went to the parking lot directly across from the World Trade Center. There was whole bunch of debris coming down on Liberty Street, which prevented us from walking down Liberty, and we got in front of 90 West Street, we held up there for a few minutes underneath the scaffolding to reassess the situation, how we were going to get into the building. There was all kinds of human debris. The landing gear of the aircraft was in that parking lot there. It was right near us. There was all kind of stuff all over the floor. Other companies near us, I think, were 205 and there was a truck company there, but I'm not really sure who it was. It might have been 117.

The Captain took us, we went through 90 West Street, we went through the front door, we came out the back door. The Captain was Stephen Grabher. He was a covering Captain that day. Him and Owen Carlock made it behind the Bankers Trust building. I was directly in the middle of the street on Washington Street, and there were two guys, three guys behind me, and I was right in the middle of the street and that's when the tower started to come. I happened to be looking up at it, and from the fire floor down, it was just like a really loud crackling noise, it sounded like a million firecrackers, and just a wave, right from the fire floor down, just a wave that started to come down.

Q. Do you know who the two firefighters were that were with you?

A. Right. Mike Schroeck, George Marsh and Eddie Plunkett. I happened to run straight ahead and I went east and I got behind the Bankers Trust building, which has a little overhang and there's steel columns holding up the overhang. We tucked in behind that overhang there. George Marsh and Eddie Plunkett and Mike Schroeck actually stayed behind 90 West because by that time it was already coming down. They had no chance to cross the street, Washington Street. We tucked in behind this building and in seconds it was nighttime. The dirt was over my head. I was chewing it trying to get some air. We didn't know what really was going on. I saw the building come down, but I think I was the only one who actually saw it come down.

As soon as everything collapsed, that loud rumble, everything collapsed, Owen Carlock handed me an ax. The Captain screamed we've got to get inside this building. I took an ax and I smashed the window, but it was just a dummy panel. It was wall behind it. I smashed the next window, no luck. I threw my helmet off, I put my face piece on, which was filled with debris, shook it out, put my face piece on. We went west. We went back to Washington Street, searched this wall left for a door, and over here there is a service entrance and we wound up getting in the door here. We all got in there.

Q. Did you hook up back with the other firefighters?

A. Not as of yet.

Q. Okay.

A. Me, Owen and the Captain wound up getting in here, plus a couple other guys, there was like a truck unit, guys I don't even know who they were, and we wound up getting in there. Then like once the dirt settled, there was still a lot of dust, but once the dirt settled, like a few minutes, we wound up hooking up back with the other three guys. We met them in it's like a little courtyard right there on the side of this building.

We regrouped, we got our stuff together, and we went back out to the West Side Highway, right about here, and we were starting to walk. We wanted to get north of the towers. We were trying to get back up around here, and right about here, on Albany and Washington, is when the first building came down, and the debris cloud started coming. So we started going south on the West Side Highway and we got into this building right here, which I think is the Millenium Hilton or something like that. This building has revolving doors.

Q. Between Albany and Carlisle?

A. Right. That building right there. As the debris cloud came down, we got covered in it, but I knew I was facing east.

Q. That's the one in the hotel?

A. Right.

Q. Okay.

A. There was a revolving door and I saw the light through it and we wound up all getting in there, except for Mike Schroeck. He went running down this way. He just took off down the West Side Highway. There was all people in there. We got some water. Some guy had -- I don't know where it came from, Red Cross maybe or something like that. There was just a barrel of water on ice out of nowhere. We helped people get down out of this building after it all settled and all. The Captain went and searched for Mike Schroeck. He didn't know where he was. We lost him at that point. We were helping people come this way and getting them south towards the Battery Tunnel.

After that we regrouped once again, we all got everybody, we got Mike Schroeck back together, we all stayed as a unit and we crossed the West Side Highway. We went around whatever that street is that crosses over. We crossed the West Side Highway and there were a couple of car fires and some paper and debris there, and we left George Marsh there. He's NPO. We left him there to pump water for I think it was 210 I think was the engine and he pumped water for them. We left him and we went around to -- let's see exactly. Where is this notch here?

Q. That's the harbor.

A. Right. This is where we wound up.

Q. Then you had to go down East End Avenue.

A. Right. We went around here. We came down East End. Actually, we put a fire out in a building that's right there. We went through here. There was a fire building. We started stretching all the lengths that the fireboat had through I guess it's the Merrill Lynch Building. The Winter Garden was -- that half dome was collapsed over here. We started stretching lines, everything the fireboat had, through this Merrill Lynch Building. We got like halfway, but this whole side of the building was collapsed. It was a little scary. We started stretching lines and hooking up hose, and then all of a sudden a company came walking over with a firefighter in a Stokes basket and his head was crushed pretty bad. So we took the Stokes basket and we went down -- there's a ramp here.

Q. You loaded him on the boat?

A. We loaded him on the fireboat and the fireboat took off. Now our line is dead. Over here there was a gas leak. The Police Department was telling everybody to get out of the area, blah blah blah.

Q. Can you just verbalize the street corner there?

A. Okay. We went over -- I guess 4 World Financial, Merrill Lynch, is Vesey and North End, that corner building. We went down this street, which isn't marked here, whatever it is. The Captain told Owen Carlock and Eddie Plunkett to go get our rig, which is right here at this time. We were going to bring our rig back here and pump water. That was the last I saw of them. They're alive and everything, but we didn't see them the rest of the day.

We came back over here, right by Gateway Plaza, right on this corner of Liberty, I don't know the building there, but it's a residential building.

We were sitting there taking a blow, washing our eyes out because our eyes were bleeding, and as we're sitting there with our coats off, I look up and black smoke starts billowing out of the 9th floor window. So the Captain goes, all right, get your gear on.

So it's now just me, Captain Steve Grabher, Mike Schroeck and myself, the three of us, there was like a loaner rig, one of those rigs from the rock or whatever it was, a 5 something, 515 rig, we tested the hydrant and there was no water, this guy John Orloff, Buffalo, from 201, he's a Lieutenant. The Captain says, all right, come on, guys. We grabbed two cans off that rig and we walked up to the 9th floor to that apartment. There was someone there already forced the door. We went in with the cans to try to see what we could do. It was already vented, so it was just a lot of flame, not too much smoke, not too bad. We went in with the cans. It did nothing.

We went back down to the 8th floor and Buffalo, Fireman Orloff, was pulling up. He dropped a Clorox bottle. He was pulling up two lengths of two and a half to hook to the standpipe. A guy in front of me grabbed a nozzle. I had a knife. I was cutting the rope off the nozzle. We went up to the 9th floor. We got there and I figured I'd back this guy up and he just handed me the nozzle. Now I realized he didn't have a mask. So I masked up, I got the nozzle, I went in. They hooked up one length from like the standpipe on that floor. They broke it one length and that was it. It was right there. The apartment was right next to the standpipe.

I went in, knocked down two rooms of fire, had absolutely no pressure. There was a couch next to me that was burning like directly by my shoulder, but every time I turned the nozzle, I was cutting off my water. I had absolutely no pressure. So I pushed the couch out of the way, knocked down the two rooms. I stood up, I got a little past it and turned around and hit the couch. Just as I finished hitting that area right there, I turned around, a little corner flared up again, and then I ran out of water. There was no water because the gravity tank must have took a hit or whatever or just that was it. I wound up shaking the hose to put the rest of the fire out. Once there was no more flame, we shut down, came back out. The Captain was searching all the apartments on that floor and Mike Schroeck. We came back out, we regrouped, and we started heading down the stairs.

Q. The firefighter that you backed up, do you know who that was?

A. No, he backed me up. I have no idea who he was.

Q. Was he on duty or off duty?

A. I don't know. He had a mask so... It's hard to tell because masks were being traded. God knows. I didn't even know what company he was from. He might have been from 201 because there was a bunch of 201 guys up there, but I really don't know who he was or whatever happened. We were just trying to put this fire out, which we did.

Coming down the stairs, the floor, with all the soot and gook on our feet and stuff, it was really slippery. I fell like a half landing on my back. We got two floors down, me and the Captain, and Mike Schroeck, we heard him fall down a whole flight of stairs. We just heard bing bang.

We got back down in front of the building. At that point we were pretty much spent. This is, you know, it's late in the afternoon now. This isn't all happening all at once.

Q. I know.

A. The time, you know. We went over to the end of Liberty, like over here. Well, actually --

Q. Was this towards late afternoon or early evening?

A. This has got to be like 3:00, 3:30, around there.

Q. Okay.

A. Around 3:00ish. Because I remember making a phone call at 2:30, before that. I'm not sure.

Q. It's not important.

A. We went down by the water and that was it for the end of us. My back was hurt, my shoulder. All of us were hurting and we just like actually laid there. I wound up meeting up with this guy, Dave Koyles from Ladder 122, who had just been in a collapse in the Marriott. He was in the Vista, in that lobby. We wound up getting a ride from a civilian in a suburban because we wanted to get triaged. We couldn't do any more. That's it. We gave our masks up to another company and me and Dave Koyles wound up getting a ride from a civilian down where all the boats are. We got triaged somewhere over here. They wanted to take us to Ellis Island or New Jersey, which we said we're never going to get home.

From there we wound up getting up from there, walking away, some guy with a golf cart took us down to like Battery Park. From there two detectives threw us in the back of their car and they took us to the Staten Island Ferry Terminal.

Q. Back to Staten Island?

A. They got us in an ambulance to go to Methodist Hospital. We both wound up in Methodist Hospital that day and that's the end of my story.

Q. When you first arrived en route to the scene, do you know if you were given any specific locations to go to?

A. I don't know about that. I know that it was about ten after 9:00 we were crossing the Brooklyn Bridge.

Q. So the first building was hit by that time?

A. Both buildings were hit at that time. When the first building was hit, I actually took a picture from the roof of the firehouse. Then the second plane went in and that's when we got called in. On the fifth alarm we went.

Q. Just to put things a bit, where were you when the second building collapsed?

A. When the second building collapsed, which was Tower 1, I was in the middle of the West Side Highway.

I was on the southbound side of the West Side Highway, maybe one block away, Albany Street.

Q. Did you have a radio with you?

A. No. Nozzle man does not have a radio. But I really -- I took pictures. I always keep a disposable camera in my pocket. I took pictures coming over the bridge, and just before I came over the bridge, I took a picture of the crowd and it happened to catch a clock just by the Brooklyn Bridge and it said almost -- it was like maybe eight, ten after 9:00. I got a picture of our rig going over the bridge. When we first pulled up, I took a picture right where we parked the rig. I took a picture right under this scaffolding of 90 West Street, and that was about it. I took pictures of the guys later on and stuff like that and the debris.

Q. Initially you said that a Chief directed you?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know what Chief that was?

A. I do not know, no. It was really chaos and mayhem and we were just -- we didn't even bring roll-ups or anything because we figured so many companies were in, we were just going up and relieve a company on the line to put this fire out. Never thought it was going to come down.

Q. Right.

A. We were trying -- what the Captain said, he wanted to take us around. We wanted to attack on a diagonal to get into the building, because this way and this way, everything was -- just so many jumpers and debris falling, all kinds of shit. So there was no way to go down Liberty Street. There was stuff all -- and we just heard that a jumper landed on somebody right here. So we weren't going this way. We wound up choosing a wider route, and we didn't even get to -- you know, as soon as we started out, the building came down.

Q. Okay. Is there anything else that you think is important that you'd like to add at this time?

A. That's about it.

MR. FEILER: We're going to conclude the interview. I want to thank you on behalf of the Department for participating in this. The time now is 1305 hours and we'll conclude the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT STEPHEN JEZYCKI

Interview Date: October 11, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. FEILER: Today's date is October 11th, 2001. The time now is 12:32 hours, and this is Monty Feiler of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name, title and assigned command.

LIEUTENANT JEZYCKI Lieutenant Steve Jezycki, Battalion 57.

MR. FEILER: Of the New York City Fire Department.

We're conducting the interview in the lieutenant's office in the quarters of Engine 220. This interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Would you relate your information, lieutenant.

MR. FEILER: I'm sorry, also present is Richard Dun of the New York City Fire Department.

Q. I'm sorry, go ahead.

A. On the morning of September 11th, from right across the harbor on Staten Island, I saw one of the towers on fire. I proceeded home to my mother's house to get in touch with my sister, who we know works in Manhattan. She worked at One Liberty Plaza.

So I went home to find my brother there, who is an off-duty lieutenant, Michael Jezycki. When we went in to get in touch with my sister, my mother informed us that my sister had called at 9:00 and said that she was at a meeting in the south tower on the 105 floor, that she was okay.

At that point me and my brother grabbed our gear. Knowing that the bridges were shut down, we headed for the Staten Island ferry, which is five minutes away. We got on the ferry boat with a bunch of other off-duty firemen. We met up with Lieutenant Bob Perretta, Lieutenant Tom Pigott, and Firefighter Kevin Kelly.

On the way over we made ourselves a five-man team. We were going to proceed to the 90th floor, because that's where my sister called from. On the way over, we grabbed some ropes off the ferry boat. I had a couple of hand tools.

As the ferry was pulling up to dock on the Manhattan side, we saw the second collapse of the second tower come down. I thought that was the tower my sister was in. It ended up being the other way around.

As soon as we get off the ferry, we jumped on a big black, pickup truck Jeep, with a bunch of other guys. It drove us right up the West side. We pulled up maybe ten minutes after the second collapse, I would say, thereabouts.

I ran into Battalion Chief Artie Lakiotes, safety chief, who was trying to get a little organization of the guys on West Street there. He told us to take a manifold down towards the water. We were going to pump from a boat.

We were taking this manifold towards the west side, and we heard that there was a fireman trapped. Then they called for the manifold back on West Street. So we started to bring the manifold back. We placed it down on West Street.

We went in the direction of where the fireman was trapped. It turned out being a chauffeur from 65 Engine who was buried beneath the walkway going over West Street on the World Trade Center side.

Q. By Liberty Street?

A. Yes, Liberty and West.

There must have been -- I don't know -- 15 guys. We made a line. We were digging. There were three car fires right next to where they were digging. The heat was sort of hampering our digging efforts.

We ended up finding an operating engine three-quarter line on another pile. We passed it over. Myself, my brother Michael and Kevin Kelly ended up getting a line right in between where we were digging and the car fires. We put kind of a water curtain up. In about five or ten minutes, the guys that were digging, we were able to get the chauffeur from 65 out.

At that point we realized we were kind of close to some falling debris, and we kind of backed out. I just remember there was a battalion chief there, a senior battalion chief who I thought maybe was kind of having a heart attack or something because he was holding his chest and he was going down.

On West Street there was about three feet of water. I just remember grabbing the chief and helped him across. We waded through the water, onto the other side of the street. At that point we just proceeded north on West.

We were sort of digging through the debris for the next 10 or 12 hours. That was my day on Tuesday.

Q. The chauffeur you mentioned --

A. From 65.

Q. Was his condition?

A. I tell you what, I had my back to him at that point, because we had the line going. I just remember glancing over. The guys kind of carried him out, passed him out, and carried him away. At that point I shut the line, and that's when I saw that chief. I thought he was having a heart attack. We ended up sitting him down. He said that he was fine.

We moved north on West Street after that.

Q. The chauffeur's name, were you able to obtain the chauffeur's name?

A. I never got his name, but he was a chauffeur from 65. And I believe he was calling saying where he was. That's how guys knew somebody else with a radio, and that's how they honed in on him. He was either calling on a radio or they said they heard him calling.

Q. What about the chief, do you know his name?

A. I didn't get his name either, no.

Q. Did you have any radio equipment with you?

A. No, we had no radio equipment. Just, like I said, hand tools. I had a maul that I grabbed from home, an old Halligan that I had at home, and I grabbed those hand tools. We cut ropes off the ferry boat. Bobby Perretta had a Scott mask.

On our way up West Street where the Jeep dropped us off, we were walking up West and we were taking whatever we could off of --

Q. Other vehicles?

A. -- other department vehicles that were parked along West. We ended up grabbing a rabbit tool and a couple other hand tools.

Q. Do you remember what companies you saw there?

A. No, I can't recall their numbers, because I guess the frame of mind I was in. There were engine companies along there, not ladder companies. That's what I remember, seeing pumpers, not ladder trucks.

Q. Did you ever enter any of the buildings? When you got there, I think you said both of them collapsed.

A. Yeah, when I got there, the second one already came down. There was really not many buildings to enter other than the surrounding ones, which we were concentrating our efforts where the Trade Center stood, in that pile of debris there.

Q. Is there anything else that you think is important, any recollections of any firefighters that you may have seen, EMS people, civilians that you may have helped?

A. At that point, like I said, we were in that area. We did make our way around towards the water and came up on -- I don't know if it's Chambers, Vesey -- a few blocks north. We were starting to gather over there, and we heard that there was a building in danger of collapse.

This was a couple hours later, maybe, and that huge building -- it was on that block. When that came down, we all ran down to the west side when that other building came down, and we went back to where the Trade Center was. We just said let's go back over there. We were kind of looking, digging, hoping maybe.

Q. You stayed with the four people that you mentioned?

A. We were pretty much together most of the day. I was there till around midnight. At that point it was just me and my brother. We split up from the other three guys sometime during the day.

Q. You said he's on the job too?

A. Yeah.

Q. Where does he work?

A. He's assigned to the 8th Division, covering lieutenant.

Q. If there's nothing else, I want to thank you for your time.

MR. FEILER: We'll conclude at the interview at 1242 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER MICHAEL SCHROECK

Interview Date: October 11, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. FEILER: Today's date is October 11th, 2001. The time now is 1313 hours and this is Monty Feiler of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual:

Please state your name, rank and assigned command.

FIREFIGHTER SCHROECK: Firefighter Michael Schroeck, Engine 220, 5th Grade.

MR. FEILER: Of the New York City Fire Department. We're interviewing at the quarters of Engine 220 regarding the events of September 11th, 2001. Also present is...

MR. DUN: Richard Dun.

MR. FEILER: And...

LIEUTENANT JEZYCKI: Lieutenant Jezycki.

Q. If you can just give me a scenario of what occurred that morning.

A. Okay. I can recall sitting in house watch and seeing the first plane hit. That's where Truck Company 122 was heading out the door responding to their staging area by the Battery Tunnel. Moments later the second plane hit and we were dispatched over there.

Taking the Brooklyn Bridge, you could see the smoke, flames, from that view, I would say a lot of chaos, people running, the bridges were packed. We're continuing through. We parked around I guess that's the West Side Highway, west of Vesey there, and I guess that's where we parked, grabbed our gear and headed towards Liberty looking for I guess the staging area where I guess we were supposed to get our orders.

Q. Did you meet an officer at Liberty or did your Captain speak to an officer?

A. Yes. The Captain spoke to I guess -- I really don't recall, to be honest, just I guess caught up in the whole thing, seeing what we saw, and I guess I was just following him.

Q. You said you were on house watch that morning?

A. Yes. I was in the house watch. I don't recall if I had house watch that morning, but I was in the house watch at that time.

Q. When the first plane hit, you said you saw it or you heard it?

A. Yes. Somebody called out to put on I guess Channel 5, Fox, where it was being shown, and that's where I was viewing it for the first time.

Q. Do you recall getting any phone calls or radio transmissions?

A. No, I don't.

Q. Okay. You responded before the second plane struck or afterwards?

A. I believe it was when the second plane struck.

Q. That's when your unit, your engine was called out?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember who was on the engine with you?

A. We had Geo Marsh, we had a covering Captain, Captain Grabher, we had Dean Coutsouros, we had Owen, who was from 122, we had Plunkett, Edward Plunkett, Edmund Plunkett, one more member.

Q. Were they on-duty personnel?

A. Well, it was in between the tour change and so...

Q. On the way down there, did you pick up any other firefighters, any civilians?

A. Yes. There was an ex-member who joined us while we were down there. We didn't pick anyone until we got there. I mean who came with us when we were on the scene. We didn't pick up anybody en route there. The gentleman's name, I'm not sure. I think his first name was Joe.

Q. From these quarters?

A. No. I think he used to work out of 122.

Q. He was off duty or on duty?

A. He was off duty. He didn't have bunker gear or anything like that.

Q. Okay. How about civilians? Did you have to treat anybody or anybody approach the Engine Company for that?

A. I think that was John Germain.

Q. John Germain.

A. I believe his first name, yes, John Germain, yes, and he did have bunker gear, but when I first saw him, I don't think he was wearing it on or whatever.

Q. Okay. So you got to Liberty and West. Did you get instructions to go into any of the buildings?

A. What I can recall was when we were coming down, I guess heading south, I guess past the staging area here, I believe it was located right around here.

Q. Liberty and West.

A. I can remember going underneath the walkway there.

Q. That's Liberty and West Street, the pedestrian walkway.

A. Continuing I guess going up Liberty here, I know there was like a little parking lot area there.

Q. Okay.

A. I don't know if it's the Marriott parking lot or it was a private parking lot.

Q. That's a private parking lot over here.

A. Oh, this is it here?

Q. Yes.

A. Right. So I can remember coming up this street here.

Q. Chambers Street.

A. Right. We were standing right around here when, obviously, jumpers were coming down and I guess we were concerned about that. I don't know at that point where we were heading or what, but I can remember that the Captain gave us some orders to I guess come around somehow and then led us toward I think Washington here, I believe, and I guess I was standing right around here, so right around Washington and maybe Albany, Cedar, Cedar to Albany. I don't know. I can remember we were backing out of this area here. We were around here somewhere when it started collapsing.

We hear the roaring and we all just pretty much --

Q. Was that the collapse of Tower 1, the south tower?

A. Tower 1, the first collapse.

Q. Okay. The first, the south tower.

A. I guess we backed up, coming down Washington, Albany area here. I remember guys saying to me stick with us, stick with us, and that was before the collapse starting and before we even knew there was going to be a collapse.

Q. Do you know who that was?

A. Dean. Dean actually told me to stick with him, make sure I stick with him and stuff like that, and that was prior to going en route and all that. He was, of course, making me be aware, if anything, stick around, stick with the members. But when the collapse came down, I don't know what happened, but I found myself away from everybody.

Q. Just you or were you with anybody?

A. Me? I was alone.

Q. You were by yourself?

A. Yes. I can't speak where -- talking to the guys afterwards, I found out where they went. I think it was like right in this building here, this Trust Plaza here, I believe, and I shot over here, this building here, I believe in this corner right in here, there was like a little doorway here where I was able to get some protection there from falling debris.

Q. That was on the southwest corner of Washington and Albany?

A. Yes, I believe. Looking at this map, it looks like that's where I was. I could be mistaken, but I think it's like in right here, if I'm not mistaken, right on this corner here. I was there for it felt forever, you know, as it was coming down, a lot of emotions, a lot of things going through the mind. As far as life goes, I didn't think there was much left.

Q. What were the conditions? What did you see?

A. You couldn't really see much, I mean, at that point anyway. I pretty much had my face tucked into the building there, my body tucked into the building, and I guess with the falling debris, the building collapse, you couldn't see much, you couldn't hear much but the roaring and, you know, obviously, you weren't going to hear anything over that. I didn't think I was going to make it in, if that's where we were trying to get to. I don't know. But I found myself just sitting there.

Q. Okay. So once the debris settled, then what did you do?

A. Pretty much I backed out looking for the rest of the members because you could hear all pass alarms going off, people screaming, companies calling. The first thing I heard was 220, 220, and I continued -- I backed out, climbing over a couple of little -- you know, debris was in the way and stuff like that.

Q. Did you hook up with your unit at that point?

A. Yes. I winded up hooking up with my guys shortly after that, a couple minutes after that, and then I think at that point we were started to retreat, I don't know, trying to find out -- trying to figure out where exactly were we. I think by the time we gathered, I don't know if we kind of shot down more Washington or maybe we went back towards Liberty here when the second collapsed. It took a couple of minutes by the time everybody gathered up and got together and all the members were together and stuff.

Q. Okay. Now the second building came down.

A. Yes. I think we were more so on -- I guess we shot back up this way here because I can remember being on the west side. Exactly where on the west side I don't know, but when the second one collapsed, I was a little bit further away than the first one. I must have been around -- I don't know if I was this far here. I must have been around -- this is where I was for the first one. Maybe about here somewhere. I can remember being in a building there where --

Q. The hotel?

A. I don't know if it was the hotel or what.

Q. There was a revolving door?

A. It might have been the hotel.

Q. Okay. That was the hotel?

A. There were people in here. We were trying to get people out, telling them to run down this way here, further south. There was some water there, which we all needed.

Q. Okay. That was in the hotel.

A. Yes.

Q. So the second building collapsed. You recovered. Then what did you do after that? Did you regroup? Did you go anywhere else?

A. Once again I lost my guys and I guess, again, when the dust started to settle, we started making our way back. I can remember there was a girl, I believe an EMS girl, she was like all dazed up there, and I kind of assisted her south. I think I walked her maybe a block or so.

Q. Did you get her name?

A. No, I did not get her name. I did not get her name. She was a little dazed up, I can remember that, and obviously hysterical crying, confused. Whether she was hurt or whatever, I couldn't tell at that point. I assisted her a little further down to where I guess I led her, you know, walk south here.

Q. Now, at that point did you go back up?

A. Yes. At that point I went back up this way, where I met my guys again.

Q. Okay.

A. Then we pretty much scattered. I can remember putting out -- I remember the debris crushing through windows and I guess it was apartment fires everywhere here. I think it might have even been one of these two buildings.

Q. Did you go stretch the hose --

A. Oh, yes.

Q. -- from the marine?

A. Yes. I think at that point, yes, actually, at that point we did come down here. Yes. They had the boat here and we were trying to --

Q. (Inaudible).

A. Is that here?

Q. Yes.

A. Right around here the boat was, right. It was right against the Winter Garden. We tried to stretch -- get a line in place into the Winter Garden there. But I think they were talking about I guess an odor, a gas odor, a possible collapse and stuff like that, and we were using caution and stuff like that. But I think we got it in place and they brought an injured member here, head trauma, and he winded up going on the boat. They escorted him where they needed to.

Q. That's when you lost the line.

A. Yes, that line was pretty much done with. I can remember going back this way, or at least I think the chauffeur and another member went around somewhere, I guess to find a rig and get the rig in place somewhere else. We were bouncing back here for a couple of minutes, and then I guess we went back over here somewhere where -- oh, yes. Gateway Plaza. Here. We found ourselves in front here for a little while where there were a couple other members from different companies. I don't recall what companies. I don't recall what members.

Q. What did you do at that location?

A. I can remember regrouping. There was more fluid there for us. Until I think on the 10th floor there was fire. We wound up going up. There was no hydrant pressure. We went up with a couple of cans here, the Captain, Dean, and I don't know who else was there. I don't think initially there was anyone with us. We went up. Whether there were a couple other units who went up prior, I don't remember, but I know when we got there, there were more members there when we went up to put it out. I remember seeing Buffalo. He used to work at this house here. He was pulling up hose. We hooked up to the standpipe, we went up and...

Q. Then after you got the fire out, what did you do?

A. We came back down. I was pretty much shot then, a little left. I can remember falling. I can remember falling. We came back down here, and I think we regrouped again. A couple of members were injured and somebody transported us to another place where I think they went to a hospital.

Q. How did you get home that evening?

A. After that point, I went with the Captain. A couple of the guys, like I said, left, I guess, to get medical attention.

Q. (Inaudible).

A. Yes. They jumped in a Blazer or something like that, which took them to I guess the boat or wherever, and I found myself with the Captain here and we went back.

Q. To the truck?

A. We went back I believe to this point here where --

Q. Vesey and West?

A. Yes. I believe it was this point here, where it was tons and tons of vehicles and members. That was pretty much it. I know we sat here for a little while. I remember doing what we needed to do. Then I can remember, I would say late evening, I don't really recall the time, maybe around 6:00, I don't know, that's when we were transported, the Captain and myself, over to I believe Bellvue.

Q. Oh, okay. So you did go to the hospital?

A. Yes.

Q. Is there anything else that you want to add that you think is important?

A. No, not that I recall at this time.

MR. FEILER: We want to thank you for cooperating and participating in this. It's very important that we get this information. With that in mind, we'll conclude the interview. This concludes the interview at 1328 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER ARTHUR MYERS

Interview Date: October 11, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. CUNDARI: Today is October 11th, 2001. The time is 12:10 hours. This is George Cundari with Murray Murad, Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name, rank, title and assigned command.

FIREFIGHTER MYERS: My name is Alfred Myers, Sr., a first grade fireman. I'm in Engine 39.

MR. CUNDARI: Of the Fire Department of the City of New York. We're at Engine 39. This interview is in regards to the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Arthur, can you tell us what happened that day from your perspective?

A. That morning I was at the watch and I got someone to relieve me. I went upstairs to take a shave and change my shirt. While I was going to shave, Jimmy Long came running past me. I said, "What's the matter?" He said, "A plane just hit the World Trade Center. It's on Channel 5."

Him and I both went and turned the TV on. We saw where the plane hit. At that time we said we're a high-rise unit, I know we're getting ready to go. So I changed my shirt. Sure enough it came in as a second alarm, and we were responding. 39 responded at that time.

Being that I'm the chauffeur, I went to the rig, started the rig up, hit the bells, got the guys ready, and we took off to go down there. En route down there, it went straight to a fifth alarm. It didn't go -- normally they say, "In the borough of Manhattan, a third alarm has been transmitted or fourth alarm." They didn't do that. It went from a second straight to the fifth alarm.

I took Second Avenue down to Houston Street, went across Houston over to West Street, with which we turned. By the time I got to Houston, it went to a second fifth alarm. That's when the second plane hit.

We proceeded down there --

Q. Did you hear the second plane hit?

A. We heard the second plane hit from the radio transmit. I didn't see, but we heard it.

Q. You heard it, the bang?

A. The bang. Then it went straight to a second faith alarm. It didn't go second, third, fourth, fifth. They just skipped all that and went straight to a fifth. I said, a second fifth alarm? Both towers are hit now.

I got over to West Street. I was at Houston and West Street. When I turned onto West Street, I said, "Oh, shit, look at this." Both buildings were fully involved. A big blast of fire was just blowing out windows.

We proceeded down West Street down to the towers. High-rise is following rig. Like I said, we're a high-rise unit. They follow us in, driven by Jeff Coniglio. When I got there, they told us pull up right behind 3 Engine, which is what I did. High-rise pulled up right beside me but right across from me.

At that time the guys got out. They started donning masks and everything. I was telling them, "Be careful. Put your gloves on, put your hood on, turn your oxygen on and just be careful."

Q. What was that location you parked?

A. We parked right on West Street, right up from the north tower. I was further away from the north tower, a block from it.

Q. So you were past Vesey.

A. Past Vesey.

Q. Past the pedestrian overpass.

A. Past Vesey but right in this section here because this is the north tower here, I can see the front entrance to the north tower. So I must be somewhere down in here.

Now the guys are gone. I'm looking. I see what I just couldn't believe. I thought it was a big doll baby, but these were burnt people falling. Right after that then you see live people jumping. This is the first time I've ever seen people jump like this in my whole career.

Q. 20 years.

A. In 20 years, this is the first time I've ever witnessed this, and it was just blowing my mind.

The chauffeur from 3 Engine, he was telling me, listen, don't look, just don't -- I said, "How can I not look? I've never seen this before." Just any time you thought that would be it, then you'd see more waves of people coming. It was like raining people. You could hear when they hit the ground, bang, bang, and the body parts just dismantling all over the place.

At that time it just got to me. I turned around to look away from it, and I'm saying to myself these are people. Man, there are people dying here. I couldn't believe what I was seeing.

When I turned around, someone -- they said the chief ordered them to move 39 Engine, my rig wasn't there. I said, "Where the hell is 39?" It's like somebody stealing your car. What they did was they took our rig and put it right in front of the north tower.

I said, "Wait a minute. They're full of shit. They're not going to leave the rig there." Now you see the bodies just falling down.

So at that time a proby came over to me. He said, "Look, I'm a proby. I'm off duty. I want to help." I said, "Whatever you do, don't go in that building. You're off duty. If something happens to you, they won't pay your family nothing. You just stay with me. Whatever you do, don't go in the building," because at that point debris was coming down plus the bodies.

Rigs are coming in. Guys are on top of the rigs just going full blast into this. Now, him and I ran over. I get the rig. The chief orders me to hook up to the Siamese. I said, "Bullshit. I'm not hooking up here." Some of the guys get in the rig, which he did. I got in the rig. The chief was telling me, "Hook up to the Siamese. Leave this rig here." I said, "Bullshit. Get out of the way."

Q. Where was this Siamese?

A. The Siamese right -- this is the front of the north tower? Right by the entrance, right to the right of the entrance before you go in. The Siamese was right there.

Q. That's where your truck is right now, right in front of the tower?

A. Yeah, somebody had brought the truck over there. Originally we were over this way.

Q. You were more north?

A. More north, away from it.

Q. By the pedestrian bridge?

A. Away from it, yes.

Q. The pedestrian bridge?

A. Exactly.

But me they brought our rig right in front of the building. I said, "Bullshit." We're not going to" --

(Interruption.)

A. So the chief was telling me, "Leave this rig here and supply this."

(Interruption.)

A. I was in the rig. The chief was ordering me to hook up to the Siamese. I said, "Bullshit. I'm getting out of here." He kept ordering me. I pulled out and put our rig right back where it was originally.

At that time getting out of the rig -- I told the proby, "You stay here. Don't go over there." Now there's more people jumping, more chaos. But you start hearing this cracking noise and thundering noise.

At that time I witnessed Mayor Giuliani and his entourage coming down.

Q. From the south end?

A. No, from this end over here, coming down.

Q. They were coming down West Side Highway?

A. West Side Highway.

Q. South?

A. He gets out of his car. There's about ten of them. They're right where my rig is.

At that time you hear all this crackling and thundering noise. We look up, and you see the first building, the south tower, coming down. I said, "Oh, shit. It's falling."

At that time, Giuliani, his crew and myself, we were running. We were running neck and neck out of there. I just ran as far north as I could, looking back, seeing a massive cloud of smoke and debris just coming my way. I went to one or another street, ran up to that street. Went to another street, ran up that -- I just kept running.

At this time I ran over to where the water was.

Q. Was proby with you, the one that was in the truck?

A. No, he wasn't with me. I don't know what happened to him. At that point I just ran. He may have started with me and we got lost in the run. I don't know what happened to him. But I just ran. We all just ran. I just started running until I got over to where the water was. I said, well, if push comes to shove, I'll just go into the water.

Q. So you ran north and then you ran west?

A. Right, because you're running back this way and zigzagging to where -- this must be the water here. All the way over here.

Q. You went to Vesey and North End Street?

A. Right, right. I remember Vesey.

And there was a school here right by the water, and they were saying that they had a report of a gas leak, some sort of gas leak and to get out of there, evacuate. So I had to run again back over this way.

Now I'm saying to myself, my guys are in there. So I'm on the radio, "39 chauffeur to 39, 39," calling the officer.

Q. Channel 1 you were on?

A. Channel 1. I get no response, no response at all. But I'm hearing radio contacts. I'm hearing maydays. But he's not responding to me. I said, "Oh, shit. The good guys in that building, they're dead." That's the only thing I could say, these guys are dead.

I said let me get closer. Now I'm working my way back to where my rig is, and I'm on the radio calling, "39 chauffeur to 39. 39 chauffeur to 39 control." Then it got to the point I said, "39 chauffeur to 39 anybody. Anybody 39 respond, respond. Let me hear from you." No one is saying anything.

I'm walking back to the rig. Say my rig is right here, in this area here. When I get about within a block range of it, now you hear this cracking again, this thunder again. You know from the first one, hey, this thing is coming down.

You look up,and now it's coming and coming at a rapid -- it's just falling. Now I start running again, but this time, being that I'm closer to the north tower, it's coming down with such a force. Debris and everything is coming.

There's another fireman to the right of me. Him and I are running. I'm right by PS 89. I remember the school, PS 89. There was a cop waving us in, "Come on in here. Come on in here." I'm saying to myself I'm not going to make it because I have on my full gear. I have full gear on. I seen this wave coming, I'm heading this way, and it's coming like a tidal wave just coming. I said, shit, I'm not going to make this.

There are a couple police cars and a police emergency van, and I just said, "Please, God, let this door be open." When I pulled the door, it opened. I looked like George jumping in the air and closing the door behind me. When I closed this door, it gets covered. It just covers it.

Q. The dust cloud?

A. The dust cloud. It got so black --

Q. You're still on the West Side Highway; right?

A. Still on the West Side Highway.

Q. North of the pedestrian bridge, by Murray, you think?

A. Wherever PS 89 is. I was right alongside PS 89, that street. That may be somewhere in this vicinity right here.

Q. Vesey?

A. Vesey. Wherever the school is. The school was PS 89. The police vehicles were lined up along there.

It got so black, I'm saying, either two things, either I'm dead or it's the end of the world. I've never seen it that black in my whole -- I'm 51 years old. I've never seen it that black in my whole life. I'm saying, well, I don't think I'm dead.

Now I'm worried about being able to breathe. I was okay inside. I was able to breathe. There was no debris coming in or anything.

Q. You heard all that stuff hitting the truck?

A. It was just like a [sound] and it just covered.

At that time maybe about 15, 20 minutes or so, I hear the police, "Hey, is anybody in there?" "I'm in here. I'm in here." They started working the doors and pushed and got the door open, and I got out. They said, "Are you all right?"

Q. You were trapped inside the ESU truck?

A. The ESU truck.

Q. You couldn't get out?

A. I'm not going to say I couldn't get out, but they helped me get out. At the time I didn't really try to get out. I was just waiting to see if everything clears up.

They came and said, "Is there anybody else you have in here?" They got the door open and got me out. At that time they said, "Are you all right? Do you want to go to the hospital or something? Do you want to get checked out?" I said, "No, I'm all right."

I said, "But there was another fireman with me. How did he do?" They said, "Well, we don't know about the other guy. We don't think he made it." I got his helmet. He was from 1 Engine, and his helmet was 845.

Now I'm calling the guys. I'm frantic, panicking. I'm calling the guys, "39 chauffeur to 39, anybody." Now I know these guys are dead now, because the second one came down, the north tower. No one was responding. As usual the maydays were going all over the place. It was just major chaos.

This goes on for about a couple hours. I'm walking around, just trying to find my guys, calling, calling, no one responding. I saw other guys looking for their guys. You hear major, major chaos, major maydays, everything. It's just a ball of confusion.

About two hours go by. I ran into John Drumm, who was in the engine that day. I said, "Drumm, where's" -- I'm hugging him. I said, "Where are the guys? What happened? Where are the guys? Where are the guys?" He said, "Man, they were behind me." I said, "There's nobody here but you." He said, "Well, those guys were behind me. I don't think they made it." I said, "Oh, man."

He wanted to go back in. I said, "No, you stay out here. You stay out here with me." So him and I walked, and we ran into a member of 16.

Q. What was that person's name?

A. Then I ran into Rattazzi from Ladder 16, from 16 Truck. I said, "Rattazzi, where are the guys at?" He said, "I don't know where the guys are at." He got separated from his guys.

So the three of us together -- he was suffering with eye injuries. So we made it away from -- we walked up from it, and some EMS guys came over and washed his eyes out and they washed mine out, the same with Drumm.

Drumm kept insisting on going back over. "Can I look for the guys?" I said, "No, you're not going to look for the guys. Let's go over here and get ourselves together." He was all dirty, the debris and everything on him.

We called on the radio. Now Drumm has a radio also. He mentioned that some guys were on Channel 7. I said, "All right. I'll keep it on 1. You turn to 7. Let's call, see if we can hear something." To no avail.

Then they said some guys were on Channel 3. So we switched it from 7 to 3. I stayed on 1, and he switched from 3 to 7 or vice versa. Anyhow, now it's like five hours go by, and I just accepted the fact that these guys are gone. That's just my account on it.

I ran into Joe Graziano from 13 Truck. He's looking for his guys. I run into Lieutenant Jones from 7 Truck, and he's looking for his guys. I said, well, let me just walk back down there.

I'm where the chief ordered 6 Truck to go after 39, looking for 39, go after them. I said, good, let me stay with 6 Truck and see if I find them maybe I'll hear something. I made it back down there. "6 Truck," I'm calling, "6 Truck." They're not responding back to me.

Finally one of the officers from 6 Truck responds back to me, "Did you see anybody from 39? Negative. I haven't seen anyone yet." About maybe a half an hour this is going on. Now his unit is told to come out of there.

So I'm calling him. He doesn't respond. But the officer from 16 Truck, Lieutenant Williams -- he said, "Arthur" -- I said, "Lou, anybody from 39? Did anybody see anybody from 39?" No one knew. As soon as we hear something, we'll get back to you.

Now I see Chief Schildhorn from the 10th Battalion. I go over there. "Chief, any word on 39?" He said, "No, Arthur, no word." "Did you hear from anybody? Did any of the guys call?" He said, "No, we haven't heard anything." All right. Now I'm just saying these guys are dead. We all came down together. I'm crying.

The sweetest voice that ever came in my life I heard, Jeff Coniglio and Jimmy Efthimiades. I hear, "Arthur. Arthur." I'm looking at these guys in amazement. They're all covered up and everything. I said, "Get over here, you mother fuckers." I was running over, and the three of us were standing right by the command post hugging and crying. I was just so glad to see these guys.

Right behind them was Jimmy Bacon. He was right behind. I said, "Get over here, man. How are you feeling? Didn't you fucking hear me calling you?" It was like seeing my own kids being lost and then I found them.

We were just standing there crying. I said, "Where is McGlynn, man? Where is McGlynn, the officer? Where is Lieutenant McGlynn?" They said, "He's inside helping with the evacuation."

I said, "What the fuck are you doing in there, man?"

So I called him on the radio. He didn't respond right away. I said, "I thought you said he was all right?" "No, Arthur, he's all right." I said, "You guys all right?" They were complaining about eye injuries.

So we made it over where EMS was. They were telling everybody to go over that way, get away from the main body of debris. EMS guys took the post and everything. Jeffrey and Jimmy Efthimiades, they both went to the hospital.

I said, "Look, I'm going to call and let the families know you guys are all right." What I did was I made it back to PS 89 and I called back here to the firehouse. I said, "Listen, there should be a captain there, Savarese. The lieutenant made captain, Savarese." I said, "Captain, listen, just let the guys' families know everybody from 39 is all right."

I knew Lieutenant Williams from 16 Truck was all right. I heard Oscar, who was the chauffeur from 16 Truck named Steve Wright, who was the roof man, if I'm not mistaken, and Rattazzi. Those guys I knew were all right.

The other guys, Bobby Dana and Kenny Rogers, I didn't know if those guys were all right. So I didn't want to say, well, everybody from 16; I said everybody from 39 is all right. Let the family members know.

At that point we made it back over to -- I left Jeffrey and Jimmy, and I came back over to some staging area they had by either Stuyvesant school -- one of the schools, and saw some of the other guys.

They said, "Listen, go over there and tell them where you were at and give account of what happened," which is what I did. They were seeing who was accounted for. They said, "You have to write down your engine company and your name." They were trying to get who was still here. That's what I did.

Then I saw the rest of my guys from 39, Lieutenant (inaudible). I said, "Where are the guys?" He said, "Over here." I said, "Where is Lieutenant McGlynn?" They said, "McGlynn is over there."

So I just made it over there, got him, hugged him and everything.

It was a hell of an experience. I never want to go through that again, never. Nothing I ever saw before in my life. Just seeing the people jumping was just in itself -- the tower coming down was one thing. Seeing these people jump to their death was so all by itself.

That was it for me. We all came back. I came back with 16 Truck.

Q. You were there until late that night?

A. Late that night. We didn't leave out of there until around 8:00. We got there around 9:30, 25 to 10. We left after the first plane hit. No later than 20 to 10, we were down there. As soon as I got up, we went down and over to Second Avenue and just shot straight down there. When I got over to Houston, I was on the ongoing side traffic. I said I've got to get over to the west side quick and down to the site.

Q. I would like to thank you for participating in this interview, Arthur.

MR. CUNDARI: This concludes the tape, and the time is 12:35.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT DECOSTA WRIGHT

Interview Date: October 11, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Today's date is October 11, 2001. The time is 1531 hours. I'm Christine Bastedenbeck of the New York City Fire Department, conducting an interview with EMT DeCosta Wright at Battalion 31.

Q. He will introduce himself now.

A. I am DeCosta Wright, EMT Wright, at Battalion 31.

Q. What unit and Battalion, are you assigned to Battalion 31, what unit?

A. I was working on 31 Adam.

Q. Tell me what you remember about the events of September 11, 2001.

A. Basically I was working in a unit. It was about 8:50 when we got the call. It came over the computer as a fire at the World Trade Center. So at first we got the call, we rushed to it and I didn't believe it at first until we got on the bridge. Then I saw it in flames. I said oh, my god. I couldn't believe it. It was unreal. Everything was so unreal.

So we just tried our best to get through traffic to get there. When we finally got there, we staged on the West Side Highway right in front of the first tower, and the building was in flames, the first building was in flames. Basically we took all our equipment out and ready to see how many patients there were, you know, that was on the scene. We seen all the firemen run into the building.

Q. Did you report to a Lieutenant? Do you know who it was when you first got there?

A. No, I'm not sure which Lieutenant.

Q. But you reported to a Lieutenant?

A. Yes, it was just -- basically, we were just so much in awe about the whole thing. The building continued burning. All of a sudden I seen a couple of people jumping out. But before that, some debris came down, was coming down. Large pieces of metal just flying down. If that thing would have hit anybody, that would have decapitated somebody, but it floated all the way towards us and then it went into the building next to us and broke the windows.

That was one part that I remember. After that, that's when we started seeing people starting to jump out. It was total -- that was unreal, I tell you, to see people jump from the top floor. A few minutes later, we had seen the second plane just come in, go right through the second building.

So we couldn't believe it, because we thought the first one was an accident. So then right after that we knew it was terrorism. So after that, after the second plane hit, it was just raining people, people were just jumping. When the first one hit, they were just jumping periodically. You would see one man jump out. I was in -- in our position, we could actually see when they hit the ground and I seen body parts just going everywhere when they hit the ground, so when one guy hit, all you hear was boom, then you see his arms and legs, just flew right off.

Then right after that I see a woman, she was just spinning in the air. After that, when the second plane hit, that's when my partner was like -- he couldn't believe my reaction, because all I was saying, all these people that was jumping out. I was just saying oh, my god, oh, my god. I couldn't believe -- I was like oh, my god. I couldn't believe. It was so unreal.

Then a few minutes later, we hear all this rumbling, sounded like an earthquake. Somebody said the building is coming down. So everybody is just screaming. We ran into the --

Q. On the map.

A. Right next to us, the Merrill Lynch building. Yes, we ran into the Merrill Lynch building. That building was shaking. Everybody was just screaming, and I thought that building was coming down too, because of the way it was just -- the shaking and everybody just -- so everybody thought they were going to die. Everybody actually -- I thought that was it. I thought that was the end.

So we ran into the basement of that building, everybody. Then after we -- after the rumbling stopped, we came out the building.

Q. Do you remember who ran into the building with you, who was with you when you ran into the building?

A. There was a lot of people, so many people, that's when everybody split up. I didn't see my partner. That was then. I didn't see my partner nowhere. So I walked outside and was engulfed in smoke and a lot of asbestos and stuff. I walked around, I couldn't see nothing. I wanted to see what happened. The building collapsed. So I walked to that site and it was like totally deserted. I was by myself at that time. I don't know where anybody was. It was so unreal. I walked and basically you couldn't see your hand in front of you.

As I got closer to that site, all I heard was moaning and some people that were lying down near the site, near the rubble. They were bleeding. I seen a lot of people bleeding from the mouth, the nose, they was calling on me, help me, help me. I had no equipment, my bus is gone. My bus is covered. They was just screaming help me. There is nothing I could do for them, except for those firemen that was out there that was just walking around, I mean just in total awe and like, god, man, they didn't know where they were. They had blood everywhere but you know, they were walking wounded.

It's crazy how they were just walking around, like they didn't know where they were. I was basically at that time I was grabbing them and bringing them to safety and --

Q. Where did you bring them to?

A. There was a building. There was another staging area. We were bringing sick people, people that was injured. There was a paramedic that was under a vehicle in the rubble. I went back to the site. We got a stretcher. We ran and got him. He was alive. He wasn't injured.

Q. Do you know who he was?

A. I forgot his name. It will come back to me.

Q. Does he work at this station?

A. Yes, he is at this station. Anyway, he was coughing. He really couldn't get his breath. He was totally covered in soot and all, and he totally breathed it in, so when we brought him to that triage area --

Q. Do you know where that triage area was?

A. I'm not sure. It was right around the corner.

Q. If you looked on the map would that help you or not really?

A. It was right there. It was this building. I think it was this building.

Q. You brought him into a building where there was triage?

A. This building.

Q. Was it the American Express building on the corner of Vesey?

A. I think it was by the water. I think it was the American Express building. Yes, it had to be.

Q. That's where you brought him?

A. Brought him in there. Then he was basically coughing. He was vomiting and after he started getting better, you know, he wanted to get up and he was -- so I gave him some water, oxygen, you know, he didn't want -- he just wanted to go back out there.

So after I seen that he was all right by himself, I went back out there. So the same scenario, those guys, firemen walking around the scene. You seen Lieutenants, all this big brass walking around, everybody, just in la-la land. So basically I was there, just still doing the same thing. Trying to get then to safety.

Then all of a sudden, that earthquake sound again and I knew what it was, you know. The second building was coming down. Since I heard that sound, I knew, so I started running. That's one of the things -- one of the reasons that I couldn't sleep, because there were still people there alive. I don't know if they were buried in the second one. There was people that are screaming to me. Help me, patients that was there that we couldn't do anything about.

Then we heard that second rumble and I just started running, you know. That cloud just was chasing me. Of course I got cornered. After that cleared, as a matter of fact, I ran into the same building, where we was triaging.

After that I didn't go back there. I couldn't go back.

Q. Did you stay in the American Express building?

A. Stayed there, then I went to, as a matter of fact, the Lieutenants there, they wouldn't let anybody go back. They sent me with some patients to the hospitals. Like I said, I was split up. I didn't have a partner at that time. I didn't know how I was going to get home, you know, back to my station.

At that time that was basically it. After I went to the hospital, came back to -- there was another staging area, it was on -- it was way up on the West Side Highway. There was like a thousand ambulances.

Q. Was it the Chelsea Pier?

A. Yes.

Q. Or Pier 94?

A. Yes.

Q. Which one?

A. I'm not sure.

Q. You don't remember?

A. (inaudible).

Q. Okay.

A. There was a lot of ambulances there. I met up with a couple of guys from my station.

Q. Who were they? Do you remember their names?

A. There was Andre.

Q. Cherrington?

A. Cherrington, and his partner. That was the one that was in the rubble. He came back.

Q. Andre's partner that day?

A. Yes, what's him name?

Q. Suarez?

A. No.

Q. Smiley?

A. Smiley. It was me, Andre, Smiley, and who else did we have there? I don't remember who else. It was me, Andre and Smiley.

Q. Did you ever find your partner that day?

A. No.

Q. Who were you working with that day?

A. Jackson. Then after that, as a matter of fact, that was about 4 hours later we met up. Then we went back, me and Jackson went back. We didn't have our ambulance, that was what it was. Our ambulance was still in the rubble, so we didn't have no ambulance, so we had to split up while we were still together.

Then we went back to the site. We was on -- we went to a different staging area. We was by -- let me see that map. We were right in front of -- what was the last building that collapsed?

Q. 7?

A. We was right there. That was building 7.

Q. You were at a triage area there or --

A. We made our own triage area. There was a couple of more ambulances, like 4 ambulances.

Q. You were in another vehicle then when you went over there?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember what vehicle number it was?

A. No.

Q. Okay.

A. So that was basically -- we watched that one come down. It was on fire first. I think the fourth floor was on fire. They said -- we were like, are you guys going to put that fire out? I was like, you know, they are going to wait for it to burn down and it collapsed. So that's when I knew high rise buildings, you know, (inaudible).

Q. Were you there when building 7 came down in the afternoon?

A. Yes.

Q. You were still there?

A. Yes, so basically they measured out how far the building was going to come, so we knew exactly where we could stand.

Q. So they just put you in a safe area, safe enough for when that building came down?

A. 5 blocks. 5 blocks away. We still could see. Exactly right on point, the cloud just stopped right there. Then when that building was coming down, the same thing, that same rumbling. That's why I like, for a couple of weeks, every little sound that I heard. It was unreal.

Q. What time did you finally get off that day?

A. Got off, left at 11 o'clock.

Q. At night from over there?

A. Yes.

Q. And came back here?

A. 11 o'clock.

Q. Anything else you want to add or --

A. No.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CHIEF THOMAS McCARTHY

Interview Date: October 11, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. McALLISTER: This is Kevin McAllister from the Bureau of Administration. It's October 11th at 1504 hours. We're at headquarters in the Commissioner's conference room. I'm joined by --

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: Assistant Commissioner James Drury.

MR. McALLISTER: And we're here with Chief Thomas McCarthy.

Q. Chief McCarthy, we'd like to draw your attention to September 11, 2001, and get your recollections of that day.

A. Okay. After finding out about the plane crash at the building, I got in touch with headquarters. Eddie Moriarty answered and told me to go to shops, get the list of the spare rigs and where they're located.

Q. Chief, were you working that day or were you off?

A. I was off.

Q. So you found out about the plane crash at home?

A. At home, yes. My wife had told me about it. She saw it on TV.

So then I headed over to shops, got the list, couldn't get through, the phone lines were down, so I just faxed it over and that went through. One of the buildings collapsed when I was at the shops. So I got in the car and took off. I got my fire gear, headed into the city, because it was on the way home going from the shops through Queens, got my gear and went to the foot of the Brooklyn Bridge. I got a ride over the bridge and headed to Vesey and Broadway.

Chief Haring was just starting to set up a command post. He made me Battalion 99. I had one handie-talkie, and as guys filtered in from different companies, all volunteers, I had about twelve guys, three of them officers. So I teamed guys up with officers so I didn't lose them.

As we went down Vesey Street, we came across ESU trucks and police vehicles that were on fire and in some of them, the bullets were starting to go off. We went over to the vehicles and took whatever tools we could because we had no tools. Originally our assignment was Al Fuentes who was trapped in his car and we were supposed to head to the West Side Highway and look for him. We took some battery powered saws, some flashlights, repelling ropes and any hand tools we could get.

When we got to the next corner, another ESU vehicle was parked there. Some gentleman was dead in the street. We checked his pulse, left him there and took a mask, an ESU mask that was there.

Q. This was at the corner of Vesey and West now?

A. No, not West. I'm trying to think. The next block down.

Q. Church?

A. The next block was at Church.

Q. Were either of the towers standing at that point?

A. Actually, when I was in transit, the second one went down. So they're both down. When I got to the scene, it was just a cloud of cement dust and just black. As you got to the scene, it was black, car fires, a couple of small stores had fires in the front, just sporadic fires around, papers floating around, and as you got to the command post and looked further down Broadway, it was just completely black.

Q. Chief, what time did you get there about?

A. I'm guessing quarter of 11:00 or so.

Q. And the command post had been set up at that point at Park Row and Broadway?

A. Yes.

Q. Right near St. Paul's Chapel?

A. Right. Chief Haring was just there with I think Chris Wall. No, it couldn't have been Chris. It might have been Chris. I'm not sure. I thought I saw him there. They just had gotten there and they had nothing. They were trying to put a command post together. He did a great job.

Q. What did the streets look like at that point?

A. Paper everywhere. Probably up to your ankles in cement dust everywhere. Just paper floating around covering the street and that blackness was over there, cloud, just as much as you could see, everything was black where the World Trade Center was.

I lost a lot of guys. Guys would stop and help pull load lines. They were just filling in wherever they could, putting out some car fires, working on a couple of people who were dead, trying to get them out. I went further down.

Q. Are these civilians or firefighters?

A. Civilians. All civilians.

We got further down to the overpass that connects 5 and 6 World Trade to 7 World Trade. We went up the stairs there, across that area. I had another firefighter with me at that point and there was a civilian up there. He gave me his name, John D'Russo or John Russo. He was laying face down under 6 World Trade. So we helped him across the I-beams.

Q. Did you know him?

A. No. We heard a guy calling out. I talked to him because we put our arms around him on either side. He was a big guy, so it took two of us to get him out. We tried to dance him across the beams and take him down. Some EMS personnel were coming and some other guys, so we left him there and went back up.

There were three masks there. We shut off the pass alarms so no one went up there to search for them. That area between the two buildings was just all glass, pieces of building, fire, and everything was raining down still, glass was coming down, pieces of fire. So we didn't go that way.

I think at that point I went around to Church Street. There were no chiefs there and I just wanted to keep the guys away. They had tried to set up a stang but they had no water pressure and no reach, so I just kept everyone on the other side of Church Street, on the safe side. I sent some guys into the Millennium to search the hotel and some guys into Century's to search the store.

211 rig showed up. Brian Corcoran from 50 engine, and he's real sharp. He tried to hook up to the standpipe system of the Millennium to get a water supply because we had no water supply. A rig on the corner was just there, was hooked up, but it had no water, and that started to burn. We were trying to put that out.

Q. Do you know which company that rig belonged to?

A. No. I didn't see a number. I just saw the back end of it. Then at that point we had reports of people on the Path train and they needed help down there. I had sent guys around to different rigs to just gather up all the tools they could so we had a supply right there. So I sent some guys to grab tools, hand tools, and head down there. I'm trying to think what happened at that point.

Q. Were they able to get into the Path tunnel?

A. The units that were down there were calling for help. The guys I sent, I don't know if they got there. I think they got there in time to help, but they saw they were pretty much far along with the rescue and they either got somebody out, I don't know if they were dead or alive, but I called down there and they said they didn't need any more help. So I don't know what the outcome was.

At that point I had everyone pretty much on the safe side of the buildings. Another chief came. So at that point I went around to the plaza area. That had collapsed. When I got back there, the bridge to 7 World Trade had collapsed in front of it, that front area right in the plaza. So we went through 5 because guys were telling me they heard pass alarms in the hall in the plaza on the other side of 5. So I didn't think anyone was there, but I just wanted to make sure I got these guys out because guys were trying to do crazy stuff.

So we went over there and you could see the 1 World Trade facade was there and I thought that thing might come down, so I just said let's get out of here. There were no pass alarms. It was just the guys who wanted to do so much that a lot of it was more good intentions than good sense. We got those guys out of there.

At one point I was working with ESU guys. We had four ESU guys who joined us. Before I got to Church Street, as we came down from the plaza, we went into the concourse and -- I'm sorry. After that collapsed, I had ESU guys with me and probably about six guys. We tried to go underneath into the concourse level to see if we had access. You couldn't. It was just all concrete, slabs of concrete. And then we searched the Port Authority. The Port Authority police had a substation there. So we searched that, made sure all those guys were out. We went back out to the street and ESU guys thanked us and they were going to look for their guys and we were going to head around Liberty.

At that point I ran into a bunch of guys who wanted to get back --

Q. Were you east of the site or west of the site at that time?

A. I was right in front of 5 then.

Q. Got it.

A. And then a bunch of guys wanted to find the entrance to the plaza from that side. So I took them around. Bobby Higgins was there then. So we went out into that rubble between the two buildings and went around. It was pointless. There was no reason to be there. The floors in 5 had cracked and they were pitched and at that point I'm losing confidence in the building. So we came out.

I think Bobby and myself and another guy went -- he thought people were on the second floor, so we went up and searched a couple floors in 5. He was looking for his brother. So then I went with him. A couple of chiefs were already on Church Street. So I went with him around Liberty and that was just massive rubble in front of 10 and 10. So we went on the side street and went around to West Street.

At that point I was exhausted. I ran into a friend of mine from OEM and just sat down with him and tried to catch my breath. Bobby kept going. I'm trying to remember what happened at that point. They were sending some guys in. Chief Hayden was sending some guys in and he just told me to stay outside.

I left then. I walked around the building to go back to the command post and that's when they were waiting for 7 World Trade to come down. I didn't know they were waiting at that time. I called in. They had three floors of fire on three separate floors, probably 10, 11 and 15 it looked like, just burning merrily. It was pretty amazing, you know, it's the afternoon in lower Manhattan, a major high-rise is burning, and they said we know. I think they said they had seven to ten floors that were freestanding and they weren't going to send anyone in.

I went around to the command post.

Q. So this is late afternoon at this point?

A. Yes. It's probably around 6:00 o'clock.

So when I get to the command post, they just had a flood of guys standing there. They were just waiting for 7 to come down. So I went over to Pace, got my eyes washed, and I went back, just standing around.

So I didn't want to stand around. I went back to headquarters, walked over. I started to walk over the bridge and I hooked a ride on a bus and went back to headquarters and started helping out here with logistics.

Q. When you say you went to Pace to get your eyes washed out, you mean Pace University?

A. Yes. They had a triage center there.

Q. Right. You said you made it down to West Street. Did you ever see the area near or around the World Financial Center where the FDNY command post had been before the collapse?

A. No. I made it down Vesey Street to just in front of the overpass of 7 World Trade. People were saying don't stand under there, it's going to come down. And then by the time I made it back around, I went to the front on Church Street and came back around. The area we took that civilian out of had all collapsed. That wasn't there anymore.

So at that point we were a little leery about how the bridge was tied in, so no one was really going onto it, and then they were also saying 7 was going to come down. They chased everyone off the block.

Q. You said before, Chief, that you heard bullets going off. Approximately how many did you hear?

A. Oh, it was like it was just constant. Constant. Whatever, I guess there were packages or something, and as they heated up, they were just pop pop pop pop pop pop pop. They were going off like at a steady rate.

Q. And that's when you were near 5 World Trade Center?

A. That was on Vesey Street west of Broadway. That's where ESU had parked a number of vehicles. Right outside the church.

Q. And you wound up back at headquarters?

A. Yes. I went back here just so I could do something.

Q. At some point in time were you informed that First Deputy Commissioner Feehan and Chief of Department Ganci were among the missing?

A. I had heard that. I don't know at what point I heard that. But when I left Pace, I heard one radio transmission that said Feehan was in an ambulance, so I thought he was okay at that point, but they must have -- I don't know. I don't know how that transmission came over, but I heard he was in an ambulance, so I thought he was okay, he was in an ambulance, at least alive. That's probably the first I knew of Feehan, and I didn't really know anything about Ganci now that I'm thinking back on it. I probably wouldn't have known anything about it. I don't know if I heard anything. No one really knew anything. Guys were just wandering.

It was terrible because guys wanted to do something, they didn't know what. They would just come up to me because they saw the white helmet and say I want to do this, I want to do that, you know, we'll get some guys, we'll do this, you know, it was sad because everyone knew our guys were in there.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: Thanks, Chief. I don't have anything more.

MR. McALLISTER: I guess before we conclude the interview, if you have any other observations or if you recall any people you might have seen that day, we'd ask you if you do, and if not, we'll conclude the interview.

CHIEF McCARTHY: Offhand, no. I think that's all that comes to mind right now.

MR. McALLISTER: Thank you very much, Chief.

CHIEF McCARTHY: Okay.

MR. McALLISTER: It's Kevin McAllister here again. It's 15 hours 19 minutes. We're going to conclude the interview. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

PARAMEDIC GEORGE BURBANO

Interview Date: October 11, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. TAMBASCO: Today is October 11. The time is 1449 hours. My name is Mike Tambasco assigned to the World Trade Center Task Force. I'm here conducting an interview with Paramedic George Burbano in regards to the events of September 11 at the World Trade Center.

Q. Mr. Burbano, I just ask you to give me your name, rank and then tell me your story.

A. My name is George Burbano. I'm a Paramedic, Battalion 22 on Staten Island.

Q. Just feel free to tell me what happened from the beginning to the end.

A. That morning I left BHS, I left headquarters at sometime around 8:20, 8:30 in the morning. I was going into Manhattan.

Q. You weren't on duty, right?

A. I wasn't on duty initially, no. I was going into Manhattan to meet a friend of mine at the World Trade Center. We were going into midtown. I hopped on the 2 train some time around quarter to nine and within minutes after that, we went one stop to Chambers Street and they stopped the train and they asked everybody to get out of the train and we left at Chambers Street. We walked out and when I came out at Chambers Street, I saw the one building on fire. Actually we saw mostly just smoke.

Then within -- we are watching it and I started walking down towards the Center, and then within minutes after that, I heard a second explosion. At that point I literally ran down to the Center and when I got to -- I came down Chambers Street. I came down Church.

Q. Church?

A. Yes, I came down this way, I came down Barclay Street. I came across West, came by the two buildings down Vesey Street and went in front of the Trade Center. When I came down here there was a lot of debris all around this area.

Q. That's all along Vesey Street?

A. That's right, all along Vesey Street. There was a lot of debris. There was a lot of people that were injured. There were a lot of people running away from the buildings. I went past most of those people and I went to the front of the World Trade Center.

Q. That would be on West Street?

A. That's right. I was on West Street and at the front of the World Trade Center I saw numerous fire trucks and there was already a few ambulances there. I found somewhere around Vesey Street and West Street I ran into Joe Cahill. I told Joe, I said, do you guys need help. I said you know I'm here. I was dressed in regular clothes. I didn't have anything on me. Joe Cahill gave me his sweat shirt that said Cahill on it, which to this day is plowed.

He said, you know, he said I need you to grab some of these guys that are coming in and see if you can set up a triage unit somewhere nearby. He said there are units set up all over the place. We have tons of patients. So myself and about 4 or 5 EMTs, I don't know any of these guys --

Q. Were they Fire Department EMTs?

A. They were no, they were our unit, EMS EMTs. There was numerous trucks parked all along this -- like from below the pedestrians street all the way up. This way they had parked the ambulances on the left side.

Q. On West Street?

A. That's right. And then he told me to take that ambulance with a few EMTs and if I can go around to the front of the building, to the front of the Trade Center, which would probably -- he led me to believe from the map that it would have been like by 5 World Trade Center, where there were patients all along here.

I grabbed a couple of them. I put them in the ambulance, on to vehicle 307, which was there. I took one of them -- the guy in front of me with me in the front was -- I believe it was a new EMT. He was only on the job a few months and as soon as we pulled away, we heard a large fall of something. It looked to me like it was just like a large chunk of the Center from this side fell on top of this area.

At that point I was going to turn the vehicle around, but there was like a huge cloud of dirt and debris that was just coming to us, and I pulled away. I went up West Street with a few of the EMTs in there. As we went up West Street there was numerous EMS personnel. Of course we were all running up the street now.

When we got like somewhere around Murray Street, I ran into a supervisor there who I used to work with, actually, a couple of years ago, Marty Miller and a couple of other supervisors. There was a Chief also there, but I don't remember his name.

At that point I opened up the back of the truck. A lot of that cloud of dust had settled in and they had pulled out a police officer who was with a

Scott packing and everything. He couldn't breathe and we put him in the back of the ambulance right there on that corner.

We met up with some St. Vincent's ambulances there also. One of the girl -- I know her by first name. I don't know her last name. Her name is Ernestine. She is a medic out of St. Vinny's. She used to work here on Staten Island with us as BLS out of St. Vincent Staten Island. Now she is a medic in Manhattan. I ran into her there and we took that cop and carried him over to the ambulance. We put him in the back of the ambulance. I started him on a treatment. The BLS crew was there.

Then within sometime after that, there was more debris that was falling. There was like another cloud, so we moved up further. We went up further with the ambulance. That police officer -- we actually got into a little bit of a verbal thing, because he wanted to go back and we told him you should not go back. He couldn't breathe. We had to literally carry him up to begin with. He started running back and then soon after that, he -- I was -- the radio -- the ambulance was open and all we heard on the radio was that the building was collapsing. The building was collapsing.

Q. You didn't happen to get a name on the police officer, did you?

A. I didn't get his name. He was one of the ESU guys. He was in his 40s. You know, we started him on a treatment and then he took off out of the ambulance and he started running down West Street and we actually followed him. I actually grabbed him. I tried to put him back in the truck and we couldn't do that. The guy couldn't breathe. Actually I saw that. That was -- they actually caught that on videotape. It was on the one of the news shows when I was there. We saw that on video.

We started sort of making our way back because a lot of that dust settled.

Q. Going back south?

A. Going back south towards the Center. There was patients that were in that area that were covered in smoke and dust and all that other stuff that was on them. There was another ambulance that was left there and it was left wide open, so I hopped on that vehicle and moved that vehicle on forward.

Q. Went north with that.

A. That's right. Went north with that, and met with them somewhere around, I guess like Warren Street, where there is that -- a parking lot outside. Then as soon as that happened, we saw the second building go down.

At that point when the second building went down, we moved further, everybody hopped in the ambulances and we moved further -- there was a police chief who was actually running towards the Center and we actually almost tackled this guy, because he was running towards the building when that second building collapsed and we grabbed him and we put him in the ambulance with us and we ended up down by Canal Street, so we went all the way up north to Canal Street.

After the two buildings were down, we -- I took those EMTs that were with me initially. I hopped in the back of the ambulance along with a whole bunch of others. We had about 12 people in the ambulance at that point, and cut across the east side, trying to get down Church. We couldn't get down Church, so we just kept -- crossed behind City Hall over to the east side because we were told to report to the ferry terminal at that point.

We came down to the ferry terminal. At the ferry terminal I ran into some people that I knew from actually, you know, Staten Island, Mark Cohen and Katherine Zarr, who was having trouble breathing and we started treating her at the ferry terminal. Her partner was initially missing, Mark Harris. We didn't know where he was because apparently they were like somewhere near the building when the first building started coming down. We started treating her and then for the rest of the day we just started treating people that were coming down to the ferry. That was it.

But as far as the time line goes, I know that I got on the subway sometime like around 25 to 9, somewhere around that time, and it was just a few minutes. I mean I figured I waited for the subway for a few minutes, then I got on the 2 train and then went one stop and they kicked us out.

By the time I ran down, it was when -- pretty much when I got -- I must have been a few blocks away, so I was probably like somewhere around Barclay Street when the second building got hit. I didn't see the building get hit. We just heard the building got hit. Then I came across this way and I came to -- towards the front of the World Trade Center.

I mean I saw -- when I got in front there was tons of fire units, EMS personnel, a lot of voluntary personnel were there. There was a couple of Metropolitan ambulances that I noticed as I walked by. The EMS ambulances were parked basically from the front of the World Trade Center here all the way under the pedestrian bridge that way.

Q. So from the north tower basically going north on West Street?

A. Yes. They were all parked from the north tower right in front, because I ended up going behind what's 6 World Trade Center, which I never knew what number that was, but I ended up going behind the 6 World Trade Center, came in front of the building here where the old hotel was and that's where they had set up a lot of those command centers right there.

When that first wall collapsed, I just pulled away from there. I mean I just pulled away from there when that wall collapsed, and at that point, one of the EMTs who was with me in the front who was very upset, you know, he said, you know, should we go back, should we go back. I said we can't go back at this point. We didn't know what the damage was, but we knew that a lot of those people were probably injured or at least (inaudible), but that's basically it.

After that we made our way to the ferry terminal. I don't remember what time after that to be honest with you. I lost complete track of time after that until 1:30, 2:00, I think it was, when I finally through to my wife. [redacted], but that's basically it.

Q. Okay, George. Is there anything else you might want to add to this?

A. No, that's basically it.

MR. TAMBASCO: I thank you for your interview and the interview will be concluded at 1459 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

PARAMEDIC MARK HARRIS

Interview Date: October 11, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. TAMBASCO: Today is October 11, 2001. The time is 1509 hours. I'm Mike Tambasco assigned to the World Trade Center Task Force. Conducting an interview with Paramedic Mark Harris of Battalion 22. We are in the conference room at Division 5. This interview is in reference to the events that were witnessed by Paramedic Harris on September 11, 2001.

Q. Mark, if you could, tell me your story.

A. We got sent, I don't remember the exact time when we got sent, but as we got into the tunnel, we were told -- we heard the fact that the -- there was a confirmed plane had gone into tower one and that there were people coming out of the windows and rubble and everything. As we got out of the tunnel --

Q. Who were you working with?

A. Kathy Zarr. As we got out of the tunnel, we looked -- got out -- pulled out of the tunnel and the second plane hit as we pulled out of the tunnel.

Q. You saw it hit?

A. I didn't see it, but we heard the explosion. We heard the explosion and looked up. We then were directed to -- this is North -- South End street. We were directed on down Liberty Street to South End Street and we parked right in Gateway Plaza right behind the World Financial Center at Au Bon Pain. Our vehicle was the second to last vehicle in the line of about 10, in the line of about 10, with the Hatzolah MERV in the corner.

Q. In like the little alcove?

A. In like the little alcove, right. Like a little alcove. There was a bank of phones right on the other side of Liberty Street that will come into play afterwards. We were advised by Chief Grant to set up a triage, a primary or secondary triage center, since we were told there was going to be one inside the Trade Center and then once that came out, the patients would be brought to us.

We were told we would be moved up to approximately the West Side Highway. We set up our equipment, we set up -- actually, we used wrought iron tables at Au Bon Pain as like a makeshift stretch of beds.

I then -- we were there about 10, 15 minutes, maybe a little more, talking. We then moved the ambulances about 10 feet further down to allow for more ambulances, since they initially parked parallel to the West Side Highway -- perpendicular to the West Side Highway, we made them parallel, so we could go access out North End Streets down towards any of the hospitals.

We then -- there was no patients as of yet in our sector. I, along with one or two other police officers, walked over to the West Side Highway and we were standing on the planter part of the West Side Highway -- you know there was like a planter.

Q. Like a divide?

A. The divide, right, or planter. We were watching people come down. We were watching people come down. I myself witnessed about 15 or 18 people hit the ground. I saw two firemen -- I'm going to use the word explode, but a body fell on them and they exploded along with the body. They were walking into the Trade Center. I don't know who they were, but I just know that one of them was cut in half and the other one exploded.

We took a step back, because there were parts of the building was falling, which I saw a Port Authority policeman, a few civilians killed by falling debris and also another few firemen as they were going into the building. I don't remember the names or the exact numbers, but I just remember that there was at least two to five people I saw actually get hit by bodies as they came down.

I then proceeded to walk back to tell Chief Grant that I think that we should, you know, that that -- what was happening over here. Chief McCracken was with them, because we were about to set up a triage center right in front of the building. I wanted to relay to them because I didn't know what was going on, but I just saw that, so I walked back and as we walked back, we were sitting there talking and we heard a sound that sounded like a plane -- like you were in the middle of a plane engine.

Everybody looked up and you said oh, no, a third one. That's how loud it was. Then we turned our eyes toward the Trade Center and we saw the top building come down. Unfortunately for me I was in the street at the time with no cover. The only coverage I had was the first ambulance. So I ran. I had my vest on, my bullet resistant vest. I ran. I dove under that ambulance and it started to get buried with rubble.

I dug myself out from underneath the ambulance and I started running towards the back of Au Bon Pain, which at least was a building between us. As my vest can prove, the straps across my back cut, my vest was cut into shreds in the back. It was three different places, there's rips about 4 or 5 inches from where glass went across my body in the back.

We got hit with the glass, debris, and I got knocked over and I then made my way to the side of the building, which luckily was lined up with about 100 bottles of water. I thought I was about to die, because I couldn't breathe. Debris was raining on top of me. I went under one of those wrought iron tables that we had lined, put a stretcher mat over, and I was using that as shelter. I couldn't see anybody or anything around me. I thought I was starting to suffocate because you couldn't breathe because of what was in my mouth, so I started washing my mouth out.

I then -- I had contact lenses in. I figured that there was going to be a heat blast, so I ripped my contacts out. Unfortunately underneath the contacts was cement and I cut my corneas in half. 85 percent in half. It cut my corneas almost completely in half.

The debris stopped shortly afterwards and I ran into Au Bon Pain and started pulling people out that were buried under glass. There was, I think, one or two people that were dead in there. I don't remember exactly. The police officer that I walked up to that he was just telling me about his vacation that he was going on in two days, he was killed.

The Hatzolah MERV was destroyed. The ambulance in front of the one in front of mine that I was on, the ambulance that I was under was damaged. The ambulance in front of that one was destroyed. I don't know whose it was. I think it may have been a Midwood ambulance was destroyed. The Hatzolah MERV was destroyed.

I then ran to try and get people out from under the debris. There was a bunch of Hatzolah people that we pulled out. I started running towards the building, pulling people out as we went. I couldn't see. We had no equipment. We had no nothing.

So the next thing we did is somebody remembered that there was down here, a couple of blocks down, was a little pier, not Liberty Park Pier, but a tiny little pier. There were buildings over here. Two blocks down.

Q. Right. Down like around Rector Street and all?

A. Right. There is a little tiny pier over here with a park. We started evacuating people down the street from the buildings in Battery Park City and we set up an evacuation point on to tug boats. There was an EMS Captain, I'm not going to mention names, ran away and cowered and as people will tell you, I assumed command and I said I wanted everybody's EMS name, every EMS person that was there, I wanted to set up two sectors.

We did that, we started -- we evacuated approximately 5,000 people and I even went on the Richmond frequency and -- probably still on there. I will get in trouble. I tried to tell the Citywide dispatcher. We kept on getting cut off, cut off, cut off. I went on the Richmond frequency and Moshe was the dispatcher. I told him, I said 22 Victor with a priority, 22 Victor, go ahead. I told him, we have an evacuation point set up here. We have injured personnel but we are evacuating to -- evacuating to wherever they evacuated it to. I had no idea where it was. Please advise that there is no officer here, that we just were evacuating people out of the buildings.

I then realized that all our equipment was still at the World Financial Center.

Q. Up by Au Bon Pain?

A. Right. So I got into vehicle 145 and I drove up the street to get the equipment. We got up there and I saw John Rothmund up there. He went to his vehicle one way. I put the equipment in my vehicle and approximately then there were about 10 firemen and policemen milling around.

Q. This was all by right by Au Bon Pain over there?

A. Right, right. Milling around. There were people buried at the phone that we pulled their bodies off the phone. That was right across the street. We pulled them out. We didn't pronounce them because it was -- then we heard that wall again, that creak again. We looked up and we saw that the radio tower started to waiver on the second building.

A fireman broke the window to 145 and they piled into the back of that vehicle and this is like the Keystone cops. Five of them, six of them in the back. Two on the bumper, one on the windshield wipers, one holding on to the mirror. We're going back down South End Street towards the only safety we knew, which was the pier.

As we are driving down here everybody in the vehicle, everybody is screaming, fucking drive, drive, drive, because behind us was the black cloud of the building collapsing.

Q. The second building.

A. Second building collapsing. We drove down and we had just gotten emptied out. Everybody emptied out when it hit and it knocked all of us down. I mean we were covered. I couldn't see at this time. I couldn't see at all. I had basically vision of shapes. I found my partner. She evacuated on a boat to somewhere. I then went and I drove in vehicle 145 driving around, pulling people out of from under things, I drove along.

Q. Were you going up this --

A. No, Albany. No, it was on this side.

Q. Right.

A. I went up Albany. There is a little parking garage right over here. Right over here is a parking garage with a taxi in it. I remember the cab. There is a taxi in it, or maybe one of these. We are driving up and we're pulling people out from under the highway, we're pulling firemen out, and they in turn were pulling other people out.

There was one car that was sort of blocking the door to somebody, so a bunch of us pushed the car out of the way. Then on one of these streets I saw an ESU Sergeant, John Engel from ESU in Brooklyn. He pulled me under a hydrant and washed me off because I was covered. I was out of it and covered and I had no idea where anybody else was. Everybody else had evacuated.

So I'm driving along the West Side Highway pulling people out, and then we made the turn. I got only as far as approximate -- about Albany Street and I walked up towards --

Q. Towards the Trade Center buildings?

A. Towards the Trade Center building and there were people in our -- I don't know if it was ambulances or if it was -- I think they were ambulances and we pulled them out. We broke a couple of windows on the ambulances. We pulled people out. We pulled people out from -- there was two unmarked people in a sedan that we pulled out. There was a lady in a wheelchair that I pulled out. I don't remember. Then I know there was a couple of other people with me but I wasn't sure who -- I know one was a fireman and one was a cop, but I don't know who exactly they were.

I then -- I was there, I would say -- I got to tell you it seemed like eternity, but I know it was only about an hour, pulling people out. I got as close to the building as I could to pull people out. We were then looking for Chief Grant, his aides was panicking. We sort of took her under our wing. Chief Grant we couldn't find. Chief McCracken we couldn't find. We couldn't find anybody. I had no idea where any officers were.

I got as close to the building as I could. There was just body parts and bodies all over the place. There was just -- at least 50 to 100 bodies that I saw. I mean not full bodies, I should say, but pieces of bodies. I then drove down the West Side Highway towards --

Q. Towards the ferry?

A. The ferry, and as I made the turn I saw a vehicle with a Battalion Chief and two people in there. I grabbed Ian Swords and George Orlando, because they were my partners, and we just started walking up to see if we could help people. There was nobody that could be helped at the time because everybody was buried. Everything was on fire and you just couldn't get close enough.

We then went down to the staging area. I mean they told me what I looked like the next day and they said that they got scared because I was walking along dazed, I couldn't find anybody. I couldn't find anybody. I had no idea where anybody was. It was like a ghost town. You are walking and there is this fog there. You are walking under this fog and you are seeing people and you are going are you okay, and they say yes and you just walking on to the next one. You are going, are you okay, yes, and I remember two people I asked are you okay. They weren't okay because they were dead.

I just remember going to the pier and staying there. They tried to send me home three times. I left at 1:30 in the morning. By that time I couldn't see. I had to have -- I was driven home by -- what's his name. I was seen at St. Vincents, where they gave me some medicine in the eyes and they said -- they diagnosed the next day at the ophthalmologist. They were 85 percent cut. Sliced through and 85 to 90 percent scratched.

Marc Cohen was there also. He was inside the ferry terminal. All I remember is not being able to see and he was going through a whole bottle of Tylenol. Probably wasn't a good idea but I went home at 1:30 in the morning. I got taken back to the hospital at 12:30, 1 o'clock in the morning, after not

-- finally I couldn't stand the pain any more.

That's basically as far as I can remember.

Q. Did I understand you to say something that you actually saw Chief Ganci at some point?

A. Yes. In between the first and second collapse when I went back to get the equipment, we walked around and again, I can -- do you want to know the exact time.

Q. No.

A. I'm sorry, sir. I remember specifically seeing the Fire Department command center -- or command post. I remember -- again I don't want to swear to it, but from every recollection I have I remember Chief Ganci being there and him being knocked down and was (inaudible). As far as I remember. It could have been another fireman but I remember somebody saying my god, that was Ganci. I don't want to swear by it, but I know I was there.

Q. I guess on the west side over here somewhere?

A. As far as I can recall, I saw John Peruggia was talking to him and then Peruggia walked away and a couple of minutes after Peruggia walked away, I had come down. I don't remember exactly where it was, but again I don't want to swear by it, but I'm just going by what I saw and what somebody said to me. It was at a Fire Department, what was left of the Fire Department command post and it was a white helmet and I was told by one of the firemen, my god, that was Ganci.

Along with him, I was told that the Chaplain was also killed a few minutes before that. I didn't see him being carried or anything like that, but that (inaudible).

Q. It was debris that basically hit him?

A. I don't know. The Chaplain or Ganci?

Q. Ganci.

A. I don't know. I know something hit him. One of the people that I was with said a body hit him. One of the people said -- all I know is that when something hit him. I don't want to swear it was a body. I don't want to swear it was debris, but something hit him. So --

Q. How is your vision now?

A. [redacted]

[redacted]

Q. Mark, is there anything else that you would like to add to that. Any feelings, anything that you want?

A. Nice guy, I would imagine not. You know that feeling when you are falling and you wake up right before you fall, when you are sleeping.

Q. Yes.

A. I get that every night. [redacted] I mean I don't even know where to get my (inaudible) vest repaired. My vest from the glass going across my back, the back of the vest is all cut in four or five places. And the cover. I had -- I cleaned out my trunk yesterday. This belt still has white stuff from the Trade Center. But that's about it.

MR. TAMBASCO: Mark, listen, I thank you for the information and for the story. We will conclude the interview at 1531 hours. Once again, thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

PARAMEDIC MARC COHEN

Interview Date: October 11, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. RADENBERG: Today's date is October 11th, 2001. The time is 1505 hours and this is Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department, City of New York. I am conducting an interview with --

MR. COHEN: Paramedic Marc Cohen, Shield 2093, Battalion 22, EMS command.

MR. RADENBERG: -- of the Fire Department of the City of New York. We are currently at Seaview Hospital, Battalion 22. This interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. If you'd start with where you were at the time of the first impact, the first plane.

A. My partner and I, Kenny Davis, who is also a paramedic here at EMS Battalion 22, we were in the city, probably about 7:00 o'clock. That was the primary election day and we were planning to work for Mark Green, his campaign. We were on the 59th Street bridge when out of the corner of our eye we saw the first plane hit the World Trade Center. Looking south from the 59th Street bridge, we noticed the smoke.

We immediately went to Mark Green's headquarters, which was on 42nd Street. We made a telephone call to find out what we should do. We were directed at that point to go to Metropolitan Hospital and secure a vehicle, which we did. We got there. We saw Lieutenant Craig Wing at the desk. He handed us keys to a vehicle, and with about five additional off-duty EMS members, I don't know their names, they were working also at the local union that day, we got on the FDR southbound. I was driving. My partner Kenny was in the front with me and we had about four or five other EMTs, paramedics, in the back. Like I said, I don't know all of their names.

The FDR was basically shut down already. There were no cars on it, so we made pretty good time. When we came over the limited sight area like right about by the Brooklyn Bridge, from what we were talking about after, we believe that both buildings were still standing, but as we passed, Tower 1 had collapsed at that point, basically while we were on the FDR, like directly in front of the building. So that kind of gives us a sense of time. Everything was kind of moving pretty fast.

We were directed by Manhattan South dispatch to go to the South Ferry terminal. We got to the South Ferry terminal prior to Building 2 collapsing. I know that because I looked up and I saw one of the Trade Center buildings was gone, but the other one was still standing. Supplies were starting to arrive. They were starting to organize what was going on, and I was told by a Lieutenant in uniform with a Suburban, I don't recall who it was or even what he looks like or what his command was, but they were starting to set up and that we were going to expect a lot of patients because the building had just collapsed, one building had just collapsed.

So while they were throwing stuff out, I decided that I needed to start maybe heading and setting up a forward triage area because we weren't seeing patients. We were all kind of wondering why there was nobody that we were treating. So, by myself. I ran to the corner of Battery Park City, which is kind of like where the parking area is where you would pull in to the ferry terminal if you had a car, and then I made my way around walking down towards, I guess a little bit south of where the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel is. I was figuring that there would be just patients all laid out all over the place and everybody was running. There really weren't any patients and stuff.

Then, while I was looking around, then the second World Trade Center collapsed basically while I was looking at it. But the wind was at my back because I was facing north, so everything was kind of just blowing the other way. I mean, stuff was all over the place, but it wasn't as bad as I thought it would be. Then, of course, I started cursing and screaming and then I just ran back to the ferry terminal because I thought that patients were coming around kind of like flanking us, because the way the building collapsed, I mean, there was no way anybody could get through. There was like a huge pile of debris now on the West Side Highway.

I got there and then more EMS resources started to arrive, people that were closer to the buildings, like Dr. Cherson, Chief McCracken, Captain Frank D'Amato, Lieutenant Medjuck. We started to just organize incoming units that were there and started pulling stuff off the ambulances, back boards and fluids and IVs. Basically, a sense of time line at that point would be -- I guess it would have to be probably 11:00 o'clock by now. I mean, it was just one long -- we saw a couple of patients there, you know, critical, some with a pelvic fracture or long bone fractures and stuff, but I guess at this point -- I mean, I know at this point both of the Trade Center towers were down, so I guess it's about -- it would have to be probably about 11:00 o'clock now, 11:00 o'clock or 11:30.

I stayed there. I was there until 5:00 o'clock the next morning. I stayed there the whole time.

Q. Did you recognize, when you were at South Ferry, when you first got there, aside from the lieutenant, recognize anybody else that was staging down in that area at that point?

A. No. There were just so many people piling through the terminal, walking on the FDR Drive, coming -- I guess somehow they got onto the FDR Drive by the Brooklyn Bridge, the ramps, and then they came southbound on the FDR Drive. It was just hundreds, thousands. I mean, I couldn't even place a number on it. But the police started to tell them to head north, just to go, if you could walk, start walking, go north, however you can get out of here, just start walking north, and there were people starting to walk over the Brooklyn Bridge and I think a ferry took people out. Oh, yes. There were people getting on private boats also. I don't even know where these boats -- like fishing boats or private vessels and stuff from over there. I don't know how they were doing it, but I saw a lot of private boats with just a lot of people on it. But as far as EMS personnel, the only people that I recognized when I got there -- well, I didn't recognize him. I mean, I recognized him as an EMS lieutenant in uniform. I don't know...

No, I don't know his name. But he was the only person I recognized until I came back after the second building collapsed, after the second Trade Center collapsed, people that were coming that were close from the collapses, that I guess were closer because they were covered in debris, and even though I was relatively close, I guess, the wind being at my back, I didn't get like covered with stuff, but the first people that I recognized seeing and talking to other than the people I came with in the ambulance from Metropolitan Hospital were Chief McCracken, Dr. Cherson from OMA, Captain Frank D'Amato and Lieutenant Bruce Medjuck and...

Let me just think about it, who else was there. Nobody else, other than the people I came with, my partner, Kenny Davis.

Q. Do you remember what the vehicle number was that you got, that you picked up at Metropolitan?

A. It was a three-digit number starting with 2. I don't want to say 227 because I think 227 is a vehicle here and that's why it's popping into my mind. But it was an older --

Q. It's a 2300.

A. Yes. It was a three-digit number beginning with 2 and I'm sure -- I'm almost positive Lieutenant Wing made a notation in his lieutenant's log which vehicle we took because we know each other on a personal basis. Not personal. He knows my name and I know his name and stuff. So I'm sure he made a notation in his lieutenant logbook of which vehicle he gave us.

Q. Any other thoughts that you would like to add or oddities that stand out, a little strange event or sight? Not that the whole thing wasn't.

A. No.

MR. RADENBERG: Okay. The time is now 1516 hours. The interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT VALERIE LONGO

Interview Date: October 11, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. TAMBASCO: This is Mike Tambasco with the Trade Center task force conducting an interview with EMT Valerie Longo. We are in the conference room at Division 5 in Staten Island. The start time for the interview is 1430 hours.

Q. Ms. Longo, please go right ahead and just tell us your story.

A. After the first plane hit the World Trade Center we were assigned from Staten Island to go to -- actually to go to the VZ Bridge and wait. So that's what we did. It was about ten to 9. I'm not sure exactly of the time.

Q. Who were you working with?

A. I was working with Steve Hess.

We started heading towards the bridge, and we were told to just keep going. If I'm not mistaken, they said go over the bridge and start heading towards the city.

We started heading towards the city. We were on the Gowanus. We were heading to the Battery Tunnel, and I think the second plane had already hit World Trade Center number two.

Q. The south tower?

A. The south tower.

As we came out of the Battery Tunnel we drove along West Street. Do you want to know gory details.

Q. I want to know as much as you can tell me.

A. We had to avoid hitting body parts and plane parts, because that second plane that hit or the first plane that hit left all kinds of debris. So we were driving along West Street, and they were flagging us. They told us just to go to West and Vesey.

So we finally made it up to West and Vesey, and we were told to park in front because we were 23 Henry. We parked right on Vesey and West. We were about the third ambulance up.

At that time they said for us not to do anything. There were people who were already injured. They were in a little triage center in the back of the American Express building, which is --

Q. The west side towards the river?

A. Towards the west side towards the river, there was a little triage center there, and they were treating a couple people. There were some doctors and nurses and EMTs.

Around, I don't know, maybe 15 minutes or 20 minutes after we got there, 15 minutes, we heard a rumbling. It sounded like a freight train coming at you. All they did was say to run. So we ran down Vesey Street and ended up on North End, which is about a long block up. The first tower, whatever tower that was, number --

Q. The north tower?

A. The north tower had fallen, and we didn't know what was going on.

They gathered us all up after we caught our breath, whatever we did, and they said go get your buses. So we had to come back down. My partner came back down, got the bus, and the other guys got the buses, and met up on North End and Vesey.

They said to set up a triage in a building in that area; then they said not to. So we took our equipment back. By the time we started getting our equipment back, the north tower started to rumble and the north tower started falling. They said get your buses and get the hell out of here.

So that's what we did. We got in the buses, and we flew up to Murray and came around to River Terrace, which is a dead end. We were stuck in front of River Terrace close to Vesey at the end, by the water. We were at Vesey by the water.

We were helping out people that were running down that way, and we waited. We didn't know what to do. We were by ourselves with our ambulance with only one other personnel; I think it was -- who was it?

Q. EMS person?

A. Yeah. He was with the LSU.

Q. I believe Hanson, maybe, Eric Hanson?

A. Yeah, Eric Hanson followed us. So it was us and Eric Hanson. We were handing out masks and water, and we just got ravaged. Everybody took everything. We were just helping people.

We stayed there for, I don't know. I can't give you time frame because we were in quite a bit of shock because we actually -- yeah, we were in quite a bit of shock.

A lieutenant found us. I'm sorry, he was a captain, Abdo.

Q. Nahmod.

A. Captain Nahmod came, and he said, "I want you to get your stuff and get up towards 23rd and the piers. He said, no matter what you do, just go uptown.

So Eric followed in the LSU, and we got in the bus and made our way uptown. We were still in very much shock. When we got up there, we stayed up there.

Q. Set up an area of staging up there?

A. No, no. What they do is they had us sit in the bus with 500 other buses, after they ravaged our ambulance, and just wait. We waited for hours. About 3:00 in the afternoon after we heard all the rescues going on, they actually released us. They told us there were 400 jobs holding in Manhattan.

Meanwhile we had debris in the ambulance. We had no equipment, and they were going to give us a job in Manhattan. [redacted] [redacted]I said, "We have no equipment in there." Everybody took everything. It's full of debris. It was ravaged.

So we ended up making our way home. We found our way home. We finally made it back to the station, and that's where we stayed. That was the end of our day. We got the crap scared out of us, and we left. As I might about a lot of other people.

It was frightening. It was absolutely the most frightening thing that I've ever experienced in my whole life. Me and my partner, I think we were white, we were so scared. I couldn't run. He had to practically grab me by my belt and carry me, because either I was too scared -- I have a bad ankle. That was it.

So that was the end of our harrowing experience. We didn't get hurt. We didn't get injured. We tried to help people, but they sent us uptown. That was the end of our day.

Q. Okay.

A. That's my story.

Q. Anything else you can think of you would like to add to it?

A. Yeah. The next time something like this happens, tell people not to stand in front of the goddamn building. Okay? First of all, they were getting killed by debris. A plane hits a building, and where do you stand? Where do you park your vehicles? Underneath it? I don't think so. That was wrong from the get-go.

Do I have the right to say that?

Q. You can say whatever you want.

A. Well, wrong, wrong, wrong. I'm serious. I'm serious. If they had thought to even try to park half a block away or a block away or somewhere where you can walk to get access or something. A lot of these people probably wouldn't have gotten killed if they -- they were hit by flying debris. You don't park under something that's burning.

Q. This is the kind of stuff you were seeing?

A. Oh, yeah, yeah. You look up, and it's two towers of flames. Now, we had a hard time seeing people jumping out because we were on that one side. We didn't see this building here.

Q. The south building. Right.

A. We saw the top of it but not the bottom half. We saw this one, because we were right here.

Q. Right.

A. So we saw the top half.

Q. You saw the top of the north tower.

A. Yeah. We actually saw it from an angle as we were looking up. Then the rumbling just took us for a loop, and then we ran. That's when everybody got covered with soot and debris and dust and everything else, not able to breathe.

But I credit the lieutenant or the captain that was there -- god knows I can't remember his name; I have no idea who he was -- when he told us to run that way, towards the water. I credit him, because that was the way to go. I don't know who he was, and they just said run that way. Instead of running east or west, we ran south, if I'm not mistaken.

Q. I guess actually west instead of south or north.

A. Yes. Wherever the water was, that's where he made us run to. Instead of running this way or this way, which was --

Q. That's north. Instead of running north or south, they sent you west towards the water?

A. They sent us towards the water, which was a godsend. Whoever it is, I credit them. I have no idea. I have no idea. But I'm glad they did.

That's it.

Q. Okay. Well, I thank you for your story.

A. Quick and to the point.

Q. That's it.

MR. TAMBASCO: The interview will conclude at 1439 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT STEPHEN HESS

Interview Date: October 11, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. RADENBERG: Today's date is October 11, 2001. The time is 1433 hours. This is Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

Q. I'm conducting an interview with?

A. Stephen Hess. Shield 5612 EMT, assigned to 23 Henry.

Q. We are currently at Seaview Hospital, Battalion 52, EMS. This interview is regarding the events of September 11, 2001. Start with when you were assigned.

A. All right. We first heard the first call after the first incident occurred, and our initial response was to that it was a small plane, a Cessna, lost power and hit the tower. Then they said it was a commercial airline. That happened at 848. We were assigned to the job at approximately 8:50. We were told initially to go to the Verrazano Bridge and stage there. Then it was to 92 Street in Brooklyn. Then to the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel and in the process they just kept saying, finally just said go to -- through the tunnel to Vesey and West Street.

We got there I would say approximately 20 minutes after we got the job. We came after the second tower was hit, because we came over the Gowanus and we could see them both burning just before the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel. I know we were following lots of PD, fire apparatus, came through the tunnel, and our initial response was seeing body parts and airplane parts all over the west side. Just traumatic to see.

We got to approximately West and Vesey, where Lieutenant Brad Mann took our unit designation and since we were HAZTAC, he staged us pretty close to the corner of West and Vesey. I think there was maybe two or three ambulances closer to West than us. We were helping the triage, we were instructed we wouldn't be transporting because of us being HAZTAC. They wanted us to remain there.

We were helping out and then approximately, according to the time sheet, 9:55 we heard this loud rumbling noise, looked up and saw the building coming down. Everyone started yelling, run, run, run, so we started running up Vesey towards the Hudson River. I knew I was running fast and the thing that caused me some problems was turning around and seeing my partner saying please don't leave me.

So basically, I grabbed her by the belt and picked her up is what she tells me. I don't remember.

But we basically ran down the street. Got to North End Avenue, ducked around the corner and saw the cloud of dust coming around. You know, saying this can't be really happening.

Just after the first tower came down, we were standing there and I don't recall his name but some Captain from EMS said we need to get the ambulances. So I turned to my partner who was standing there and told her you stay right here. Don't move, because I ran back to get our bus and was able to get on it, I was covered in some debris and dust, but I knew we needed our -- the equipment we have, the decon and stuff like that.

We were treating some patients who came around the corner. Irrigating their eyes, trying to get the dust off as best as we could, when all of a sudden we heard later on the noise of the second tower going. We jumped in the bus and started driving away. We wound up near the Hudson River, near the park over here. We kind of got trapped in a loop because there was so much debris and vehicles that we couldn't get out of there. Our thoughts are like where do we go from here. We were like, we are going in the water if we have to. They started bringing the boats and then the debris cleared up and we were able to get out and they restaged us at Chelsea Piers.

I'm guessing that was somewhere around 11 o'clock. To be honest I'm not exactly sure when. Yes, because we were stuck down, it was 10:29, the north tower went down and we were stuck in that street for a good half an hour, 45 minutes, it might have been even later.

We came out of -- down Murray Street, I remember that, and we looked back and just saw this blank hole in the sky with what used to be the World Trade Center with smoke billowing up and people covered in dust and debris. Like I said, the next thing we restaged up there and we were treating some patients up there, but we didn't do any transports.

After that, I think it was around 3:00 we were released from the scene. We came back to Battalion 22 in Staten Island. As far as seeing people, like I said, I knew Lieutenant Mann, because he was in my old station. The Captain I really never caught his name because he was telling us what to do. I saw some medics that I knew, like Darnowski, a couple of other people that I knew. Ray Viscutti, he used to work for EMS, but now he works for a volunteer.

People running for their lives. Running just trying to get away. I saw another guy from our station, Eric Hansen. We wound up on River Terrace with him. Caught in that loop. Beyond that, that's about what I remember.

The thing that stuck with me was turning around and seeing my partner.

Q. Right.

A. [redacted] but I was not going to leave her by herself. She told me I came back, that I picked her up and basically ran with her like a football to get out of there, you know. Something I will never forget. Something that really bothered me -- getting all the beeps on your pager from your parents, your wife. You can't even call them.

I still think about it. Sometimes it's difficult to deal with but it's getting better.

Q. When you were over here on the first --

A. West and Vesey.

Q. West and Vesey. When you were over there, the patients that you were treating were all at that point were all coming up on their own?

A. We walked into a staging area on West and Vesey and there was about 30 people already there.

Q. Patients?

A. Yes. We were kind of kept to the side because of being HAZTAC, they wanted us available near our unit.

Q. Right, right.

A. Then it became so overwhelming that we moved over a little to help people, do what we could. We got some burn victims that you could see and people with respiratory problems. That's about the point when the building came down and my back was to it. I heard the noise. I turned around and it looked like I was looking at a movie. It was like surrealistic.

I can still vividly see the debris coming down and starting running. The noise is -- I thought it was another plane actually, because the noise was so deafening loud, from everything coming down. That's what we covered and encountered that day.

Q. You said Darnowski and Canton were there?

A. No, Viscutti. He was in my academy class but he left and he works for Lenox Hill I believe.

Q. Okay.

A. But I remember Darnowski because they are twins. There is Jimmy and Kevin and I saw both of them, but I don't remember which is which at this point.

Q. Okay.

A. The one that I saw initially was saying that he just dropped his girl off and she was up in the towers. Then I remember like I said, helping with triage and then the building coming down, and just running as fast as I could because we didn't know if they were toppling over or coming straight down. I figured if they are toppling over, it's all over.

Q. Do you remember once you came out of the Battery Tunnel, which way you came up to?

A. We came out of the Battery Tunnel. We came out on to the west side and came up straight up the West Side Highway, coming between the World Trade Center and the financial district. Like I said we turned the corner on Vesey and Lieutenant Mann told us -- ask us our designation and we told him 23 Henry. He says full HAZTAC? We said yes. He staged us right on the corner of West and Vesey.

Like I said, maybe two and three ambulances up from the corner to be available. He said try to assist with some triage and patient care, but don't transport because we need you.

Q. Do you remember any other, aside from Lieutenant Mann and the Captain, any other EMS officers that you remember being there?

A. Just later on. Not at that point, I saw Lieutenant Mann and the Captain -- for the life of me I can't remember his name, you know. But I remember what he looks like. I remember that. I will never forget.

Q. Did you ever run into him before?

A. Never seen him before. I don't know him, wouldn't know wouldn't have known him from Adam that day, except for the fact that he had his shirt on, with two bars. He was -- him and Lieutenant Mann were the ones setting up staging, positioning the busses. Turned out not to be the best spot afterwards, but who knew these buildings were going to come down. No one expected that.

Q. Right, right. Darnowski, that's who you saw there initially, he was off duty?

A. Yes, I'm assuming he was. He was in uniform. He might have been going to work or coming home. But he said he dropped his girl off at work.

Q. He wasn't part of a crew that you know of?

A. No, not that I can recall.

Q. Okay.

A. You know, I just, like I said the only reason I remember him is because we knew each other. I saw a lot of people that I had never seen before in my life, might not ever seen again. Hopefully they all got out of there, you know. That's about the best as I can remember what was going on.

Q. Do you remember any vehicle numbers that were parked; EMS vehicle numbers that were parked around you at that point or --

A. You know what.

Q. Did you recognize people from other stations maybe?

A. No. Like I said, we are from Staten Island. They don't get too much contact with people in Manhattan. Initially most of the units were Manhattan units. I mean a few of the faces I kind of recollect seeing at the Academy at some point in time, but as to the names, vehicle numbers, I wasn't even looking.

Q. Okay. No problem. Different people remember different things.

A[redacted]

[redacted].

Q. Anything else you want to add?

A. No, nothing.

Q. Thoughts or opinions?

A. I would just like to know how a plane can disappear from the radar for 40 minutes, and no one does anything. I don't think it would have prevented anything, but it might have prevented -- I mean, what time did the Pentagon get hit? I think that was later. Someone might have been alerted to something that was going on but, you know, too little too late I guess.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

ABDO NAHMOD

Interview Date: October 11, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

MR. TAMBASCO: It is October 11. The time is 12:37. I'm Mike Tambasco, assigned to the World Trade Center Task Force, conducting an interview into the events of September 11, at the World Trade Center. Today I'll be interviewing --

CAPTAIN NAHMOD: Captain ABDO NAHMOD.

BY MR. TAMBASCO:

Q. Where were you assigned that day, Captain?

A. Operations.

Q. If you'd be good enough to just try to tell us what you saw, what you did. Go right ahead.

A. On that given morning, I was assigned to the office of operations, and I was spending some time with Lieutenant Mann, who was taking over the medical data base for operations, and we were on the 7th Floor when somebody up there said that the World Trade Center was just hit by a plane.

At this point, we went to the window. We looked and, sure enough, we saw visible flames coming from the top of the World Trade Center.

Many people began to respond in different vehicles, and at one point, I responded with EMT Richard Zarrillo, the special events coordinator, with Mr. Drury from BITS in his vehicle to get down to the World Trade Center.

At this point, I communicated with Chief Peruggia via the land line, and we were directed to report to 7 World Trade to set up OEM. Both myself and EMT Zarrillo went to the 23rd Floor of 7 World Trade and began to log onto the terminals, as well as inform the citywide dispatch supervisor that we were activating OEM at this time, and operations were to begin.

Moments thereafter, we were advised by the staff at OEM that we were to vacate the building, that they believed there was another possible plane on its way, and proceeded down the stairwell of 7 World Trade all the way down to the ground floor.

Upon getting outside to 7 World Trade, I saw Chief Peruggia and Captain Stone, and I believe one of the EMTs from the Division 1 command outside.

At this point, we were trying to establish a command center, as well as treatment and transport sector. I believe Chief Peruggia was trying to establish communication, and I was directed to move down to the garage area of the 7 World Trade where there were four bays, one having a truck in it and three that were open, and at that point, I believe there were some EMTs and one medic unit in front of 7 World Trade building.

At this point, we tried to gather all our equipment, gather some equipment from 7 World Trade, set up a treatment area at the bottom, and we were met by one of the doctors from OMA. I don't recall his name at this point.

Q. Did you happen to recognize any of the guys that were in the ambulances, either the medics or the EMTs?

A. No, I never worked Manhattan, and I really don't know. I know a few were from St. Clare's, and one was from New York Hospital, and a few were municipal units, but I didn't recognize any of the folks there.

I'd say within 20 minutes to a half an hour of being down there or trying to set everything up, all of a sudden a loud noise, rubble, and sand, and dust -- everything just started toppling down.

We did have one patient there that walked in for an eye injury, an older gentleman. He was sitting by the loading dock, and I was right next to him. Also, when this started happening, everybody started going to the main lobby.

At this point, I tried to cover this gentleman up with myself and then remained in the loading dock curled up in the corner.

Time passed. Couldn't tell you if it was five minutes or 50 minutes, but everything seemed dark, everything seemed black, and there were lots of sand, and rubble, and grit, and dirt and debris on top of myself and this gentleman.

When everything cleared, I believe I saw Commissioner Tierney walking out of 7 after that, and everybody that we saw was accounted for that was there initially, as far as the providers. We tried to assist this gentleman onto a stretcher of the St. Clare's unit. We put him on the stretcher and started wheeling him northbound. I believe we were originally on Vesey, probably turned up West, and we went with this gentleman up West.

Q. North on West?

A. North on West, and I believe their ambulance was a block or two blocks away. I assume they put him in the ambulance and went on from there.

Shortly after that, I was proceeding north on West Street, and then I heard another loud noise and looked behind, and, sure enough, it looked like the building was coming down. By then I managed to get to Stuyvesant High School and huddled in the doorway with a number of ESU cops and firefighters, and once again, the dust, and the debris and everything else came down, and shortly thereafter we started to look around for anybody that was hurt.

We started going back towards the collapse site. We did manage to see a FDNY EMS command car with the windows broken, but the radio still working and running, I believe on West and Chambers. There I believe I saw, once again, Chief Peruggia and Chief Butler, and a number of other people starting to gather.

We started to try to establish some kind of communication, but the radios weren't functioning all that well. We stayed at that point until we managed to set up a treatment sector, and so on and so forth, but in the interim, I remember seeing Chief Carasquillo up by River Street and Chambers. I did wander that way and then made it back towards West and Chambers. I think West and Chambers might have happened after I saw Chief Carasquillo.

I did see Eric Hanson with the LSU by the river and Chambers, as well a number of other units

there.

From there, resources started to come in. Radios started to work. We managed to locate the MERV driver who was on Chambers Street and West Street -- and River Street and managed to pull the MERV down. Then we began to set up different sectors, so on and so forth.

I spent a good portion of the afternoon with the MERV, the latter part of that evening with the communications sector, and went home, I think, two days later or a day and a half later, and then came back on something like Thursday.

That's it.

Q. Anything else you want to do add into it? Any feelings about it? Anything at all?

A. The only thing is I'm lucky to be alive. That's really the bottom line.

If the building went the other way, I was standing across the street, you know. You don't know the outcome, so that's it.

MR. TAMBASCO: In that case, thank you for the interview. This is interview will be concluded at 1246 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

DR. GLENN ASAEDA

Interview Date: October 11, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. McALLISTER: This is Kevin McALLISTER from the Bureau of Administration. It's October 11th, 2001. We're in the south conference room at Fire Department Headquarters. It is 1536 hours and I am joined by...

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: Assistant Commissioner Jim Drury.

MR. McALLISTER: And...

DR. ASAEDA: Glenn Asaeda, M.D., Deputy Medical Director with the Fire Department Medical Affairs.

Q. DR. ASAEDA, I'd like to draw your attention to September the 11th, 2001, and get your recollections of that day, if we could.

A. Yes. I was actually one of the physicians for the Office of Medical Affairs that was coming on duty as the on-call medical director for the system and was actually headed to Manhattan for an unrelated sexual assault task force meeting. I was actually on the Long Island Expressway going towards the Midtown Tunnel when I happened to look over to my left and actually did see one of the towers, what appeared to look like one of the top floors kind of smoking, but from my angle, there were four smokestacks, I guess on the Brooklyn side or the Manhattan side, just in front of the towers, to a point where it looked like it was actually smoke from the smokestacks, and I thought at that point, wow, that's interesting, it really makes the tower look like it's on fire.

I had just taken a bioterrorism course that the Fire Department had offered, I think a month or two months before downstairs, and at that time the instructor from the federal government had said, do you know how to tell if it's a good day for bioterrorism? We had not known and they had explained to us that by looking at the smoke from the smokestack you can tell. If it rises straight into the air and dissipates, it's a bad day for bioterrorism, good for the people because what happens is anything released would go into the air, we wouldn't breathe it in. A good day for bioterrorism but bad for citizens would be a day where the smoke seems to kind of hover, even come to the ground, anything released could actually be inhaled. So, as I looked at that, I thought, oh, potentially this is a good day for bioterrorism. I was just thinking that off the top of my head.

Then, as I was in traffic, I saw the car next to me honking, flashing its lights, and often in a marked car I get that. Can you tell me how to get to Bellevue Hospital? Can you tell me where the corner of this and that is? So I didn't think much of it. I rolled down the window only to hear the driver say, did you see the plane hit the World Trade Center? At that point I realized it was a real situation, looked back at the tower and thought, oh, my God, and for some reason I felt why is the Citywide radio so quiet? I didn't come to realize that, when I actually stopped for coffee initially, I had forgotten to put the Citywide back on. On my car it just doesn't automatically go on.

Almost afraid to push the Citywide button, I pressed it, got the radio to go on and it came to life, and I hear the first thing, confirmed aircraft into the World Trade Center tower, send me everything you've got, and this is hard hat operation. As soon as I heard that, I actually got on the cell phone with Commissioner Claire.

Q. Do you think that was the first or the second plane that had hit?

A. That was the first plane.

Q. Okay.

A. At that point, realizing that Commissioner

Claire was actually in Albany for a state EMS meeting, I actually dug into my bag, got his cell phone number, just to let him know, called him on the cell phone, and at that point I was told, I'm watching it, I'm seeing it on TV right now. Do me a favor and when you get in on scene, give me another report. So I said okay, I acknowledged that and started to roll in. At that point, also, as I'm rolling, I called my wife just to let her know that the plane had hit the tower, I'm going to go in, just watch it on the news.

Probably about three minutes from the tunnel, I ducked into the tunnel with traffic with the lights and siren, and at that point didn't realize until later that communications was lost for me. I didn't know about the second aircraft. I think I had 1010 WINS on trying to hear the news. In the tunnel, I didn't hear any of that as well. I just remember, when I popped out of the tunnel, that my adrenaline was so pumped, I thought to myself, you've got to calm down, you've got to relax a little bit and just concentrate on doing what you have to do.

As I popped out of the tunnel, emergency vehicles, marked and unmarked, from every aspect, just in front of me, to the side of me, behind me, and I realized that this is something I need to really be careful as to how I'm driving because we're not usually accustomed to so many vehicles going in one place.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: Excuse me. Doctor, you said the tunnel. Which tunnel?

DR. ASAEDA: The Midtown Tunnel.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: Okay.

A. At this point almost a convoy of emergency vehicles were going towards the World Trade Center. Since I was on the east side, I continued all the way down. As soon as I got towards the Brooklyn Bridge, I could see more closely the smoke and just thousands of people were just kind of running, walking towards the Brooklyn Bridge.

Q. Were both of the buildings standing at that point in time?

A. Yes, they were.

Q. Okay.

A. Again, still I had not realized about the second plane hitting the tower. Also, because of the bioterrorism course and just the threats, I'm thinking to myself, I had just imagined that it was a single engine Cessna type of plane, not knowing it was a commercial airlines by any means. I kept thinking also to myself, be careful, it still could be terrorism, it could be bioterrorism, they could have had some kind of chemicals and biological agents on board. I kept thinking don't go downwind, don't go downwind. But because of the flow of people, the direction that I was hoping to take ended up putting me further south, which actually put me directly downwind, and I remember thinking to myself, oh, my God, this is where I don't want to be. I turned off the air-conditioner, holding my breath, as if that would work, thinking do you know what? You're in the worst place.

As I rounded the corner, more emergency vehicles now on the West Side Highway trying to get north towards the towers, the next car that I saw coming next to me was Chief Downey's vehicle.

Q. So you drove all the way south down the east side and looped around --

A. Correct.

Q. -- at the Battery and headed up West Street?

A. Correct. Because there were too many people coming directly east. I knew that I couldn't go that way. So as I rounded the bend by the ferry, got back onto the west side, the next unmarked car that I saw was Chief Downey. Now, I don't think he was driving because I don't think I could have seen him that clearly, but I remember that he looked in towards the window of my vehicle, he smiled and actually waved, and I actually remember saying verbally, hey, chief, knowing that he couldn't hear me. But I particularly remember Chief Downey because I've had the opportunity of going on FEMA deployments with him to the Dominican Republic and joining him when the Japanese firefighters had come by, they wanted to speak to the S.O.C. chief and whatnot. So he was I remember physically one of the last people that I had known recognizing going to the scene.

As the first convoy had gone in front of me, I actually diverted my vehicle to two ambulances that I had seen right under the south walkway bridge. I saw two ambulances, Fire Department ambulances, pulled up next to them and said--

Q. That's the south bridge that crosses the West Side Highway?

A. Correct. The one that's still intact.

Q. Right?

A. Or was still intact. At that point, I pulled up next to the ambulances. I asked them, is this the command post? They said no, it wasn't. I said, who set you up here? I believe they were EMTs. I don't think they were medics. They had said, there's so many people running this way, we felt this was a good area to be in. I said, it sounds good, just make sure to let a lieutenant know where you are so he can account for everyone, and I asked them, do you happen to know where the command post is? They directed me to in front of 1 World Trade Center on the West Side Highway.

Also, at this point I noticed just women's shoes all over. I guess they had taken them off to run. I guess they couldn't run in the heels and whatnot.

Q. That was on West Street?

A. That was on West Street and even previously, coming around from the east side to the west side, just shoes all over, it was just interesting to see that, along with the debris.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: If I may interrupt.

DR. ASAEDA: Yes.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: You were directed to the command center on West Street across from 1 World Trade?

DR. ASAEDA: Correct.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: Did you in fact reach that command post?

DR. ASAEDA: Yes, I did.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: Was that in front of the World Financial Center?

DR. ASAEDA: Yes, it was.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: Okay.

A. So as I pulled my vehicle, I realized that the West Side Highway had a lot of emergency vehicles. I couldn't actually get onto that. I went up the service road the wrong way with just the lights on, no siren at this point, saw the people gathering, I would say, 30 to 40 feet in front of the stairs of the World Financial Center. I think they call it the American -- I don't know if that's the same as the American Express Building or whatnot.

Q. No. 3 World Financial?

A. I would guess it would be 2, but I'm not sure of the number.

Q. The American Express Building?

A. Yes, the World Financial. I remember parking my car on Vesey and West on the corner, it was the northwest corner. There were emergency vehicles there as well. I was on the end double-parked and I thought to myself, I don't want to block anyone. Again, not realizing the magnitude of what was about to happen, I thought to myself, I still have a meeting to go to in about half an hour, so once I figure out what's going on here and everything settles, I still need to be able to pull my vehicle to go to the meeting. So I parked my vehicle, remembered that it was a hard hat operation, grabbed my helmet, grabbed my jacket and proceeded to the command post.

While I was en route to the site, I actually remember hearing the other physician's vehicle designation arrive on scene, so I knew that he was on seen probably about five to seven minutes before I had arrived.

Q. Who was that?

A. That was Dr. Cherson.

Q. Okay.

A. So I made it a point to, once reporting to the command post just to find out what was going on, to see if I could find the other physician as well. Since he was the previous physician on call and first on the scene, I figured I would let him take the lead and let him direct me as to where he wanted me to go.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: At what time was it now, do you know, doctor, approximately?

DR. ASAEDA: This must have been, I would say -- it turns out it was after the second aircraft had crashed but before the first building. I don't remember the exact time of the second plane, but 9:10, 9:15, somewhere in that time frame.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: Yes.

A. But even at this point, I still didn't realize that a plane had hit. Again, being so close and looking up, I couldn't even see the other building really from where I was standing. I walked over to the command post. At that point I remember seeing a piece of debris fall from the north tower, literally past us, and hit the World Financial Center behind us and come down, and the only reason I saw that is everyone was kind of looking up going, whoa! I kind of looked up and I thought, wow, this is very close.

By the same token, I had looked up at the same time and noticed what I thought was debris turning out to be people, and at first I just couldn't imagine it would be people, but as they landed I was pretty sure it was people. I thought, well, they must be unconscious or falling out. Upon looking closer, there were some people that seemed to be on fire coming down, some that looked like rag dolls coming down, but at least 70 percent of them actually flailed until they hit the ground and one, I mean, they looked like ants from the distance we were at, but actually looking like he or she wanted to get to the next window.

I remember thinking under my breath and saying out loud that I could hear myself, I go, oh, my God, please, no, no, no, no, and they were jumping. I've seen people, you know, I've worked as a paramedic in the past in California, so I've seen people jump as high as 25 stories, but that was very different in that in that it was just kind of, oh, my gosh, and they hit. Here, with four times the height, it was kind of an oh, my God, oh, my God, oh, my God, until they finally hit.

At that point I had met Dr. Cherson and the paramedic aide that was with him, Paramedic Delgado from our office as well.

Q. Is this at the command post?

A. This is at the command post, initially across the street from World Trade Center.

Q. Who else was at the command post at this time?

A. I remember seeing Chief Ganci. I also remember Chief Downey speaking to Commissioner Von Essen walking in front of me. Also, at about this time Mayor Giuliani and his entourage had actually walked behind us, and then a couple of fire chiefs that I had seen from the training or whatnot, but I couldn't recall their names, some of the Dominican Republic staff as well that had been sent.

Q. Was Commissioner Feehan there?

A. I had briefly seen him, but I can't remember exactly where I had seen him.

Q. Okay.

A. At this point, as I was standing in front of the command post looking to try to take in what was going on, Dr. Cherson came back to me and said that they were going to move the command post into the lobby of 1 World Trade Center. So at that time he said to me he was going to go in there with Paramedic Delgado, Manny Delgado, and he wanted me to take the EMS fellow who was with us and go to 7 World Trade, where they had set up one of the first treatment areas.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: Now, was this going to be the EMS command post or the Fire Department command post?

DR. ASAEDA: This was going to be an EMS treatment area.

A. So I agreed to it, and one of the -- I can't remember who it was but he actually brought over one of the antidote kits from one of our vehicles. I almost chuckled at that time thinking, even if it were, one kit is not enough for all the potential patients, but we brought it with us. We went into the loading dock of 7 World Trade, which was right adjacent to the telephone company building, I believe, on Vesey.

Q. Right.

A. I remember as we were walking there was smoke coming from the World Trade Center and what seemed to be in front parts of -- in retrospect, I guess it was parts of the plane or whatnot, debris from the plane, debris from the building, and I had also heard that there were people around, but I didn't get a close enough look to see what kind of status they were in.

We walked into the loading dock where Captain Abdo of the Fire Department, EMS, had already established a treatment area, and we were using the START system, which is the simple triage and rapid transport, where we color code our victims into red for immediate, yellow for injury but not immediate, green for walking wounded and black for dead at this point, and he had set up the loading dock into these separate areas and there were a few patients there as well. I remember, again, walking towards the treatment area thinking this is awfully close, we need to work on getting it a little bit further out, and I started seeing a few patients that were there.

The first gentleman for some reason I remember particularly. He was a gentleman in his seventies. He had said that he was on the 59th floor of the first tower that got struck. He was actually ordering some kind of food at that cafeteria, I think it's at the 59th floor, I'm pretty sure, and thought that, when he heard the explosion, that it was the kitchen oven. He heard that other people said they don't know what it is but it's time to evacuate, so he actually came down the staircase, and he was just sitting there because he was tired he was in the. So green category of a walking wounded. I remember thinking to myself, if he was able to make it out, then it sounds like most people are going to be able to get out, and I was relieved to hear that.

As I went to another patient, I remember a Secret Service or security from 7 World Trade Center person saying to me, did you hear that the Pentagon just got hit by another plane? Again, not knowing about the second plane still at this point, I thought, oh, my God. Then he said, and there's another plane missing. So at that point was the first point that I realized that this was a terrorist -- an intentional act, again, not knowing that the second plane had already hit.

So I thought we really need to move this out because I had a feeling they were going to come back for us. Just as soon as I had thought that, I heard what I thought was a jet engine plane. In retrospect, it turns out that it was the first tower coming down. We grabbed whatever patients we could, and what I did was I turned to my left and ducked into the little -- there was, I guess, a little connection between the lobby of 7 and the loading dock. The loading dock, I do remember thinking that it looked very secure, thick concrete and whatnot, and we all crammed, probably about 30 of us, into this little alcove between the lobby and the loading dock.

[redacted]

[redacted]. [redacted] and the next thing I noticed, that jet engine sound and then a loud crash and then pitch black. Then --

Q. Just prior to that, were there electrical lights where you were?

A. Yes, there were.

Q. Did they stay on?

A. No, they did not.

Q. Okay.

A. I remember thinking that this was it for me. I really thought that this was another plane coming and I thought this was it. I remember putting the visor of my helmet down, grabbing the chin strap and just kind of squatting where I was at. After I realized that we actually made it through this initial whatever it was, it was so dark that I actually thought they had closed the loading bay doors as a security measure for us, but it turns out it was just the debris and the smoke and whatnot that made it pitch black.

Q. The doors were still open?

A. They were still open.

Q. Okay.

A. I've heard in the past that, you know, these disasters are so dark that people put their hands in front of their face and couldn't see anything. I used to laugh at them and think how dark can that be? But really, it was so dark, you couldn't see the hand in front of your face. At that point we realized that the building we were in was still up, we needed to get out, but just didn't know where to go, a little disoriented. Any lighting equipment, which I actually didn't have, but any of the EMTs, I would say there were about eight of us, eight EMTs and medics, as well as the Captain and myself, EMS, we realized that we needed to get out, but none of us -- they hadn't brought their flashlights to the area we just dove into. We didn't know which way to go. People were yelling, I can't breathe, I can't breathe, and I remember from the bioterrorism course thinking, again, it could be bioterrorism, that they had said that even if you didn't have a mask, just take your tie and put it on your face, that seems to eliminate 80 percent of what may be around you. I remember thinking, they said this would work, they said this would work, and tried to breathe through this, but still everything in my mouth and whatnot.

Now, trying to make the escape out, I didn't know which way to go. Someone yelled, I think it's this way, and somebody had a camera, whether it was a photographer or whatnot, and I remember the person was flashing his camera towards us saying come towards the flash. So we made it to the flash, still pitch black, by chance met up with Captain Abdo from EMS, and I said, are all of our EMS people accounted for? He said, yes, they are. I said, then we need to get out of here. Then I said, oh, and we've got to get the patients, because at this point it was kind of, you know, we've got to get the patients as well, grabbed whoever we could. Luckily, they were for the most part all walking wounded, and even the ones that were lying were at this point up and had ducked with us.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: Let me stop you there, Doctor.

DR. ASAEDA: Yes.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: You said there were about 30 people you crammed into this little alcove or pathway from the loading area to the lobby of 7 World Trade.

DR. ASAEDA: Correct.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: Did you know any of those other people?

DR. ASAEDA: Just the EMS personnel. I didn't recognize any of the Fire side personnel. Also I recognized one of the security personnel from 7 World Trade just because I used to go there weekly for the Mayor's PAD, public access defibrillation meeting. I recognized him. I also recognized the person who said he was either Secret Service or security, not as knowing him but just as he was next to me when we dove for cover, and then the patients who we had brought with us. But other than that, I didn't recognize any other personnel.

A. At that point, we got to the exit, made a decision to evacuate, got the patients, still not knowing which way to go because we really hadn't been able to determine what actually came down or what had happened. The decision was either to go left or right and we ended up going right, between the two buildings, in the alleyway on the north, which turned out to be the right direction because apparently there was a lot of debris and part of 7 down already. Also, I did notice as I was making my exit the sound of the firefighters' alarms indicating that they were down. I did remember that as well but just could not see anything.

As we got into the alleyway, it just started to get a little bit lighter, almost like a dusk/dawn type of deal. We got through the alleyway, got half a block up -- I don't even remember which block that was, but saw one of the first ambulances, I think it was a Cabrini ambulance, one of the voluntary hospital ambulances with people just crammed on board. I made the decision to remove them because they were not hurt. I said, we have patients that are hurt. We loaded three or four and I remember just hitting the side of the ambulance and saying, go, go, go, go, and the driver, the EMT or medic, shouted back or looked back, where are we supposed to go? I said, just go north, just go north. So they took off.

I saw another ambulance. At this point, also, I saw people from OEM. Eddie Gabriel, who is one of our EMS chiefs, was over there coming in with -- I think he had somebody on his arm. We saw police officers. There were some firefighters now in gear but not recognizable because of the dust. I didn't remember any identifying markers on them either.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: Where was this now, Doctor? On West Street?

DR. ASAEDA: This is actually on -- let's see. This was West. This was Vesey. We took the little alleyway between the telephone building and 7 World Trade, ended up on the next block.

Q. Park Place? Murray?

A. It may have been Murray. There was a parking lot adjacent to it. It was a smaller street. I think may have been Park Place.

Q. Yes, I think so, too.

A. Then at that point I saw some of the OEM people that I recognized, just happy to see that they were okay. I got to the next ambulance, put people on board. At that point my beeper was going off. It just seemed to be the only thing that was actually going off. It turned out to be my wife calling because she had heard that I was going, and while I'm trying to coordinate everybody going, I actually picked up the phone and tried to dial. It didn't go through.

Once I got them on the ambulance, I actually stopped and looked at the corner and saw that there was a pay phone and thought to myself, this is a Verizon phone. There's no way that would be working. I thought, well, I have nothing to lose at this point. I dug into my pocket, happened to find a quarter, the only change I had, and I thought to myself, it's probably with my luck one of those 35-cent phones anyway, you know, it's going to be like that. I get there, pick it up, it's a 25-cent call, dial tone is there surprisingly, dropped a quarter in and actually it goes through.

My wife [redacted] I knew that you were going to be there, the first tower came down. I said, listen, calm down. I'm okay. I'm not going to do anything to endanger myself further. I'm okay. Do me a favor, call my mom in San Francisco, let her know that I'm okay, and then I hung up the phone. I said, I'll call you when I can, and then proceeded back towards the north tower.

At that point I stopped myself and thought to myself, you've got to be smart about this. The first tower came down. There's a great chance that the second one might as well. So I went back up half a block through the parking lot and then back onto West.

Q. You didn't know about the second plane at this point, but you knew the second tower was burning?

A. I didn't even know that the second tower was burning because I had no information that the second tower was hit.

Q. Got it.

A. So all the way up until the Secret Service or the security, whoever he happened to be, told me that the other plane was missing, that one plane had hit the Pentagon and another was missing, up until that point I knew nothing of a potential terrorist attack. It was only in my mind thinking in this day and age, it could be terrorism, so be careful. As a matter of fact, when I saw all that dust come through, I thought at that point, while I was walking, I thought, this must be anthrax. I mean, that's something that definitely went through my mind.

So at that point all our patients were onto the ambulances, our EMS group kind of disbanded, but I saw Captain Abdo on West and -- again, I'm not familiar with it. It's about one block further north of where 7 used to be. I met him at the corner and at that point we were literally thinking of going back towards 1 World Trade, knowing that the command post was there, stopped ourselves thinking we've got to be smart about this, this is something else that might come down, and as we had thought that, the sound before the sight coming, saw the second tower actually come down and then heard it afterwards, at which point all of us turned north and started running. We got about a block, maybe half a block, ducked into a little alcove where there were probably 30 police officers, firefighters, again, I don't recognize any shield numbers or helmet numbers, against the wall, when other cops ran by and said, you're just not fucking far enough. So we turned around and ran north, at which point the plume of the smoke, again, kind of a warm feeling came by us, luckily no debris, almost kind of lifting us and then kind of surrounding us again.

Then, at that point, when everything settled, we set up another treatment area at the corner of -- what corner is that? I don't recall. It's just south of Chambers, about a block south of Chambers. We set up another treatment area, started to see some of the walking wounded. There weren't too many people seriously injured. There were some firefighters that were complaining of smoke, of just inhalation and dust. We gave them some oxygen. That I'm sure was tracked because I had our EMT write down the names, but I can't recall any names.

There was one firefighter that he had given me his name, I actually wrote it down, I still have, saying that I'm sure they think I'm missing, please notify command that I'm okay. That I actually wrote down and I actually went to one of the chiefs and they took the name down, but their communications weren't 100 percent either. So they were trying to do what they could. I made that initial report.

At that point, while we were treating some patients and not more than maybe ten if that, they said there's suspicious packages around. I think the police officers came by and said we needed to evacuate. So we actually walked everyone further north another block and this time got to the Borough of Manhattan Community College and up on, I guess in their gymnasium area, up the stairs, we set up an area. We wanted to try to keep people like myself who were contaminated kind of out, keeping the area relatively fresh. So people who were covered like myself were kind of treating people on the outside, and those that were clean, those people were inside giving oxygen and water.

We were probably there for about 20, 30 minutes, when we were told that there's suspicious packages again, and this time people were running towards north again saying that there's a gas leak. So we evacuated everybody and started running again, and at this point I think we all decided we're going to get as far north as we could, decided to go to Chelsea, and I thought that was a good area because just being there initially realizing this was really going to be a body recovery, unfortunately, I thought that the ice rink would be a good place for a temporary morgue. I had heard in the past, I have a friend that works at DEA, that that was a huge facility.

As a matter of fact, I took one of the Japanese firefighters from Tokyo, who was interested in that kind of thing, while he was visiting the Fire Department here, he wanted me to stop by there just to see what kind of health facilities they had to take back to Japan with him. So I remember actually seeing the facility and remembering that it was large enough that, if they would allow us to use that facility, that would be an ideal location.

Then, as I was running, an ambulance, I don't even know who it was, I think it was a volunteer ambulance pulled up and just yelled, Doc, jump in. We were jumping into the ambulance, seven other people, kind of all in disarray. I remember thinking what just happened? Then I was dropped off at Chelsea, met with Chief Pascale and Chief Kowalczyk, who were at that point for EMS command, and then we decided to set the hospital area there.

About an hour after, they asked for us to return back to the -- I guess the Fire command post on Chambers and West. Then a couple hours thereafter, you know, we were trying to evaluate the best we could, 7 came down. I remember running again and some of the Fire guys started running and stopped and I guess they realized that we were far away enough. But I remember I just kept running until -- I figured until I see everything down, I'll keep running. I got about a block and then realized, okay, maybe I was a little silly. But I walked back to the command post, and then we tried to come up with a plan.

Then for the rest of the night we were trying to set up a hospital area, one at Stuyvesant High School, which we were able to set up, also trying to set up some strike teams up near the rubble pile, really mainly for rescuers at this point, just realizing there wasn't going to be many victims, but in case a victim was pulled out. I was there for about the next, I think, total of like 28 hours on the first day, just trying to coordinate what we could, communicating with OEM as well as to the federal assets that were coming. We heard that the DEMAT teams were coming, also that the FEMA USAR task force things were coming.

By this point, John Claire, Commissioner Claire, as well as Dr. Gonzalez and Dr. Richmond, who were also at the upstate meeting, were flown back apparently by state trooper helicopter. This was probably three, four hours into it, I think by 11:00 or 12:00 in the afternoon, and they were trying to coordinate what they could from their site. At that point, Dr. Gonzalez, who is really in charge of our New York task force, USAR, Urban Search and Rescue Team, decided that he would put together some semblance of a team to do some of the rescue efforts. So part of our obligation, myself, as being the doctor there throughout the night, would be to cover the main medical command as well as the USAR activities as well.

At this same point, I heard that Dr. Prezant and/or Dr. Kelly had set up something at Pace, on that side. Initially, Dr. Cherson had set something up at the Liberty Street side, I think by the ferries. So I knew that we had good coverage in the areas. Then the rest of it was just trying to set up and coordinate. A lot of volunteers, medical staff and whatnot, came up very early, but I don't think they realized what magnitude of disaster this was. I had surgeons, I think 30 surgeons from a college conference at one of the hotels showed up by busload saying we're surgeons, we're here to help. I said, it would be great, but there's no one to pull out at this point. If you don't mind loading the water, that's what we're going to need at this point, you know, we sent everybody to Chelsea Piers and set up things over there.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: Did you see any patients that night?

DR. ASAEDA: Yes.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: Approximately how many?

DR. ASAEDA: All the patients that I saw were rescuers in some shape or form. None were from the initial collapse. A lot of things in their eyes, which we washed out, some respiratory complaints, some minor bumps and bruises, someone that actually needed some sutures and whatnot. The way we had it set up was that anyone who needed a transport would be placed onto the ambulance and actually sent to the hospital because we also coordinated with the hospitals to find out what they could handle and we were told that initially they got some of the burns and the sick patients from the initial planes, but that was only a few hundred throughout the hospitals. We looked at Downtown Beekman, Bellevue, St. Vincent's, as far as Cabrini as well, and we were told that, after the initial wave, they weren't getting any patients, they were ready, so we knew that we didn't really need to do too much treatment on the scene, we would try to go back to the way that things are normally run in these disasters where we'd do an initial triage, do basic treatment that we can, and then ship them to the hospital. We felt that's where they would better be served. But it turned out that there weren't that many victims from the rubble.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: Just a couple other questions.

DR. ASAEDA: Yes.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: When did you find out for the first time that a second plane had hit the other tower?

DR. ASAEDA: This was after, I guess after my initial run and as I was looking at the north tower and thinking of going back, they had said, yeah, did you hear the second plane hit that as well? Then I started to put things together thinking this was obviously a terrorist attack. But not until then, again, I think mainly because I was in the tunnel when the second plane had hit and Citywide at some spots apparently doesn't come through and the traffic was to hard to get on that I actually I got on the radio to tell them, 784 was my identifier for the day, 784, show me responding. I just could not get through after about three attempts and just tried to go on by computer, but that was logged as well, so I couldn't actually log on that way.

Again, in retrospect, maybe I should have had an FM station on. That would have at least given me the news. But not thinking to that extent, I just had 1010 WINS on. It must have taken me -- you know, I must have found out about the first plane maybe five to ten minutes after it actually hit because I actually do remember seeing the smoke. I was in the tunnel when the second plane hit, popped out probably soon thereafter, and then with everything was trying to get on scene and listen to the radio. Again, I didn't hear anything about a confirmed second crash, either that or I just wasn't paying close enough attention or just didn't know about the second plane.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: My other question has to do with West Street.

DR. ASAEDA: Yes.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: Either when you were coming over to 7 World Trade for the first time or after you evacuated 7 World Trade after the first collapse, did you notice a lot of rigs and buses lined up on West Street from like the command post on down?

DR. ASAEDA: I remember more particularly on West Street, the south end of West Street, between the south tower and the first tower, I would guess, a lot of vehicles, heavy fire rescue vehicles and ambulances as well. I don't remember as many north of Vesey. I do remember there was like a ladder truck on the corner of West and Vesey, actually on West, on the northbound lane facing the opposite direction. That vehicle I do remember and then sporadically here and there some other vehicles as well.

Where I parked my vehicle, I remember the vehicle I parked next to was a traffic enforcement vehicle, and then there were some -- they looked like I think it was a marked, no light, fire protection type vehicle I had seen as well, if I remember.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: Was your vehicle destroyed?

DR. ASAEDA: Yes, it was.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: Chief Downey's vehicle, can you describe it, when you saw it?

DR. ASAEDA: It was a dark-colored, unmarked car. I thought it was kind of particularly odd in that he looked to me like he was sitting in the back seat, behind the passenger, which would seem odd to me because I would think that, I guess, if he wasn't driving himself, he would be in the passenger's side. But in retrospect, he could have been in the passenger's side as well because he actually moved right past me, not very quickly but just enough for me to actually recognize him and say, oh, Chief, and then he got in front of me. Again, once we got onto West Street from the south end, there were probably 20 to 30 vehicles already parked and then another 20 vehicles trying to get through, so I realized that I would not be able to continue. As Chief Downey's vehicle went forward and, again, seeing the ambulances on the left, I decided to go there, at least just get out of the traffic pattern. Then that actually worked in my benefit because I was able to bring the vehicle up the side street, the service road.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: Anything else, Kevin?

MR. McALLISTER: I don't have any further questions. Do you have any other recollections or observations to share with us, Doctor?

DR. ASAEDA: That's about everything. I mean, obviously, all the volunteers, I know that everyone had great intentions, but I guess they didn't realize the extent of things. Just a tragedy.

Also, the other thing I remember is we used to have an EMT that worked here who was actually on the 86th floor of the World Trade building and I thought to myself, he must be in there. I thought he was gone, very afraid to call his family, as he was afraid to call me. When I finally found out he was okay via the office here, I called him and he had said that he actually was also an auxiliary firefighter here in New York City and had some thoughts of becoming a firefighter earlier. But he said as he was making his evacuation and seeing the firefighters come up fully loaded with their gear and their hoses going up to the floors to fight the fires, he said he was thanking everyone, thank you for what you do, thank you for what you do, and he said all thoughts of ever being a firefighter went right out the door for him there.

I can only imagine what they must have been going through, and hearing that there's 343 firefighters lost, initially, over 300 initially, just the thought of that is just tremendous, but when I actually saw the names on the list, it made me think twice again and also looking at the pictures. Now, not recalling the names exactly, seeing the pictures, I recognized one of the faces and I realized that there were more people that I knew through the Dominican Republic deployment or even through the bioterrorism course. I don't remember if he's a chief. I think it's Chief Fanning or Captain Fanning was lost as well. I saw his picture on that. There was another chief that was on that list as well that I recognized from the class and it's just horrific. Not that not knowing them makes any difference, but it just adds that personal touch that makes it really sad.

I didn't realize that Commissioner Feehan actually lived in the neighborhood that I just moved to a couple of months ago, and so once I got off the World Trade Center site, I heard about his wake the night before and went to the funeral, and it's just very hard to take, as I'm sure you know. Just devastating.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: Thank you, doctor.

DR. ASAEDA: Sure. Thank you very much.

MR. McALLISTER: Thank you very much, Doctor.

DR. ASAEDA: If you need anything more, please let me know.

MR. McALLISTER: I'm just going to conclude the interview it's 1612 hours on October 11th and we are concluding the interview. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER VINCENT FIORENTINO

Interview Date: October 12, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. CUNDARI: Today's date is October 12, 2001. The time is 10 o'clock. This is George Cundari and Murray Murad with the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name, rank, title and assigned command.

A. Vincent Fiorentino, Firefighter first grade. 42 Battalion.

Q. We are at 8653 18 Avenue, Battalion 42. Can you please tell us the events that happened regarding the September 11 tragedy?

A. We were in the kitchen in the morning watching Channel 5 news. They were giving a report about the primary election and the camera swung over and showed the first building, the fire and they said plane, we thought small plane, something like that. The Chief and I came up to the office, figuring that we were going to go pretty quick. We took extra lights, put them on the rig and we didn't immediately go. Took the 40 and 48 first from our end of Brooklyn.

Q. What Chief was that?

A. What Chiefs went?

Q. Who was the Chief?

A. Chief Coyne.

Q. Then we got our ticket at 910 to relocate to the 32. En route with that, we got changed to a third alarm assignment for the Battery Tunnel, Brooklyn side. When we got to there, we were told by Brooklyn that the 42 and the 41 were going to -- we were pulled back to Brooklyn and we had our complete third alarm assignment at the tunnel. With that, at some point Brooklyn took units off of our ticket and they were getting another box, another Manhattan box, an Albany Street box I believe it was. A few of them, I know 201 was one of those numbers on that that was taken off. They went through the tunnel ahead of us. That was right before the first collapse. 201 was caught in that collapse. I believe 113 was also in that group that was taken out of our group and they back filled the assignment and when the first collapse came, the reports at the tunnel were that the tunnel collapsed or that there was a collapse at the other end of the tunnel and we were trying to get confirmation from the tunnel people as to what was happening. They were kind of vague with that.

The Chief assigned a couple of units to assist in the evacuation of the tunnel and prior to that we were -- I was on the radio with Brooklyn and we were right at the toll plaza where there was still traffic coming out of Manhattan and our guys were grouped together standing and I didn't see the building come down, but by looking at them I realized what was happening with the first tower. Then we were ordered by orders of Chief Cruthers, to take the entire assignment and go to the Brooklyn Bridge. That's what we proceeded to do. We left those other units there, I know 102 was one of them. They went into the tunnel to assist the people coming out of the tunnel.

Then we went to the Brooklyn Bridge and then we were stopped at the Brooklyn Bridge and they had a report that the other side was possibly untenable and the 42 Battalion went alone, left the rest of the assignment behind as a scout unit to check. We saw that Chambers Street was clear. We reported back to Brooklyn and the rest of the third alarm assignment came over with us. From there we reported in to the command post that was at Park Row and Broadway.

Q. Around City Hall?

A. At the point of City Hall park. We met Chief Haring there. We were assigned to work with the 15th Division, I think it was, and we went and operated in number 5 World Trade Center. We assisted in the removal of 3 people from the concourse area. One guy who had an I beam on him in the bottom of this number 5 building. We finished that operation, then that building was on fire.

Q. Where was your Battalion car parked?

A. We parked right along City Hall park.

Q. Then you walked over to --

A. We walked to the command post, then we walked up Vesey Street.

Q. At this time was the tower still standing one of them or both were down?

A. I think they both were down. I mean it was like a wind storm of paper and dust, which I understand they said it was generated by that. It wasn't a windy day. We operated there and then we operated on the fire in number 5 and then later we swung around and we were at a sub cellar fire at the Bankers Trust building; 130 Liberty. We operated in 130 Liberty.

Q. Do you recall who was in that building?

A. What companies?

Q. Yes, Chief or anyone in there?

A. There were other Chiefs there that that -- 21, 43 and 42 and we were gathering up guys that had cylinders that were able to go down because it was pushing from this sub cellar. So there was a lot of guys at that point that was later on, but a lot of guys didn't have masks. The Chief stopped guys from assisting us further down the stairs without the masks. We made one push, we expended our masks, everybody came out and then they went hunting down more cylinders. They found more cylinders and we went down with a second push and put those fires out down there. After that we were on the pile of number 2.

Q. Doing a search?

A. Right, that's how we operated, to the best of my knowledge. Time frames and all, I don't know. To me it seemed like all one big -- it was nighttime and when we started out it was morning. It went by very quickly in that vein of things.

Q. Which channel were you operating on, Channel 1?

A. When we got over to Manhattan we were told to switch to Manhattan. We switched to Manhattan and the Chief stayed on 1 and I switched mine, I think it was to 5 and both radios had a lot of Maydays. When we first came over there were a lot of Mayday calls, but you couldn't really know where they were all coming from. Then the radio quieted down after that, at least the channels we were on.

Q. Initially it came in as a third alarm?

A. We went to a third alarm staging. They do that when they have a large fire somewhere. They bring units from other boroughs to be ready to go in for the next wave. That's basically the best I can remember.

Q. You had a lot of people passing you on the streets, a lot of civilians going, trying to get out of there when you got there?

A. When we hit the corner of Church and Chambers, we ran into two firemen that were totally disoriented and had lost their company, lost contact with their company. They were -- best description shell shocked. We took their names and we told them to continue heading more towards midtown to get out of the storm.

Like I said, the paperwork that we had anything written on disappeared. We came back to our car later in the night. It was filled with about 25 pairs of shoes, jackets. A lot of things were taken from the car, but there were no -- we had our masks with us. The guys wanted to take our masks when we were responding. We had to to like -- that's about it.

MR. CUNDARI: Thank you for giving this interview. The time is 1010. This is the conclusion of the tape.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

BATTALION CHIEF DOMINICK DeRUBBIO

Interview Date: October 12, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. CUNDARI: The time is 10:15, and this is George Cundari with Murray Murad from the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name, rank, title and assigned command.

A. My name is Battalion Chief Dominick DeRubbio. I'm assigned to Division 8. I'm doing the 25R group in Battalion 21. That morning I was surplus, so I was assigned to the field comm. unit.

I was running late that morning. [redacted] I got out late. I was driving in, and I was on the Gowanus and traffic was backed up. So I got off the Gowanus, and I tried to cut through Park Slope. Then I saw the smoke sort of to the west. I said, "Oh, it looks like we have a job somewhere."

Then I put on 1010 Wins, and then I heard that a plane had crashed into the World Trade Center. So I said, "Well, field comm. is going to be gone, so I'm going to have to get to quarters." I parked the car, got my gear and started to get over there.

When I made the turn onto Flatbush Avenue, I could see the World Trade Center. I could see the smoke. I knew we had our hands full here.

Q. What quarters were you responding to?

A. I was going to field comm., which is Tillary Street. I was responding to their quarters. Traffic in downtown Brooklyn was a mess. I remember it was pretty jammed up down there. Then listening to 1010 Wins, I heard another plane crashed into the other tower. I said, "Wow."

I got to quarters, parked my car, grabbed my gear, and there was a group of some other firemen there. We walked over to the Brooklyn Bridge, which was closed. The cops had that closed. They got a Department of Sanitation car, and he drove us over the Brooklyn Bridge.

We got to like Chambers right in front of One Centre Street. It was just chaos. People were evacuating out of Manhattan. Everybody was coming towards us. So we walked through City Hall Park over to Vesey Street.

I remember seeing Commissioner Von Essen. He was in front of Seven World Trade Center. They were looking at the fire in the tower. I noticed a lot of airplane parts in the street, a lot of gears and stuff like that.

Q. Excuse me. What was the location that you saw the airplane parts?

A. Going down Vesey, sort of in front of Seven World Trade Center. I knew they were airplane parts. You could see gears and pieces of airplane.

I got down to West Street and went south, and I saw field comm. They were in front of Two World Financial Center. They had their van set up there. I remember seeing Chief Cassano, and I remember seeing Chief Cross there.

So I reported in to field comm. I tried to get myself a radio. There were no radios left. All the radios were taken out of the van. I remember stowing my gear under the table, the field comm. table. I was talking to Chief Cassano. He needed a battery. I got him a battery, and I changed the battery in his radio for him. He was standing there.

People were jumping out of towers. We were on West there. They were jumping out, and they were landing in the street in front of us. Just something you try not to pay too much attention to, you know.

There was a group of people there. There were people waiting for assignments. I remember someone saying they wanted to know if they could land helicopters on the roof. I think Chief Cassano said it can't be done.

After a while we were looking up at the tower, and all of a sudden someone said it's starting to come down.

Q. This would be the north tower coming down?

A. This would be the first one.

Q. Or the south tower?

A. This one here.

It was weird how it started to come down. It looked like it was a timed explosion, but I guess it was just the floors starting to pancake one on top of the other.

Luckily where the field comm. unit was, there was a big open door behind us, a big roll-down door which was open, and that led to a ramp which went into the basement of Two World Financial Center. So pretty much everybody turned around and went down this ramp into the basement of the building.

A lot of debris came down where we were, and it also came down the ramp. All the dust and the smoke came down. Most of us who went down there -- I would say all of us -- were lucky we got out of the way.

After a while we sort of regrouped back to the top of the ramp. I was with a cop. He had a flashlight. It was so dark, you couldn't see anything, but we went back up and looked around to see if there was anybody up there. We didn't see anybody.

I tried to find my gear, and my gear was buried.

Q. Do you recall who went downstairs with you?

A. I'm pretty sure Chief Cassano was with me and Lieutenant Gates from field comm. There were some EMS people there. There was probably some officers and some companies there also. It probably had to be about 30 people went down that ramp. Like I said, we were pretty lucky we had that, because if that door was closed I think we would have gotten hit with debris where we were standing.

Afterwards we went back down the ramp, and I was able to find a staircase. I walked into the lobby and went out the back of the building, which faced the Hudson River. People were starting to drift over to the west side. I think Marine Company 9 was there, and there were two New York City Waterway ferry boats there.

So I told the pilot in the marine company, "Tell the dispatcher any injured people, bring them to the Hudson River," because it was a clear area at the time and we had boats that were evacuating people to New Jersey. I know the marine company took quite a few people out of there and over to Jersey.

Q. Where was the marine company docked?

A. They had to be -- let's see.

Q. Here's North End Street.

A. They had to be over here. I think it was south of this -- they were right here. People were coming west and coming over. They had quite a few people on their boat, and they took them, like I said, to Jersey. We were trying to help people evacuate and get over towards the Hudson River.

I didn't have a radio. I never got a radio, so I really didn't know what was going on. Eventually I was sort of behind the Winter Garden, and I had picked up a mask. I figured I might need it later. I didn't have a mask either. There was a mask laying there. I picked it up.

I was looking over the Winter Garden at the second tower, and then I saw that starting to come down. There were people standing next to me. We all just started running. I was able to get around the corner of another building, and I got into a doorway and put my mask on.

Q. So you ran north in the Winter Garden? This is the Winter Garden over here.

A. It had to be -- yeah, I ran -- it was probably around this building. I was able to hunker down in a doorway.

Q. You ran towards North End Street?

A. Yeah. I put my mask on. Like you say, you're sort of in shock that this thing even happened. It was really difficult.

After that it seemed like everybody started moving north. I met Lieutenant Gates, and we tried to set up the command board again, tried to get some kind of organization going, but it was kind of difficult.

Eventually we pretty much made our way north up to Chambers and West, and that's where the command post was set up. We had the staging, which was north of that by Stuyvesant High School.

That's pretty much it as far as I can remember.

Q. Murray, got any questions?

I just want to know, there was no assigned radio to you?

A. There was, but by the time I got there, all the radios had been taken.

Q. Okay. All right.

A. I guess people coming in, they stripped that whole field comm. van of radios.

That was it.

Q. Chief, I'd like to thank you for your time and for doing this interview.

MR. CUNDARI: It's 10:25. This concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT GARY GATES

Interview Date: October 12, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. McCOURT: The date is October 12th, 2001. My name is Tom McCourt from the New York City Fire Department. This is in reference to the World Trade Center on September 11th, 2001.

Would you please state your name, please.

LIEUTENANT GATES: Lieutenant Gary Gates, lieutenant in field comm. for about the last year and a half.

MR. McCOURT: Also present is --

MR. DUN: Richard Dun, New York City Fire Department, working on the task force.

Q. Lieutenant Gates, would you tell us what your assignment was on September 11th?

A. My assignment was that I was the lieutenant in field comm. and would work with two other people from DISCO having to do with the dispatchers. We were taking on multiple alarms, and the multiple alarm was the World Trade Center that came in around quarter to, 10 to 9.

Q. Lieutenant, who were you working with?

A. It was John Turverso and Richie Chiarillo.

Q. Are they firefighters?

A. They are Fire Department employees who were not in uniform. They work for the dispatchers unit, communications dispatch.

We were able to see the smoke from quarters, and at that moment the second alarm came in for the Manhattan World Trade Center. We responded with the small van, because the other ones were out of service. We went down over there.

Going over the Brooklyn Bridge, we could see one of the towers -- I couldn't tell you which tower at that moment was burning when we looked to the south. We found out later that the north tower was hit first; is that correct?

Q. Correct.

A. So that was the tower that was burning.

We went on to Broadway, and we driving down Broadway. When we got to about Maiden Lane, the amount of people going across Broadway to evacuate from the building there was enough to bring us down to a standstill.

I said to Richie, who was driving at the time, "Let's start the command here," because you could see the fire. It was a fairly good place to be, I thought, anyhow.

I was out trying to help Richie and move people away from the van so that we could drive down and get a little closer, when Richie yelled that the dispatcher just notified him that they want the command post to be set up on West Street.

Q. What frequency were you operating on, what radio frequency?

A. The primary at that time would be Manhattan, the Manhattan frequency. As soon as we get to a multiple alarm in that borough, we go to the frequency of that borough. So we were on the Manhattan frequency.

So we drove down further south to try to work our way over to West Street. We were able to do this, and we came up from West Street. I'm not sure which street we came on to West Street from. It was south of Albany, I believe, whatever. Probably Rector. We were able to get through near Rector, and we drove up. Rector or Carlton. As I said, I don't really remember. There were many, many people.

As we drove up to West Street, we were going against traffic. At that moment Chief Ganci was standing right outside and he yelled, "Gary, right here," meaning set up the board here. That was about exactly opposite of One World Trade Center, which we didn't even know the number at that point. I knew it was the most northern tower.

Chief Ganci said, "Set it up right here." We opened the board, put it together. At that time more groups, more companies, were coming. So we picked the board up and moved it back towards the west side of West Street and up against -- back where there's a parking lot that leads into the building, where the parking lot leads into the building, which later on it happened to be very fortunate to be there.

We set it up there. Again, my position is we draw a schematic of what we see, the two buildings in front of us. At that point, then, the chief starts to disperse troops. Okay, we're going to send these companies to this particular section.

My job is to note that on the board so you can have an overall picture of where the troops are going, where the firefighters, the officers are going. So you put that down on the board. The last I remember was Dennis Cross, Chief Cross, was given I think three units to go to the south tower. So off he went.

Then, again, no idea what time -- I have a watch, but I'm trying to move everything together at the same time. I looked up, and the building exploded, the building that we were very close to, which was one tower. The whole top came off like a volcano.

Q. What was that, was that the second plane hitting?

A. I realized later, which actually I realized in talking with people over a period of two weeks, that had to be the collapse, because since that was the north tower which was hit by a plane first, the other tower was hit by a plane just before we got there. So now both towers have been hit by a plane. The north tower was burning.

So the explosion, what I realized later, had to be the start of the collapse. It was the way the building appeared to blowout from both sides. I'm looking at the face of it, and all we see is the two sides of the building just blowing out and coming apart like this, as I said, like the top of a volcano.

With that, I believe it was about 60 of us at the command board at that time, just turned around and went down into this parking lot, which happened to be very fortunate, as I said, because the 60 of us went down there.

I found out later on that Dennis Cross and the guys he was with -- again, I don't know the amount of units that he was sent with -- were found on West Street, from what I understand. So he never even got to the building.

Q. He was approaching it as it collapsed?

A. Yeah, yeah, I would say that.

Q. Where was Chief Ganci at that time?

A. Chief Ganci was within ten feet of the board. I saw Chief Feehan. I saw him and many of the other chiefs who were finally coming in, a lot of guys off duty, other guys working, stuff like that. I couldn't tell you a lot of their names because I'm not very familiar with a lot of the chiefs' names and stuff like that.

I know one gentleman who I worked with him in fire prevention, Chief Tom Murphy, he was there. Another gentleman, Chief Dominic -- I'd have to look up his last name, but he was there. These two guys are still okay today.

Q. They went to the same location you did?

A. Yeah, yeah.

(Interruption.)

A. So as I said, we all went down in the basement. I found out later on that some of the guys had gone back up again. We had about 30 people downstairs who were trying to find a back door out. Not being familiar with the building, we found one of the parking lot officers there that dispatches trucks or receives trucks.

From there we were able to find a stairway going up by sending out what I would call scouts or something like that. Finally we were able to get upstairs and went out through the Winter Garden back door.

Q. So you came into the Winter Garden. From there where did you go?

A. From there we walked over to Vesey

Street. We went around to the right to go to Vesey Street to try to go up around to the front of the building at Vesey and West to get back into the game, so to speak.

At that time, again talking to this other chief officer, we were trying to regroup on that street there, Vesey and West. There were many injured firefighters at that time and firemen who were dislocated from their units. We were trying to take some kind of consensus of who was there to start to set up some kind of command post or reorganize.

Q. Do you recognize the highest ranking officer in this area at the time? Do you recall?

A. There was a chief there, but I could not recall who it was.

At that time this Chief Tom Murphy was going to go with the Secret Service. They were apparently going back to the building coming through the back by the Winter Garden and go back into the building to see if they could get out front, I guess.

As we went around the corner, they all came running back. We all ran back around that building that we were in back of, which was on I guess it was North End Avenue or South End Avenue, whichever it was there.

That's when the next building came down. It was a big heavy cloud of smoke that came right around and followed us in there. We were able to get into another parking garage or something like that. So the smoke just blew past us.

Q. Who was with you at that point?

A. Several people from the building and one other fire officer. I couldn't tell you his name.

Q. Everybody was okay?

A. Yeah. There were only about five of us in there. We went one way. People were scattering all over the place.

Q. Where did you come out? The same way?

A. We came out the same way. We went back to that street, stuff like that. We again went back to Vesey Street to again try to reorganize what was going on. Then we found out everybody was going up to Chambers Street and West, so we all walked to Chambers Street.

We met Chief Cruthers up there. Again, we left the board that I used, the command board. Since that was now outside the front part, that had gotten -- we found out later -- we don't even know where it is right now. We know the van that we drove up was flattened. The board, they don't know where it is.

Q. Would you just indicate on the map where the second command post was set up.

A. The second command post, when I was with Chief Cruthers, was up here at West Street on the north side of the overpass. I'm sorry, that's Vesey Street. Okay, up here at Chambers Street. Chambers Street, the north side of Chambers Street and West. That was actually the second command post after the collapse of the two buildings.

Q. You remained there for the duration?

A. We remained there until after Seven World Trade Center collapsed, which I found out later on was about 5:00 that day, something like that.

Then after that it seemed like we were stretched out. There was companies in front of us, companies behind us in the staging area. At that time Chief Cruthers moved the command post up to Vesey and West. That's where we started to work out of at that point. That was our primary command post for about four days, and that's where we worked out of.

Q. Anything else you can think of? Any other people that you saw there that you may be able to pinpoint what their actions were right before or after?

A. The --

Q. I'm sorry to interrupt you. Chief Ganci and Commissioner Feehan were there with you at the collapse?

A. Yeah, the first collapse.

Q. Did they go the same way you did?

A. That I don't know. That I don't know.

Q. You don't know which direction?

A. Because at that time when the building collapsed, we made a mad dash. I was assuming everybody came with us. But at that point he had to come down there because he was close enough to come down there. What his actions were later, I don't know. I found out later he went back up.

I think he was -- from the stories, he was caught in the second collapse. He had to go back up.

Q. So you didn't see him after that?

A. No, no. After the first collapse and we went down into that parking garage, I didn't see Ganci or anybody else.

Q. You continued on Manhattan that whole time or did you switch over?

A. Well, at that time we had no -- we only had handy talky radios at that point. We stayed on Channel 1, because that would be the primary tactical for getting hold of everybody. We were just trying to get people to shut down their handy talkies and conserve their batteries. We didn't know what was the duration of this.

Q. Who had primary control over communications? Did you guys have it? Before everything went down.

A. Primary control at that point is myself with the -- we had commcord yeah, commcord was there. Again, I'd have to look up to see who it was. Chief Ganci, of course. I believe I saw Chief Cassano and a couple of the -- I never saw Burns.

So at that point that was the command post. At that point who was in charge then would be Ganci. As I said, he was the first one there. He told me to open up the command board up here, and then all the other chiefs started coming and all the other companies started coming.

Q. Anything else you can think of?

MR. McCOURT: The time now is 8:47. The interview started at 8:30. This concludes this interview. Thank you very much.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

JOHN TRAVERSO

Interview Date: October 12, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. McCOURT: Today is October 12, 2001. My name is Tom McCourt, New York City Fire Department. I'm working with Richard Dunn, New York City Fire Department.

Q. We are currently interviewing?

A. John Traverso, field comm., fire alarm dispatcher.

Q. Okay, John. On the date of September 11, the World Trade Center, can you tell us what your assignment was that day and everything that you can recall of that incident.

A. Okay, I was assigned to field comm. that morning. We were out in front of quarters. We just came down to check the rig and we noticed smoke coming across from Manhattan and as soon as we turned around to go say something a second alarm was transmitted right away, so we responded. Upon going across the Brooklyn Bridge, we found out via radio that a plane had hit the building and we proceeded to go to the location.

Once we got into Manhattan, we were radioed by Manhattan to go set up on West Street opposite the World Trade Center, set up the command post. So we responded over to West Street, we backed into a building, I guess it would be right by the Merrill Lynch building where there is an underground parking garage.

At that time as we were responding there was numerous people running, just to escape the catastrophe that had happened. We backed into the entrance to the garage --

Q. Let me interrupt you a little bit. Who were you working with that day?

A. Richard Georello and Lieutenant Gates. We had a small field comm. van, not the regular field comm. apparatus at that time. We were told, as I said, by Manhattan to set up on West Street opposite of number 2. We backed in, we parked the truck on the ramp in front of the entrance to the underground parking garage. At that time Lieutenant Gates set up the local command board, I proceeded to go into the back of the van and operate the radios.

My partner Richie was acting as a go between, because radio traffic was so intense. I would give him messages of whatever I was receiving, people trapped on different floors and he would hand deliver them over to the command post where Lieutenant Gates was working so he could give them to the command Chiefs.

Q. What frequencies were you working on, do you know?

A. I believe it was frequency six on the handy talky, but I was on Manhattan frequency.

Q. Okay.

A. Really, because you couldn't get anything in on the handy talkies because it was so crowded.

Q. Okay, go on.

A. At the time we couldn't ascertain, but we saw a couple of bodies fall in the course of this, people jumping. In the middle of watching all this and receiving radio transmissions, I really couldn't look too well because I had to pay attention to what I was doing. At the time I received the report of people trapped on the 86 floor, I turned to the back of the van, gave it to Richie, who was working, he was going to bring it over, he looked up, stated an explicative and said everybody start running. Behind the van I remember seeing Mayor Giuliani, numerous Chiefs.

Q. At this time?

A. Yes, when I was there just prior to that. I seen, it was very crowded, it was all the command Chiefs. Assistant Commissioner Gregory was there. I'm not sure who else, I don't know, a lot of Chiefs, it was so crowded. Everybody in the command sector was at that command post area.

As the debris started falling, it had to be from building two, because the second plane hadn't hit yet. People started running, what I did I dove down into the corner of the van and covered myself.

Q. In the van itself?

A. In the van itself. After the debris went by I was lucky enough. I had cupped my hands over so I could breathe a bit. I crawled out of the van and crawled down to the parking garage.

Q. Was anybody else with you there?

A. Nobody else was with me at that time. Guys that were already outside. Everybody took off in different directions. A lot of people went down underneath and then went out the other side of the building from what I understand. I met a fireman down there, a couple of other firemen and we proceeded to go back further and once it started to clear up, I ventured out to see where Richie was because he was out in back of me and I hadn't seen him.

There was a Battalion Chief I believe it was. I don't know who he was, said everybody start heading towards the water. So we started heading towards the water.

Q. Which way did you come out of the building?

A. I came out the same way, right up to the field comm. truck because I remember there was one light still working on it. You could see through the dust and the debris the light was going around on it. You couldn't even get in there. I wanted to go see if I could operate the radio but it was shot. It was shot. We started heading for the water. Then the second one hit and we started running for the water and that came down.

After that I got checked out by EMS. Luckily, thank god, I was all right. Took some oxygen.

Q. Where was that? Where were you treated?

A. To be the street, had to be --

Q. Over by West?

A. No, it had to be over here by Vesey. Vesey, close to the water. Not near West, what is that, north, because they grabbed me because I had some dust and stuff on me. I proceeded up to Chambers and West, because that's where I saw everybody else was going. At that time I found Lieutenant Gates. He was trying to set up a command post at that time. There was a little bit of pandemonium. Everybody was trying to get in and get set up. The field comm. truck arrived from the shops because it was on its way there anyway.

I got into the truck and I started printing a history of what was going on. I started operating the radios. Then Billy was there, because he had seen what happened, he lives by Jersey. He saw what happened, he came in. I said look I have to go get cleaned up. I got to sit down and for the rest of the day I just helped them a little bit. That night at 10 o'clock we found out that Richie had ended up in Jersey because he jumped on a ferry, or he was placed on a ferry, I think by the water when everybody started running. We found out he was okay.

That night, myself and Danny, walked across the Brooklyn Bridge back to quarters here. Just to unwind a bit. That's basically what happened. I really didn't -- I saw units coming, but faces. I was in the back of the van working the radio. I was writing things down and worrying about everything getting set up. I had no idea. I thought it was an accident. You know, a regular accidental plane crash at first. Then when they said the second one was hit and then the Pentagon. Then we realized, so it was a little unnerving.

Q. Sure. Anything else you can think of that you might have left out?

A. No, we just all were standing in front of quarters and seeing smoke. We couldn't see the World Trade Centers because there is a building in the way. We thought it was a ship, maybe, on fire or a belching something from -- they just started a diesel or something. We had no clue what it was until they dropped the second alarm.

Q. They told you on the way in it was a plane that crashed into?

A. We were aware of it once we started responding. Also I left one thing out. When we first arrived on West Street I backed in. It was a fifth alarm at that time. I was told by the command post to have Manhattan transmit an additional separate fifth alarm. So I transmitted that. I had them transmit that. Then I got the report of the people trapped and handed it to Richie, and then the building came down. That's about it.

MR. McCOURT: Okay. The time is 9:15. That concludes this interview. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER VINCENT BUONOCORE

Interview Date: October 12, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. CASTORINA: This is Ron Castorina conducting an interview with Vincent Buonocore, firefighter two, assigned to Engine 278. The time now is 1325 hours. Conducting the interview with me is --

MR. McCOURT: Tom McCourt.

MR. CASTORINA: And your name, sir?

FIREFIGHTER BUONOCORE: Firefighter Vincent Buonocore, grade two. I had the nozzle that day, assigned to 278.

MR. CASTORINA: The day of September 11th?

FIREFIGHTER BUONOCORE: Yes.

Q. Can you tell me what your assignment was for that day and whatever you can remember?

A. Yeah. I was assigned the nozzle that day. I remember walking into the kitchen and seeing one of the twin towers, smoke bellowing out of the upper floors. They said there was an airplane crash. I said to myself, it was such a beautiful day, I said, how the hell could someone not see that and avoid the twin towers.

A few minutes later I was watching the TV, and I saw the airplane coming from the right side of the television screen, and one second later I saw the big explosion. All the guys were in the kitchen, and everybody was going, "Oh." Everybody was screaming.

There were two guys outside, Firefighter Jackson and Firefighter Zechewytz. They were outside looking at the sky. Firefighter Jackson said, "Wow, look at this airplane. It's flying so low." Maybe a minute after that they heard us screaming in the kitchen. They ran back, and sure enough, that was probably the plane that crashed into the twin towers.

Once that second plane hit, pretty much I knew we were going. I remember calling my wife, just letting her know that I was going to the twin towers, because I knew at that point it was terrorism. I didn't know the outcome of the day for anybody, so I just wanted to call my wife anyway just to let her know.

We responded. I remember going down Fourth Avenue, heading towards the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel, and I remember seeing papers flying in the air. Pretty much we went onto Third Avenue. We were lining up on the Brooklyn side of the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel, waiting for orders from I guess the dispatcher or whatever.

We were hanging out there for about 15 minutes. I was talking to Firefighter Zechewytz. The next thing you know, I saw what I imagine the south tower coming down. Right then and there I pretty much knew it was going to be devastating to the department and to a lot of people.

At that point pretty much we started gathering up -- we lined up then. We took the rig from there, and we were going over the Brooklyn Bridge. We stopped on the bridge for about five or ten minutes, and we were watching all the people coming off from the Manhattan side, thousands of people, walking calmly. Pretty much a few minutes after that we went into Manhattan.

I was pretty happy we didn't go through the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel because the only thing that was running through my mind is they're going to hit the tunnel. I didn't want to get caught in there. I was just happy we took the bridge, not knowing that, who knows, if another airplane was going to be coming crashing into the bridge or what.

We ended up going into Manhattan. It was just ash all over the place. I don't remember which street exactly we were on. Pretty much we parked our rig, and we went to the command center. We stood there for a little while waiting for orders.

Q. Where were you when the second building collapsed?

A. We were, I believe, on --

Q. You were in Manhattan at that time?

A. Yeah, we were in Manhattan. Again, we were by the command center, waiting for instructions.

Q. So you were in the staging area?

A. We were in the staging area. Then I remember just seeing a whole bunch of dust going up again in smoke, not realizing that that was the second tower coming down.

That's the recollections that I have.

Q. Anything you want to add?

A. Basically it was a tragic day for our nation and our department, and hopefully something like this never goes on again.

Q. Okay. Thank you.

MR. CASTORINA: The time now is 1330 hours. That concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

Firefighter Richard VETLAND

Interview Date: October 12, 2001

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

MR. CASTORINA: I am here with Firefighter Richard VETLAND. I am at Engine 278. The time now is 1310 hours. Conducting the interview with me is?

MR. MC COURT: Tom McCourt.

MR. CASTORINA: And your name, sir?

A. Richard VETLAND, Engine 278.

Q. What is your rank?

A. Firefighter first grade.

Q. What was your assignment on September 11, 2001?

A. I was the chauffeur.

Q. Of?

A. The night tour and the day tour.

Q. Of 278?

A. Engine 278.

Q. Can you recall what happened that day, in detail?

A. Yes. I actually watched it on TV. The Chief went first.

Q. Which Chief was that?

A. Ed Henry. Actually, Roger Jackson was driving him, but John Picarello came in early and took the run in. They went before nine. Then the rest of the us in the Engine we just had a feeling we were going. We watched it on TV and then watched the second plane hit and knew we were going. We I fueled the rig up, then we went.

We went down Fourth Avenue, to Third Avenue, over the bridge, then they stopped us at the tunnel and there was a staging area at the tunnel. Then when the first building came down we had a clear looking right at us.

Q. You were at the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel?

A. We were at the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel.

Q. You didn't get into Manhattan through the tunnel?

A. They stopped us there because 228 had said they thought a bomb went off in the tunnel actually.

Q. And they were in the tunnel?

A. They were in the tunnel. That was during the first collapse, because we seen it. They stopped us before that just to slow everybody down, I think. And then once that came down, that's when 228 said they thought there was a bomb. It was just smoke. But we were stopped before that.

Then we went to --

Q. What route did you take to get into Manhattan? You went over the bridge?

A. Then we went over to the Brooklyn bridge. We took the Brooklyn Bridge. We were the first ones over the Brooklyn Bridge from that staging area at the tunnel. Then we went over and parked on West Street, on the wrong side of West Street, facing towards everything. Facing south on the east side, facing the wrong way.

Q. Just put an X on the map where you were parked on that day, Engine 278.

A. We were parked right here (indicating).

Q. Had the second building collapsed yet at this point?

A. I don't know when it collapsed. There was a lot of dust, a lot of dust. I don't know where we were.

Q. Do you remember, were you directed anywhere or --

A. From there they just put us in a staging area.

Q. Do you know who put you in the staging area?

A. No, that I don't know. We were there maybe -- we were there maybe about 15, 20 minutes and Father John came up and I talked to Father John. I talked to another guy. I know John Leanza from 122 truck. He was -- I know him from when we were kids and all he told me was "I hugged the columns like they told us in PS 30 and he was hugging the columns there and he said they lost I think two or three guys that he were standing with. He ran over and hugged the column and he came out -- he came walking out, Father John came walking out and just everybody started to come out. It was maybe 15, 20 minutes when people started walking, walking towards us.

So eventually -- actually we parked in and we started to go in and then they grabbed us and pulled us back. We left our rig a lot closer than where they made us go. So I pulled in and I drove right in up over here somewhere close and then they walked us back to the staging area. We basically unloaded food and oranges and stuff all day and then we went to Millennium later on. That was later on in the day.

Q. Anything else you want to add?

A. I can't think of anything.

Q. Okay. Fine.

MR. CASTORINA: That concludes this interview. The time is 1315 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CAPTAIN JOHN HENRICKSEN

Interview Date: October 11, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. CASTORINA: We're at Engine 278. I'm Ron Castorina, conducting an interview.

Your name, Tom?

MR. McCOURT: Tom McCourt.

CAPTAIN HENRICKSEN: Captain John Henricksen.

MR. CASTORINA: Where are you assigned?

CAPTAIN HENRICKSEN: I'm assigned to Engine 278.

Q. Can you tell me on September 11th, 2001, that day what your assignment was and the details?

A. Yes, on that morning at 9:10 we were assigned to report to the staging area at the Brooklyn Tunnel, on the Brooklyn side of the Brooklyn Tunnel. We were over there having responded to that location and then we waited for assignment over there.

As we were sitting there waiting for assignment, we observed the first tower collapse. At that time we had just previous to that sent one unit through the tunnel, and we were going to be the next unit to go through. As the first unit went through, they gave an urgent and no units could go through the tunnel at that time.

Q. Do you know what that unit was?

A. I believe it was 228.

Q. 228?

A. Yeah.

So from there since we could no longer go through the tunnel, we were redirected to go over the Brooklyn Bridge. Then from the Brooklyn Bridge we were directed into Manhattan. We went to the staging area which was located on West Street opposite the Stuyvesant High School. I don't know what street that is, but that's where we went to.

I don't know at what point the second tower came down. I do believe we were in Manhattan at that time, but we were nowhere near the Trade Center.

Q. Who directed you to go to the staging area; do you remember?

A. That I don't recall. It was two battalions that were on the same ticket as us, and that's what was giving us the orders. I can't recall at the time that it was.

Q. So how close did you get to the incident and at what point did you get there?

A. We didn't get into the incident until after the second tower had collapsed. Then from there we were directed to the Millennium Hotel. We were in the Millennium for a cautionary line because they were afraid of the fire extending to that building.

Then at one point they chased us out of there for fear of collapse of a building; I believe it was Seven World Trade. So they got us out of there because they didn't know which way that building was going to collapse.

When Seven World Trade did collapse, we were in the Woolworth Building. You couldn't even see. It was unbelievable. You couldn't even see your hand in front of your face. That's how much dust and debris was flying around.

Q. At any point were you or any of your guys or operation personnel injured?

A. No, no.

Q. You don't remember what corner you were on on West Street? You don't remember the location? Was it by Stuyvesant?

A. It was by Stuyvesant.

Q. Would the map help you, or you just don't remember?

A. I don't remember what street Stuyvesant High School is on. Do you know where Stuyvesant High School is?

We were standing on I guess the north side of West Street, opposite Stuyvesant High School.

Q. Were there still civilians being evacuated from the area while you were there or they weren't going near your location?

A. They weren't going near our location, but you could see them all being evacuated over the Brooklyn Bridge. There was no traffic whatsoever coming over the Brooklyn Bridge other than civilians who had taken over the whole bridge. The walkways and the road ways in both directions were just civilians pouring over.

Q. How were they acting? Orderly or was it panicky?

A. Yes, surprisingly it was pretty orderly. You could see they were involved in the collapse because they came completely covered with debris, you know, white all over them. It was a sight to see.

Q. Is there anything else you recall or you want to add?

A. No, there's nothing I can think of.

Q. So you were just about there right after the second collapse?

A. Yeah.

Q. Okay. Thank you, Captain.

A. I wish I could tell you more.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT ROY DAVID

Interview Date: October 12, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Today's date is October 12th, 2001. The time is now 8:20 a.m. my name is Christine Bastedenbeck from the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview this morning with the following individual.

Please state your name.

LIEUTENANT DAVID: Lieutenant Roy David, emergency medical service.

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Where are you assigned?

LIEUTENANT DAVID: Battalion 8, Manhattan south.

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Also present for the interview is --

MR. ECCLESTON: Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department.

Q. Lieutenant David, can you tell us about the events of September 11th, 2001, that morning.

A. September 11th, 2001, at approximately 8:50 in the morning I was assigned to the academy, the second week of an EMT refresher course.

While on a break just in front of the academy, I was informed of an airplane crash into the World Trade Center. Subsequently this event was confirmed, and we were informed that we would be mobilized to the location.

There was a delay in obtaining vehicles for us to leave in. However, during that time some members, both of the ALS refresher and of the BLS refresher, were placed in ambulances, equipped and dispatched to the location. We then were placed aboard one Fire Department bus and two Transit Authority buses and in convoy, led by Chief McFarland, we responded into Manhattan.

Upon arrival in Manhattan, we were prestaged at a total of three locations prior to getting into the work area. The first one was the Pearl Street side of One Police Plaza. We stayed there approximately 35 minutes. The second one was Broadway just north of Chambers Street, half a block south of 26 Federal Plaza. Then we wound up at Church and Worth. There was some concerns about the 26th Federal Plaza being a potential hot spot, so we moved from there over to Church and Worth. That's an approximate. But it was on Church in the vicinity of Worth.

Then we were brought into the -- excuse me. I have to request the name of that high school, the one --

Q. Stuyvesant.

A. Stuyvesant High School, which is just to the west of West Street approximately two blocks north of the site.

At that point all the members that were on board the three buses were directed into the high school to assist there and be dispatched to other locations, and I was directed by an unknown person at this time to report to the command post to Chief Kowalczyk.

Upon arrival at the command post, Chief Kowalczyk directed me over to 225 Broadway. There in command of the medical treatment area, which included doctors and nurses, was Chief Charles Wells. I was eventually brought back to the command post by Charles Wells and then redispatched back to that location.

When I was sent back to the location the second time, I was armed with a list of units that were to be released from the scene and redeployed back into 911 due to the high call volume.

While I was in the process of releasing those units and working it out with Captain Race who was left in charge of the medical operation, I was approached by a clergyman from the Federal Bureau of Investigation who informed me that Fire Department chaplain Father Mychal Judge had expired and was in the Church and was in need of transport.

I quickly grabbed one of the units that I had that I was in the process of releasing and directed them to pick up and move Father Judge. When that was accomplished, I remained at the medical post assisting and also assisting with the move. We transferred the operation from the 225 Broadway to the lobby of Pace University.

At Pace University we had -- we set up -- I'm sorry, we set up in that lobby of that building, the lobby and the actual whole first floor. There was a threat of collapse of building number seven, so 225, we had to evacuate it.

While operating at Pace University in the lobby of the building, building number seven or tower seven did in fact collapse and create a hazard on our side. But luckily we didn't lose anybody. No one was injured as a result of it, and we continued the operation.

I stayed there until approximately 11:00 at night, at which point I was brought back to the command post and just assisted with some miscellaneous tasks. I probably left the scene at 1:30, and I secured a ride out of there with Chief James Martin.

Q. Can you just give me a little more detail when you approached about Father Judge?

A. I was approached by, again, an unknown priest from the Federal Bureau of Investigation, since that was the jacket he was wearing, and he stated to me that Father Judge had expired approximately two hours ago.

When I went into the Church, in fact he had been pronounced by Dr. Kelly sometime earlier. At this point they just wanted to remove him up to his perish so that I guess he could be prepared for the next step.

He appeared to have an injury, a heavy bleeding injury to the left side of the rear of his head, and it was obvious that he was also covered in debris, as his face and the rest of his body was covered with just I guess crushed mortar and brick matter.

Q. So you picked him up from what church?

A. I don't know the name of the Church. It's on -- I'd have to refer to the map.

Q. I'm not sure if that map covers everything.

A. Yeah, let me just see. Let me orient myself here. It was St. Paul -- no. St. Peter's Church, which was on Barclay Street between Church and Broadway.

Q. So you assigned a unit there to --

A. Well, there were several units there that were operating supporting the medical unit for transport. As they were being released, this is the time that I was approached by this priest and asked for help.

A member from my command by the name of Carpenter was on one of the units I believe like an 8 Mary or something, perhaps an extra unit that had been running for the day. He was on that unit, and he was the one that did the removal. I can't recall who his partner was at the time.

Q. And then they removed Father Judge to where?

A. They removed Father Judge to his parish, which is located on 31st Street. It's just opposite a fire station, I believe.

Q. Engine Company 1?

A. Yes.

Q. That's where they left his body?

A. Yes. They took him there, and I believe that's where they left him.

Q. Do you have any other comments you'd like to make at this time regarding the events that morning? Anything you say is fine.

A. Okay. My only concern was that -- and again this is not a bad mark against anyone. But knowing that at any time the personnel in the academy can be deployed, I think that the department should provide buses or some other type of mass people mover vehicles there, deadlined, ready to be moved. Because the only thing that we had that we could depend on was a few ambulances, and it just wasn't enough to move 60, 70 people from the academy.

Q. That's it? Okay.

MS. BASTEDENBECK: This concludes our interview with Lieutenant Roy David. We thank you very much for your comments. The time now is 831 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT FAISEL ABED

Interview Date: October 12, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. ECCLESTON: Today's date is October 12, 2001. The time is 747 hours. This is Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name, rank, title, assigned command area of the Fire Department of the City of New York regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

A. My name is Faisel Abed. I'm an EMT assigned to Battalion 8 and my unit is 08 David 2.

Q. Also present in the room is --

A. Christine Bastedenbeck of the New York City Fire Department.

Q. Were you assigned to the World Trade Center disaster on September 11, 2001?

A. Originally, basically we weren't assigned, but we heard so much commotion over the radio, we decided, you know, we asked Central, send us and we went even as they dispatched us to the World Center.

Q. Who were you working with that day?

A. Charles Beshett.

Q. So they assigned you to the World Trade Center?

A. Yes, I mean there was so much noise when the first call came over, everybody just went like ballistic over the radio. Whoever was there. There was 01 Adam that was like the under the building at that time and then there were a couple of other units that said we will go, we will go. We said we will take you. It sounded legit. It did sound legit, but in the back of our of minds, we thought maybe it's one of the generators that blew up, something electrical, something mechanical. It's just such a tall building, things happen, you know.

So we asked Central to send us the job and we are driving down 34 Street and we get to 23 Street and you see tower one. It's like oh, shit, oh, god. Look at this. The first thing that comes to your mind is oh, it's an act of god, it's a terrible tragedy. I mean you think you know -- you look at it and say -- it's not the first time a plane hit a building. You had the Empire State Building. My parents told me back in 1945 when a big bomber hit the building, so it's an accident, god, it's a tragic accident.

But then we are driving and now we are like, we are about a half mile out, halfway from the World Trade Center and we see this shiny object coming and me and my partner are going, what the hell, what's wrong with that plane. What is wrong with that plane. There is something not right with that plane. And he just -- the tower blew.

So my partner said stop the freaking bus, stop the freaking bus. The building's going to fall. The building's going to fall on us. It was coming -- the force -- you see like the -- shit, the whole top of the building go off and just the junk that was coming out of there and the explosion was -- I thought it was Hollywood. I thought this was an act. I said this can't be happening. In New York. It's not happening.

I slowed it down. He got scared and I got scared so we kind of just slowed down a bit, you know, and he says listen, we really can't go in there. There is too much coming off the building. You could see stuff flying out of the building and people way before you get there. So we do it. We go, we go. We finally go to Vesey and West. Turned there.

There was a couple of other units there. They set the staging area up. We had about 15, 20 people coming out of the building and there were nurses from, they're from AMEX. I think they are from the American Express building. A couple of their nurses. They were bringing patients out. They were sitting down right on the sidewalk. Some were badly burned, some were injured. Some were just in shock. Basically we are there. We are treating some.

Q. Could you indicate where you parked your vehicle.

A. Here is north, we are right here. I would say we are right here. Exactly right here. We are right here.

Q. Just make a number 1 there.

A. Okay. We were right here. West and Vesey and the water is right here and you can't go past the water.

Q. Okay, what vehicle were you in?

A. 350.

Q. 350?

A. 350.

So what happened at that point we get out. We get out our stuff, we are just starting to take care of the patients. We are tagging them red, yellow, whatever color might be at that situation at that time. We were there on the scene maybe -- I know the second plane hit a little bit after nine, if I'm correct. If I remember. We got our stuff out. We started triaging the patients. We stayed right there.

I mean we didn't go any further because of the fact that it was just a dangerous situation.

We stayed there, people were coming out and we triaged them. We were there, I would say approximately maybe an hour. I know it started -- I think that building starting coming down around 10 o'clock or something like that. I don't exactly remember what time, but it was about that time the first tower came down.

Q. We have the time.

A. Yes, I don't remember exactly, but I know it did come down, the first building, right. 9:55. About an hour from when we were first there. With the grace of god we had gotten all the people out of there. We had gotten all the patients out of there. They were transported and everything.

Next thing you know, you hear another -- they had said there were jets out there that day. They were out there. I started to hear another jet, right, it sounded like a flush of a jet. What it was was actually the building coming down. I didn't actually see the building coming down but you heard it. Why I didn't see it, I don't know. We were just so busy concentrating on what we are doing. You just heard this thrushing, thrushing noise like a rocket. I thought the building was under attack again.

You just start seeing this smoke coming down. We just took off. We went north. We actually -- sorry, we went west. We went towards the river. All right. Then we just went towards the river and went up north a little bit behind the building. That was after the first one went down.

Q. Were you still with your partner at that time?

A. No. At that time, forget it, we were gone. We separated. It was just one of those things. We separated. I was looking for him. He was looking for me. I asked all around if -- someone told me he saw him. He was okay. I heard at one point that he went to the hospital with another co-worker of mine, but that wasn't true.

We were there, I would say for maybe another 20 minutes, half an hour or so, and then the second building came down, so we had to run even more further. We ran up north further, and then what happened we ran into the school. Actually the school was coming out, Stuyvesant High School, the kids started coming out. They didn't have a clue what was going on.

So we have like 3, 4,000 kids coming out of the school, not realizing the magnitude of what's going on. So we are starting to walk. Now it's coming down and we are starting to walk, but the school is funny, the school is like a break wall for the smoke that is coming from the building, so when the kids got past one end of the school they started panicking. So we all started getting nervous, because the only place else to go was the Hudson River. I'm a good swimmer, but the Hudson River?

So I started telling the kids, everybody, just calm down, everybody keep on walking. Keep on walking, keep on walking. We finally got out to West Street and went just go all the way up till we stayed at the -- what's the place up there.

Q. Chelsea Pier?

A. Yes, Chelsea Piers. After that, then there was a gas leak. There was another explosion, the gas went. At that point it was just total helplessness. We felt terrible. We felt bad.

Q. Where your vehicle was left --

A. The vehicle was left right there. It was left right there at West and Vesey Street. Just left it there, left everything. Just left everything. They tell you if running, don't look back. I was running looking back, making sure that cloud was coming, because it was coming. It was a horrific cloud.

It was like this monster coming out of the sky that was going to swallow you up. Then I noticed people jumping off the building. I caught this one guy over there. My eye caught him. It was just one of those things. My eye caught him. I was watching.

That's pretty much it.

Q. Once you got to the Chelsea Piers, and they had you staged there --

A. Well, I tell you, everybody -- it was so -- at that point, at that point, I think right after the first building collapsed, people were just walking around. They didn't know what to do. Everybody was just walking around. I was walking around like I lost my little puppy. I was definitely just total shaken. Forget it.

It got more organized at one point. At one point it started to get organized. I think after the second building went down, it finally started to get organized. Started getting all the ambulances lined up on West Street. It just really started to get organized, but like I said, there wasn't really much for us to do. You had 400 ambulances there, just idling their engines. Not really doing anything. It was a shame.

If you ask me, can we ever prepare ourselves for something like this, not this magnitude. Not this magnitude, no. This was something else way beyond our comprehension and something that we, you know, can never handle again. It's impossible. It really is. As much training as we get, MCIs and things like that every year, I never want to see this again. I really don't.

I'm staged by the Empire State Building, so every time I stage by the Empire State Building, I'm like, I'm looking up all the time now. I mean I'm just like, oh. My partner is saying what are you looking at? Terrible terrible thing, really was.

Q. Did you eventually get to finding your partner?

A. Thank god, yes. We hugged each other. We gave a big hug, yes, we found each other.

Q. How long were you separated?

A. Almost until -- Jesus, almost until -- it had to be afternoon, one o'clock, 1:30, 2:00. I finally found him down around the command center. What happened was that I had gotten pulled off. I had a Chief come pick me up and drive me to the hospital, because our Captain was hurt, so he saw me walking up the street and he says do you have a unit? I said no, he says hop in with me and he took me up to the hospital.

Q. Who was your Captain?

A. Captain Stone.

Q. Okay. He had gotten hurt on the scene?

A. Apparently. Now that I've opened my mouth, I'm sorry, but he actually escaped. He was in the building. He almost -- from what I know, he almost -- escaped with his life just about. He really did. You didn't hear this from me, please. I'm afraid I'm opening a can of worms.

Q. No, you are not, no.

A. He almost escaped with his life. He really did. He just missed it. The building almost fell on him.

Q. Thank goodness he got out.

A. Yes, he got out. So I was in the command car with him. He drove me up to Bellevue and then I was told to take the command car and I went back downtown to the command center. That was pretty much it.

Q. Is there anything else you would like to add to this regarding the events from the time the plane hit until about 12 noon?

A. It was just mass chaos. That's all I could say. It was just mass chaos. I think everybody was just saying, you know, there really isn't much we can do when the buildings went down and that we just got to look out for ourselves and take care of ourselves. That's basically what it was. We were just taking care of ourselves. We had no choice.

If we get hurt, who are we going to help. It was just basically be safe, keep yourself, keep your distance, keep your ears open, keep your radios open to see what was going on. That's pretty much the whole thing in a nutshell.

MR. ECCLESTON: Thank you very much for conducting this interview with me. This interview is concluded at 758 hours. The counter on the cassette recorder is 194.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT JAMES MCKINLEY

Interview Date: October 21, 2001

J. MCKINLEY

CHRISTOPHER ECCLESTON: It's October 12, 2001. The time is 6:56 and this is Christopher Eccleston of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I am conducting an interview with the following individual…please state your name, rank, title, assigned command area of the Fire Department of the City of New York regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

JAMES MCKINLEY: My names is James McKinley, EMTD. I work out of Battalion 8, my shield is 5501.

CHRISTOPHER ECCLESTON: Also present at the interview is…

CHRISTINE BASTEDENBECK: Christine Bastedenbeck from the New York City Fire Department.

Q: James, were you assigned to the World Trade Center disaster of September 11, 2001?

A: Yes.

Q: Can you tell me about the events that happened that day?

A: Basically I was just getting off duty when news came in, the MERV driver came in and said there's a plane into the World Trade Center. He took off in a hurry, I was about to go home, and I convinced my lieutenant to let me go to the MCI. So I went, and after watching it on the TV for maybe 2, 3 minutes, I was about to put my stuff in my locker and I decided that I had to go to this thing. I went down and I grabbed Smitty, who was working cleaning the vehicles. We stocked the vehicle, 169, with the lieutenant's permission, and we went to the MCI. As we were going down the FDR, I remember looking over and just seeing this huge hole in the World Trade Center. As we're going down, we went down the FDR, as we were coming across…I wasn't driving, I was teching. I remember coming up on the Trade Center, I don't know when the plane went into the building or how long it was there, but it was like, I was amazed to see that PD were already escorting people over the Brooklyn Bridge and to Chinatown. They were just clearing the whole area, and having people migrate towards Chinatown and over the bridge. So we came out of the FDR, we came across Vessey Street, and we were told by the radio to go to staging on West and Vessey. As we're going past we met command. I don't remember who it was. I remember seeing one, Gumbo, who was a lieutenant. I'm not sure what he is now.

Q: Chief?

A: Chief Gumbo, okay. So we parked out vehicles on Vessey street, I guess on the west side of the West Side Highway.

Q: Can you just mark on the map with a number 1 where you parked your vehicle? Approximately, it doesn't have to be exact.

A: There was like 15, 20 vehicles there already, and we just joined in the group. So I would guess about here.

Q: What was the vehicle number you were in?

A: 169. Then we were just waiting for orders from officers on the scene about what to do, and they told us just hang tight. My partner is telling me that they want us to stay by our vehicles, in case they find something to do. I wasn't communicating with the officers, my partner was. I was just standing by the vehicle watching the firemen do their stuff, watching the PD do their stuff. That's basically about it, I was just taking in the sight of the whole thing. Debris falling from the buildings, smoke, basically -----mayby this was a bad idea. Keep going?

Q: Keep going, you're doing fine. You're doing perfect.

A: As I was standing there watching this whole thing unfold, it was like I couldn't believe that some people were actually jumping from the building. Then as I looked up, I saw this helicopter hovering from in front of one of the buildings, it was the first one that was hit. Then all of a sudden I heard this huge explosion, I didn't know what it was cause nobody was telling me anything. I didn't know until we were called back to Chambers and something, Chambers and West Street, that it might have been a terrorist attack. I was this close to it, and I didn't know what was going on. After that I heard this huge explosion, I thought it was a boiler exploding or something. Next thing you know this huge cloud of smoke is coming at us, so we're running. Everyone is, firemen, PD, everyone is running away from the World Trade Center, up Vessey Street. This is North End, we was running around Vessey and around North end to get away from the first smoke. After the first building, I guess, I didn't know at the time that the building fell. After the smoke cleared, I went back, I was helping some people that were covered in dust and stuff like that. We set up treatment right on Vessey and North End, over here. As I was getting stuff to go into the treatment area, BP cuff, water, O-2, stuff like that, I was instructed to go back and treat patients. As I was picking up a patient on Vessey, on the east side of the West Side Highway and Vessey, I didn't know what was going on. I was just trying to treat patients. I put a fireman on a stretcher, I was leading him back to the treatment area. As I was getting to the treatment area, everyone is leaving the treatment area. I was like where is everybody going? They said the other building is leaning, we're getting out of here. We're moving the treatment area. So we put the fireman in an ambulance and they took off. We was trying to clear out the treatment area, and as we're clearing the treatment area, I hear this huge noise. Someone told me the building is exploding, I couldn't believe it. So we started moving the treatment area back even further. After the second one fell, we started running up…where is it? I'm not sure what these buildings represent, but we ended up down by the water, the cloud pushed us all the way to the water. And that's basically, after that it was like, we went back to survey the damage and we was trying to get our vehicles out of the rubble. Like after the first building fell, we were trying to recover, we were trying to move the vehicles off of Vessey Street and on to North End Avenue. I'm like moving vehicles, I'm helping people, we have this one fireman that had his arm --- it was deformed, it was broken and everything. I helped splint it. I tried to move four or five vehicles before I set up staging over near the treatment area. After we moved, we moved the treatment area like three times. We moved it around here. Then after the first one fell we tried to get back in there. Then the second one was falling, I don't know. After the first one fell, as I went back, I was just looking at it. There were vehicles on fire, there were ambulances too close to fire trucks burning, gas tanks were popping. The parking lot over here where we parked our vehicles, cars in the parking lot were on fire.

Q: That was the parking lot over here?

A: I think this was a parking lot over here. I think this was a parking lot too, cause as we were running when the second building….this fireman was in front of us and we ran into almost like a dead end. As we're running behind him, he's like, "this way". I think he was a fireman or a police man, if we had followed him, we would have wound up in a dead end, and we probably would have got smoke in our lungs so we noticed that going in here would be a dead end, we have to go down this way. After the first one fell I was running up Vessey, then I walked back down Vessey towards West Street where all the fire engines were. They were covered in debris and they're smoldering. I just couldn't believe it. What amazed me too was things you don't even take notice of. Like, the street was littered with paperwork that was in the office building. I can't remember anymore, you know.

Q: It's ok, you're doing a perfect job. Just keep going with what you're doing.

A: After the first one fell, I was trying to sort through everything, going around helping people, seeing what we could do. Once I got too close to a vehicle that was smoking, it started to pop, I was afraid that the gas tank would explode. Everyone was like watch your back, watch your back, the firemen were trying to put out the fire. I keep reading in the paper now that it was at this point that they was trying to get the guys out of the other building that hasn't fallen yet. I can just imagine what it must have been like running down the stairs in the World Trade Center. As I was saying before, I didn't know what was going on. I didn't even know that the building had fallen. Maybe it was the overtime or the fact that I had worked all night, I was tired or whatever. But as we cleared the second building, our dispatcher kept telling us after the second one fell, told us to drop back to Chambers and West Side Highway. We had to go back to our vehicles that we had abandoned running from the building that had fallen. We thought it was gonna fall on the side, so I was running looking for the shadow of the building, hoping that it wasn't falling my way. If it was falling my way, I would want to know because I don't want to stop running to look back to find out which way it was falling. I had to find out a way to see if it was falling this way, if it was falling on me. For some reason it fell like this. So as we ran, we came back to move all the vehicles, get all the stuff out. I was trying to fall back to Chambers and West Side Highway. Then, I met my partner, we had lost each other when the building side collapsed. He was telling me, as I'm driving the vehicle up the West Side Highway, all of a sudden, there's my partner standing in the road there. I'm like, ah, there he is. I'm not sure if he got the order before I did, cause I was told to drop back to Chambers and West Side Highway. So, I parked the vehicle up there, and I went back, and we're standing. He's like, he told me that the guy, the terrorist?

Q: Osama Bin Laden?

A: Yeah. He's like, he said he was gonna get the World Trade Center. So I'm like, what are you talking about? He said, this is a terrorist attack. I'm like what? Then all of a sudden, he told me that something was happening in Washington too. Then he told me that they shot down another one. They said that the Air Force shot one down in Pennsylvania. But they later found out that they had a struggle. At this point, something happened. I think we heard some explosions or something, so the dispatcher starts telling us to go up to 23rd street and Chelsea Piers. My partner's like maybe it's gas or something, not just explosive gas. Not like Con Edison gas but like sarin gas or something like that. So we're packing everything up again, helping civilians who stopped to see this thing. So we pulled it up to 23rd Street and Chelsea Pier, that's where we made staging. Basically after that, once we got to 23rd Street, we started to see other vehicles were coming already. They told us to fall back, they told everybody that was responding in to go to 23rd Street, cause there was ambulances there already. So we got in line, steadied our pulses, dusted ourselves off, kind of like composed ourselves. And then there were lieutenants going around asking for unit numbers. After that it was just a big rotating in, at least 75-100 vehicles down there on 23rd street, all over. As we stayed there hour after hour, they kept coming from all over the state. Upstate, Jersey, Pennsylvania, we seen them from all over the state. As you stayed there they kind of like, rotated you in. If you were up front and they needed ambulances down there, they would send them down. We lost everything down there. I lost my tech bag, the only thing I didn't loose was the things that I had on me: my stethoscope, my helmet, my jacket. We even lost our stretcher. I don't know if we put in for it or not, but basically that's all it was. We got down there, we reported to the lieutenant. Then when the buildings started falling, we started falling back, the dispatcher telling us where to go. Chambers, then 23rd street.

Everything like, hold on a sec, they ran out of planes to drop on us. So everything started becoming a little more predictable, Fire and PD performing their duties.

Q: Were you guys getting any news reports like what was happening? Like all the planes had been grounded and that information?

A: I thought that was great too. They said over the radio that they ordered all the planes across the country to just hit the ground. Anyone up after a certain time would be shot down. As you stand at 23rd street, we saw there was fighter jets cruising the air and stuff. The people at the 23rd street pier, they saw the ambulances there, they heard the news. They started bringing out bottled water for us, they started setting out tables. I don't know if they have some kind of disaster plan that they followed, but they were very nice. They started bringing out water, bread, then sandwiches started appearing later on, fruit, apples. They made the whole facility at our disposal. I don't know if that's ---- but I was very amazed at the way they responded to the situation. I sat there for like 2 or 3 hours waiting to go back in, but they never sent me back there. I thought they would, but they wouldn't. Even the hospitals were surprised at how few patients they got. Basically that's about it.

Q: What time did you end up working till that day?

A: Well, we waited at 23rd Street pier, and then finally a lieutenant put us back in service, back into the 911 system. We did one call and we went to this Gouvaneer hospital, picked up a young lady. I call them young, but she was in like her 70s. She was being treated there, being transported back over to Bellvue Hospital. I didn't know that you're not supposed to take a stable patient not part of the incident, Ground Zero, back to Bellvue. So I went to Bellvue, and all the doctors are expecting something from Ground Zero, and this lady's from Gouvaneer. So the doctor's like oh, okay, we'll treat her anyway. Well, he didn't say anyway, not that attitude. After that, I went back to the station, we had to re-start the vehicle before we brought this patient up. We went back in the 911 system and over to Bellvue. Then I went back, and I started work that night at about 10:00. I didn't get off till the lieutenant…I worked something like twenty hours that night, until 6:00. Then I went upstairs to the locker room. I think I was tired but I wasn't tired. I slept on a bench maybe an hour or an hour and a half. Went out, got something to eat, came back, washed up, put on my spare uniform and reported to duty about 12:00 that night. I don't remember, what did I do when I came back on duty? I think they sent us over to the Chelsea Pier, with all the other ambulances. All those other ambulances from all over the state was just standing by there. I guess they came down, they wanted to go down to Ground Zero. They didn't like sitting at 23rd street. They wanted to go down there, help do something. The bosses say you gotta sit here, you gotta sit here. That's basically what happened. EMS went on 12 hours on and 12 off. I finally got home the next night, took a shower, felt good, fell asleep. That's about it, unless you have any other questions.

Q: No, is there anything else you would like to add to this in regard to the events that happened prior to noon that day?

A: Before the planes hit? Something I observed?

J. MCKINLEY

Q: From when the planes hit until approximately noon. Is there anything in there that you want to add other than what you've already told us?

A: Um…like…?

Q: Just, if there's something that you thought of that you forgot to tell us, that you want to tell us. If there's nothing, that's fine, you can, you know…that's fine also.

A: I don't know, basically that's about it.

Q: Okay.

A: But what I found amazing was that nobody knew what was going on. I didn't know what was going on. I think that if we had known that these people would have done something like this, and that this is what it was…I usually watch the planes. They usually go from south to north, so when I heard the news about a plane hitting that side of the building, the plane would have had to been going from north to south. I thought it was an accident. That's what I was working on, down on the scene. It was a horrible accident, this guy was maybe coming out of Newark, and to avoid another plane, he swerved and couldn't get control of the plane. I think that if all of us would have some idea of what was transpiring, it would have been a lot different. Basically, I can't say, I don't know if that's enough.

Q: Perfect. James, I thank you very much for conducting this interview with me. The time is 7:21. The counter on the recorder is 373 and this interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT JOHN JAGODA

Interview Date: October 12, 2001

J. JAGODA

CHRISTOPHER ECCLESTON: Today's date is October 12, 2001. The time is 0627 hours, and this is Christopher Eccleston of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I am conducting an interview with the following individual…please state your name, rank, title, assigned command area of the Fire Department of the City of New York regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

JOHN JAGODA: My name is John Jagoda, my badge number is 3378, I work out of Station 13, Battalion 8.

Q: John, were you assigned to the World Trade Center Disaster on September 11th, 2001?

A: Yeah. When I received a phone call at home, I asked if I should come in and I came in on my bicycle, met with another guy here and we went down there.

Q: En route to the assignment what did you see?

A: A lot of smoke, a lot of fire. People just scared in the streets, it was from a distance away, but it was very scary to see.

Q: When you arrived at the World Trade Center, where did you park your vehicle?

A: It was right around Broadway, I guess, and Vessey Street.

Q: Can you just indicate there on the map with a number 1 where you parked your vehicle?

A: Around here.

Q: Thank you. Did any civilians report anything to you when you first arrived?

A: Well, when we first arrived the building had just collapsed I guess just five minutes after we got there. It was pitch black for awhile, and as the smoke cleared, two men were dragging a female cop over to us who was having chest pain and couldn't breathe. Another cop came over who had chest pains and couldn't breathe. Then there was another gentleman who asked us to help him, his arm was almost off. I mean, from the elbow down it was just bones ripped apart. There were so many other people. We just did what we could handle. We handled those three patients and took them to the hospital.

Q: You said when you arrived the building was coming down, which tower was this that was coming down? Was it the first one or the second?

A: It was the first one. Because we had brought the patients over to Bellvue, and were on our way back when we heard that the second one had come down.

Q: Okay, what happened next?

A: Well, we got those people in the ambulance and brought them to Bellvue. It was just total disbelief, you know? Everybody at Bellvue was waiting for us. We basically just washed our hands then turned around and went back. We knew there was gonna be a lot of people down there.

Q: When you said you went to Bellvue, who were you talking about we?

A: Me and my partner, and the two officers, and the one male who's arm was pretty badly mangled.

Q: Who was your partner?

A: Pete Rosie, he works up at Harlem. He lives not too far from here, so he rode his bicycle also.

Q: Okay, so you brought these patients to Bellvue, and then what happened next?

A: We cleaned up and then just went right back down.

Q: Okay.

A: When we got down there we were on the opposite side, I think near Washington Street or Greenwich Street. As a matter of fact, we were on Church street, maybe Church and Park.

Q: Okay, can you just indicate on the map with a number 2 where you parked your vehicle?

A: Right there.

Q: Okay, what vehicle was that?

A: 340.

Q: 340? Okay.

A: From there we met up with a group of other ambulances and supervisors over that were there and just kind of waited. From there I can't remember.

Q: Okay, just to the best of your memory…

A: It was just a bad day, it was a terrible day. I just want to put it out of my mind to tell you the truth.

Q: I'm sure. When you arrived back at the scene, had the second tower come down already?

A: Yeah. It came down…as we were leaving here, heading back down we heard over the radio that the second tower had fallen. So we all went to let's see…is this Washington here?

Q: This is Washington here.

A: This is West?

Q: This is West Street and this is West End

A: Yeah, we were all right here, by West Street here and we were down by the West Side Highway and Barkley.

Q: You were staged there?

A: Yeah.

Q: Who were you staged with? You reported to a particular officer there?

A: I honestly don't remember, there were so many people. I'm also a MERV driver, so at one point I was working the MERV.

Q: Okay, was that shortly after you arrived back or was that later on in the day?

A: That was later on in the day. Then I was on the MERV the next day. I believe the next two days.

Q: Were there people there that you recognized as Fire Department personnel, but they weren't in their uniform?

A: Not that I saw. I saw one guy who used to work here and he was in the streets. He used to work with me up at Met. When I was there. I don't know if he's still on the job though. But he was in plain clothes. He came up to me and said hey, how are you doing?

Q: What was his name?

A: I don't know, I left Met six years ago, so I don't know. It was just a very frustrating few days. Then to find out on Thursday that I lost so many friends, that's the hardest part, just being there and not being able to do anything. I just felt kind of helpless.

Q: Is there anything else you'd like to tell us about this day, the events up until about noon?

A: Until noon we just ran back and forth. We took three patients. Then the second trip three. Then we took one. I think we made like 5 or 6 trips to the hospital.

Q: The next trip you made, do you know how many patients you took?

A: The second trip? I think it was three, but I know at one point, there was one where we took a fireman who was having trouble breathing, he was complaining of a little discomfort. But he just kept saying it was just aggita. But we said now is the time to take you to the hospital. So we took him to Beth Isreal, as a matter of fact, (inaudible)

Q: All the trips you made to the hospital, you went to Beth Isreal? You went to Bellvue?

A: We went to Bellvue and Beth Isreal.

Q: So those were the only two hospitals?

A: Yeah.

Q: Okay, after you brought him to Beth Isreal, were you back on the scene before noon? Approximately, was it after noon?

A: I think so, the time was just…time didn't count. It was just back and forth back and forth. Time didn't mean anything. When we got to Beth Isreal, there was someone there hosing down the ambulance because we had about two inches of soot on it. The time…I don't know about time, it seemed like everything stopped, you know? It was just, I was more or less like a zombie focused on going taking, going taking, going taking, and not paying attention to anything else at all. Come to find out later on that I had so many friends in there. All these guys dying…

Q: Okay, is there anything else you would like to add to this interview?

Q: I thank you very much for speaking with me. This interview is concluded at 6:37.

EMT ADOLPH SMITH

Interview Date: October 12, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. ECCLESTON: Today is October 12th, 2001. The time is 10:31 hours, and this is Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name and title.

EMT SMITH: Adolph Smith, EMT.

MR. ECCLESTON: And your assigned command area?

EMT SMITH: I'm assigned to Battalion 8.

MR. ECCLESTON: Of the New York City Fire Department?

EMT SMITH: As a de-con specialist.

MR. ECCLESTON: Also in the room is --

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Chris Bastedenbeck from the New York City Fire Department.

Q. Mr. Smith, were you working on September 11th, 2001?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. Were you assigned to the World Trade Center disaster?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. Can you please tell me about the events of that day?

(Pause.)

MR. ECCLESTON: The time is 10:33, and we are going to be continuing this interview.

Q. Mr. Smith, can you tell me about the events of September 11th?

A. I was assigned to the World Trade Center incident, and we arrived and were directed to go to Vesey and West on the west side of West Street. We arrived in that area, and I don't remember the captain's name. He directed us to park along (inaudible). So we did. So we backed in to park.

I just happened to look up, and what I thought was debris coming down from the north tower was people and bodies.

(Pause.)

MR. ECCLESTON: This interview is being concluded at 10:35 hours. Mr. Smith is unable to continue with this interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT RENE DAVILA

Interview Date: October 12, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. ECCLESTON: Today's date is October 12th, 2001. The time is 1220 hours. This is Christopher Eccleston of the Fire Department of New York City. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name, rank, assigned command of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

LIEUTENANT DAVILA: Lieutenant Rene Davila, shield number 328, lieutenant in Battalion 04, Fire Department of New York.

MR. ECCLESTON: Also present in the room is.

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Christine Bastedenbeck of the New York City Fire Department.

Q. Lieutenant Davila, were you assigned World Trade disaster on September 11th, 2001?

A. I was assigned or I put myself on assignment immediately after I heard the transmission of the plane hitting the tower.

Q. Can you tell me about the events of that day?

A. Okay.

Q. Start from the top.

A. Actually just prior to the plane hitting tower one, I was in the office communicating with Lieutenant Bill Melarango. I just happened to be standing over the desk when I heard one of my units, "01 Charlie," put a priority message over the frequency stating that the plane just hit the tower. Seconds later I heard another one of my units, "01 Adam," yelling the same thing.

I immediately put myself on the assignment. I ran out, jumped in the vehicle, starting responding. When I got over to Rutgers and South Street, I was able to see the building. I saw a big hole, what appeared to me at that time to have been a fire or probably secondary to an explosion. I confirmed there was an incident. I couldn't confirm it was a plane because I didn't see the plane.

Immediately I confirmed the incident. I was over the citywide frequency. Basically I started calling for resources. I told them immediately to alert the senior staff. I told them to get the MERV rolling, start sending all available units to that location. Being around during the bombing, I basically knew we had an incident which was going to generate a great many patients.

I couldn't tell you exactly what floor it was. I couldn't tell you how many floors were gone but there was a good portion of the building that was definitely destroyed. So I knew we had some casualties and fatalities.

Responding now -- what do you want me to talk about? Do you want me to talk about personal feelings too?

Q. Sure. Everything.

A. Well, as far as I feel, a lot of personal feelings came. Personally I always thought about -- you know you see that guy on 911 or something like that and he's a hero or something and he's a big shot or whatever. I know for myself -- I can't speak for somebody else -- yeah, I'm going to be like that. Well, I was given the opportunity to be that guy, and I immediately did not want it.

As I'm driving, I'm driving and I'm also talking on the frequency. But I remember that coming through my mind. I also thought of Lieutenant Tony Torres, first of all because he's from the battalion, second of all because he's Hispanic, but next he was the first responding supervisor to the bombing at the World Trade Center towers.

Going through all those thoughts and stuff also, I started trying to think logistically, trying to think of how we were taught. Preplans, I don't even know if they existed since the merger. However, I still think that way.

So when I traveled down there, I was trying to go ahead and get down there where I could get down by Vesey Street. Vesey, as far as I remember, is the preplan for our staging area.

I remember I ran down, I came down around across by Beekman Hospital and made a right over on Beekman Street and went up. I did a couple turns across Broadway. I ended up coming down Vesey.

Right over here, right before the union is normally where we would have set up staging, but it appears when the towers got hit that a lot of debris already was in that street and in that area. A lot of debris was flying around there, and it definitely wasn't, if anything, a safe area to set a staging. Plus I noticed that all the other apparatus and stuff was still continuing on over to West Street.

So I continued on to West Street, made a left-hand turn, and I set the first -- staging and command post basically -- you've got West Street. I was on the east side of West Street. I was setting staging of my units, and I had my command right over here, pretty much adjacent to the rescue that was running into tower one.

Q. That's where you parked your vehicle then?

A. That's where I originally parked my vehicle.

Q. Can you just indicate that by a number 1 on the map?

A. Trade Center one, Trade Center two. So I'll be like number 1.

Q. So you parked your vehicle there.

A. Right.

Q. And you tried to establish a command post there?

A. That's what I had given directions. Right behind, right on the other side of the median there was the bus of 01 Charlie. I couldn't see my other unit, 01 Adam, which later I found out they were actually on Liberty Street.

A couple other voluntaries were starting to arrive at that time, but I remember going over to 1 Charlie because they were my unit. I went to the back of the vehicle. They had about six -- is my language permissive?

Q. Whatever you want to say.

A. This is exactly the way I talk.

I ran to the back of the vehicle, and I said, "What the fuck you got?" No, I saw the patient in the back of the vehicle. I saw some people with difficulty breathing. Nobody was on O2. I didn't see no amputation or anything at that point.

I already knew that there was that type of patient coming out, because when I first went 84 on the scene and advised citywide, one or two people leaving the tower, I'd seen a couple of amputations. I'd seen a couple body parts in the street coming towards that location.

I saw people coming completely burnt at me where their clothes were singed off with burns, probably from one to fourth degree going down into the bone. They were walking to me, and I was immediately going, "Walking wounded, you go down that way across the street."

I went in the back of 1 Charlie. I said, "Do your patients walk?" He said, "Yeah." "Tell them to get the fuck out and run that way." At that time I told him to close the door to the vehicle and pull every triage tag that they had available. I started just yelling at them, "Triage, triage, triage."

Then as the other units were responding in, all I was telling them is -- they were like -- everybody was trying to run to grab a patient. I said absolutely not. I think that was one of the most difficult things I had. In fact, right now today, I was talking at roll call to people about triage and the importance of triage. I said, "Triage, triage, triage."

There were a couple AMR units there. I think the next unit I saw was a St. Vincent's paramedic unit, and the same thing again. They're serious. I don't care. Triage, triage, triage.

At that time I went ahead and I noticed already I was losing my voice. I grabbed the crew of 1 Charlie. I knew these two guys. I told both of them to stick to me like glue. One of them was the staging officer. The other one had to stay with me because he was going to be my voice. Just in case I lost my voice completely, at least I was able to talk through him and he would have been able to communicate for me.

The onset from the time I was basically trying to grab a hold to try to get an ICS system operating. I knew senior staff was responding. I have to be honest, when I first got there, the first thing I did was get out of my vehicle and look to see if I saw another light blue shirt. I was hoping somebody else got there before me. That's what I was actually hoping. But no, to my dismay, there was no one else there.

Q. Who did you make this staging officer?

A. The staging officer was EMT Alex Loutsky.

Q. Who was the other --

A. As a matter of fact, you'll probably see him. He's in the press paper. He's downstairs too.

Q. Who was the person that stayed with you?

A. He was the one that just went out ill, secondary probably to this, Ralph Ramos.

Again just trying to get a hold of the whole situation. At that point I remember one thing. St. Vincent's unit had some people in their vehicle they were going to transport, and I said, "You're not going anywhere. You're triaging." I knew the importance of triage at that time until we got some more resources.

In between that I'm trying to transmit basically what's going on. I can't really remember much of my words except basically I was given them the access and advising that we have clear access to the location from both sides of West Street. I knew that was clear on both sides, whatever they could get in from that location.

There was debris all in the air, and I remember I mentioned at one time this is a hard hat operation.

Then as I'm communicating I catch from my peripheral vision on the right -- I didn't even think about it hitting the building. I'm just basically like what the hell is he doing there. Before I knew it, he disappeared behind the building, and bingo, there was an explosion. I remember yelling over the frequency, however I communicated, a secondary explosion in the second building. At that time I remember I repeated over and over, because I had debris hit my helmet, "This is a hard hat situation, a hard hat operation, a hard hat operation."

I looked around me, and everybody like maybe stopped for a few seconds like, whoa. I can honestly say that it didn't stop the operation from moving in the direction that it was moving at that particular time. Everybody kind of appeared to still continue doing what they were doing. The firefighters were still loading into the building, except that now they're starting to run over to tower two.

A little while right after that, I started seeing a couple light blue shirts come in. I don't remember the lieutenant's name. Lieutenant Mann was one of them from operations I remember seeing. Then I saw Lieutenant Terranova.

Q. Ross?

A. Ross he's here now. And Chief Gombo. I came over to Chief Gombo. I still speak about this, because the look that he gave me -- he looked at me with his mouth open, and I looked at him the same way. I handed him my clipboard with the units that I had there to start. It was basically like the command was turned over with very little communication. It was just like this is it.

He knows I knew the area, and he asked me what was in the other side of the building. I'm like a little rattled. I think Loutsky or Ralph, because these guys follow directions, I told them to stay with me like glue. Every time I turned around, I bumped heads with them.

They told me Church and Fulton. Church and Fulton was told to Chief Gombo. He said, "You go ahead and start operations over there and get the vehicle over there." We sent 1 Charlie, in their bus, came back over here, on Vesey going over to Church and Fulton right here in front of the Millennium.

Q. Did your vehicle go there also?

A. Yeah. I got in my vehicle, and I started going. However, on the way there a body jumps -- well, I think I drove over a couple of bodies and stuff like that.

Another walking body jumped in front of my vehicle. That happened to be Captain Stone. He was like, "Stop!" He ran from somewhere and just -- "Where you going?" I said, "Church and Fulton." He said, "I need you to take me here." I said, "Chief Gombo told me to go ahead." He said, "I told you to fucking take me here." I said, "Okay. You're going there. You're going there."

I put him in the vehicle and brought him over to the command post, got my vehicle turned back around, and I made it to Church and Fulton.

Q. That's indicated by number 2 on the map?

A. Right.

Church and Fulton, I tell you, when we first got there, it took longer than it would take normally to get there. There were lamp posts in the street. There was all kinds of metal on the street. There's soot about two feet high in different areas throughout the street. There's bodies. There's been a couple of bodies and people still coming out.

Of course now we're being approached by PD and everything: I have a patient here. I've got a patient there. I'm telling them, "I can't handle it. Tell them to run and go that way. Tell them to go that way."

What we started doing is right in front of the Millennium, started to direct walking wounded to go over up Fulton Street, and the ones that needed oxygen, things of that nature, we were setting up over here in this area.

Already by that time now I started getting more resources. I saw the Cabrini paramedics show up. I had a lot of AMR units there. Lieutenant [redacted] came. [redacted].

Q. [redacted]?

A. [redacted], right.

Now, you want to hear personal feelings? I'll give you personal feelings. You know what, she could be a fantastic person, but they don't have field experience. I think this is very important, because a couple incidents happened.

I went over and I see Loutsky, and I walk over. First of all, she was there. She was a captain, the highest ranking. But I still felt that I was in charge of that operation and I felt it calling me to that.

I had my unit 1 Charlie, and I see Alex. By that time we've got AMR, and we're loading the AMR buses. They were parked, and they were parking all over. There was no structure. So what we're doing is we're blocking that access and egress out of that location. There was no structure.

The same thing with my voluntary units that were coming there. They had 911 training. They're able to go ahead and treat the patient accordingly. However, no idea of the incident command system, staging or about getting in, getting out.

When I started doing AMR, I started to tell Loutsky, "Load all the minor injuries and stuff in there. Get them and just tell them to take the bus over to Brooklyn." I didn't want to load the hospitals in Manhattan. Shoot the bus over to fucking Brooklyn. Just get them out of the way, because they were in the way. That was the bottom line.

But I see Loutsky at one time with a clipboard, and he's trying to take names of people that are fucking hysterical. I said, "What the fuck are you doing?" He said, "The captain told me to do tracking and take names." Tracking is fine when you've got 10 patients and 20 patients and maybe even 50 patients, but I've got two fucking 110-story buildings emptying out in front of me and I've got a captain telling me do tracking.

So I told him, "Fuck what the captain said. I'm in charge, and I'm telling you forget about names and forget about fucking numbers. Just load them in the bus and get them out of here."

If I'm wrong, you write me up, and I'll go see your guys in BITS. But you know what? Fuck it. I thought that was -- and I told her afterwards when we did that interview for Third Watch. I made it a little joke. I had to be a little respectful, but I had to go ahead and explain that.

The sector was starting to get formed -- we had like the sector. I had [redacted] -- again, people from operations [redacted] is a very nice guy. People in operations, they're not used to the fucking street or to reality. He came in and all of a sudden he started talking on the radio. I said, [redacted] what the fuck you doing talking on the radio?" Gombo don't got time to hear that shit. This is the big one. We got an assignment. You do the assignment. Bottom line, get the patients out. Maybe down the line you get calmed down. Then you start playing here's the command system.

Bottom line is you've been trained to do this; you go ahead and do it. I'm pissed off a little now about it after the fact. Then you didn't have the time. It was just like what the fuck are you doing?

So I came out and said, "You want command? Here, use my radio. Take command. But we need to react. Somebody needs to be the treatment officer. You're a medic. I gave you the treatment officer." Bottom line, I didn't want to go ahead and pull I'm the senior lieutenant, whatnot. It wasn't time for that.

These are some of my feelings, because if they're going to do anything about this, people need to remember the old way we used to do it in EMS that, you know what, the senior lieutenant is the one in charge until the next person of rank comes in, in that nature.

The bottom line is get the patients out. Triage and get the patients out of the goddamn way. That's the bottom way. That's the way I was taught. That's the way Chief Goldfarb taught me back in the old days. This is the way you do MCI, this is the way you do it, get it done. Guys like Captain Stern and Jeff Armstrong. All these guys, they did MCIs, not the playing and fucking around on the radio, talking about I've got this and that, because you know what? You got thousands of people coming.

By now I'm watching people jump out of windows. It's not like when I saw them jump six, seven or eight out of the Shomberg Plaza up in Harlem. They were jumping now one, two, three, four, smashing like fucking eggs on the ground. People were getting hit by bodies falling.

These guys were talking about write down names. I was like, you're fucking out of your mind.

(Interruption.)

A. Again, the system was starting to get running. I remember Duane Walker. Duane Walker is one of the division supply guys. He came and brought extra tanks of O2, starting unloading those in the sector. I remember asking somebody to try to tape off areas over here in front of the Millennium, because you had the lobby, you had the lobby was here in the corner, and I was telling the walking wounded to go that way.

We had people with all kinds of injuries. A lot of the primary injuries that we were getting originally was nothing but hysterical patients, a lot of hysterical. I remember one guy across the street went into a grand mal seizure and stuff like that, and they pulled me over there. This guy is down and I looked. I said, "He's having a seizure. Just stay around him and make sure he doesn't get hurt. Bye."

We were starting to get people moving. Again, we were using AMR. They had like three or four buses there, if I'm correct. I know about two of them before the collapse happened I was able to get out, load them up and get them out of here.

Now, something that really fucks with me a lot is Lillo. Lillo came up to me and said, "Lieutenant, my wife is in the building." I'm like, "Oh, what are you saying? What are you saying?" I don't even know his wife. I knew his other wife that worked the same job, but I don't know his new lady. "Okay, do me a favor. Help me out here and if I see her I'll direct you to her."

We were just working along. People were pulling my coat, "This one is more serious.

I've got to go." Tag them. We get a bus, we throw them in.

I remember one guy was laying down. He had an open chest wound about the size of my fist in his right chest. I kept on looking. I knew what was coming. I knew he was going to go downhill. He had that look in his eye like -- he wasn't even talking. He was going into shock.

All of a sudden you heard the rumble and people yelling and screaming. You look and you see -- I didn't see the top of the building. I didn't see the top of tower two. The collapse started. You felt like the ground -- it was like a deep sound, rumble; like you're laying on the platform and the D train is coming. You look and you see what -- I best describe it as a wave coming.

I started running in my direction. I started running into the hotel. Something knocked me. I don't know whether it was --

Q. The Millennium?

A. We were in front of the Millennium. I'm talking going in through the lobby.

Q. Okay.

A. Something knocked me down. I don't know if something hit my helmet or whether it was a force. I got down, and I thought I've got to get up. By the time I got up, it was like [sound] I'm overcome by black and I'm running in the building in this black, and I'm running and I'm running and I'm running.

The next thing I know, I see a little light, and I follow that light. I run in there, and I find I'm in an office, and I close the door. I close the door and then I start walking, and I'm panicked, I'm panicked. I lost it. I lost it for a few minutes in here.

In this room there's nothing but computers, maybe five, six computers, and phones. As I'm in there, this force is still coming through the cracks of the door. I see some coats and I saw a water fountain. So I wet them, and I wet them and I stuff them under. I'm like walking back and forth, "I'm a medic. I'm a medic. I'm not a fucking firefighter. What do you do? What do you do? What do you do?"

I went to one of the computers for a minute. I thought I'd go on AOL or something and call for help. I was like, "What the hell am I doing?" I was in a dead end. There was no way out of that office. I'm now going, "What the fuck did you do? You idiot. You ran out. There's no way out. You're going to die in here." It was getting real difficult for me to breathe in there, the dust, and there was no air transmitting across.

There was a bunch of debris. I tried to get out. I said, "I've got to get out of here." I've got one of those little super lights from Gauls magazine. Better than a mag light. It's pretty bright. It wasn't bright enough.

Could you excuse me a minute?

MR. ECCLESTON: We'll stop the tape at 12:47.

(Pause.)

MR. ECCLESTON: We're continuing this interview at 12:49.

A. I was in this office or whatever it was. I went ahead -- I opened up the door, and some of it -- the noise had settled. However, you heard distant sounds. I said let me try to get out of here. I opened up. It's pitch-, pitch-, pitch-black. The only light was inside the door.

I grabbed this mag light, and I said maybe if I could make it out through this corridor or whatever I walk through I'll hit some light and I'll get the hell out of here. I've got this light and I'm feeling myself through the wall. With the flashlight you could only see probably less than a foot.

I'm feeling. All of a sudden I am walking and walking and I find myself inside an elevator. That's when I realized this is the wrong thing to do, because it could be the elevator is not here and I'm going to end up falling down the shaft.

So I tried to get back. It took me a while to find myself back. By now I'm really gagging for air. I get back in, and I close back that door. When I got in there, now it's a different feeling. It's a feeling of this is it, I bought the bullet, I'm going to die. I have to honestly say, all of a sudden from the panic that I was at it was just like a warmth. What do you do?

Actually what I did, I picked up the phone, and I got a dial tone. I called my wife. She doesn't really work too far. I called her, and I'm thinking -- if she answers the phone hysterical. I got the secretary or somebody in the office, and she was on the phone. She said, "I saw it." Her office is up at 250 Church. They viewed the whole thing. She knows I work this area and the whole nine yards.

I'm said, [redacted] You could hear her yelling on the other side of the phone with people from 911.

I'm said, [redacted]

[redacted]

I don't know how much time goes by between those periods, but there still wasn't the second collapse. I come out. I push out some of the rubble and stuff like that. I started seeing a little light, which turned out to be the lobby. I came out in the lobby, and it's destroyed. I couldn't go out the way I came in through the lobby. I came out through the side door on Fulton Street. I'm covered in soot.

I come out. It was terrible when I got there and we set up all of this and how I drove there. There were people on the ground. There was debris morbidly all over.

I was devastated. I was like relieved that I got out of that building, but I was like look at this. The radio was basically quiet then. If you heard anything, it was point-to-point communications. You heard some maydays and you hear people yelling for help, 13.

I'm like walking like the (inaudible), and I met up with this kid Ramos. And we hugged and we kissed. I told him, "What we can't do alone we can do together. We'll get the fuck out of here."

He goes (inaudible). I said, "Ramos?" He said, "What?" I said, "I left my wallet and my refund check in the fucking vehicle. I don't think Uncle Sam is going to give me another refund check."

Q. At this point was your vehicle lost?

A. Basically all we to do is go around the building, came around. But it took longer than usual because you're walking in like this shit. Like you move and it's this soot like heavy dust.

While we're walking I realize that we only have two people. I see my vehicle. The seats are covered. I've still got my bag. I hold it like a trophy. Like people collect basketballs. I haven't touched -- whatever the force was, it was so strong that it went inside of the bag.

But we were there. Vehicle 219 was destroyed.

Q. Was it on fire?

A. What?

Q. Was it on fire?

A. Fire? We saw the sucker blow up. We heard "Boom!" We were walking up Fulton Street. I don't know how far we made it up when someone says, "The building's coming down." By the time I realized, it's a repeat.

We were running, and I looked back and it seems like the sides of the street were getting narrower. The sound got louder and the wave. I remember we separated one time and Ramos wanted to go down into the train station. I said, "No fucking way. We're out here. Without ventilation, we're definitely dead." I said, "If I'm going to die, I'm going to die with a fighting chance."

We held hands, and we were running. The next thing we know, [sound]. When it covers you, it's silent. Ramos was just a little slightly like (inaudible). I couldn't see him. I tell him -- I always have a handkerchief; it's an old Spanish thing. I had my handkerchief, and I wrapped it around. I told Ramos the same thing. I said, "Wrap something around your mouth. Keep the soot and stuff out and just breathe shallow. Just take enough oxygen, because you don't want to breathe all this dust."

If anything that was comical, the human body -- or maybe I'm just a fucking nut. Things that happened, because we're walking and Ramos says, "Lieutenant." I'm like, "What the fuck you want?" You could hear each other and that's it. He said, "I lost my radio." We're dying. We're going to die. This guy is telling me he lost his fucking radio. I said, "Remind me if we make it through this, and I'll fucking write you up."

The next thing you hear (knock), my helmet hits -- I still don't know what it is. I'm assuming it was a lamppost or something. That's when I told Ramos this is not going to work, we're not going to make it. We decided we were holding on together. We held together, baby.

We moved over to the right, and we felt along through the buildings. Along through the building, all the businesses must have been locked up after the first impact, because all the businesses were closed. We're walking and walking.

I happened to catch a little light. There was a glass in a cleaner. I'm banging, "Open the fuck up or I'm kicking this shit in." Nobody wanted it kicked in because all that shit will come in. They opened up. We ran in. We came in there -- what turned out to be a Subway store.

There were a bunch of people in there. I was happy to see them; they were happy to see us. I have to honestly say that thank God for those people and the situation I thought of, because they were looking at us because we were in uniform. "Us" is me and Ramos. Ramos is looking at me because I'm the lieutenant. So that took away the panic from me, and reliving this it's, okay, I'm Lieutenant Davila, I've got to be a leader.

So I remember -- I go and I yell out, "Who's the boss?" An oriental guy raises his hand. I said, "Well, by order of the City of New York, I'm the boss now. Go in your register, get your money, put it in your pocket." Then I told everybody step back, and I told anybody who tried to open up the door I was going to kick their ass. I got everybody to the back of the store.

I remember I told the man -- there was two guys that were willing to help. I said, "Just get some stuff, stuff it under the door and try to keep as much debris, or whatever, coming in."

I didn't know what was going on. I know the first building fell and there was shit all over, and I know the second one fell and we were closer to it. I have to honestly say after the first plane hit, I thought there was a chance of me dying. After that first collapse and I was in that building, I thought I was dead. I made it through that and I'm like, oh, fuck.

I tell you, the feelings, again, that I've had, you know what, false pride is unbelievable, things that we have to go through,

[redacted]

This is what I'm thinking about. But I was thinking of myself as a corpse already. Lieutenant Davila died in the line of duty.

I kept these people in the back. They're all hysterical. I'm like, "Shut up. Stop it. You can't control this. Let's try to make it together. Save the oxygen." I was telling them, "Nobody move without me knowing where you're going."

You know what was the funniest thing? I ended up taking off my turnout coat. I took it and I threw it over the counter. The Chinese guy came and took my turnout coat and pulled it on the floor. I'm like, "What the fuck you doing?" He said, "Food, food." I'm like, "Fucking food, there's soot all over this shit." Now I'm mad. I took my fucking thing and I put it back over it. "Fuck you, you jerk."

[redacted]. I made him open up the refrigerator, get bottles of water, give it to the people to drink.

We were in there for a while. The time period that we were in there I really don't know. I would probably say maybe 20 minutes or so like that. Then all of a sudden we start seeing the lights start flickering.

So what I did was I told them to open up the door and I came out. I came out just to look and see what's going on there. I started seeing some people up in the corner. It was much clearer. I guess that's where the avenue opened up, West Broadway, where it was opening up. I think Chase Manhattan Bank is over here.

So what I did was I came back in there. I saw a couple ambulances and stuff. I asked the Oriental guy, "Do you have any towels?" He said, "Yeah." I said, "Everybody grab a towel. Wrap it around your face." I had everybody holding hands. I had about 18, 20 people in there. I had everybody hold hands, and I just had them go out the side of the building and just head east.

We came up here, and it was me and Ramos. We came out to sunlight, I saw Bruce Medjuck there. I think I saw Pat Scaringello. Then we started hearing the radio: "Stage in Battery Park or Chambers and West." It would be just sounds and it was horrible. It sounded horrible. I really thought that we had -- EMS would have a lot more casualties than what it was, because I didn't see them. The thought was devastating.

Then, I forgot, Amy Monroe showed up at the staging area [redacted] Bill Melarango. These people need to be commended. We came in and had to be there. Bill was a station boss. She was out on leave of absence. Then she shows up in a crisp white uniform.

When I got up there, my concern was for Bill, Amy and Alex. [redacted] But me and Ramos went nuts going looking for them. Walking back over there, we found Alex. He's okay. We never found Amy. We never found Bill. We went back there looking for them and looking for them and couldn't find them. We thought maybe we lost them.

So again it was me and Ramos. You know, I go to the right guy. I said, well, okay, we've got to regroup. I hear this going on -- and we begin walking. We walked down to Beekman.

Beekman was set up pretty nicely. We waited for patients and stuff like that. There were a couple of patients, but not what they were preparing for. That was really like -- I started thinking, we ain't getting the numbers.

The force of this was so great that there was debris and soot all the way down past South Street.

So I had to do something. We're there. I called it war then. It's really war now. I said, like, okay, I've got to deal with this. What will you do? What am I going to do? I started meeting a couple of people straggling out, some of St. Vincent's units. I'm going, okay, I'm the only one here with any authority.

So they were helping out at the hospital, and I told them to continue. I asked them what they were doing. They just brought a couple patients there. Then one or two of them, their partners were missing, so they were just cross-eyed. I got them in the room, calmed them down, take it easy.

I found this guy Duane Walker, the equipment guy, here. Basically I'm like, "Come on, fellows." I got Lawrence from communications. I don't know how he ended up getting them. He ended up there with civilian clothes and a shield. I said, "You're going to stay with us too."

Q. Do you know what his last name is?

A. No. I know he's an EMT for -- he works for communications. (Inaudible). He was there.

Ashby, you know about Ashby; right?

Q. Yes.

A. I found out that there was -- I forgot the name of the place now. I go there all the time. But right down Fulton Street -- okay, this is further down. Down by Beekman, down by Fulton and Pearl there's a nursing facility, and they work in conjunction with New York Downtown. I heard they were starting a triage and the treatment center over there.

I took a walk down there to see how they were doing. I spoke to one of the doctors over there. Basically what the doctor at that time told me was that they needed some saline and tubing for eye washing stuff.

So I walked back to hospital 01. I wasn't going to bring that equipment back over there, because I knew I had to get back to an EMS command. I had to make a decision, I was going to the Battery or I'm going to West and Chambers. So I told them and I got the Cabrini people to go ahead and bring them their supplies. I did that.

Finally I was trying to decide which way I'm going to go, and my decision was I'm going to West and Chambers. My real reason for going to West and Chambers is because I knew my wife was on Church, and in walking I had to go by there, it's just a block by. I actually went by and said I'm here, I'm alive.

Then I left and headed to the command post at West and Chambers. Everything down there was pretty calm. Actually it took a little while to get to West and Chambers and stuff like that still. You're meeting up with people. I found out they had a little staging area already. That's where I met up with Captain Parra.

MR. ECCLESTON: Rene Davila on October 12th, 2001, continuation on side two.

A. Actually prior to meeting up with Parra on Greenwich, after we started crossing Church the other way, I ended up meeting academy personnel. I met up with a bunch of people from the academy. Captain Gio Pineda was there with a couple other people.

I guess I must have been rowdy because they came both to me and Ramos and looked at us and said, "Come on, get in the bus, I'm not going on no bus. I've got to go work and everything else."

Then the news media started. They found out that I was there, that I was in the Marriott and the first boss there. And Travis was there. Not the captain, the lieutenant.

Q. Barry Travis?

A. Yeah. And Maggiure -- the news media -- that's okay -- I walked away from them. That's when everyone went by and I saw Fern and I started heading towards West and Chambers and [redacted]

[redacted]

I made it back to West and Chambers. That was a good sight. It was a good sight to see all the firefighters and all the firemen and seeing buses from like counties I never heard of. It must have been a couple hours already that passed by.

Then I made it to Stuyvesant School. Again, I'm not -- me and Ramos stuck together. I went there and I said I'm not staying and sitting in an auditorium. Then I was looking for something to do. I know I was part of it and I wanted to do more. I saw the itch in these poor kids that got there, and they wanted to do something. They were keeping them locked in -- you know why they should have had them standing outside. They were dying.

I remember I made it back out to the street and stuff again, and Chief McCracken came up to me. Chief McCracken saw me, and he said, "I thought you were dead. It's good to see you." That was it. We talked. We did it facing everybody hanging out there. That's all there was.

I'm still looking for Amy and Bill. I finally started -- somebody told me that Amy was at the hospital. I'll tell you a story about that. I don't care how unofficial that is, I (inaudible) on that one. Somebody saw Bill, so I felt a lot better.

Everybody took to their high horse and shit. I have to say that when I got to the command, I see Kowalczyk and everybody looked like they're gummy bears, full of dust, and he was in his crisp white shirt. [redacted]

[redacted]

Then I saw Stone coming in, and he said, "Rene, what are you doing? I want clipboards and paper pads." I'm like, "You're fucking serious? You want clipboards? I'll get you fucking clipboards. I went to Stuyvesant High School. I'm Puerto Rican. I'm pretty good at something."

I found my way to an office, and I start opening drawers. The secretary's always got a stash. We open drawers and find a bunch of pads. I got him a pad, I got him a fucking pencil sharpener, I got him a fucking ruler, I got him clipboards, I got him everything out of there and said, "Here, mother fucker."

I think McCracken just noticed that I was fucking wild. He ordered me, "I want you to sit down. You're upset." "No." "That's it. Sit down."

That was it. That was basically where I ended up, me and Ramos. Then all of a sudden Ramos kind of collapsed on me, so I got a bus for Ramos. We were married then. He was going to hospital 01. I'm going to hospital 01 with him. I don't know about what time. I guess it was about 8:30, 9:00 at night.

We get him on a stretcher and into hospital 01. The nurses saw me there, and they grabbed me. I kind of buckled at the knees. They treated me like (inaudible). I still couldn't stand still. I was like, "Get this shit off me."

That's basically my part. That's how my day went. I finally got out of here probably around midnight or so, and I was back up at 4:30 in the morning. I was back here at 6:00 again. [redacted]

That's it.

Q. Is there anything else you would like to add? Any other feelings or anything?

A [redacted]

[redacted]

[redacted]

On the EMS side of this, that I'm aware of, there's only two fatalities. [redacted]

[redacted]

[redacted]

[redacted]

I saw people die. I saw people jump out of windows, more than I've ever seen in my life. Let me tell you something else. I'm 51 fucking years old. I've seen just about fucking everything and I've done a lot more. And you think about it. We have been able to keep ourselves intact.

[redacted]

[redacted]I'm glad to see my bosses there. I'm glad to have seen McCracken there. I thank them. And Gombo, who I heard almost died in this.

I'm glad to see these guys. I was glad to hear Goldfarb on the radio, Mr. MCI. It was like, okay, here we go. [redacted]

Q. You've got a lot to be proud of.

A. EMS didn't do things that bad.

[redacted]

Let me shut up. Thank you.

Q. Thank you today for conducting this interview with us.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMS CAPTAIN MARK STONE

Interview Date: October 12, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Today's date is October 12, 2001. The time now is 850 hours. I'm at Battalion 8. My name is Christine Bastedenbeck of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name rank, title and assignment.

A. Mark Stone, Captain, Commanding Officer, EMS, Battalion 8. Day of incident, unit DC 01.

Q. Also present at this interview is --

A. Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department, World Trade Center Task Force.

Q. Captain Stone, I would like you to tell us about the events of the morning of September 11, 2001.

A. Well, just before the incident was transmitted, we were preparing to move the station into our new trailers, because they were going to destroy our old station. We were at the trailers when the MERV operator, who was with me, informed me of the incident. He said that a plane hit the World Trade Center.

Q. Can you just tell me the MERV's operator's name?

A. That was Rick Perez. So I was with a member of executive administration, Mr. Dave Harney, and all of my equipment would have been located at Division 1 down on pier 36. I asked Dave if he could give me a ride down there. His vehicle doesn't have any lights or sirens, it's a regular sedan, so we jumped in the car and we took off. We were heading down the FDR Drive and listening to it and it seemed pretty chaotic already, the Lieutenant giving his first report, that he wasn't even on the scene, that he saw heavy smoke from the Trade Center.

At one point the Trade Center became visible to me. My first thought was oh, my god, a plane really hit the World Trade Center. I used my cellphone and I called RCC to make sure I was logged onto show me a route to the Trade Center. I called the Division to have my aide for the day-to-day, Gregg Brady, get the truck ready, make sure he had all my equipment so that we were set to go when I got there.

It was interesting later on I don't even know why. I ran upstairs and I grabbed extra cell phone batteries, which I never do. It was pretty interesting. We got in the truck, listening to reports coming in on Citywide and we ended up taking the Battery Park Tunnel underneath to come up on the West Street side of the incident. We came up right out of the tunnel. I was looking up to see if I could do a little more initial size up. That is when I saw the second plane hit the building. I just watched it coming in.

I see that the plane hit and I'm really thinking for the safety of the members that we got operating already, Lieutenant D'Avila did a great job. He notified everybody it was a hard hat operation and he started setting up the incident command system for this event, which later on just had to be reworked many times.

Everything was completely grid locked at the mouth of the Battery Tunnel, so I had to get out of the truck at that point. I told my aide when you free it up, park the vehicle and meet me at the command post. I actually walked up from the Battery Tunnel and when I'm walking up, I'm trying to watch what's going on, get a good picture of the area.

Some people, instead of walking along buildings, were in the middle of the street. I directed them to the side. The cops were doing a good job. It was pretty good evacuation going on at that moment. Orderly, there weren't many people who were hysterical. No patients were presenting themselves south, so things were really moving along.

I got up to the front of the building and took a better look. I heard Lieutenant D'Avila was on the opposite side.

Q. Which building was that?

A. I was approaching number 1 World Trade Center, because that's where I knew he was, on the other side towards Vesey from listening to the radio. I was approaching number 1 World Trade Center, because I was going go into the lobby of the building where the command post was being set up.

I knew there were other officers coming in and there were many senior officers coming in. I wanted to see what I was going to be confronted with before I predetermined in my mind that I would be taking command of the incident.

I'm looking along the buildings and naturally glass and debris is flying from the building, but it was really clear that if you walked along the side of the building, you were fine getting in. There weren't -- naturally everything is a safety issue at that point, but it was really clear going in. If you stayed along the side of the building, you would be okay, because everything was falling out more into the street.

I made it into the lobby at the command post and Chief Gombo was just arrived as well. We met together really quick and we determined that we would need a few ambulance crews inside and we would start setting up a triage area in the lobby of the building. He asked me to identify a place really quick. There was an area that was set off that wasn't being handled by the command post. It was really at the time we thought a safe location. Who was to know what would happen later.

We went back out and, myself and my aide, Gregg Brady, we identified three crews, two BLS and an ALS crew. I remember specifically that I took 9 Charlie, 7 Nora and 11 x-ray. Thank god that all those guys made it out alive.

Q. Do you remember who the personnel on those units were?

A. I remember that 9 Charlie or 7 Nora. They are both St. Claire's units and 11 x-ray is a Lenox Hill unit. I made sure everybody had helmets because I wouldn't take anybody without one. They did said they did. I know from working with these guys in the field that they are all working crews, that I took some good crews with us.

I went back into the lobby of the building and my aide was behind me and he came up to me and he said Cap, they are concerned about coming into the building. I told him, I said, at this point, you know, orders only go so far. I told him go back. If they don't want to come into the building, if they have any hesitation, go get me three crews that will come into the building. It's sort of fruitless to start ordering people at that point.

We just find the volunteers that we can and it turns out they all came in. We had the crews and then in speaking to Chief Gombo, I don't know how he came up with it, but he said go scout out 7 World Trade Center for me over by OEM. They want to set up a triage over there.

Rather than go back out through the buildings, which I knew what we were facing safety wise, we went through the complex and we came out on Vesey Street right opposite 7 World Trade Center. We made it into the lobby. There was no problem at that point. We found out that 7 World Trade Center houses OEM and Secret Service and a bunch of other agencies, but they were all evacuated at that point.

They shut down the command center and they were evacuating OEM. Everybody felt it was pretty safe to be in the lobby of the building. At that time I met Chief Peruggia, Captain Abdo Nahmod, and Richard Zarrillo, who is the special events coordinator for Chief Peruggia. I spoke with Chief Peruggia real quick and I left the crews with him and he told me to go report back to Chief Gombo.

The interesting thing to that is when I talked to John later on, a couple days later, if I would have stayed one second later and talked to him another second, I would have been in the lobby when the building collapsed. Or if I would have left him a second earlier, I would have been standing next to Chief Ganci when the building collapsed. There is a whole bunch of fate going on here.

I went back through the lobby of the building and we were met with a Secret Service agent who was just physically exhausted from running up the buildings. I told him now is not the time to be exhausted because he thought that he was going to be a patient. I told him if you can evacuate yourself, evacuate yourself. Everybody was out of the building.

I made sure there was nobody from EMS still in the lobby because we were moving our entire operation. I was the last one out of 1 World Trade Center.

I made it about halfway across West Street and I was just stepping into the street off the center median when I heard what is going to be instilled in my memory forever; a sound that combines a railroad car, an airplane, a fighter jet and thunder. I looked up and I saw the World Trade Center falling down. Number 1 World Trade Center was coming down. Number 2, I couldn't even really be sure at that point. One of the buildings was falling on my head. I said oh, my god. You really only had a split second to make a decision. I could have ran left, I could have ran right, which would have been north or south on West Street, but I looked right in front of me and I was looking at the command post where I saw all the senior Chiefs. I saw Chief Kowalczyk. I saw Chief Gombo and there was, in the American Express building, in the World Financial Center, there was actually an underground garage and I don't know why I chose that garage, but I chose to run straight ahead for the garage. I must have made it in -- I don't know whether I was in 10, 20, 30, 50, 100 feet. I know I wasn't in far, but all of a sudden just a woosh and a thrush, just, I started getting hit by debris. I got picked up and started being thrown. We were tripping over each other; firemen, Chiefs, Captains, Lieutenants, EMTs. I don't know if there were any EMTs, I should not say that.

We just got thrown, and everything went black and it was almost silent. Right at that moment I saw my two kids. I saw my father who passed away. I was actually in the air flying along and it was only, I guess, maybe a second, and I said to myself my god, that's it, it's over, because it was black and it was silent.

Then I hit the ground. Then stuff was just piling on top of me. As soon as I hit, I fell on my shoulder. I got an excruciating pain. So I said to myself -- this is all within a second this is going on through my mind. I said to myself, I said, you are not dead because there is no pain in heaven. I feel this excruciating pain running down my arm. Now I'm getting hit in the back of my head and everything and thank god I had my helmet on.

Another interesting thing was that I wore my turnout coat that day. I don't wear my turnout coat too often. Forever I will wear my turnout coat every day. I wore my turnout coat, so everything was just hitting me in the back. I said all right I'm not dead, because I'm not in heaven. Then I said wait a second. Maybe I'm in hell. Right at that moment I just decided there's no way I'm staying in hell. I don't belong here. I just stayed down for a another few seconds. I know that was a conscious decision I made just to stay down and try and let things subside a little bit.

It was still pitch black. Dust was flying. I couldn't breathe at that point. I couldn't see anything. I couldn't hear anybody else around me, so I'm just assuming that there really is nobody else around me, that, you know, the worst has come. I didn't want to come to that realization yet. While I'm thinking it, I didn't want to believe it.

I waited another few seconds and then I -- it was sort of like it subsided a little bit, because I didn't hear any more rumble, but it was still quiet. I managed to get up, clean some stuff off me and start figuring that I had to search my way out of here. I think of a few things really quick. Back to years and years and years ago when I went to basic fire training in Suffolk County Fire Academy, I said you know what I got to do. The first thing I got to do is I got to breathe, otherwise I will be dead in no time. So I actually took my head and I took my turnout coat and I disengaged. I pulled the snaps off and I disengaged my liner and everybody always made fun of me because I always left my full liner in the coat even in the summer. I disengaged the liner and I actually used that to shield me to breathe. Probably one of the two things that saved my life.

The other was after we started going I remembered that coming from SOD, you always had Nomex hoods, because when we suited up we had to wear hoods. I said, well, I got my hood in my pocket. I pulled my hood out and I used that also. So I had at that point, which was a double filter, to allow me to breathe. So it had to be like -- I'm estimating, probably another 10 minutes, that I couldn't find anybody. I was just -- I guess sort of just wandering around in there, just trying to find my way out.

Then I saw a light and it was a fireman. He was calling out to people. I said yes, I'm over here. Now it's just the two of us. We started moving down. We made a pact that we were both getting out of there alive. I don't know who this guy was. I believe that he saved my life, because without that light, without the two of us reassuring each other, I'm not quite sure I would have made it out of there. I would love to know who he was. The two of us together, we said we stay together no matter what happens.

Another few minutes later we found another firefighter, another firefighter. Nobody was injured. My shoulder wasn't really a concern at that point. I had sprained my knee, I had hurt my shoulder, but that wasn't like a concern. We found a few more guys. I don't know how long it was. It was a while, but everything was still pitch black. Nobody could breathe down there. A few firefighters had masks. They were passing them off to help some people out. Some firemen didn't have masks. There was a real spirit of -- this was at the time like 5 or 6 guys, that we were just fighting for our lives.

I don't know, it could have been two minutes, it could have been two hours. It could have been 20 minutes. Best guess that I can imagine was like 20 minutes. We searched our way and we had an orderly search that we all just held on to each other and we found a wall and we essentially just searched our way out of the building.

These guys, everybody just sort of fell back to training that they had learned over the years and you know, that's how we searched our way out of there. We found a stairwell and then we found a whole bunch of more firefighters. I guess it was about 20 of us then.

Q. The stairwell, was this lit and everything?

A. Yes, actually that was the only thing that was lit, which was pretty strange. I imagine from the emergency lighting. So we walked up and the door -- I think they said it had to be forced. I wasn't sure, because we were in the stairwell for a minute. We were talking to each other and we said, you all right, you all right, you all right.

We made it out of the stairwell. It led us right out, I want to say that we were -- we actually came out the back of the Financial Center, because I was looking at the Hudson at that point. That's where we walked, just right to the water, which wasn't far.

At that point I said out loud, I said, okay, let me get my thoughts together. We got to go back to work. One of the firemen looked at me and he said are you stupid. I said yes. In this case I must be. I remembered clearly at that point -- I mean some people were jumping on boats at that point, because there were boats lined up along the Hudson. People were just jumping on boats and I thought of doing that at a point.

But I remember specifically that I remembered Chief Kowalczyk, that I left -- that he was the last person that I really physically saw. I ended up making my way back to Vesey Street. I was actually over at West End Avenue. Is that West End?

Q. North End?

A. North End, right. I was at North End Avenue and Vesey Street, where I met with Chief Goldfarb. At that point we didn't know really what the outcome of this whole thing was going to be, but we decided real quick that we needed to put together a plan because there is still a monumental incident ahead of us. I was just trying to keep my composure at that point, because I still had a job to do. Being a Captain, there are still many people that are under me who are going to look to me for guidance and support. There is also Chiefs that really need me to function.

So I took a few seconds, I took a few deep breaths and I told Chief Goldfarb that I remember leaving Chief Kowalczyk and I need to go back and find him, because we still haven't seen him. Again the time frame wasn't much after the building collapsed. Still

I don't even remember which one collapsed first. I'm sort of, I guess to this point, one and two was immaterial. It was one of the towers. I believe it was two that came down first, because right after that, I told Chief Goldfarb, I am going back to find Chief Kowalczyk. I know where I left him. I know where he should have been, because we still haven't seen him. We haven't heard from him.

At that point my aide, who I'm thinking all along, because he was behind me, collapsed and I didn't know. I just assumed that he was dead. That -- you know, now I am by myself. He popped up and then there was a quick moment of embrace, hugging and again praying to god at that point. Like someone said, there were no atheists down at Ground Zero.

I said okay. Now we are going to go find Chief Kowalczyk. We went back around and I was standing in the corner of West Street and Vesey Street where I met Chief Basile, Chief Cassano, Chief Hayden, Chief Pfeifer, Chief Pfeifer from the first, Chief Hayden, Fire Division 1 commander, Chief Basile, EMS Division 2 commander. Chief Cassano at the time was the Citywide Tour Commander. We were briefly speaking for a second.

We were standing in the corner of West Street and Vesey Street, and I heard that rumble again, that roar, that thunder, and I said dear god, I almost died once. God can't be letting this happen to me again. I looked up. This is how I know 2 fell first. I looked up and it was happening again. 1 World Trade Center was falling on my head now.

I said holy cow, this really can't be happening. Again you have that decision, do I run north on West Street or do I run to the water. I said screw this, I'm just -- I'm going for a swim in the Hudson. That's where I'm going to run. It hit this time, but the difference was when it hit was because we were outside, it was just a deep dark gray rather than pitch black. Things were hitting us, but it was more dust, just more of the construction dust at this point.

I was still running but I couldn't see and we were tripping and while we were running, I thought I lost Chief Basile this time because we were running side by side. I later found out that he actually ducked into a doorway, but I just kept running until I hit North End Avenue again and then all I did was I just took a sharp right and it all just sort of just passed me. I was standing there almost in the clear. Everything was much thinner, the dust and you could breathe over there.

We were sort of safe at that point. That's when Chief Kowalczyk emerged. He had come around from the other side. Chief Gombo was there. Chief Basile was there. We found out that he ducked into the doorway. We were all sort of reassembling then. We were going to start moving up to Stuyvesant High School, and I said to him, I said I don't think that's far enough north for us. I said we really need to move this thing north.

We all just kicked around where we were going to go. I said why don't we just go up to the piers. It's wide open, and Chief Gombo agreed that that would be a good plan, that we could start reassembling up there and try to figure out who was dead or alive, because we knew there were going to be numerous deaths at that point.

You are running into so many people during the time through the whole thing. I mean I can't even really remember how many people I saw. At that point we started -- the MERV was over at North End Avenue and Vesey. I don't even remember the building number. I think it was a hotel actually. We started putting together a triage area over there and we ended up moving it. MERV relocated.

I walked up towards Murray Street and then I walked up to the West Side Highway and I just turned around and looked back at the Trade Center and I said oh, my god, because I'm sure that everybody has heard a million times, whoever in their right mind would have thought that the World Trade Center would ever fall down.

I was at the first one, the first incident in '93. I think we were all lulled into really a false sense of security that they couldn't take it down with a bomb, that this would never happen. A lot of emotion hit me at that point. I saw Rabbi Birnhack at that point. He said a prayer for me.

I started walking north on West Street. I didn't know how far I was going to go, but I was -- I just didn't know what I was going to do at that point. I didn't know what my thoughts were. I was just sort of in a daze. Two 110 story buildings fell on my head so to speak. I was trapped before. I don't like using the word trapped because the fallen firefighters, police officers, they are trapped, and they are dead.

That's not a good word. I was just entangled for a little while. Then I was able to thank god extricate myself from, you know. I mean I lost a lot of friends, a lot of people I worked with over the years, coming from SOD. I worked with a lot of guys in specialty units. Being in Manhattan I worked with a lot of guys. The names of -- you work with all the Battalion Chiefs and all the first line Battalion Chiefs who got killed. Terry Hatton, from Rescue 1 who I know for many years, he got killed. There were many other guys, Dennis Mojica, all the rest from Rescue 1 who we deal with on a regular basis, because being a Captain, a lot of first line supervisors deal with Engine companies, but I knew these guys. I know a lot of these guys. Couple of guys I grew up with.

One happens to be a police officer, Joe Viggiano, who was in truck 2. His brother John Viggiano was a Firefighter in Ladder 132. They are both still missing. Just a tremendous amount of people that I would find out about later. [redacted]).

[redacted]

I was with my aide Gregg. We were just walking north. He says what are we going to do. I said I don't know, just give me a few minutes. I got to get a few minutes. I just got to put this together in my head.

Then I met with Chief Hirth, who is Division 1 commander and Grace Cacciola, Lieutenant in the Division, were in the Academy or so I thought, in refresher. Right at that moment they appeared. I just grabbed Grace and I hugged him. We both cried. I didn't know they were there, they thought I was dead. Because just my personality and where I have been in SOD, they assumed that I was in the building. The only reason I got out was God has determined that it's not my time yet.

We just held onto each other for a few minutes. Then we said okay. What are we going to do. It was time to head up to the piers. We started regrouping. We head up to the piers and they started putting things together. At that point I was pretty well limping because my knee was hurting me and my shoulder. I was still in a lot of pain. So Chief Hirth actually ended up driving me in a command car. We had a command car. He drove me over to Bellevue Hospital where I was evaluated. We found out nothing was broken. It was some just sprains and stuff. They took a chest x-ray because I must have eaten 50 or a hundred pounds of construction dust, asbestos, and everything else that was in the air that day.

They said -- Bellevue signed me off from work. I said that's great, but there is still a monumental job to do. I mean we weren't even close to getting a hand on anything at that point. So I took a few minutes. I washed my face. I cleaned myself up. I put my turnout coat and helmet on. Back to the Trade Center I went.

That was pretty much the morning. I was there probably until 4:30, quarter to 5 the next morning, at which time I was released. That's the morning of September 11. Ironically, that's my sister's birthday. She is a police officer. She was off that day, thank God. Her birthday is never going to be the same, which is just -- we are two years and 51 weeks apart. My birthday is a week later and it was a big thing.

I got home that morning and after I got on to West Street, early, before we walked down to Chelsea and I went to the hospital, a few interesting things happened. Everything happens for a reason, fate. My wife, who is a Lieutenant on our job, she is EMS Lieutenant, she knew that I was there. Right after the first building collapsed, I picked up my cell phone along with that 450 trillion other people and nobody could get any cell sites and I said I got to try at least to let her know that I'm okay, because I'm sure she was going to be panicking.

My cell phone went through the first time. It happened again the second time and I called her and I said I'm okay the second time. My son was playing and I said don't bother him. We walked up to West Street, right after I saw Grace and I called my wife back and I said I need to talk to my son. He is just coming up on 3 years old. I said I need to talk to him and he is so innocent to the world and he just said, he said Daddy, what are you doing. I said to him, I said Daddy's at work now, but you know I love you. He said okay Daddy, I will see you later.

That was -- I have another son who is six months old, so I couldn't talk to him, but that's what got me through. That's what got me through. He still asks me every day, he says you know, is Daddy going to work. I says yes, Daddy is going to work. He says you coming home? And he knows. He knows that something happened.

I'm not quite sure he knows what and I pray to God that he never ever has to know for many years. God is good all the time. God brought me home to my boys. We go on. There was a lot of other stuff, reactions of people, direction that was given. Just happened to find out that the three initial crews that I brought in made it out. People that were closer made it out.

I did see Carlos Lillo for a while. I remember he was looking for his wife. The last I saw him, he was still looking for her. He was outside somewhere. I don't remember exactly where I saw him, but I remember I talked to him because I happen to know him, because my wife worked with him at a station years ago. I pray for him and his family and Ricardo's family, all the other families. I pray for them every day.

It's just as a field commander, you play over the decisions you make every day. Did I make the right decision. I played it over a million times in my head and I said, I keep saying to myself I don't think given the same scenario tomorrow everything that I know in all my years of training, my command experience, what would I have done differently. I can't come up with anything, I don't think.

Nobody in the world, nobody ever would ever have thought these buildings were coming down. That's what we do. We go to lobbies and do triage and upper floors and do forward triage. We just make decisions. I hope I made good decisions. I know that thank God, nobody who was under my command that day suffered any ill effects. I know because I researched that everybody went home okay at the end of the day. That was pretty important to me.

There's a lot of other things that go through my head, but that's pretty much the bulk of what went on that morning.

Q. Anything else you want to add, any final thoughts?

A. No, I just -- every day I just pray that this new war on terrorism -- I pray to God that our President, President Bush, gets us through this. Mayor Giuliani did a fantastic job, still does a fantastic job, I pray for our Commissioner, who is tired himself. I see him every day on TV. I have seen him a few times in person since then. He is a tired man, but he has given everything. There is nothing more that he can give and I just pray that God gives him -- continues to give him the strength.

Chief Nigro, who is now our Chief of the Department. Chief Cassano, Chief of Operations, Chief McCracken, Chief of EMS, I just pray that they continue to have the strength to take us through these really tough times. That senior officials. I knew Chief Ganci. He knew me. Not so much on a personal level but more professional. That I pray for their families, Commissioner Feehan, Chief Feehan. Recently with them just a week before, at a dedication for the Central Synagogue that was burned down a few years ago. Chief Burns. All the Chiefs, I pray that God gives them strength to take us forward and that if there was anything that could have tipped us off that this was going to happen, we find it and that we learn from it. I don't see any mistakes. We just have the strength as leaders; myself, that we go forward.

Good leaders and good commanders and God gives us that strength. So we will get through this. I'm sure we will. I just hope that history looks kindly on us. A lot of people and I don't even really include myself, but a lot of people. I saw strong men have to cry that day. I see strong leaders who are the rock of this organization who are the backbone of this organization, get tired.

I just -- I pray God gives them a little break, that they can take a breath and step back and just get a break. They all need it. They are tired. They give their all. I just hope they find some peace and rest.

I guess that's about it.

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Okay. That concludes our interview with Captain Mark Stone. Thank you for your time. The time is now 926 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CHIEF ULYSSES GRANT

Interview Date: October 12, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. TAMBASCO: Today is October 12th. The time is 1318 hours. I'm Mike Tambasco of the World Trade Center Task Force conducting an interview into the events of September 11th at the World Trade Center. We'll be conducting this interview with Chief Grant.

Chief, would you just be good enough to identify yourself and your command?

CHIEF GRANT: My name is Chief Ulysses Grant. I'm currently assigned to the Fire Department EMS Bureau, EMS Division 5.

MR. TAMBASCO: We're in the conference room of EMS Battalion 43.

Q. Chief, if you would just be good enough to give me your memory of the events.

A. To the best of my recollection, it started out to be a normal day for me and my aide. Basically we were at Staten Island. I was doing some administrative work. And I believe the young lady that works also there with us, Ms. Alice Suskowitz came in while I was in my office and said Chief, did you hear, a plane just went into a building at the World Trade Center.

I said what?

I'm in my office. I have a television. I turn it on. Sure enough, there was coverage of the World Trade Center being struck with an airplane. We were all watching.

My next thing was to a little more carefully monitor the citywide radio. I could hear a lot of radio transmissions over the air. I didn't necessarily associate it with a person, but I could hear there was a lot of talking going over the citywide radio.

A combination of listening to the radio and watching the events as they unfolded on television, I said you know what, I've got to make a decision here, it's either to go to the event or, knowing the magnitude of this type of event, maybe my resources might be needed at headquarters or something of that nature. I made the decision to go to the event.

Surprisingly we got there very quickly. I think probably what assisted that was the HOV lane on the BQE where you can jump right in and make better egress in getting there. The other thing that I remember was that at some points along that HOV route there were police officers there, I guess in an effort to direct traffic for an event that had already taken place.

So we got there relatively quickly. I remember we got as far as we could and got out of the Battery Tunnel. I remember there was a large number of police officers right as we got to the end of the Battery Tunnel, waving us on, come on, come on. We got through the tunnel.

I remember we got to a point as close as we could, and there were other emergency vehicles responding. We got north to west. What I remember is all of a sudden there was someone like pushing us back saying go back, go back. I don't think that was in reference to either the towers falling at that point; however, reference to maybe some debris that was coming down over in that area.

So we pulled back as far as we could, and we got out and pulled on our turnout jackets, helmets, made sure we had radios, helmets, cell phones, whatever normally we would take to an MCI response.

I remember as I was walking up I noticed Chief McCracken several feet ahead of me walking as well with his lieutenant. Lieutenant Cronin was also there.

Q. That was up West Street?

A. Walking up West. We were walking up. You know you could see what was going on and we were going in that direction. We got to a point where we saw several municipal ambulances there, Hazollah members were there and there were all sorts of voluntaries. I'm not quite sure which ones they were.

At that point Chief McCracken had given me some directions to start setting up a treatment center, because we knew the resources we had. And we were going over some of the safety issues like making sure people stay together, making sure what officers we have, taking on certain roles. As a matter of fact, Captain D'Amato was there also. He had been there a while.

Q. Chief, could I just interrupt and ask you whereabouts was that, where this took place?

A. One of the points that I remember was that Chief McCracken actually asked what street we're on. At that point we looked and the street sign was indicating South End. The other street sign wasn't necessarily visible. However, I think, you know, just looking at surroundings and looking at this map, it was probably Liberty or in that vicinity, one block over.

Q. Great.

A. Chief McCracken was discussing about setting up this treatment sector. Basically we agreed to move it somewhat further back. I was walking with some of the Hazollah or the chief representative of Hazollah to explain to him that the people should stay together, let it be you that I communicate with as responsible for Hazollah, let it be Captain D'Amato for the municipal and voluntary resources and so forth. So we were in the process of doing that.

The next thing I remember is I saw people running in my direction, not even a full walk up but just people running. I said what the hell, what are they running from? I didn't have a clue there.

People talk about -- you know since the incident they talk about hearing this loud thunderous sound. To the best of my knowledge, I don't remember hearing anything. However, I do remember seeing this loud, large cloud coming about like it was turning a corner and coming in my direction.

So I also turned and ran. What I remember seeing when I was running was a Hazollah truck. It was open. The back of the truck was open. Not that I had full conscious coherence of what was going on, but I said you know what, let me duck in here because there's stuff coming down from somewhere. Let me duck in here.

So I jumped in the back of the truck. There were other people there that jumped in the back of the vehicle with me. I remember it immediately filling up with stuff and you hear the tingling of the particles and whatever it was that was coming down, just filling it up, filling it up. At some point I couldn't even see in front of me.

I do remember someone kicking at the door trying to get the door of the vehicle open. There was a problem in opening it, but it eventually opened. There was someone in front of me. I was feeling my way. And I latched onto their belt in the back. To be quite honest, I wasn't letting go because I couldn't see. I had no concept of what was going on. I just held onto that person.

He went forward; I was right behind him. Within a few -- I don't know, maybe 30 feet or whatever it might have been, we more or less fell into a building. It seems like we just fell into a building, rolled in. We all were covered with dust. I had no idea still what the hell was going on here.

I remember a young -- it looked like a young black woman. She looked like she was a secretary of some sort. A gentleman was at his desk working, like where did you people come from? We just stumbled in.

I remember being very confused, not knowing what happened and anyone that was around me, I no longer saw. So one of my first thoughts is where the heck is my aide? Where is she? She was here a few minutes ago. Where is she? And the people around me, where are they? What happened?

The dust settled somewhat. I started -- there was a Hazollah member there. He started brushing his clothes off and trying to get rid of some of the debris on his helmet and clothes. Then I remember saying wait a minute, we can't stay here. I don't see anybody I know. It's not a good idea, I don't think, to stay here. We've got to move on.

I wasn't sure if that was the right thing to do, but I decided to go out. And as I went out, I walked several feet and I remember now meeting an EMT who I now identify as an EMT that works for me out at Battalion 22, Rothmund. And he said Chief, I don't know, where are you going? I said we've got to go. We can't stay here. We've got to go. He said well, if you're going to go -- and he gave me a bottle of water and some paper towels. He said wet these down and cover your mouth if you're going to go.

I traveled a little further, wandered up into this deli. I remember seeing fruit around, the people not comfortable with what was going around. The owner was there, but there was a lot of confusion. I stayed there very momentarily, found out where the exit was to get out of there, and moved on.

The next thing I know I found myself over in what I believe now was the Battery Park area. We were there. A lot of people had begun to gather. I remember someone walking up behind me who later was identified as Lieutenant Cronin. I said where's Chief McCracken? She said right now I don't really know. I said where are you going? She said Chief, I'm following you.

So we walked a little bit. There were a large number of people there. One of the things I distinctly remember was that Al Simons, who was the supervisor of Maimonides Hospital, had also been hurt and he was on a stretcher. There were several members of Hazollah working to get him out of the location of where we were.

It was a small boat, if you will, that approached at the water. However, I'm looking over it and looking at what they were trying to do. I saw it was at least 30 feet separating him on the stretcher and being able to go into the boat. I remember distinctly telling them: You can't do this, no, no, don't lower him in there, don't even think about it. So they brought him out.

I then saw Chief McCracken. He was coming around and he was speaking. What I do remember is I said to him: Chief, what do we do now? What are we going to do? He said you can't go anywhere. I said we can't stay here. He said look over there. If you look back there, you could see the large dust and debris falling from the first tower. The only other thing you could see was the water. We weren't going in either direction.

So we were there. Then I remember the people that were around me were very panicky. There were a lot of civilians that were very panicky. What they had told them to do was lay down, cover your heads and remain calm. It seems like they followed that direction because we were the only ones giving any directions.

So they basically followed. They laid down, and they were crying and very upset. I remember a lady next to me being very upset and saying we're going to die, we're going to die. I said we're not going to die; we're going to be okay.

There then was a larger vessel -- I don't know if it was one of the ferries or not -- that came close and someone there of authority made the decision that it should be women and children first to get on the boat and go. It sort of like reminded me of the movie the Titanic, and that's what it felt like.

What we were doing at that point was looking in the crowd and calling up women that we saw with children or whatever, and we were putting them on. We were handing them over to the guys that were on the other end of the boat, putting them on.

We did that for several minutes. I remember a woman that looked like she was either Latino or Hispanic but, somewhat bewildered. You could see that there was a communication gap with her and what was going on. So I went a little bit into the crowd, and I pulled the woman with the baby carriage out and got her on.

All this time there were people pressing up real tight against me, against me real tight. I remember that. So I went after that was done and I sat down. It was like a little bench area, not benches but a grass area with some sort of cement covering. I sat there for a while.

I started being short of breath. I just was gasping for air, gasping. I sat there, figuring the best thing to do at that point was just be still for right now.

I heard like a noise coming up out behind me, and it was a Lutheran ambulance that came out of nowhere. And they proceeded to load Al Simons, who was the supervisor for Maimonides. I remember another gentleman sitting in the ambulance who had an apparent leg injury, and it was starting to throb and hurt.

There was a big, heavyset paramedic, white pants, blue shirts, very stocky guy, and another person. Someone said Chief, you've got to go. You've got to get up in here. They more or less pulled me up into the back of the truck. We started out slowly.

I was under the impression, I guess obviously with other people in here, we were going to the hospital. We got out. We were all in confusion there. I could see the guy being flagged on. They gave me oxygen and had me sit in the corner.

We got into the Battery Tunnel, and the ambulance began to overheat because the guy was slowing down. The Battery Tunnel was at that point full of all of the smoke and whatever else was coming in. I could see it just coming in. The guy, you know, he had to shut down the AC because it was overheating.

Al Simon yelled at him: Keep going, keep going, keep going, don't stop. Meanwhile I don't think he supervised the Lutheran guys, but he yelled keep going, keep going. We got out of the tunnel, and the next thing you know not long after we were at Lutheran Hospital. They threw oxygen on me there. I had a couple of them see me. I told them I'm fine. I'm just having a problem breathing, but I feel a lot better, I feel a lot better.

I settled down. I saw Bill Killeps, who was the ambulance supervisor at Lutheran, a little later on. He offered me some help or whatever the case.

I remember seeing he looked like a priest or a fellow at the phone, one of the phone booths near the treat -- I guess it's the asthma treatment area. It looked like he got through on the phone.

As soon as he hung up, I jumped up, because my impulse was to call my wife and let her know that I'm here, I'm okay, because I know she would be watching the news or heard about it and things were going to go through her head. So I said even if she just hears my voice she will settle down.

So I was able to call out. I got through. Settled her down. I'm all right. I'll be here. I couldn't see very well. In fact, I needed to flush my eyes at some point. After I felt better, they took the oxygen off, basically said, okay, Chief, go on.

I wandered outside. They were periodically bringing people in from the event. There was a park across the street, and no one was in the park. They had cordoned it off, quarantined it off. I went into the park and sat down just to get my thoughts.

All along one of the things -- I did have my cell phone. I had not accounted for my aide yet. So I called her home, and I guess it was fortunate that I got no answer, because sometimes her daughter is home. Fortunately I got no answer, because I guess I wanted to know where was she, but I didn't know and it would only be frightening for me to say well, I, her supervisor, don't know where she is.

So I called her division and I spoke with Alice who's there, the PAA. She said oh, Chief, you're okay. I said I'm going to be okay. Have you heard from Mary, my aide. She said Chief, we haven't heard from her. I said my phone's working, my pager seems to be working. I was getting pages.

I sat in that park for a while, just kept flushing my eyes with water. There was an ambulance crew that gave me some water. I kept flushing my eyes out, like that. I finally got a page from Alice. I called her. She said Chief, we found Mary. I said thank God.

So I said where is she? She said stay there, she's going to come pick you up. I said how the hell is she going to pick me up? In what? What is she going to pick me up in? I thought for sure the car was destroyed.

So sure enough, I guess about 40 minutes later, here she comes pulling up in the car, looking like crap, all kind of shit on it, and she comes out, all dusted up. I said thank God you're okay. I got in the car, went in and washed off in one of the other areas at one of the battalions.

And that was the day, a very unforgettable day.

Q. Unforgettable, I'm sure.

A. I think back many times and I consider all of the other things going on in my life right now and I said God was on my side this day and I should be thankful for that. It was really some experience. I'll never forget it. I'm sure I'm not the only person. I hope that things work out.

Q. All right, Chief. I thank you. Is there anything else you can think of you'd like to add to that?

A. No, I think that pretty much covers -- summarizes that day. I don't remember looking directly at the buildings coming down. I know that when we first got there that day. I saw what I thought was a rag or something falling off one of the buildings. The person standing next to me said Chief, that's a person. But you could see it was burning.

But I remember distinctly people just running, running, wondering what's going on. Then it wasn't long after that there was debris and stuff coming down from the World Trade Center had descended upon us. The only choice was to run. I don't think it was a question of saying what do I do next.

The only option was to run at that point and take cover. That's what I believe most people did. I guess some had more advantage being either closer to a building or a place where they could get into, and some of us were just left wide out in the open.

There was a Hazollah truck, and I remember diving in there and some other people dove in with me, still not knowing what was going on around us.

So I'm thankful and thank God I'm here today. I thank God for the people who have survived it. My heart and thoughts go out to those who didn't because those people came to work that day, whether they were civilians or firemen or EMS workers, not knowing what to expect, certainly no expectation of losing their life that day. I guess it's just the will of God. That's about it.

Q. Once again, Chief, I thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

MARY MCMILLAN

Interview Date: October 12, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. TAMBASCO: Today is October 12. My name is Mike Tambasco. Assigned to the World Trade Center Task Force. We are conducting an interview today into the events of September 11 at the World Trade Center. The time of the interview starting is at 1254 hours.

Q. Our interview today is with --

A. Mary McMillan. I was assigned with Chief Grant, car 65 on 9-11. We parked our car on the West Side Highway.

Q. If I could ask you, could you start with when you first heard about what was going on, when you were responding?

A. Okay. We were at Division 5 on Staten Island. They heard the call, Joe LaBarbera, who was (inaudible). He heard the call and the Chief was listening to it also. He said Mary get your coat and let's go. So we left. I was driving.

We followed -- took the BQE to the tunnel and parked on the West Side Highway. Someone told us don't come any further, stay where you are, and we did. There were other cars behind me. We couldn't go any further, so we got out and walked over to the command post, where we met Chief McCracken. I believe that was at South End and Liberty Street.

While I was there I was asked by Chief Grant to gather a list of resources. I didn't have a piece of paper with me, so I got it from Kathleen Zarr. I met her and I met also Mala Harrilal and Brian Pastore. I don't recall who else I seen there at that time.

As I was gathering it, I was saying to Mala, that I'm looking up at the building and I said to her, this is going to fall. I said we should get out of here. This is going to fall. She says I know. I think we are in the wrong place. I tried to tell Chief Grant and Chief McCracken I think it's going to fall, but they were so busy talking among themselves, I didn't have a chance to tell them what I was feeling.

I think I should have shared with everyone, but when I felt that way, I looked around me. I gathered the resources, but I'm thinking what do I do when this thing falls. I looked around me and I saw this building on my right. It had the glass bottom doors and I just made reference to it in case god forbid, anything happened, my plan would be to run behind that building, grab my jacket over my head and just stay there for a while.

Sure enough, after my thoughts travelled through my head, all I heard was run and I heard the sound, a sound -- I can't really describe it. It was an unusual sound. Then they are saying run, so I started to run and I looked back and I saw this white smoke just moving in this boiling motion towards us and I was like oh, my god, what's going on. I was scared, I was frightened and I'm running and everybody's running.

Someone grabbed on to my hands. I don't know who it is. I was dragged, literally dragged on the ground. I said let me go please. Let me go. Let me go. So he let me go. I got up on my feet and he said get the fuck in here now. I went in there. I didn't want to go in there because I'm thinking this thing that's falling down is going to crash the glass that surrounds this building.

So we got under there and I just broke down in tears, and the debris, I was covered in debris at that time. I ran inside and they closed the door. I stood by some console table. I took my helmet off and I said oh, my god we are going to die. We are going to die. I was so afraid and then they said shut up. Shut up. Stop saying that.

Then it calmed down somewhat and everybody started leaving the building. Now we are not making any friends, everybody is just trying to get out. I was like oh, my god. [redacted] I don't think they had a plan. What's going on with them.

Q. You lost sight of them completely?

A. Yes. So when I got out I walked, looking in the area where I left them. Because I didn't look back or anything. I just ran and I didn't see anyone. Everybody is looking for everybody. Everybody is covered in this white dust. You can't breathe. You could hardly see. You are looking for water. There were people out there giving you bottles of water. They said wash your face, wash your hands. It felt like something was sticking you when you washed your face. I guess little pieces of glass, because when I got home also. When I washed my face. There was something sticking me. Like glass in my face.

So I got the water and I washed my face and my hands and I started looking for them. I walked up South End I believe. I was walking in the opposite direction now and I saw Chief McCracken approaching me. I said where is Chief Grant. He said oh, he is in the store down the block. Just a couple of stores down. Just keep walking.

So I decided to walk just to look for him and I looked in every building I passed. I didn't see him. I just saw a lot of people. I don't recall who I saw. I asked them if they had seen Chief Grant. Everybody is no, no, I didn't see him. I don't know.

So I walked further, further back and forth, back where I was, further, looking around and up the stairs to some store above there. They says come, wash your face off. I said I'm fine. I'm good. Leave me alone. They gave me water. I took the water and says here, you need a mask, take a mask, they gave me a mask and I put that on and that helped so much. That mask helped me out.

Then I walked over to -- going towards the water, because everybody says get towards the water. It's better over there. So I started to walk towards the water and I walked up and down looking for him. I said anybody seen -- I asked, because I think I seen everybody who I met there initially except Chief Grant. Then I walked around the water and I saw Kathleen Zarr again and she says let's go in this building and set up triage for anyone with asthma, which she did.

I met Captain D'Amato. I met him and he looked so out of it, like he wasn't there.

Q. Dazed?

A. Dazed. I said to him let me borrow your radio and I intercepted transmission asking for Chief Grant. I didn't know where he was and he says take it. I said are you okay? Didn't answer me. Just sat there in a daze. They did triage and the next thing you know we saw a boat coming in and they says get back in the building, because the other building was coming down now. This big ball of smoke overcame the building again and we stayed inside there and did the triage. We tried to make some sense of what's going on. Everybody is talking and confused, people with their children, with their dogs and their family and the boats started to come closer to the water.

I don't know where I was then. But the boats came over. There is a place.

Q. I think there is a little dock.

A. At a corner, a very corner, like a corner, corner, and a building is here and the water is circulating here. And there is a corner. People could walk down towards like --

Q. Like a pier?

A. Like a pier. Walk down towards it and then the boats were there and we directed the people to get on to the boats.

Q. It was civilians, it was everybody?

A. Civilians, people from the building, children, anybody who wanted to get out of there. After that I saw Chief McCracken again. I said did you see Chief Grant. He said no. I said have you seen him at all. He said yes, I saw him. He's down that way. He is okay. He is okay. I think that I was just being pacified at that moment, because I don't think he seen him, but when I met Chief Grant he told me he did see him one time.

After that I saw -- who was it? I don't recall who it was that drove me on the gator, that drove us on the gator over to a much better area. We are getting further away from the building.

Q. Further down south towards the ferry terminal and stuff?

A. Yes, closer there. There was like a park, a park like area. You could sit down and you know, benches over there. I met the Chief, Chief Villani was there, then I saw Captain D'Amato over there also. We were talking and I says can't anybody just ask, somebody just tell me what do I do to find out if he's okay. He says he is fine, Chief McCracken told me he is fine. I said Chief Villani what do I do. What do I do to find out. I have no phone. My phone is not working. I don't know what's going on. He just took Captain D'Amato's radio from me at that point and never said anything to me.

Then they took me over to the ferry terminal where the command post was set up and I sat there for a while. I went and cleaned up in the bathroom, but I went back out. I went back looking.

Q. Back north up to go looking for him again?

A. To the same spot. But I went in and out. I went in and out of the streets looking and nothing. I did that maybe about three times from the command post and back there. After that I stayed there, because after receiving like numerous pages from Division 5, I didn't answer it, I think it was Alice, just wanting to know hey, are you okay. So I didn't bother.

I settled down. I calmed down a bit and that's when I made the phone call to Division 5 and Alice told me that Chief Grant was admitted at the hospital and he is okay and he just wanted to know if you were okay. So now they heard from me, everybody was fine.

After that, I said to her, just tell Chief Grant I'm going to bring the car. I left a whole lot out. I'm going ahead of myself.

Q. That's okay.

A. I said tell Chief Grant stay there. I'm coming. That's all I said and I hung up. I had at some point when I walked back, one of those times I walked back to the area. I moved the car, it was filled with debris, you couldn't see anything and the cars were coming back and forth just covering you in more debris.

I turned the car around, I put it in a different direction. At least I said if you see the car in a different direction you will know that I'm alive, because I'm the only one with the other key. So I cleaned the car out somewhat, and I drove over to Brooklyn. The Brooklyn Bridge? Yes, the Brooklyn Bridge, and I made it over and I went to Lutheran Hospital and I saw Chief Grant. I left the scene entirely.

Q. What hospital was that?

A. Lutheran Hospital. That was it. When that debris fell and I first ran into that building, I didn't think that I would make it out alive. I never thought I would see the next day. I practically gave up hope, thinking that this is it, this is my destiny. Here I am. Take it. I'm giving it up all right now.

That was my story. I thank god I'm here right now.

Q. Another quite interesting story. There has been a whole lot of them. There really have been, yes. Is there anything else that you can think of that you would like to put into this?

A. Not really.

Q. Okay.

A. I never even seen Mala or Frank to see how they are doing. I don't know even know if they are okay, but we didn't have any fatalities or anything.

Q. Right. As far as I know I have been -- as far as I know I believe both of them are okay.

A. Oh, you know.

Q. Well, Frank I know, I'm pretty sure he is okay?

A. And Katherine, she is home recuperating.

MR. TAMBASCO: Right, so, but, yes, well, okay, Mary, thank you for the interview. This interview is concluding at 1305 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER MICHAEL WERNICK

Interview Date: October 12, 2001

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

MR. FEILER: Today's date is October 12, 2001. The time now is 1027 hours and this is Monte Feiler of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I am conducting an interview with the following individual. Please state your name, rank and area of command.

A. My name is Michael Wernick. I am from Ladder 9, I am a chauffeur. I was a chauffeur that day.

Q. Firefighter?

A. Firefighter.

MR. FEILER: Of the New York City Fire Department. We're conducting the interview at the Lieutenant's office located at the quarters of Ladder 9, Engine 33, regarding the events of September 11, 2001. Also present is?

MS. QUEVEDO: Fabiola Quevedo of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

Q. What I basically need from you, sir, is just a scenario of what happened when you got the first alarm until the events surrounding the collapse of the second tower. Go ahead.

A. That morning we pulled up and I was the chauffeur and positioned the rig -- looking at this map -- on Church Street, right behind Saint Paul's Cemetery. From there we got all the guys and then we went into the north 1 World Trade Center. Enroute there, lots of debris along Vesey Street and we entered 1 World Trade Center. We gathered in the lobby and we proceeded to go up the stairs as a group and as we were going up the steps -- over time, we got separated in the stairwell and some of us stopped at different floors.

Mike Maguire and I stopped at the 12th floor and we stopped at the 27th floor. It was really the 27th floor was the highest level we attained on that day. We took a rest on that floor. We saw various companies. Some of the members, after thinking about it after a while, I did see 6 Truck on that floor.

Q. Were you able to recognize any of the firefighters?

A. None of the firefighters. But I do remember Captain Burke, Billy Burke, he's still missing. And then I do remember the 6 Truck, a couple of the guys recognized me. I saw them last week. They said, oh, you were the guy lying on the floor. And his mask was next to mine, this guy sal, form Ladder 6.

We were there resting five, ten minutes. We heard reports that possibly more planes were coming in our direction and that was from the FBI. And there was Battalion Chief on the floor.

Q. Do you know who that was?

A. I'm trying to think who it was. I think it was from Battalion 2.

Q. You don't know his name?

A. No. And at that point we heard a loud noise and the building shook. It was like a rag doll. At that point we said, "We got hit by another plane." The indications were really poor at that point.

And then the Chief basically said, start filtering down. So we decided to go down rather than up. We went down one stairwell, I think it was C, and we caught up with my boss, Lieutenant Smith at that point and then around the 11th floor, it was clogged up at around the 11th floor in that stairwell, and someone on the 11th floor grabbed us and said go down another stairwell.

Q. What was it clogged up with? Civilians?

A. Both firemen and civilians. And at that point it was actually quite lucky that we went to another stairwell that was empty and then we made it down to about the 5th or 6th floor and I remember seeing Lieutenant Desperito because he used to be in 9 truck. I ran into him on that floor. That was a very vivid moment in the stairwell, because he was helping somebody out.

Q. A civilian?

A. A civilian. And I think we passed 6 Truck. They were in the stairwell with civilians as well. Mostly firemen at that point. There really was very few civilians. I remember seeing Engine 5 somewhere along the way. We made our way down to the lobby which was blown out at the time from the debris of the first tower that came down, the south tower that went down.

At that time we still didn't know that the building collapsed. We were still unaware. We thought we either got hit with a plane or that thought it might have been a partial collapse from the upper floors in our building. We got into the lobby and the lobby was completely blown out. I guess from the debris, and we had to climb out there. And as we left the building we still didn't know the first tower collapsed. No clue that that first tower collapsed.

We made our way to the street and about 45 seconds out of the building the north tower collapsed. So we just made it out. We got blown up the West Side Highway, most of us, and --

Q. Who was in that group with you when you left the building?

A. I think I was with B.J. Casey, a fireman from Ladder 9. I don't remember if Casey -- I think Casey was from Ladder 9 and Mike Maguire.

Q. B.J. and Casey, those are nicknames or --

A. Firefighter Springstead and firefighter Casey and Firefighter Maguire.

Q. Okay.

A. I think in the lobby I remember seeing Firefighter Walz and Baptiste.

Q. All from your company or --

A. Neither of them made it out.

Q. And that was 1 World Trade Center you were in?

A. The north tower. And then we sort of made it up the West Side Highway. Well, we walked out to the West Side Highway. The minute we did that the building came down and that blew us a few feet.

From there on, you know, we had a lot of debris in our eyes and face and we couldn't breathe. Eventually I got up, walked around in a dust field and eventually I was taken to Beth Israel Hospital.

Q. I just want to know, when you first got the run, you said you were the chauffeur. Did you receive any specific instructions on where to stage or where to go?

A. No.

Q. The alarm just came in of what, as far as you are aware?

A. Well, actually when it came in Engine 33 went first. They were like 9, 10 minutes ahead of us and then what typically happens in the city is when something comes in they wait for 9:00 o'clock. You know, the dispatchers, because it all has to do with money and overtime. So at 9:00 o'clock the alarm went in for us. So then we proceeded down, I guess it was on the fifth alarm at that point, with no indication of where we were gonna go. I knew we were going to the World Trade Center. You could see the hole in the building right out here on Lafayette Street.

Q. So the first plane had struck, the second plane hadn't struck when you were responding?

A. Right.

Q. Okay.

A. And then as we were going down there it struck.

Q. Did you see it hit?

A. No, We saw the aftermath.

Q. When you got down there, where did you park? Where did you stop the apparatus?

A. I was going down south on Church Street, against traffic on Church Street and I pulled up right behind St. Paul's Cemetery.

Q. Could you mark that.

A. (Complied with request.)

Instead of going -- normally when we -- Like when we went to the one, we went down the West Side Highway, we pulled up over here. As we pulled out here, there was so much debris, the Lieutenant said, "Just park it over here." So, you know, this cemetery, there was papers flying all over the place, there were engines all over, plane parts, building parts, and then we proceeded to walk down Vesey Street into the north tower.

Q. Okay. Did your Lieutenant receive any instructions from a Captain or a chief on where to go or --

A. We just walked into the lobby and at that point they probably got instructions to go as high as we could climb.

Q. When you entered the lobby, did you treat anybody? Was there any civilians that you needed to treat or any patients that you made contact with?

A. Not at that point, but at that point there were a lot of bodies all around outside. We were Dodging bodies to get in.

Q. Were you asked to assist a particular unit, either verbally or by radio?

A. No.

Q. When you exited 1 World Trade Center, do you remember where you exited from?

A. Where we came in, in the northwest corner.

Q. Can you mark that.

A. (Complied with request.)

Q. That's where you entered. And you exited?

A. The same way.

Q. You said you made it up to the 27th floor?

A. Yes.

Q. How long do you think it took you to walk up?

A. About a half hour. Twenty minutes, a half hour.

Q. Were there lights, any lights on?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know the status of the elevators in that building? Were they running at that point?

A. When we first pulled -- I do remember when we first came in one elevator was blown out. That was on the main floor. We couldn't use the elevators. I don't know if the other elevators were working. I know that definitely one was blown out.

Q. How about the stand pipes? Were they working?

A. No.

Q. You said you weren't aware of the first building collapse.

A. That's correct. Most of the guys weren't.

Q. Did you have a handy-talkie with you?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know, was it on the private channel? Was it on a Manhattan frequency?

A. Just on the regular channel.

Q. How was communications?

A. It was pretty bad.

Q. At any time were you asked to change to a different frequency?

A. No.

Q. Were you staying on the Manhattan frequency?

A. I stayed on the Manhattan frequency.

Q. Is there anything else that you think is important? Any other people that you may have seen that you recognized?

A. I remember Andy Desperito, Lieutenant Burke, I saw Mannie somewhere, Mannie Devalle in the stairwell at one point while I was coming down. It was the 6th or 7th floor. He's from Engine 5.

Q. That was the last you saw of him there?

A. Yes.

Q. What did it look like he was doing at that point?

A. I think they went on the floor. They weren't in the stairwell. I remember the door opening on the floor and they were just like in the lobby of the floor.

Q. That was the C stairway you say?

A. At that point we changed over to B.

Q. That was the one that was less crowded?

A. Yes. But around the 4, 5 or 6 floor it started to get crowded.

Q. Civilians and firefighters?

A. Mostly firefighters. But we were still able to move. But I know that there was no urgency at that point trying to get out of the building. It wasn't like "Let's get the fuck outta here." You know? This thing is coming down. It was like filter down guys and start to get out.

Q. Do you think anyone around you was aware that the other building collapsed?

A. No.

Q. Is there anything else that you think is important that you would like to add?

A. No. That's pretty much it.

MR. FEILER: I want to thank you for spending time with us. It's very important that we get this accomplished. The department is appreciative.

That concludes the interview at 1040

File No. 9110081

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT ROBERT LAROCCO

Interview Date: October 12, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. FEILER: Today's date is October 12th, 2001. The time now is 1102 hours. This is Monte Feiler of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I am conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name, rank and area of command.

LIEUTENANT LAROCCO: Lieutenant Robert Larocco. I'm assigned to Ladder 9 in the 1st Division in lower Manhattan.

MR. FEILER: Of the New York City Fire Department.

We're conducting an interview at the lieutenant's office in the quarters of Ladder 9, and this is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Also present is --

MS. QUEVEDO: Fabiola Quevedo of the Fire Department, City of New York.

Q. Okay, Lieutenant, you can go ahead.

A. I'll start my story on the morning of the 11th, Tuesday morning. I was off duty and I had an appointment with a friend at 10:30 in the morning. So I took the train into the Village over here. When I got off the train, I thought to myself what should I do, should I go have coffee with the guys in the fire house, which I kind of do all the time. It's kind of loud and noisy. Or should I do some like quiet time.

There was a greasy spoon diner on Second Avenue. I figured I'd go have the breakfast special over there, read the paper, get served, have a couple cups of coffee. I was early, so I thought I'd kill some time.

I was walking across town on Tenth Street. When I got to Tenth Street and Second Avenue, right where Stuyvesant cuts in, there's a church over there. In front of the church, there's kind of like a park. It has trees out there and benches. They were setting up a green grocer market. So I stopped.

It was a real nice day, clear day, nice weather. I was looking at the stuff that they were putting out. Now we all heard a plane that sounded like it was in trouble. So everyone stopped what they were doing. It was obvious there was something wrong with the motors. They were like straining, and they were louder than normal. Normally over Manhattan a plane flies very high.

We all looked in the sky and didn't see anything, but then for six or seven seconds flying out of the northeast, headed southwest, was this jetliner, like the kind of thing you would go on to go to Miami Beach or Vegas or something like that.

It was flying very low, probably about 350 feet. As it passed over us, it wobbled, just a little bit. Then after six or seven seconds of seeing it -- we lost sight of it, because there were six-story tenements around us so that patch of sky that we saw it for just lasted that small amount of time.

Anyway, I kind of thought to myself that it was headed toward Newark Airport. It was going southwest kind of in the general direction. I didn't think much of it. So I started walking to go where I was going to have breakfast, and then I heard a dull thud; not an explosion but an actual dull thud with a little bit of metal to it. I kind of stopped in my tracks and I thought for a second. I said nah.

I continued going for my breakfast. I crossed Second Avenue and started walking north on Second Avenue between 11th and 12th Street. At that point probably within a minute of the thud, people started running out of the stores on Second Avenue there. They were saying, "Oh, my God, oh, my God, a plane just crashed into the World Trade Center."

I kind of thought to myself that they were making -- putting two and two together with a low-flying plane, a thud. I kind of thought the worst-case scenario that it dropped a motor or something on the west side or somewhere downtown.

I continued heading toward the greasy spoon diner. When I got like a store or two before, a woman runs out of the store and she possibly grabbed me by my arms; I'm not sure. She looked me square in the face at very close range, and she said, "Sir, sir, it's so terrible, it's so terrible, did you hear, a plane just crashed into the World Trade Center." I told the lady, "Lady, come on, get a grip." She said, "I'm not kidding around. She said go inside the store. They have it on the radio."

She's looking at me like pretty serious. I said I'll humor this nut job. So I went into the store. In the store there were two guys with a radio, and they were intently listening to it. I stood there for like five seconds and said, "Hey guys, what's going on?" They said, "They're saying a plane crashed into the World Trade Center."

I thought for a second. I went out on Second Avenue. I looked south on Second Avenue. You normally can't see the towers from where I was. But going from west to east was a cloud of white smoke with dust. Actually I thought it was a cloud at first. It wasn't traveling fast, but it was like a long cloud.

Then I noticed that this cloud had like a light to medium gray tint on the top of the cloud. I kind of thought to myself oh, that must be a rain cloud. Then all of a sudden the light bulb went off in my head: If that was a rain cloud, the dark part would be on the bottom. I said something's wrong.

So I jogged back to the fire house, which is 11 blocks. As I turned on Great Jones Street, I saw Ladder 9 whip out of quarters. I ran to the fire house. There was no one there. I stopped at the house watch, and I saw on the TV the towers were on fire.

So I called my mother from the department house watch and I told her, "Mom, turn on the TV. The towers are on fire." She said, "Are you kidding?" I said, "I'm not kidding around." I said, "Listen, I've got to go." That was one of my aces in the hole. I know at that point my mother started praying for me. She knew that I was probably in trouble. I usually am.

I had nice clothes on, and I wasn't going to meet my friend at 10:30. So I changed my clothes. I threw on my uniform. I jumped in my bunk pants. I grabbed my turnout coat and helmet. I ran a block and a half over to Broadway, and I flagged down a cop car.

They stopped and just said, "Come on, get in." So I dove in the back of the cop car, and they drove me down Broadway. We stopped somewhere east of the towers, possibly at Broadway and Dey. I'm really not sure of the street.

I hopped out of the car. There was pandemonium. There were emergency vehicles all over Broadway. There were a lot of people running around in the streets. Anyway, I knew I had to make my way through to the towers. As I started walking onto the side street -- actually as I stepped onto the side street, the strangest thing I noticed was there was like three inches of snow on the ground. The snow was probably pulverized concrete, sheetrock, loose tiles, insulation, asbestos or what-have-you.

As I started walking west, I was looking at the towers and I was amazed. On both towers there was ten or more floors of fire going on. I wasn't aware the second plane had hit. I thought it was all from one plane. I didn't know.

What I did at this point is I wanted to make my way into the towers. I was most familiar with the south tower, so I figured I'd operate there. I was familiar with it because I covered them before I got the spot at Ladder 9. I covered them at the 1st Division for almost three and a half years, and from time to time I worked vacations in Engine 10 and Ladder 10. They're on Liberty Street directly south of the towers, across the street. So you were in and out of the towers a lot.

Plus during the latter part of the Clinton administration, Clinton and Gore would come to New York City on a pretty regular basis and they needed someone to man the Secret Service command post at Seven World Trade Center. So I would get that assignment pretty often.

You would get, needless to say, a couple of coffee breaks during the course of the day, because they were long tours. What I would do is I would walk around the area, Seven World Trade Center, the towers, look around, just kill some time. So I kind of had a good map going there in my head as to where most everything was.

So anyway, I approached the towers from Church Street and Liberty Street moving west on Liberty Street, staying on the far side of the towers and looking up. Stuff was falling off the towers every once in a while, panes of plate glass or metal or what-have-you, concrete.

Sporadically every once in a while you would catch a jumper going down. My mission was to get into the tower. I really couldn't concentrate on watching them take the whole ride all the way down. So I kept moving.

Anyway, when I got across the street from the towers, somewhere near the quarters of 10 and 10, I wanted to make my way up against the south tower. I ran as fast as I could, looking up, making sure I didn't get hit with anything. So I had to zigzag when I saw something coming and had to keep looking down, so not to trip over anything.

There were people's unidentifiable guts here and there on Liberty Street. The one thing that I remember most was that I noticed forearm and hand. It looked like a young woman. Her hand was manicured, and she had a nice ring on. I looked at it for like an extra half a second. I was amazed how it kind of looked fake, like a mannequin.

Anyway, so I continued to the building. I got up against the south tower. I put my hands on the building, and I sidestepped, looking up, trying to avoid getting hit from stuff that was falling. Ahead of me between where I was and the doorway that I wanted to get into, two people jumped from an upper floor, and they hugged all the way down. When they hit the ground, I could just see like a smash, not realizing the damage they had done to themselves.

For me to get to the building, when I came upon these people, I had to step over them, do my sidestep. I actually had to do a little hop over, it was kind of wide. The two people, both their legs were blown off and one of their heads was smashed into a thousand pieces of Jell-O. There was nothing left of it. You couldn't identify whether it was male or female either.

Anyway, I made my way into the door of the south tower soon after that, and I ran past the fire command post on the south end of the south tower. It was one or two of the usual fire safety directors, hired by the World Trade Center over there.

So I ran to the north end of the south tower, and there's two escalators going down.

They're stopped. There's civilians self-evacuating. There's a conga line coming down. At the bottom of these stairs was Chief Donald Burns, with his aide, and trying to make a handy talky transmission or listen to a handy talky transmission.

I ran up and I kind of stood in front of him. When he was finished with what he was doing, he looked up at me. I said, "Chief, Lieutenant Larocco, Ladder 9. I'm at your service. What do you need, sir?" He said, "Lieutenant, I need company men here ASAP." I said, "Yes, sir."

I turned back and I ran back to the south end of the south tower, but I stayed inside the doorway. I had the doorway open, and I could see units going across Liberty Street from the east end to the west end, and I was calling out to them as loud as I could. It's like they didn't hear anything. They were just on their mission going. I thought to myself the only way to get their attention and get Chief Burns a company would be to run back across the field of fire.

What I did was I noticed on Liberty Street there was an arc foot path, possibly about eight to ten feet wide. So I kind of looked up, made sure I wouldn't get hit, and I ran towards this foot path. I used that for cover to get across Liberty Street. I ran into Rescue 4 with Kevin Dowdell. That's a lieutenant. We were firemen together at Rescue 2 for many years.

I said, "Kevin, Chief Burns needs a company of men ASAP, north end of the south tower." He goes to me, "Rock, I've got orders. I've got to head toward the west command post." So I wished him well. I saw every guy on Rescue 4 that was working that day.

Q. Do you know their names?

A. No, no. But definitely Kevin Dowdell was the --

Q. Chief Burns' aide, did you recognize him?

A. No, not at all.

MR. FEILER: We're going to stop the tape at 11:15.

Restarting the tape with the same people: Fabiola Quevedo, Lieutenant Larocco and myself, Monte Feiler. It's 11:18 hours.

Q. Go ahead, sir.

A. After making contact with Rescue 4 and there was no other units around -- by the way, there weren't any -- I really didn't notice any incoming FD apparatus parking on Liberty Street due to stuff falling down. Once again, I ran the gauntlet, for lack of better terms.

I went into the tower, and I went towards Chief Burns. When I caught him inside, I saw he was surrounded by units. Looking at the area where he was, there was really no way to get up because of people streaming down those escalators.

So I made my way around into the Marriott. Once in there, there was a command post. At the command post was Chief Galvin. After a couple minutes, Chief Cassano showed up. Units were reporting in one after another. I caught Chief Cassano's view. I was waiting for orders and he gave me like a stand fast signal.

In those few minutes there was a pay phone, and I called my wife, believe it or not. I told her where I was. I was with my gear. She was really worried. Actually I had to lie to her. I told her I was assigned to a first aid station three blocks from the tower with people doing first aid. So once again I got another person praying for me. So there's another ace in the hole going for me.

Anyway, I hung up on her, and I went back to the command post. Units were reporting in one after another. One unit in particular that I remember, Ladder 11, Mike Quilty. I was standing up against the counter of the command post. He came up to me shoulder to shoulder. I wanted to say hi to him. He's a friend of mine. In the speed and confusion the way things were going, he just got his orders and took his men upstairs. By the way, Ladder 11, there were no survivors from that tour from 9/11.

Units were coming in fast up to the command post, and orders were being barked out fast. They were getting sent up all different staircases and making their way up as best they can.

Anyway, at this point Billy Spade -- he's from Rescue 5. I knew him because I was in Rescue 2 for nine years. He comes into the command post, and he goes, "Hey, Rock, did you see where Rescue 5 went?" I said, "No, I didn't see anyone." As far as getting a transmission over the handy talky, forget about it. There were so many units on the scene at this time there was too much traffic on the handy talky channels, it was like useless.

Anyway, Billy and I, teamed up and we made our way somewhere north on the first floor where there was another command post going. There I saw Chief Hayden, and there were some units kind of standing fast. Me and Billy Spade went past them. We went up to the second floor. On the second floor we found the staircase on the northwest side of the building.

Q. Are you still in the Marriott now?

A. We're in the Marriott. People were streaming down from the tower -- I'm sorry, we came out of the Marriott and into the tower through the interior. So now we were operating in the actual tower.

Q. South tower?

A. South tower. All the interior operations that I've been describing were in the south tower.

Let me take a step back. My wife reminded me the other day, I said, "What did I tell you when I called you up besides that I was working at a first aid station?" She said that I told her that it's raining people, and she said that I had like a hollow sound in my voice when I said it.

Anyway, fast forwarding back to Billy Spade and I. So on the second floor of the south tower, northwest end of the building, there's a stairway there. People were evacuating down the stairway, and I notice water streaming down the stairway. That's telling me that when the plane hit it took out the standpipe in that particular stairway. I was just saying to myself by the size of the plane and whatnot, it probably took out most of the standpipes and fire suppressing systems within the building.

Anyway, like I said, people were self-evacuating, and Billy and I went up a few floors. We separated ourselves by two floors. What we were doing was, we were just like a Fire Department presence, telling people, "Calm down. You're almost at the bottom." We were reassuring them.

From time to time I would ask people, "What floor are you from? Hey, you guys, what floor are you guys from?" They would say 51. Then I'd wait a few minutes. "Where you guys from?" They would say 63.

Anyway, at this point some ESU cops were headed up the tower, and they had Scott packs on and no turnout coats or anything like that, just police uniforms. One of the sergeants sees me and goes, "Hey, Lieutenant, Lieutenant, I've got to tell you something." I said, "Yeah, what's up?" He actually pulled me to the side and he whispered in my ears and said, "The Pentagon just got hit with a plane." I said, "Get out of town. What, are you kidding me?" He said, "I'm not kidding around. I have good information. The Pentagon just got hit, I'm telling you." So at this point I kind of realized this was a terrorist act, not an accident.

Anyway, from where I was stationed, like I said, I kept asking people what floors they were from. People started coming down from 88 and 89. I identified those floors. There were people coming down from 89 and they were dragging a woman with them.

I said, "What's the matter?" They said the woman had a heart attack. I said all right, put the woman down. I ran down, got Billy. Me and Billy ran up the stairs and carried the woman down the stairs. When we got to the second floor of this particular staircase where the staircase terminated, there were three Port Authority cops there. Right away they said, "We'll take her from you." She was kind of heavy, and we were happy to put her down and take a blow.

So we laid her down, and Billy and I turned to each other and were getting a game plan going, perhaps 15, 20 seconds, and I turned around and I looked at the cops and I looked at the woman. The woman was just like laying there. The cops were just standing there. They weren't doing anything.

I said, "Hey, guys, are you going to help this woman? What's going on?" I noticed one of the guys was a sergeant. I said, "Sarge, did you radio for oxygen?" He had a handy talky on. He kind of looked at me and shrugged. I said, "Come on, let's pick her up, we'll carry her right downstairs. We'll throw her inside a bus, an ambulance."

So one of the cops grabbed her from under the arms and I grabbed her by the legs, facing backwards, walking backwards. We carried the woman across the north end of the south tower from the west side to the east side.

And we got to those escalators that I was telling you about earlier that Chief Burns was earlier operating at the bottom of these escalators. There weren't that many people on the escalators, and the escalators -- like I said, the motors were stopped. The stairs were stationary.

Just as I put my foot on the first stair on the escalator, the building started like shaking. It was like a wave in the floor and a real loud noise. What we did was, me and the police officer started running from the east northeast end of the building toward the west.

Along my right side is the north wall, and it's glass. It's about 25 feet of glass, and about every 25 foot there's a concrete column there. I know this is right at my right side, like maybe three or four feet over my right side.

Anyway, just to describe to you the collapse of the south tower coming down, I really wasn't aware there was a full collapse. I thought it might have been just a localized collapse. It was the loudest noise I've ever heard in my life. It was in both ears. Kind of like those rockets that they launch the space shuttles with, it was like I had one going off in each ear. When I thought it was the loudest noise I ever heard, every second it was just increasing getting louder and louder and louder.

I was running as fast as I could. With this noise getting louder and louder, also what's happening simultaneously was light -- whatever light we had was becoming darkness, like obscuring and getting dark fast, like someone pulling down the shades real fast.

Anyway, it kind of sounded to me as if the collapse was aimed right at me, right at my back. I was running as fast as I could, and when I felt that I was getting overtaken by the collapse, where there was no hope, I threw myself on my knees at the next concrete column that I came up against I kept that on my right side.

I held onto my helmet with my hands and I yelled out, "Jesus, save me." With that the collapse came and I started getting buried. Stuff was falling down. It was loud and just kept coming and coming. It's hard for me to give you a time frame. I'm just going to guess and say this collapse probably took about 30 seconds before I caught some silence, the collapse started to terminate. Maybe it was a little more than that. I don't know. There's no way of telling.

At this point I'm there and the first words I said to myself -- it may sound strange hearing this in the office, but I said to myself, "Am I still alive?" Because there was no way of knowing. I knew I had brain function. Am I already dead? I don't know any of this.

What I did was I said let me see if I can move. So I moved my left arm. I said all right, that wasn't torn off. I moved my left leg. I said all right, that wasn't torn off. With that I went to take a breath, which apparently I held my breath this whole time. I guess it's like some kind of survival instinct, whatever you want to call it.

I went to take a breath. I took in a mouthful of this thick dust of, once again, pulverized concrete, sheetrock, insulation, asbestos, whatever the heck was floating around.

What I did there was I kind of hacked out what I could and put my face underneath my shirt. I was breathing the air that was next to my body, which was fairly fresh. I opened my eyes to look to see if I could see anything, and I saw nothingness, like total blackness. The best way I could describe it to you is if I was buried in my coffin with six feet of dirt thrown on top. Total absolute black.

Anyway, what I did was I had some light stuff covering me. I really wasn't hit with anything too heavy. I kind of threw off whatever was on top of me, and I dug myself out of this pile of dust that I was in, like pulverized sand and powder, actually more like flour than anything else.

Being familiar with the buildings, I knew somewhere along that north wall I would find a doorway that would lead me to my next point of contact, which I'll get into as we go step by step.

I started crawling along that side with the glass to my right, which is my north side. So I was headed west, still going in a straight line, and feeling each pane of glass, as I was hoping to find that doorway. At one point I stopped and I tried to kick my way through the plate glass, but it really wasn't working. I just, undeterred, continued on, and did not go back.

Also what I did before I started moving, in my turnout coat pocket I had a tuberculosis mask. So what I did was I took it out of the package, and I was able to get on this tuberculosis mask to kind of filter the air. It gave me a little bit of help. Then I started crawling.

Anyway, like I said, I started crawling. I hear people moaning from time to time, but things were so critical, the situation was so bad, that I didn't know if I could help them. I kind of felt that if I stopped to help them I wasn't going to make it out. So I thought my best way would be to make it out and try to get help for them from the outside.

So PS, I'm crawling and crawling, operating in total blackness, but being a fireman on the job over 20 years, that's how you operate a lot of times. You operate on blank, you operate on feel. Knowing I had this straight glass wall with these concrete columns every 25 feet, following that pattern was pretty simple, believe it or not.

So I followed the glass and concrete until I found a door handle on one of these panes of glass. I pulled it, and I was able to open it up. What I did was I got on my knees, I opened up the door, and I pulled the chock out of my helmet. I stayed on my knees --

MR. FEILER: Stop the tape at 1132 hours.

Resuming the tape. Present is Lieutenant Robert Larocco and myself, Monte Feiler, and Fabiola Quevedo.

Q. Go ahead, sir.

A. I was at the door, and I pulled the chock out of my helmet and I chocked the door open. I got on my knees, and I faced the area that I had just come from. Like I said, I passed people that were moaning.

I called out to the people. I said, "You need to listen to me. I'm a fireman. I have a door open here. Make your way towards my voice. This may be your only way out. Everybody, come on, you've got to try. Make your way towards this area. Make your way toward me. I'm here."

Perhaps they were civilians, firefighters or police. I don't know. Like I said, it was absolute zero, and they had to make their way towards something. So I stayed there, and I called out to them for a couple of minutes.

It's funny, no one came. But a few days later I told my sister the story, and she was like, "Stop the story, stop the story." I said, "Why, what's the matter?" She said, "I was just listening to the radio. There was some guy trapped in the south tower, second floor, north end. He said the only reason he's alive is someone said, 'I'm a fireman, I've got a door open over here, you need to make your way to my voice.'" He kind of quoted me verbatim. She said the fellow said, "I don't believe that was actually a fireman; it was an angel sent from God. That was my only way out."

Anyway, getting back to my situation, as far as I know, no one was coming. So I turned and I started crawling. In the map that I had in my mind, I knew I had to find these six elevators, a bank of three on each side. From there I would find the escalator and be able to make my way down to the first level and from there try and get out.

So what I did was I was crawling, and once I got outside the doors, believe it or not I had about a foot and a half of visibility. So things were starting to look up for me. I just started making methodical searches as I would searching a fire apartment.

Sure enough, I found what I was looking for. I found the three I was looking for, and just opposite them I found the second bank. I knew that I was very close to this escalator that I was looking for that I needed to find.

So what I did was I was feeling around the area searching, and I found that rubberized handle, whatever that is, and I felt the way it looped up. I felt for where the stairs were, and I felt the tread of the stairs.

I went down the stairs backwards, kind of not knowing if the stairs were collapsed, so I wouldn't take a header and fall down a few levels should the stairs be missing. God was watching over that set of stairs, and I was able to make it down to the first level.

When I got down to the first level, I started crawling around, looking for that way out, that exit door. I kind of realized something, that I was in an area of the building that I was unfamiliar with. The best way to describe it was it's some kind of service area of the building.

I thought to myself what should I do, should I backtrack and make my way up? Also what was going on while everything else was going on, I was detecting more and more smoke in the dust. Fires in that area were starting to take off. I thought to myself without the benefit of a mask SCBA operating in that environment, I might get overcome by carbon monoxide and would never make it out. So I figured I'd roll the dice and really give the area that I was in at this point a good once-over, see what I could do.

I crawled around, and I found some steps going down. I went down these steps, about five steps they were, and I was in a small little lobby, and I found what I was looking for. I found doors with push bars. So I stood up and pushed the push bar to open up the door, and nothing happened. I thought to myself this is a locked exit. That's illegal. It's funny the things that you think about.

So I tried a second time, and I pushed the push bar, pushed the door and nothing happened. So I tried a third time, pushed the push bar, and then I muscled the door as best I could. I was only able to get the door open two or three inches. I could see the sunlight come in through the door. Through the dust I could see the sunlight.

I was able to look out the door, and I saw that everything had collapsed. There was a lot of stuff that had collapsed in front of that door that was blocking that path. Like I said, keeping in mind there's fires in the area, there's smoke in the dust. I had to make my way out of these doors one way or another.

I didn't have any tools or anything, so what I did was I maintained the door in its open position, about two or three inches that I was telling you about. I laid down on the floor, and I put my feet flat on the door and, with my hands, I reached one hand between my feet and one hand above my right foot. With my legs I pushed the door with all the force I had in my body. I was pushing for my life. Even pushing for my life I could only get it open about ten inches. Believe it or not, I was able to work my way out that door opening there.

Once I got out, I was somewhere on the north end of the building. I stumbled around. My visibility was cut by 90 percent because I had all garbage in my eyes. They were burning me. Maybe it was like pulverized sheetrock, the limestone. My eyes were on fire. I could see a little. I was aware that I was outside and whatnot. Perhaps I was a little bit stunned or maybe in shock. I knew I was outside.

I kind of wandered for, I don't know, maybe a minute or so. I got a game plan going. I knew that I wanted to head north. So I headed north for approximately a block. I came to a street intersection. I really couldn't tell you what street intersection it was, but I will tell you this: Just to my left hooked up was Engine 235. They were hooked up to a hydrant, and the chauffeur was running water through the pumps and out the outlet.

The chauffeur ran up to me -- it was Phil Scarfi from 235 -- he said, "Lieutenant, Lieutenant, I need to help you. I need to help you." I thought to myself, gee, I must be badly hurt and not know it. Maybe I'm bleeding out or something. So he grabbed me by my turnout coat and he pulled me over by the engine.

What he did was -- he took my helmet off me. I got my head and face underneath the water and I started washing out all the garbage that I had in my nostrils and in my throat, and I got to wash out my eyes. When I was through doing that, I ran my head under the outlet of the water for about a minute just to like cool down and get my wits about me.

When I pulled my head out, I was drinking the water and everything. I pulled my head out and I looked at the water and the water that was coming out and it was thick brown. But I tell you the truth, it was the best water I ever tasted.

Anyway, Phil Scarfi turned to me and said, "Lieutenant, what should we do now?" He was there all alone. By the way, everyone else from 235 ended up getting wiped out. I told Phil Scarfi, "You got any gear with you?" He said, "Yeah." I said, "Get your gear. We'll try reporting to a command post." I said "We're going to have to effect rescues. We probably have a lot of our guys missing." In the back of my mind, to tell you the truth, at that point I knew things were bad, but I really hadn't realized the whole south tower had collapsed.

So PS, Phil Scarfi, and I made our way to the street intersection of Vesey Street and West Street. I stood on the west side of West Street and Vesey Street facing south, and I was looking for that command post that I thought would be there and wasn't there.

What I saw was total pandemonium. I saw policemen, firemen, running around, civilians running, no real direction. They were all running in all different directions in a panic. Some civilians were covered with blood. I recall that. Looking up at the tower, another jumper coming down.

Anyway, while I was taking all this in -- this was all, say, less than ten seconds I was looking at all this -- I notice two things. I notice my hearing -- I could hear everything, but my hearing was like turned down, like the volume was turned down so I only had about 10 percent of my hearing. People ran by screaming. I could hear them. I was aware they were screaming, but it wasn't loud. But I could also hear people talking. It was kind of like weird, but that's what was going on between my eye balls.

Also the other thing I was aware of, was that as I stand and I look, normally everyone is moving at a pretty quick pace, and they were in one sense, but my perception was everything was moving in slow motion. Just let me add to that everything was crystal-clear. I was taking in everything that was happening and checking it all out.

Anyway, at this point three guys started running toward me. One guy believe it or not -- it may sound weird, but to me an Arabic-looking guy, American though. And the two guys that were chasing were yelling, "Stop, stop, FBI, FBI." One guy was a tall white guy. He had a long-sleeved white shirt and tie on.

Anyway, I watched them chase this fellow toward me. Just as the guy was passing to my right maybe about 12 feet away, the so-called FBI guys, they get a hold of the guy, threw him on the floor and put cuffs on him. I'm watching all this occur like in that slow motion thing.

The next second I heard that loudest noise in the world that I was describing before getting louder and louder. What I did was I made a 180, and I started running north up the west side of West Street. On both sides of that side of West Street, there were FDNY rigs, one parked one right after the other.

What happened was I saw guys dive underneath the rigs. Although that seemed tempting, I knew not to do that. That was something I didn't want to do, because I kind of figured the tower was toppling. Once again the way the noise was getting louder and the lightness of day was turning into the blackness of night due to the impingement of the collapse, I just wanted to keep moving.

Anyway, I ran and you really weren't getting too far before you got hit with the collapse. So in my mind, coming off Vesey Street and West Street, I said if I can only make it to the rear of the third rig, that's where I'm going to stop and I'm going to get behind the rig and hug the back of the rig so if I do get caught in the collapse, which seemed inevitable, perhaps I get caught in a void and maybe dig my way out or really not be crushed too bad, so if my body was recovered it would be pretty much intact. Weird things go through your mind.

Anyway, as I got to the rear of the third rig, in my mind I was saying all right, this is it, that's where I'm going to go. Like I said, it sounded like the collapse was going to overtake me anyway before I reached the rear of that third rig.

When I got to the third rig, my mind was saying stop, but my legs kept going. They wanted to make it to the fourth rig, which is Ladder 118. I really feel like God had his hand on me, because from what I understand a concrete column came through the front of 118 and came down and would have ended up crushing me had I chosen to seek refuge behind rig number three.

Anyway, I started running. Ladder 118 is a tractor-trailer. It's the longest rig that we have in the Fire Department. I really didn't feel like I was going to make it. My legs were really -- I was really cooking. I was running as fast as I could for 46 years old.

Anyway, I made it to the back of Ladder

118, thinking that I had zero time left, but in actuality I had two and a half seconds. In that two and a half seconds, I got on my knees behind the rig and there was an eye coming off the back of the rig and I shoved by right hand inside the eye and with my left hand I put my hand on top of my helmet to hold my helmet on my head.

Not thinking I had any time, the last thought that came through my mind -- because, as I'm saying, I had about two and a half seconds to think this -- was I thought to myself death, I said I just cheated you. I said now you're going to come back and get the payoff on me.

With that, we got hit, and we got hit hard. The collapse came. The noise level was very, very loud. Zero visibility again. You feel like the ground shaking and stuff flying around. Afterwards, days later, I saw steel I beams got twisted and thrown around like toothpicks. There wasn't much too them.

Anyway, so the collapse occurred. The time frame again, I'm going to guess and say perhaps 30 seconds, perhaps longer. I can't really give you a time frame. Not for a million dollars I couldn't give it to you. That's not really a lot of money nowadays, a million dollars.

Anyway, now the collapse stopped. The sound stopped. Now once again, and I'm dead serious, I ask myself am I still alive. With that I took a breath, because like I said I guess that defense mechanism in a situation like that you kind of like stop breathing.

In that breath I took a mouthful, a big mouthful, of that dust. I kind of like hacked it out as best I could. Once again I stuck my face underneath my shirt to get some fresh air. I took about four or five breaths, and during that time, even though there was zero visibility, I was aware there were guys all around because I could hear them. They weren't talking. Some of them were crying like they were children, and others were whimpering like little babies.

I took my fourth or fifth breath, and I really feel like God gave me the words to say to them. I blurted out the orders. I said, "If you can hear my voice, you're still alive. What you need to do is get your faces under your shirts now. Come on, do it, do it, get it done, go, go, now, face under your shirt."

With that I covered up my mouth again with my shirt. I took about four or five more breaths. I heard about half the guys stop their crying and whimpering, but the other half were still crying and whimpering. So I took another deep breath and I blurted out, "You guys want to see your families again? Get your faces under your shirt. Come on, do it now, get it done, come on, faces under your shirt, everybody, come on." I covered up again.

During the next four or five breaths, I noticed no one was crying, no one was whimpering. So now I took another deep breath and I said, "Okay, guys, come on, the collapse is over. What we're going to do is, we're going to stay here until we get some visibility. Then we're going to move away from the collapse area together. Let's hang tight guys. Stay right where you are." So now I took another few breaths, and from time to time I would call out to the guys. I asked if anyone was hurt, and no one was.

MR. FEILER: I'm going to stop the tape at 1204 hours and switch to side B.

Continuing the interview with Lieutenant Larocco and Fabiola Quevedo and myself, Monte Feiler, at 1205 hours.

Q. Continue, sir.

A. All right. So there we were. We were behind Ladder 118, and guys were all around in that area. We waited for a few minutes, and from time to time I would call out to the guys and just try and instill some confidence in them, try to keep even one guy from panicking, because I know if one guy panics he can start a wave of panic. So I kind of tried to talk everyone through it my best.

After a few minutes, we got a foot and a half, maybe two feet of visibility. I called out to the guys, "All right, guys, come on, we've got to make our moves now. Anyone need help? Anyone can't move?" No one answered.

Underneath the truck there was an ESU cop that where I was kneeling on my knees he had his head like between my knees on the ground. During the course of waiting for us to get visibility, I was aware that he was there. So I helped him up, and I helped up another firefighter.

We started moving away together. We started going north up West Street, and it was very dusty. There wasn't a lot of visibility. Perhaps as we started walking we got about three or four feet of visibility. Everyone was aware that there were guys around them, although you really couldn't see anyone. Of course the cloud was kind of like a nuclear winter thing. You're walking through fallout.

As we were moved further away from the collapse area, and as time passed, you get more and more visibility. You get 6 feet of visibility, then after a little more time maybe 8 feet then 10 feet then 12 feet. Now you're aware there were a lot of guys around. You hear masks going off, the pass alarm. I stopped at a couple of masks, but they were just masks. There was no one attached to the masks.

Anyway, we walked north for a distance. I can't really can't give you the distance, but I'm going to try and tell you it was about five blocks. Then you were getting more and more visibility. Then you kind of like stepped out into the sunshine, almost like where this cloud ended and fresh air began.

Anyway, in this area there were a lot of guys, guys running around. You could see everyone was covered with this dust and whatnot. So I just figured let me continue north. Maybe they're making a staging area -- you figure they would have a staging area a little further away from the collapse.

So I walked about a block north and I hear "Lieutenant Larocco, Lieutenant Larocco." I look and I see Mike McGuire from Ladder 9. I go over to him, and say, "Good to see you, Mike. You all right?" He says, "Yeah, I'm all right." I said, "Where's the rest of the guys?" He said, "I don't know." I said, "You stay with me."

So Mike stayed with me. We walked north about another block. A guy starts calling me, "Rocky, Rocky." I look to my right, and I see a firefighter calling me, covered with dust. I look at him and say, "Who are you?" He said, "Smitty." Smitty, Lieutenant Smith, Ladder 9. He was working the day tour on September 11th. I said, "Smitty, good to see you." I was almost apologetic for not recognizing him. With him were Donald Casey, Ladder 9, and Bert Stringstead from Ladder 9.

Bert and Donald were sitting on that median in the middle of West Street. Actually Donald was like laying down. He sat up, looked at me, gave me like a peace sign, and he laid back down.

Lieutenant Smith said to me, "I'm missing guys," this, that and the other. "Who are you missing?" "I'm missing Mike McGuire." I said, "Here, one down, Mike McGuire is right here with me." I called Mike McGuire over. Here's Mike McGuire. Who else are you missing? He said Jeff Walz, Ladder 9, Gerard Baptiste, Ladder 9, and John Tierney, Ladder 9, our probie. He had just came to the fire house July 28th, so he was only with us for about six weeks.

I said, "All right, Smitty, stay here with the guys. I'm going to go back. I'll see if I can dig him up." I tried to assure Lieutenant Smith that --

MR. FEILER: Stopping the tape at 12:09.

Resuming the interview with Lieutenant Robert Larocco. Fabiola Quevedo and myself, Monte Feiler, at 1302 hours.

A. I tried to assure Lieutenant Smith that the guys were more than likely okay, that they probably just got fragmented away from the unit, that there was a lot of confusion, guys running in different directions, the dust making recognition almost impossible at times.

So I walked back north up West Street into the area of the cloud. I would see guys walking out and I would try to look at them to recognize their faces, but it was kind of hard. Everyone was so covered with dust, you really couldn't tell who was who. It would be hard for me to tell my best friend.

What I did was I would call their names. I would call out, "Ladder 9, anyone from Ladder 9? Jeff, Jeff Walz, are you around? Gerard, Gerard, where are you? John, John Tierney, are you around? Where are you guys? Come on, Ladder 9, where's the Ladder 9 guys?" I searched around as best I could, and I didn't come up with anything. There were still guys leaving the collapse zone sporadically, not too many at this point.

So I went back to Smitty, and I told him I didn't find them but it doesn't mean that something bad happened to them. They're probably attached to some other unit on the other side of the collapse or somewhere around.

So PS at that point -- my eyes started burning again, and my skin was all irritated from sweating and having I guess that pulverized sheetrock that's made of lime and was making me itch and everything. I was looking for a place I could clean off.

Somewhere between those buildings on Greenwich Street -- they have Greenwich Street addresses. I know my aunt lives in 310 Greenwich. But between like between those buildings, maybe between the second and third building, there's a side street right off of West Street.

There's a hydrant that was opened up. It was a shady spot, so up against the building I went and I took off my helmet, my coat and my shirt, stripped down to the waist. I got up underneath the hydrant and gave myself a bath out in the street and got all the stuff off me that was itching me and irritating me. I got myself together.

I saw a few guys. I ran into guys from Engine 5. They were missing Manny, who to this day is missing, more than a month later. Otherwise their unit was intact. I saw my buddy Billy Walsh from Ladder 1, and we sat down in the shade and we spoke about our experiences, what we went through, for a couple minutes, anyway. We drank some water and got ourselves together.

At this point I went back out on West Street. I walked around on West Street. There were a lot of guys. There were guys that had been there prior to the collapse. There were guys for the recall. Units were reporting in, probably a few thousand guys, maybe two, three, maybe more 4,000 guys.

There really weren't any orders for a concerted rescue effort into the collapse zone at that time. We were hanging out for what seemed a long time, perhaps an hour or so after the collapse. The guys really didn't have any direction.

What I did was I walked -- I stepped up on a median. As I walked, I called to the guys, "Come on, guys, get yourselves out of the sun and into the shade and get some water in you. When we start a rescue effort, I need everybody here a hundred percent. Come on, guys." Sure enough, hard to believe guys actually listened, big groups going into the shade and taking my advice.

Anyway, time started passing, and perhaps we were there for maybe two and a half hours that passed. There were a lot of rumors going around, and I still really didn't believe that the second tower was hit by a second plane.

MR. FEILER: Stopping the interview at 1306.

Resuming the tape at 1308 hours. Same people present.

A. Like I said, the rumors were flying around, and they turned out to be quite factual, about the second tower getting hit. Although at the time I really didn't believe it until I saw it later on television. The thing about the Pentagon, the plane crashing out in Pennsylvania, it was all coming into the picture that this is something major going on.

Anyway, so there we were. We were in the middle of West Street, a few thousand guys waiting for orders. It really wasn't happening in a concerted effort. Perhaps there were small splinter groups of guys getting orders to do things. There we were, like vulnerable.

Anyway, all this talk about planes crashing and guys using words like "kamikazes" and whatnot. At that point we hear a plane -- it turned out to be two planes, and they were closing in on us and the motors were getting louder and louder.

All eyes went up to the sky and were looking. I kind of thought to myself as I looked at guys running for their lives and for cover that now we're going to get kamikazed. The rescue workers, they are trying to take us out.

I stood there and looked at the sky all around in all directions and couldn't really tell where the sound was coming from. It was getting louder and louder. Then I spotted them, they were coming out of the west, like out of Jersey City, that way. They were two F15 fighters. I saw them, they were fully armed and the dual tail. I started yelling, "Hey guys, guys, look, those are our planes, those are our planes." Other guys started yelling it.

I'll tell you, everyone stood on their feet and everyone was cheering. I'll tell you, at that point even though I was kind of beat up at the time -- I wasn't going to give up, but I was beaten up. I stood up straight, I looked at those planes as they circled us and protected us, and I really felt proud to be American.

Q. Is there anything else that you think is important? Anything I haven't asked you?

A. The only thing is that later on I teamed up with Chief Jay Fischler of 46 Battalion at the time. Now he's in the 8th Battalion. We walked over by number Seven World Trade Center as it was burning and saw this 40-plus story building with fire on nearly all floors. We ran into a few of our old buddies from Rescue 2.

Q. Do you remember their names?

A. You know, right now I'm drawing a blank. I know these guys like my brothers. Mark Gregory was one, and maybe Billy Esposito from Rescue 2. I'm not too sure about him.

Q. What about firefighter Spade, you said initially did you run into him?

A. No, you see, when we put the woman down and gave her to the cops, we were talking. When I saw the cops weren't doing anything, I said pick the woman up and let's go. I kind of thought Billy Spade was going to pick her up, but there was a cop right there and he grabbed her.

At that point Billy and I separated. Billy ended up living. I wasn't too sure. I even told my wife a few days later this guy had to get killed. It was really bad, the collapse. He ended up surviving. From what I understand, he had a broken leg and some internal injuries.

As a matter of fact, he told the guys from Rescue 5 that I was probably dead, and I was on their board missing, presumed dead, until Sunday morning. That's a whole other chapter of the story. I made it. I'm here.

Anyway, after the operation Jay Fischler and I walked up to 1 Truck, and that's where I saw the second plane hit the tower on TV. I was amazed. I hung out at 1 Truck for about 20 minutes, got some water, and then from 1 Truck walked back here to Great Jones Street. I met a lot of different civilians, and they were very supportive. That's how I spent September 11th.

MR. FEILER: Thank you very much on behalf of the department. We're going to conclude the tape at 1313 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT PETER CACHIA

Interview Date: October 15, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Today is October 15, 2001. The time now is 655 hours. My name is Christine Bastedenbeck with the New York City Fire Department, conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name, rank, title and assigned command area of the New York City Fire Department.

A. My name is Peter Cachia. I'm an EMT with the New York City Fire Department, assigned to Battalion 4.

Q. Also present today is --

A. Christopher Eccleston of the New York Fire Department World Trade Center Task Force.

Q. Mr. Cachia, we would like you to relay your experience on the events of September 11, 2001.

A. On September 11, 2001, I was assigned to my Battalion in a light duty status, secondary to an injury back in the past. At approximately, let's see, right before the first plane hit the first tower, myself and the two Lieutenants on duty were at the desk and we heard the radio transmission that a plane had just crashed into the World Trade Centers.

I remember the conditions boss leaving to go to the scene, and the desk Lieutenant on duty was basically getting things in order. People were coming in. He was assigning them ambulances to go to the scene. After a few minutes of that, the Lieutenant had left and he had given me the keys to the station and said I was to -- anybody who came into the station, I was to get them to the scene, give them a radio and an ambulance and have them go to the scene.

About 9, 5 after 9 or 10 after 9, Lieutenant Amy Monroe came to the station and asked me if I could drive her to the scene. I advised her that I was on light duty. She said-- she asked me if I could drive and I said yes I can, as long as I didn't have to do any heavy lifting. She said okay.

We then proceeded to the scene, parked the ambulance on Cortlandt Street and then we proceeded to the first triage center, which was on Church Street, basically in front of the Trade Center complex.

Q. I'm going to ask you to mark on the map with the number 1 where you parked your vehicle. Do you know the vehicle number?

A. 13.

Q. Vehicle 13?

A. Yes. At that time when we proceeded to the triage center, at this time both towers had been struck. We met up with the triage Lieutenants there. I think Lieutenant Medjuck was on scene. Lieutenant D'Avila, Lieutenant Melaragno were all on scene. We started treating the patients as they came out. I saw a few of my partners that I worked with in their units there. They were treating patients in their ambulances.

We were there maybe for about 25 minutes or so and that triage center had been getting a little crowded, so Lieutenant Monroe had asked me if there was another triage center. I said I think there was one on Liberty Street, so she had asked me to go to that triage center and to see if they were taking, you know, patients over there or if they needed help or anything.

So I left her and I went to -- I was on the way to the second triage center when the first tower started coming down, which would be, I guess the south tower was coming down. When that started coming down, I basically turned around and like everyone else, I started running up the block, but due to my injury --

Q. Which way were you running, do you know?

A. I was running -- I guess this is, let me just get my bearing, this would be northeast.

Q. On Liberty?

A. Up Liberty. I was very close. I was like a little too close to the tower when it started coming down, because when I started running, I knew I was too close and I really didn't think I was going to get out of there. So about halfway up Liberty Street I saw a truck, I guess an SUV. It wasn't a police or a fire vehicle. It was just a car that was parked there. I went under the truck while the tower came down and the ground was shaking and the truck was shaking and I thought that was it for me. I thought I was done.

I stayed under there until I guess everything was over. I remember opening my eyes and looking out and it was just pitch black. I guess after a few minutes after it cleared up, after I opened my eyes, I looked out and it was bright out again. I got from under the truck and I went back up Liberty, which was now just a pile of rubble and I went to go back to the triage center where I was, where we started out and everybody had gone from there.

So I just continued going up Church Street and when I got to Church and Fulton Street, I met up with Lieutenant D'Avila again and he told -- said let's get out of here, the second one might be coming down.

So then we went back up Fulton Street and the second tower had come down, but we were far enough away from it, but again, like everybody else, we just ran.

After that, I remembered running down Fulton Street and going into a store, seeing the cloud of dust going by from the second tower and then hearing it coming down.

Q. At that time, were you with any other EMS personnel or fire personnel?

A. No, Lieutenant D'Avila had gone one way and I went the other way. When I came out, I started going back to the scene, but now my back was just bothering me a lot. I turned around and I was walking towards Downtown Beekman Hospital. I walked towards there. As I was walking towards there two police officers had saw me and they saw that I was in pain and I could hardly walk and they helped me down to Beekman Hospital.

I got to Beekman Hospital and the doctors, you know, they rinsed me off, because I was just covered in that dust. They asked me what the problem was. I said, you know, I have 3 herniated disks in my back. I'm fine. I just need to rest, just take care of everybody, because they were -- I mean -- they were overrun with patients.

I said just take care of everybody else. I'm fine. I just got to rest a little bit. So I sat down for a few minutes. I remember being in the hospital. I remember hearing somebody saying that they crashed a plane into the Pentagon also, so it was like just unbelievable what was going on. I stayed in the hospital for a little while.

Then I walked back down towards South Street and as I was walking down South Street, I was going past - I forgot the name -- there is like an apartment complex right across from Beekman Hospital and that was also being set up as a triage center. As I walked past there, I saw Lieutenant D'Avila. He said come inside, just rest for a little while. So I went in there and sat down for a few minutes. I stayed there for a few minutes and as I left, I walked out and I walked back down to South Street and at that time I flagged down a police car. He had taken me back to the station, because I was just in too much pain where I couldn't do anything after that.

So I came back to the station. I just basically stayed here for a little while. At the end of my shift at 3:00, the Lieutenant just said for me just to go home. I went home. I mean I didn't want to, but I was basically useless, because I couldn't -- my back was just in severe pain. I really wasn't any good to anybody. There wasn't anything to do here. We didn't have any phones or anything to answer, no computer to go on.

So that's about it. That's basically the day I don't think any of us will forget. Something that I never thought I would see in my life. Just lucky to be alive I guess. I guess it just wasn't my time.

Q. Is there anything else you would like to add to this about the events that happened prior to 12 noon?

A. No, I mean it's -- I don't know. It's just as a service, as an EMS service, I think we were very lucky. From the units from this Battalion being the first ones down there and us not losing anybody is a miracle.

Q. At any time, did you go into either one of the towers?

A. No. I mean I didn't want to, I really didn't. I mean I don't think anybody thought they would come down. I don't know, just I remember getting there and just looking up and just seeing these two gaping holes in the side of these buildings. It was just like watching a movie. I remember after the first one got hit, we all went out the door out here.

When it came over a plane crashed into the Trade Center, okay, a little Cessna. We didn't know until we went out and we looked and we saw and we all said this wasn't a Cessna. I remember coming back here. At that time the TV still worked. We had the TV on channel 4 news. We were watching it. I remember watching the news and looking and seeing the second plane going into it.

I said oh, my god. Is that the first plane or is that the second plane. I saw it was the second plane and then I remembered hearing Lieutenant D'Avila coming over the radio and saying Central be advised, a second plane just went into the second tower. We ran out and we saw the second plane.

It was like watching a movie. It really was. Something that you never thought you would see and something that you never comprehend. It's just a day, like I said, nobody will ever forget.

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Thank you for your time and your thoughts. This interview is concluded at 706 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT THOMAS J. BENDICK

Interview Date: October 15, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. ECCLESTON: Today's date is October 15, 2001. The time is 745 hours. This is Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name, rank, title and assigned command of the Fire Department of the City of New York regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

A. Thomas J. Bendick. Emergency medical technician, assigned to Division 1.

Q. Also present?

A. Christine Bastedenbeck of the New York City Fire Department.

Q. Thomas, can you tell us about the events of September 11, 2001.

A. Approximately I guess sometime around 9:45 or earlier, I arrived at work. I met up with one of the guys from the Division, Duane Walker, and myself and him responded to the World Trade Center incident, and parked our vehicle, which was an empty ambulance full of supplies, someplace approximately Fulton and Trinity, I guess near St. Pauls cemetery, where Lieutenant Melarango was on scene triaging patients. Exited the vehicle. We left our vehicle at that location.

Q. Can you mark on the map with a number 1 where you parked your vehicle?

A. Right about there, I guess.

Q. Also, would you happen to know what vehicle number it was?

A. I honestly do not. 300 series, one of the newer ambulances. I wasn't driving. I was the passenger. That vehicle was parked there and left there with supplies in the back. It wasn't being used for transporting patients. It was full of backboards. As I exited the vehicle , I spoke to the guys with Duane and said I was going to go to the command post to meet up with the Chiefs, being that I'm a Chief's aide.

Left the vehicle. I guess within a minute on scene, I left that location, took my bag of supplies that I had with me, some extra batteries and supplies, being that I figured we would be there for a long time, proceeded down Vesey Street towards the West Side Highway. Got to 7 World Trade Center.

I saw another EMS triage location with Captain Nahmod and Chief Peruggia were treating patients and I guess a little bit after I got past that point, there was a loud roar. This is probably I would say about 5 minutes after I got on the scene, maybe a little bit longer.

I figured another plane was coming. I stopped for a second, looked around and I didn't see anything and then I began to run towards the West Side Highway, where I saw MERV 1, figuring to get as far away from buildings, not knowing what was going on. I got to the corner of 140 West, where the New York Telephone Company building was, saw a little -- like a little indent into the building. It was a construction barrier or wall that was built.

I went behind the wall I guess with another Firefighter, Police Captain and a couple of civilians. We put our backs against the wall because of not knowing what the heck was going on. Then in a couple of seconds, the roar stopped and I guess like in a split second it was just pure black.

After it got dark, one gentleman said is everybody all right. I think everybody that was standing there was like yes, I'm fine. I think the same gentleman who was doing most of the talking, he asked a guy out loud who was talking to himself, he goes do we stay here or do we leave.

At the same time you hear everybody start coughing and choking on all the dirt and the fumes and the smoke, so immediately you knew there was no chance of staying there, so one guy is like well, we got to get out of here. Like I said, out loud everybody is basically thinking to themselves. One guy says, well, I think there is ambulances and fire trucks behind us going towards the highway. Then he said does anybody have a flashlight?

So I reached down in my belt and I actually had a small flashlight with me. I took my small flashlight out and turned that on and the guy that was talking, grabbed my hand immediately, because I guess he was standing right next to me and then we waved the flashlight around asking if there was anybody else near us. You could hear a couple of voices near us, but most of them said they couldn't see the flashlight, even though they sounded like they were about 2 feet from you.

So eventually, I think about 2 more people we were able to get and we all held hands. Then a couple of other people were able to work their way over and then grabbed on to us. So it was about I guess 5 or 6 of us, we all held hands and we used the one flashlight and we started walking towards the West Side Highway.

Like I said, we had an idea which way to go. You could kind of hear the diesel engine from one of the fire trucks, so like I said, we were hoping that was the West Side Highway. Like I said, the visibility was, I guess with the flashlight, about a foot. Without the flashlight it was zero.

Meanwhile you couldn't breathe, so at that point I was using my turnout coat and my shirt, put that over my face, trying to filter the air out. It wasn't like it was smoke. It was just dirt. It was like breathing dirt. So trying to just keep the dirt out of your mouth so you can get some form of air.

I remember not being able to see. I remember walking, hitting the curb, going by the guy who was in front of me, who was holding my hand with the flashlight. He tripped off the sidewalk and I held him and he said, you know, we said everybody watch out. There is a sidewalk, so I remember stepping off the sidewalk. You couldn't see your feet. You could just feel it. I can remember stepping over several fire hoses. Once again you couldn't see them. You could just feel them.

We found the fire truck we heard. We walked along the fire truck. We were holding the fire truck, feeling it. Got past the fire truck and there was more like open space, so we just kept walking up in the open space, heading north, trying to -- we couldn't run, you just had to go slow because you couldn't see.

I guess we got about -- I think about Murray Street, I would say. It would have had to been by the time we got to fresh air, because I remember the college. So we got someplace around the college where the fresh air started and I think in the middle of West and Murray, there was a Citywide ambulance parked with its passenger door open. I guess they had been and gone.

So I climbed in that ambulance, climbed in the back of their ambulance because it was a van. You can climb through. I got their saline out of the back, because my eyes and everything, my mouth were full of garbage. So I got out of the ambulance from the side door, and I washed my eyes out, washed my mouth out, trying to get as much of the dirt out of me. The other gentleman with us, once we got to free air, they all scattered and went to wherever they had to go.

After I washed my eyes out, I went back to I guess about the south point of the college on Murray.

There I met up with Captain Nahmod, who was at 7 World Trade Center. He got out. He was by himself and 2 FDNY EMS physicians came by. They had some of the dust masks, so one of them gave me a dust mask. I honestly don't know who they were. They were Fire Department members. So I got a dust mask, because it was still kind of dusty where we were standing.

At that point, they were trying to get an idea of what was going on, get a plan together. At that same point, I was looking around and I saw -- numerous civilians were asking are you all right, do you need anything. At that point, some place on the west side, on the West Side Highway, a cop had opened a fire hydrant and he had the hydrant going and everybody was like washing their face off, so then I went over there to wash off. I was letting the water go through my mouth and the cop is saying the water is dirty, what are you doing opening your mouth. I said at this point it doesn't really make a difference clearing what's in my mouth.

So I washed off again, because there was just so much stuff on you. Then I met up with Lieutenant Albuerme from Battalion 8, who now got on. I don't know where he came from, but he ended up on the same point, right around the college. So myself, Joe Cahill, a bunch of us met up, so we all started talking to get an idea together of what we wanted to do.

Right about that point, we were looking southbound and we were all standing like in a group huddled. We were saying okay, if people come out, you know, I guess we will get them, put them to the side, and sometime around there you saw that the north tower collapsed. That I actually -- the south tower I never saw collapse, didn't know it collapsed. All I could see was a large cloud.

At that point I could actually visually see the top floors of the north tower starting to give way and that began to collapse. At that point we all began to run north.

Q. Where were you at this point?

A. We had to be right at the same area, about West and Murray, because this is the -- where is the College of Manhattan College?

Q. This is it, I believe. That's not it. It's further up.

A. So we were further up at that point.

Q. It's right past Chambers, so you must have been like right around here.

A. Okay. So we had to be around Chambers, because we were at the south side of Manhattan Community College when the second building collapsed. So we actually may have walked even further then, because I remember we got to about Manhattan Community College. The other thing I should note, the pedestrian bridge there, which I think is all in the same area, and that's where we met up with everybody.

At that point, we ran north alongside of the college, because I was on the sidewalk right next to the college, going north and between the college there is a walkway, actually a road that goes under the college, so we ran in underneath there, so the college building is against our backs and then when the debris came, it would go past us, not necessarily striking us. The only thing we worried about was anything coming down on top of us.

At the same point, a plain clothes, which I assume was a police officer, fired three rounds of his revolver into the door of the Manhattan Community College, the glass doors, which caused a panic. Everybody was screaming shots fired, get down.

I actually visually saw the guy fire the 3 shots. He wasn't in a uniform. He was in plain clothes. I was actually screaming, no, calm down, he is shooting the door out because like I say, he just caused a huge panic, because now, obviously everybody knows it's a terrorist attack, and this guy is shooting his gun off. So he blew the doors out to the college, because they were glass doors. He climbed in, called people, try to get to safety.

At that point, I looked back, right before I made the turn, and it looked like most of the dust. It wasn't coming that far, so I wasn't too concerned about the actual building, so we stopped for a minute, relaxed, and walked back out on to the highway, and then said, okay, we need to set up another triage, figure something out. By the same people, Joe Cahill, Lieutenant Bearman and myself, some other people, I don't know who they were, all met up at the north corner of the college and we were trying to figure out how to get into the college to set up the triage and just get people off the street.

Joe Cahill made arrangements with some staff person at the college to get the gym open, which was on the second floor, but had an access stairwell from outside the building. So we went up into the gym, which they got open. We laid -- there's mats. We laid down mats. Brought some supplies in from the ambulance that was sitting on the street.

Don't ask me the number, it was an ALS ambulance. We got into the back door. Took their supplies out. Put those inside. Figured we will take members, police or whoever was like, you know, couldn't move, but you know, wasn't in need to go to the hospital, we just let them sit in there and take a break.

After we got that set up, we figured we will shuffle people up, MERV 4 was parked in the street right outside the door, so they were taking anybody that was truly hurt. They were looking at -- there was numerous ambulances on the West Side Highway. Basically like I said, everybody was just trying to see what they could do.

At the same point, one of the Lieutenants said, I don't know his name, said get everybody to take their coats and their gear off, because we don't know what's -- if they are contaminated with anything, before they go into the building.

So at that point, I went over to one of the fire Chiefs on the West Side Highway, where there was a fire truck parked. There was no firemen except for two injured firemen and this injured Chief, we were thinking of taking supplies off the truck, possibly hook up a hydrant to get decon going. The Chief said take whatever you want.

So it looked like a probationary firefighter who was off duty, because he was clean, he just like -- he had just shown up and a plainclothes cop and myself took a fire hose, hooked up to the fire hydrant right in front of the Community College, about a hundred feet from this intersection, and we put the hose to the corner, figuring as people come out at the intersection, we will wash them down, throw them in the gym, and let them get -- you know, take a break.

I don't know what time frame that was, or how long it took us to get all that accomplished, but it took a time. By that point, we set all that up, the gym was open, we had the whole plan, put everybody in the gym, wash them down, and if there was injured, the MERV was there.

So it seemed kind of organized, and it had an action plan, and sometime around there, we could hear on the Citywide radio that they were sending the rest of the units in to Chelsea Piers for north staging. I don't think they even knew we were there, because the radio was just too tied up to even try to tell them where we were.

So we just figured, you know, we are together, we will stay together, the people we had, treat them, there was ambulances there. Just throw them in the ambulances and get them out. We need to get people out. I guess all the responding units were going to Chelsea Piers, but we figured it was too far away to try to bring patients, because, I mean, it's a drive. So we figured if anybody -- if we needed to go there, we could go there, but we figured we still needed to treat people where we were.

Sometime around the same point they ended up calling, the Lieutenants came out to everybody and said we are evacuating, drop whatever you got, grab our supplies. We are getting out, because the Stuyvesant school they were feared was going to explode and there were reports of gas leaks and additional devices.

So about the same point we dropped all of our equipment, some of the EMTs and Lieutenants took the supplies that we had in the building out, threw them in the back of some of the ambulances, and sometime around that point, we were just like, okay, let's just get out.

At that point I was tired and I was like okay, I'm getting out. Got in the back of one ambulance that had the windows blown out, but the crew was in the front, so they start driving, so they opened the back doors and we stood in the back and there was all the other people on the street. We piled them all in the back of the ambulance and we drove up to Chelsea Piers. I remember, I think it was Pelham Manor Fire Department we threw in the back. A couple of cops, a couple of EMTs, I think St. Claire's EMTs. We had about 20 people in the back I wouldn't doubt it. We just drove up to Chelsea Piers.

At that point, that's like, we just gave up on what we were doing and we just headed to Chelsea Piers and then, you know, everybody regrouped, found who they were working with. Looked like most of the guys who were by themselves, they lost their partners, teamed up with somebody else and about that point they were setting up the hospital at Chelsea Piers. Some of the guys that were by themselves, I noticed went over to the hospital and were working out of the field hospital, big help. But I didn't see any patients go up there, except for that one Firefighter. I sat there for the rest of the night.

Then the Lieutenant said I'm going back to the station. You got a vehicle? I said okay, I'll come with you. It had to be sometime, I guess, around 6:00. Like I said, I can't tell you how long it took to accomplish the tasks. I didn't notice the watch. I was on the north side of the north tower at 6 World Trade Center when the south tower collapsed. Got out of that, grouped, the north tower collapsed, got out of that, went to the college, tried to set up and that's when they said they blew up the school and there might be additional explosions and they said evacuate the downtown area and then I went up to Chelsea Piers.

I don't think I missed any, but that's about it.

Q. Is there anything else you would like to add to this? Anything at all?

A. I don't think so. Obviously as you know, there was a lot going on. Lots of people moving around. Obviously there was numerous firefighters and everybody was coming south. We were all trying to find a safe distance to triage and do our work, but they didn't tell you what was safe at that point.

MR. ECCLESTON: Right. Okay. The time is 8 o'clock, this concludes our interview with Thomas Bendick.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER PETE GUIDETTI

Interview Date: October 12, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. McALLISTER: I'm Kevin McAllister from the office of administration. It's October 12th, 2001. We're on the eighth floor at Fire Department headquarters. It is 9:41 hours, and I'm here with Firefighter Pete Guidetti, who is going to recount his experiences from September 11th.

A. We'll start out I was in Ray Goldbach's office, the executive officer to the fire commission, discussing the things that had to be done that day around the office. Ray got a Nextel message that a plane went into the World Trade Center, and we both more or less thought it might have been a Piper Cub, a Cessna or something like that. We had no idea it was a commercial plane.

With that I look out the window, and I see the World Trade Center, I see the hole, I see the black smoke, and I just yelled for my boss, Commissioner Feehan. He came over. He saw it. He said, "Oh, my God. Let's go."

With that Ray says, "Do you want to come with me?" to Commissioner Feehan. Commissioner Feehan said, "No, I'm going to go with Pete, my driver. He has all my gear and stuff in the car." Then Ray says, "All right, then I'll come with you." With that Tom Fitzpatrick and Tom McDonald were nearby. They asked Commissioner Feehan if they could come along also. He said absolutely.

I went down into the garage first to get into the car and get it ready for them, and a couple minutes later they came down and they got in the car with me.

Q. All four of them?

A. Four of them, Feehan in the front, McDonald, Ray Goldbach and Fitzpatrick in the back.

We exit the garage. We go over the Brooklyn Bridge. One lane was open and cleared for us. The other two lanes to the right of me were just bumper to bumper cars. I had this one clear shot over the Brooklyn Bridge with no interference of traffic.

Q. Could you see the Trade Center as you were driving over the bridge?

A. I didn't look to see it because, driving kind of fast, my eyes were glued to the road. If they got glimpses of it -- we saw enough of it initially in Ray's office to know what we were heading into.

My plan of action was to take Chambers Street over to West Street and down West Street to the World Trade Center. Exiting off the Brooklyn Bridge, heading towards Chambers Street, Ray Goldbach said, "Pete, don't take Chambers Street. Make a U turn right here." With that I made the U turn, and now I'm heading past City Hall. With that a police ESU vehicle pulls from Park Row South in front of me. Commissioner Feehan says to follow him. So I got right on his tail and went right down to Broadway.

We got as far as Broadway and Dey Street, at which point I pulled the car half on the sidewalk, half in the street, because of all the people, the emergency apparatus coming in, rigs as well as ambulances and cop cars. So there wasn't an easy way to position the car other than to position it that way.

I popped the trunk. The four of them get out. Commissioner Feehan grabs his helmet and puts his fire coat on. There was a fire coat in there that I believe Tom McDonald put on, or Fitzpatrick, I'm not sure.

I slammed the trunk down. I turn around and tell the people, "Get out of here. The building's coming down." Why I said that, I don't know. I just really felt strongly about it. Talking to the upper echelon in this job, nobody thought the building was coming down.

Q. So you said you told the people.

A. People. There were people all over the place. People were in a position they just wanted to watch. I said to them, "This building is coming down. Get out of here." A few woman scattered, "Let's get out of here, let's get out of here." People just stayed there. Boom, the second plane hits.

Q. So you're right on Broadway when the second plane hit.

A. Right on Broadway when the second plane hit. Shit and debris flying all over the place, people screaming, running for their lives, myself included. Where I ran, I ran five feet under an awning in front of a store.

When all hell calmed down from that, I got into the car to reposition the car and get it out of the way. More ambulances were coming in. I went down Broadway to Liberty and made a left on Liberty. I parked the car about 20 or 30 feet off the corner.

Q. You're by yourself?

A. I'm by myself. These four guys -- Feehan, Fitzpatrick, McDonald and Ray Goldbach -- once I slammed that trunk and I turned to tell the people this building is coming down, they were already in motion. They were running down Dey Street.

Q. So you were by yourself when the second plane hit?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay.

A. My understanding with them was Feehan went one way, the other three went another way. When you have a mass exodus of people coming at you, it is very easy to see how four people could not stay together and would be separated.

So anyway, after repositioning the car and locking it up, I start heading down Liberty towards 10 and 10, not knowing where the command post was. I figured let me go and hook up with Feehan -- he's my boss -- in case he needs anything.

I have no gear. I'm LSS. I was never issued bunker gear, helmets or any of that stuff because there's no need for me to have that.

Commissioner Feehan, First Deputy, went to major incidences. Most of the time I never had to take him to third or fourth alarms and things like that. He would let his chief of department run it, his chief of operations. In this particular case he wanted to go to this one, so we took him.

I was just going to go and hook up, try to find him, stay by his side: "Boss, do you want me to go get your phone? A glass of water?" In my capacity as an aide to him.

Q. At the command post?

A. At the command post. Wherever he is. Sometimes he's remote from the command post. If he happens to say, "Yeah, let's take a ride to this third, Pete," we would take a ride. Sometimes he stays in the background and sees how it's going.

My theory was let me go find my boss and see if he needs anything. I was glad to get the car out of the way. I didn't want it to be buried. I didn't want it to be inaccessible or in a position where we couldn't get it out of there should Commissioner Feehan five hours from now from that point want to go back to headquarters, get a change of clothes, whatever. That's what made me get that car out of there also.

So I get that car out of there. I'm heading down Liberty towards Church.

Q. On foot?

A. On foot.

I stop before Church, look up -- this is the second tower that got hit -- and I said, "Pete, don't go any further. This fucking building is coming down." I'm sorry I cursed.

Q. That's okay. This is your recollection, your words and your observation.

A. With that, within two seconds I hear a rumble. I'm still looking up. I didn't do anything. I'm still more or less -- not frozen but I'm standing there in awe how this building is still staying up.

Q. You're on Liberty. Are you west of Church or east?

A. I'm before Church. I never made it to Church.

Q. You never got --

A. Never made it to Church.

Q. In between Broadway and Church?

A. Between Broadway and Church, looking up.

I stopped. Not that I froze, but I stopped. I said, "This fucking thing is coming down." With that I heard the rumble within a couple of seconds, and then I saw the brown, thick, malted milk dust cloud and smoke and whatever else coming down. It was rolling down with a roar like you couldn't believe.

I turned around and I start fucking running. Everybody's running for their fucking lives. Somebody runs by me, knocks into me, I fall down. The last thing I needed running away from a falling fucking building is to fall down.

But I manage to get up, start running again. By then the building had pancaked down.

The force of it just hit me in the back and blew me like ten feet into a police van.

Q. Was it just the air, the force of the air? The debris?

A. Air, dust, dirt, debris. Not heavy debris. It felt like I was shot in the back with a shotgun, pellets. All these pellets were hitting me, the force. The dust engulfed me, pushed me, literally -- I guess I was off my feet for ten feet. Then I banged into the police van, dropped down to the floor, scrambled to get around the building that was on the corner for protection.

Q. Now you're on Broadway and Liberty, do you think?

A. Yes.

Now I can't see anything. I'm huddling on my knees. I'm trying to feel if I'm bleeding, because I am on blood thinners.

Q. Did you hear anything at that point?

A. A lot of screaming, a lot of screaming. I was a little disoriented. I couldn't see anything. I was in the thick of it as far as the dust cloud was concerned. Day turned into night, literally.

I started wandering, not knowing where I was heading, because I couldn't see street signs, I couldn't zero in on what fucking street I was on. But anyway I was heading east towards the seaport.

Q. Okay.

A. Midway in that trip from the west side to the east side, I hear more planes coming. I did not know it was our jet fighters. That was told to me later on by Dr. Hittman.

Q. Okay.

A. I just huddled up against the side of the building. There's no place to hide. You couldn't see anything. There is a building there; that I can determine. I just stayed up against it while I thought there was another plane coming in. But it wasn't. It was our jet fighters. That went overhead. I continued to walk.

I get to the seaport. That must be Water Street there.

Q. Yeah.

A. I see the blue sky for the first time.

So I start walking north. Somebody gave me a bottle of water. All I can remember saying to myself is, "I can't find Feehan. I can't find Feehan. They're all dead. They're all dead," meaning the four I took.

Q. Yeah, sure.

A. I look up at the Brooklyn Bridge, loaded with people, mass exodus coming out of fucking Manhattan.

Q. On foot?

A. On foot.

[redacted] I keep walking, keep walking. I walked to the Manhattan Bridge, which had less people on it. Naturally people are going to go for the nearest thing that they can get out of the borough.

Q. Sure.

A. So the Manhattan Bridge wasn't bad to walk over. I got to the Manhattan Bridge, walked over.

Q. Did the second building come down while you were there?

A. The second building had come down when I was midway -- I wouldn't even say midway. I would say after I started -- after I regained some composure, got off my knees from this huddled position, I started walking. Then the second building came down.

Q. This is before you got to the Manhattan Bridge?

A. Oh, way before. Way before I saw the blue sky.

Q. Okay.

A. Then as I'm walking up to the Manhattan Bridge, there was a car bomb. A car bomb went off in some car, because the cops were saying, "Come on, people, shit is happening. Let's go. Keep moving, keep moving."

You could see another plume of smoke. Somebody yelled, "It's a car bomb, a car bomb." I kept fucking walking towards the Manhattan Bridge. I got over the Manhattan Bridge. Some heavyset black lady just put her arm around me and walked with me and just talked to me and said everything's going to be all right and you'll be okay.

I don't think I looked too good from --

Q. I saw you when you returned. I was at headquarters when you returned, and you were covered in dust and you were clearly disoriented and we got an EMT to look after you.

A. That I remember, yeah. They were very nice. I was sitting up front at Corey's desk. I know I had been crying a lot. I really thought all four of them were dead.

Basically they calmed me down. They told me I had to go and decontaminate in the shower, get rid of all the clothes. I got some spare clothes from Roy Katz, and I went and took the shower. Then they said, "You should go in for debriefing." That was on the seventh floor, I believe [redacted]

So I go. I get off and go on the seventh floor. I come in an office like this, a room like this. I sit at the head. There's six people: a marshal, a couple of EMTs, Ken Cox, a couple other people. I sit down. This one EMT says, "If you want to talk, you can talk. If you don't want to, you don't have to. Whenever you feel like it, you can talk if you like or whatever."

I'm just sitting there. Then there was quiet. There was silence. They're all staring at me, six people staring at me. [redacted] So the EMT girl says, "Okay. That's perfectly okay if you just want to sit a while."

[redacted] "Okay. That's fine. If you want to come back later, you're more than welcome to. We're here to help you. We're here." I understood all that, but maybe had they asked me questions I would have been responsive to each question rather than six people staring at me, waiting for me to start talking.

Q. Right.

A. I didn't want to relive what I just did, what I just experienced, at that time. I'm doing it now, and I've done it quite a few times in telling friends and loved ones what I experienced. At that time with six people staring at me, I said, "You know what, I want to go upstairs." And they let me go upstairs.

I just went back to my office. I sat down. One of the light duty guys got me a glass of water. Basically that was it. I stood around until around 4:00, I believe it was, 3:30. Then when I had the moment, I just left without saying anything to anybody, and I got in my old pickup truck and I headed home. That's all I wanted to do was go home.

Q. Sure.

A. [redacted] The next day I didn't come to work. Ray called me at home. A couple of people called me at home[redacted]

Q. Sure.

A. I said, "I've got to go back to work. I can't do this. I can never not go back." So the very next day I came in.

Basically I would say that's the whole thing in a nutshell. Was I as close to the building as a lot of people were? Absolutely not. I was out of harm's way. The most that happened to me was the force of air, dust and pieces, tiny pieces, of concrete, plaster that just engulfed me, knocked me to the ground. I got a little scrape on the arm.

[redacted]

Q. Yeah. You were disoriented, but it was understandable after what you'd experienced. I saw you that afternoon.

A. Yeah. I felt I had all my faculties but yet something was missing. I couldn't pinpoint it. I wasn't hurting. I wasn't like, "Oh, my shoulder is killing me. My arms are bleeding. I'm cut." No physical pain. I just felt I wasn't right. I knew I wasn't right. Did I think I was in shock? No, again, because, as I said, I made it back here on my own.

What else could I add to it? Other than the fact that I saw one distinguished jumper; several others, but the position I was in when several others were jumping, I didn't really get a good look at them, but the one I did.

I don't know what more to say other than I don't know what companies were where. I couldn't tell you if Engine 33, which was my company, was on Church and Vesey Street. I couldn't tell you that. It all happened so fast. We got there, the second plane hit within a couple of minutes. That just totally confused all these people even more, as well as myself and I'm sure firefighters and Feehan and the rest of them.

Basically that's it. I didn't see any firefighters get injured. I didn't see any rigs in position that I can say, yeah, Kevin, I remember 33 engine being on the corner of Church and Vesey. As I started to run, there was an empty rig. I didn't see any of that.

Q. Okay.

A. I didn't get close enough.

As far as getting Feehan closer, maybe if I would have went Chambers Street to West, maybe I would have gotten him closer rather than him have to walk from Broadway and Dey to the command center.

Q. Right.

A. I might have come in the other way and might have gotten him there -- I don't know. These are things I question myself, why did I go so fast.

Q. He made it there on foot. He made it to West Street, and he was on the west side of West Street. So either way -- he didn't get hurt before he got there. He was hurt after he got to the west side of West Street.

A. All right.

Again, I said I think I drove too fast. I got him there too fast. I didn't have some needle, life-saving syringe here that I had to go so fast that we had to get it there. I was taking a 72-year-old man to probably one of the most horrendous things that he would ever see -- had seen in his career or would ever see, had he been still alive. I question myself about that. Maybe if you would have just take it easier a little bit you wouldn't have gotten him there so fast. Ray chimed in with, "Did you ever stop to think by getting him there that fast he saved 200 lives by giving an order here or giving an order there?"

Q. Right.

A. That kind of made me feel a little bit better. But I do question why wasn't I with him. I normally am in the few times we do go to scenes. Unless it's something like, "Pete, just sit in the car. I'll be back. I'm just going to go check in." Then I would just stay with the car.

But I had this sense of -- I don't know, is it guilt or is it --

Q. Some people describe it as a survivor's guilt.

A. That's what I've been experiencing lately. A couple of times it entered my mind that I was pissed off that I wasn't one of them, which is -- I don't like to even say that. But kind of like -- I don't know. I think the survivors suffer more than the instant impact of death, you know.

I'm assuming and hoping and praying that as Feehan was running as well as all the other guys that there was a bang on the head, knocked them unconscious and then whatever happened afterwards he didn't feel. That's quick. Okay? That's kind of a quick way of going.

The people who survived that now, that walk away from that, is that survivor's guilt? Is that, "Why wasn't I there too and why wasn't I -- should it be a lot easier if I was fucking dead than to go through life day in and day out like this, questioning?"

Q. Why by an act of fate did I survive and another guy is dead.

A. Right. Oh, yeah.

Q. People are so racked by that.

A. Little things too to make a person not be caught up in that collapse, like Chief Ganci giving Nigro an order, "Go check the side of the building. Tell me what we've got, Dan. Tell Steve Mosiello, 'Steve, get me two good trucks over here.'" So those two guys had a direct order. They leave Ganci. They survive. Ganci is dead.

My boss, with three of his close people, all four going down the block at the same time, same rate of speed, because people coming out and you can only run so fast or walk so fast, they went one way, Feehan went by himself another way. Feehan eventually got to the command post. Where these guys went I'm not too familiar with. I think Ray tried to hook up with the commissioner, rightfully so. Fitzpatrick and McDonald, I don't know where they were headed.

To make a long story short with that particular statement, why Feehan goes this way, these three go that way, these three live, Feehan dies. Feehan goes this way, his aide moves the car this way, starts heading towards hooking up with him, he lives, Feehan dies.

Q. There's no explanation for it. Everybody experienced the same thing, and why one person got hit with something that ended up killing him and another person didn't, I don't know what the explanation is.

A. When you get in that thought process of thinking about all that, you probably just ransack your brain for answers when you can't come up with them. Even discussing it with other people, nobody is going to say, "Well, this is why" and give you a direct answer. There's probably just a lot of things involved with it.

I don't understand why nobody -- when I say "nobody," the people I spoke to, the upper echelon, your Fitzpatrick, your Ray Goldbach. These are knowledgeable guys. They're fire officers. They told me, "We did not think the building was coming down."

The first words out of my mouth when I slammed that trunk lid was to tell these people, "Get out of here. This building's coming down." I always felt those World Trade towers were a firefighter's nightmare. I always told my wife I do not want to be working when we have a fire in there.

About 20 years ago when I was full duty -- I was full duty for 16 years before I got hurt and became high duty LSS. So about 20 years ago I'm in front of the firehouse. It was a Friday night. I'll never forget this.

Q. In Manhattan?

A. Manhattan, 33 Engine, which is buried under the rubble. I'm standing in front of quarters. It's the 12 to 3 watch, summer night, beautiful night. A civilian is walking by, stop, he's looking in, the apparatus doors are up. I start talking to him. He turns out to be an architectural engineer. He builds high-rise buildings, skyscrapers.

I said, "Let me ask you a question. Can I ask you a question?" He said, "Yeah, sure." I said, "The World Trade Center --" He says, "Yes." These are my words, Kevin, on my father's grave and my mother's grave. I said, "Let me ask you a question. If a 747 out of Newark topped off with jet fuel crashes into the 80th story of one of the stories, will it topple the top 30 stories?" "Oh, no, it's not designed to do that. It's not designed to do that the way we constructed this. We took things like that into consideration in the building of it. That would not happen."

It didn't topple.

Q. Right, well, that's true.

A. At that time when I ask this guy this question, I'm picturing a plane going in, blowing out loads of floors, fully loaded, 747 I quoted, topped off with jet fuel, would it topple the 30 stories. He said no.

Did I think when I said that day these buildings are coming down, I didn't think they were going to pancake all the way down. I'm looking up at that second building saying how are those stories above it staying up. The hole was huge. It looked like toothpicks, four toothpicks in the corner were holding the rest of the stories above it up.

In me saying that these buildings are coming down, I thought it was going to collapse, it was going to topple.

Q. From above?

A. From above, like 30 stories, 20. Whatever was left above the plane crash in either tower would just give way and go this way and come down into the street. I did not think the whole building would pancake down. They were designed, from what I understand, to do that. 20 years ago the guy didn't tell me that. He didn't turn around and say, "Oh, no, you don't have to worry about the building toppling. However, you have a strong possibility of it pancaking down on itself because it's primarily steel construction. Steel expands one inch for every thousand degrees rise in temperature. So you're popping rivets, you're twisting beams."

But again, he didn't say that. He just said it's not coming down.

Q. And they spoke a lot about impact. Apparently the building was designed to withstand an impact from a 707, which was the plane of the day. But it doesn't appear anybody considered the impact of a fire with all that combustible material added to it.

A. Right, that fireball, that massive amount of jet fuel burning instantly. It all goes instantly.

That's it. I was amazed at why I thought they were coming down, and I was amazed at that question the way I worded it 20 years ago, was the truth. The reason why I used the 747 in asking this guy that question back then was because 747 was the biggest plane we had. Topped off with jet fuel, it's going to have the maximum amount of fuel. Right out of Newark, you're not going to burn much to hit the World Trade Center.

Q. A flight to Europe or somewhere else.

A. I didn't think of terrorism back then either. I'm just saying an accident, the fog, something, a plane is going to go into the World Trade Center. I'm going to give you a scenario, what do you think, you're an architectural engineer.

So I found that kind of strange as well as that day looking up at them saying they're coming down, saying it to people, saying it to myself with the second one, and then actually seeing it come down, looking up at it as it's starting to come down.

500 feet to the base of the building, maybe, 600 feet, I would say I was, going by the map and the schedule in the map, one inch equals 600 feet, on one of the maps I have. I was trying to find out where I was. I used that. I would say about 600 feet from the base of the building.

Q. Sure.

A. Which to me 110 stories up, it's coming down, is a little too close for me.

Q. Right.

A. If somebody told me, "you want to stand 600 feet away from the base of the World Trade Center when it starts to collapse?" I would say, "Absolutely not. Get me ten fucking blocks away."

But anyway, again, I was out of harm's way, because I wouldn't be here now. It's just, all of it, the hearing of the second plane exploding, people jumping, losing my boss, losing friends, my company's buried, just putting everything all together, I have no words to describe what I feel. I'm sure a lot of people feel most of what I feel. Some feel worse because of being closer, seeing a lot more worse things than I did, like body parts. I really didn't see any body parts. Some people saw that, who witnessed that, who were closer. That company that was in the stairwell, what was it, 6 Truck, 9 Engine.

Q. Yeah.

A. I mean, talk about questioning fate and everything; right?

Basically I guess that's my whole day that day.

Q. I appreciate that.

A. I don't know if I was of help. I hope I was of help.

Q. Yeah, absolutely. Everybody's recollections are unique, and we appreciate the fact that you shared yours with us.

A. Do you have any specific questions you want to ask like -- I never made it to 10 and 10. The command center wasn't there anyway.

Q. Sure.

A. That's number one, had I gotten there. Had I been a little faster, I probably would have been by 10 and 10 and God knows would I be here now. I don't know.

All these questions you run through your mind. I'm thankful to be alive. I do think my career with the Fire Department is over, after 31 years and losing a boss of 11 years and my company being buried, again, and me coming close to either being killed or seriously injured. I think I want to spend some time with the wife and the family and the grandchildren.

Q. Sure.

A. You've got to remember something, I'm light duty LSS. Okay? For a light duty LSS guy to come close to buying it at the scene of a fire, I mean, that's a little scary. I have no equipment. Most aides to like the chief of department, chief of operations, they're full-duty guys. They get out of their car, they're throwing helmets on, coats, boots, they're going with their boss, they're staying by their side.

[redacted]

[redacted]So I guess that helps me in the fact that I wasn't by Feehan's side, because in a situation like that I don't think anybody who's [redacted]with no equipment and a short-sleeve shirt should be at the base of a building that parts of planes are coming down, debris is coming down, bodies are coming down, eventually the whole building is coming down.

So maybe I helped my own guilt of not being next to my boss's side with that. I feel it's a pretty legitimate excuse, if that's the word I want to use, "excuse." I don't even know anymore.

But basically that's it. What else? I couldn't find Feehan's car. Dismay held the marshals for days. Then eventually they did find it.

Q. Yeah.

A. That's it, I guess, Kevin. I don't know what else.

Q. Okay. That was great.

A. My whole story.

Q. That was very detailed, and that was a good account. I appreciate that.

A. Okay. Thank you. If there's anything else you need, you think of, one single question or something.

Q. Let me wind it up?

MR. McALLISTER: It's 1013 hours on October 12th, 2001, and we're going to conclude the interview now. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

PARAMEDIC JOSEPH CAHILL

Interview Date: October 15, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. ECCLESTON: Today's date is October 15, 2001. The time is 1217 hours. I'm Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name, rank, title and assigned command area of the Fire Department of the City of New York regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

A. Okay. My name is Joseph Cahill. I'm a Paramedic. My office title is Citywide advance life support coordinator and I work in the office of EMS operations.

Q. Also present is?

A. Christine Bastedenbeck of the New York City Fire Department.

Q. Joe, can you tell me about the events of September 11, 2001?

A. Okay. Well, I was running late. So I was on an odd train, which means that when things started, I was actually in the train in New Jersey. I heard one of the other passengers yell out holy fuck. And I looked out the window. One of the twin towers was visibly on fire. You could see the red of the smoke or the red through the smoke from the side of the building.

We got to Hoboken station. Naturally the PATH train to World Trade Center was closed. World Trade Center is the only stop on that -- New York stop on that train. So I took the 33 Street train to Christopher Street with the intention of walking into the scene, which is essentially what I did. I walked in about halfway down. A postal employee gave me a ride in his postal truck. He gave me a ride to, I guess it must be Vesey Street.

He dropped me off, drove me down whatever street this is. I don't know what that is.

Q. I think that's --

A. But I remember coming down through here and I don't know, maybe he drove me down --

Q. West Street?

A. Yes, I think he might have. Because I remember coming straight down. I don't remember making this zigzag, coming straight -- yes, and ending up here. He let me out on the zebra stripes over here. My original thought was to go to OEM, because I routinely work OEM for the Chief during other emergencies, but I figured I would find out what was going on a little more first.

Let's see. At that point I remember seeing -- it was a proprietary ambulance. I don't believe it was part of the 911 contract there. Asked them if they knew where the command center was. They kind of shrugged, threw some equipment over their shoulders and we both walked up to Church Street, where there seemed to be a couple of other units there.

I spoke to them briefly. I think there was an officer there but I don't remember who. That looked like it was under control. So I walked back down Vesey. I remember seeing Frank Larkin from the Secret Service run by at a dead run. That just stuck in my head.

I got all the way down to Vesey and West Side Drive and I ran into Chief Villani. Talked to him briefly. I looked around, down here, adjacent to the Trade Center, there seemed to be a lot of vehicles, ambulances and fire trucks, up the West Side Highway. There was also a lot of vehicles with more coming in.

I told Chief Villani listen, it doesn't look like there is anyone staging. I will walk up there and start organizing that, but I don't have a radio because I came in on foot. He said okay. I don't remember if it was then or when I got up here further that I ran into Pinky. I don't know Pinky's last, real name. He is a Lieutenant at Bellevue. A little Spanish guy. I don't know his last name. I think it might have been at this point, because I couldn't have gotten much past Barclay when the first building collapsed.

From where I was standing, wherever that was, it was definitely south across here somewhere. There is a pedestrian walk, but it was definitely right below this pedestrian walkway. From where I stood, Chief Villani had said -- he pointed out one of these buildings. I can't, without being there and looking at it, I'm not sure which one of these it is around the Winter Garden.

But he said the command post is over there. If you need anything come over here. I said you know, I told him about the radio thing. I got about here, which is where we started to put staging together, when one of the towers collapsed and it looked for all the world like it collapsed right on where he indicated the command center to be.

I don't remember who told me before the collapse, but it might have been Chief Villani. It might have been somebody else, told me that Chief Goldfarb was in the command post. At that point truthfully, Pinky and I, because sometime shortly after that we hooked up, or shortly before that. At that point I thought Pinky was probably the highest ranking guy still alive on the scene.

We proceeded up above the walkway, started to organize a staging area there the second time and then the second building collapsed, drove us from that position up further. Is this College of Insurance? Do you know which one of these is Stuyvesant?

Q. Yes, it's up here.

A. So when we were driven out the second time -- so maybe there is another walkway up here.

Q. Yes, there is --

A. Then it's not this walkway. It's this walkway.

Q. Pedestrian walkway? Where you were talking about when the first building came down you were by the pedestrian walkway.

A. I was between these two walkways.

Q. Just south of Chambers?

A. Yes, I think so. Chambers, Warren, something like that.

Q. This map could have been better if it was extended more.

A. When we got driven out by the second collapse, we went up and I remember we started setting up right next to Stuyvesant High School. Then we got the word that there was a gas leak in there and that we had to evacuate that area. We were driven back further up. But that was later on.

I remember talking to an ass load of Hatzolah guys. They must have had 6 units on the scene. There was a bunch of our units. Before the first collapse, yes, I must have been up here. Because before the first collapse I had made it just about to where the vehicles started, where we were starting to organize staging. I remember seeing George Burbano from Battalion 22.

Q. 22?

A. He was off duty, so I gave him my work sweat shirt, so he had something so the cops wouldn't try to eject him from the scene. I remember he was helping me move vehicles. I remember running from both collapses with him, both of the tower collapses. Then I saw -- I don't remember whose shield numbers these are. I remember I saw Rich, not Rich, Mitch Berkowitz, who was also off duty. I don't know if he is light duty or off duty. I remember all he was wearing was his medic blue shirt, dark blue shirt and a pair of jeans, which might have mean that's what he grabbed out of the car when he jumped out on his way to the station or might have meant he was doing retrieval while his wrist healed up. I don't know.

I remember collecting these two shield numbers for some reason, of people that were there.

Q. That would be 1172?

A. 74.

Q. 74, sorry, 1174 and 3871?

A. 3871. I had given these shield numbers to one of the new Captains, Debbie Monte, a week or so afterward, because she was riding the desk here that was keeping track of the list.

So anyway, once we got beaten out of the position for a third time, we got from the gas leak, actually before that. When we were beaten out by the second collapse, I went into the Borough of Manhattan Community College, looked for a phone. I finally found one in the security office. I called my office downstairs. I asked them to -- I asked Mery Bento, who is one of the secretaries down there, to page out the Division ALS coordinators. The first one she could get a hold of was to take a vehicle, drive to the pharmacy, find a pharmacist, get 10 cases of everything, get 20 cases of asthma meds and -- I think I ended up with 20 cases of everything, 50 cases of asthma meds and eye drops, because it looked like we were going to be dug in for a long time.

There must have been a significant period of time between the second tower collapse and when we got beat out of the position by the gas leak. I don't think the gas leak is on there. We got beat out of position by the gas leak, because we had started to set up a walking wounded treatment, a holding area in the gym of Borough of Manhattan Community College. The reason I say that we must have -- must have been some amount of time, we started seeing patients in that time period.

There was -- I don't know who owns it -- there was some kind of blood mobile. No, you know what it was, it was one of those blood pressure screening vans, but it was a respectable size RV. We set that up as a MERV at one point. They had a PAA. We put -- I think we used a crew from Hatzolah and Tommy Carlstrom, I think we put in there, to kind of interface everything and make sure everything stayed on an even keel.

Hatzolah had a huge amount of equipment there, because they were in their private vehicles. So we grabbed a couple of their guys and a full set of equipment and threw it in there. I don't think we ever got to use it though. We started seeing a lot of patients with crap in their eyes, a lot of patients with inhaled stuff and that's the only reason I knew we needed to get those -- bulk up on those specific two things of medication.

I also called Jimmy Geraci, who apparently had seen either the real life version or on TV on radio, was starting to crank up his guys, get his disaster trucks on the road. I gave him a heads up that what we are going to be needing a lot of is eye wash, eye flush, stuff like that. I don't know whatever happened to those trucks because right after I had that conversation with him, we got moved out because of the gas leak. My understanding is they finally got to the scene at some other point. Where we were north of the job, it never came there. I understand they got to the south part somehow.

After the gas leak we went further north. I don't remember how much further north. I could point the building out on the scene. On the scene, if you are looking northward, Borough of Manhattan Community College is a brick building on the right-hand side. It has got a little underpass to let one of the roads through. That line of route continues up another block or a building or two without appreciably getting higher.

The next really tall building is where we tried to reform again. It's got something to do with the phone company. It's an AT&T office building, something like that. I don't remember. It would be relatively easy to point out on the scene. We stopped there, started getting under control again and somewhere in that point, I started to walk down and chase straggling vehicles, and head personnel up. I ran into Chief Hirth, Lieutenant Cacciola, Grace.

Q. Grace?

A. And Mark Stone, who looked pretty worse for wear. Essentially they told me at that point that we were going to start rallying up at 23 Street at the piers. We were going to start putting together a thing up there. I said okay. I'm going to come down a little bit and start chasing stragglers up so that they aren't wandering around down here with no direction.

At that point I saw Jimmy Schrang. I started talking to him. My absolute favorite story of this whole thing. Jimmy Schrang goes, you know, my friends from Bosnia called me today to see if I was okay.

Anyway we took one of these cross streets. It's probably like Warren or Murray, because we didn't have to cut through any of these buildings. We didn't have to zig around any of these buildings. We came over here. Every once in a while we would run into somebody. We would send them up to Chelsea Piers.

Then we got -- I kind of imagine it was over here somewhere. No, because we couldn't see City Hall, so it must have been on Church Street somewhere. It's Church or whatever there, West Street. We started working our way down. Somewhere in here Jimmy saw a guy over here. I saw a guy over here in uniform. He said I will go back to talk to him, I will go over and talk to him. I will meet you back here in a minute.

I went over here to talk to him and found that "him" was the furthest outlier of a big treatment sector that was here. I don't remember if it was here. I don't think it was up here. I don't remember seeing St. Paul's. I don't know how -- maybe it was further up this way. I do remember that this side of the block had a small --

Q. This side of Church?

A. Yes, the west side of Church had a -- some kind of courtyard, like a building courtyard that was securely fenced off, because I remember seeing cops climbing over the fence, but it had trees, little trees. Not great big jongando trees, but little trees.

Anyway, I ran into a treatment sector here. Lieutenant Platt was in charge, Ed Platt. He and I talked for a little while. There was a lot of units there. There was maybe 4 or 5 FDNY units. There was two units from Jersey City, at least. There was a couple of commercial ambulances there. There were a couple of voluntary ambulances there. What was also there was a suspicious package on one of these side streets.

So I told him that, you know, the direction that we had gotten was to fall back to 23 Street and Chelsea Piers, at which point he said well, who gave you that direction. The truth of the matter is that Chief Hirth didn't say Joe, go get everybody and make everybody fall back. So I really didn't have a good answer for him. So he had a radio, so he was able to actually reach Chief Peruggia, who at least temporarily told to us hold position there.

We organized these guys. I started working essentially as a staging officer. I walked down the row of ambulances that were probably scattered around over here, who's on your crew, what's your unit, where do you work from. What vehicle you got. Be ready to move in 10 minutes because we may end up bugging out. A short while later we were given the order to fall back, but not to Chelsea Piers, to Greenwich and something. Greenwich and something. No, it was -- I never got south of the Battery Tunnel over the entrance. That was only way way later. That was like 6:00 the next morning. It was Greenwich and something. I don't know. Oh, you know what, it was right in front of the Travelers Insurance building because we used the umbrella as a marker. This two story umbrella logo thing.

So at some point in my walking down there and starting to do the staging and writing down the units, a fellow walks up named Harold Watkins, and says yo. He is in a polo shirt, one of our uniform polo shirts and uniform pants and shoes and looks well, just kind of bewildered, but looks like he is in uniform and ready to go. I said hey, how you doing. Who are you. He said oh, my name is Harold Watkins, I'm a fire cadet and I work at the Fire Museum on my off -- as well.

I saw this all going on so I thought I would come and lend a hand. So Harold and I went around and did all this interviewing. When the order came to move, actually John Clair came through there as well while we were there. But I don't know. Time really didn't have that much relevance to me. There were no patients under my care so there was no time vitals, none of that stuff. We were just there for the duration of the job. So time really didn't mean much to me.

At some point we started to bug out. Some of the vehicles had trouble. One of them had burst a radiator hose or had a leaky radiator hose, so we started to organize getting a couple of vehicles jump started. John Clair had Joe Fell from the State with him.

Q. (inaudible)?

A. Yes, just as I remember stuff. We pulled out of there. We had to jump start two or three vehicles. One vehicle had, like I said, a leaking hose so we put them further up in the line and said, you know, if you can't make it any further, pull on to the sidewalk out of the way. We told all the vehicles behind them if you see them pull out on the sidewalk out of the way, you need to stop and pick them up, you know.

The reason we were given for why we were moving was that 7 World Trade Center was going to collapse or was at risk of collapsing. So we must have been somewhere in this area where we would have had a problem with that. But I honestly don't remember. It all looks -- I'm fairly familiar with this, actually this, from West Side Highway east almost to the river or certainly past City Hall from Liberty or not even -- from the Battery Tunnel opening north to Vesey, I'm fairly familiar with because I have travelled through there commuting a lot.

I drove through there the day after, the morning of the 12th and I didn't recognize most of the places I was. It all looked very different. It all looked like those videos you see of Pongo Pongo, a little island in the South Pacific has had a volcanic eruption and all the ash is falling out of the air. It was just -- I don't know exactly where we were.

We must have been up in this area somewhere. I know there was a physician's group -- would have been on the north, or the south of one of these streets.

Q. Like Warren, Murray?

A. Something like that. We had to have been in that range because --

Q. On this street?

A. Yes, because they were worried about us. They wanted us to move the treatment sector because of 7 World Trade Center was imminently to collapse, which, of course, it did. In fact it did while we were moving.

So this guy Harold Watkins and I, not having a vehicle, everybody else was moving out, I told Ed, you know what, we will start walking back up and we will meet you there. There was a volunteer unit and I don't remember from where, that was parked on the -- would have been the west part of the intersection. It was an odd shaped intersection too, in that it was almost like-- it was a triangular intersection where there was two roads coming north-south that came together, joined -- I wonder if we weren't here. I don't think so. We might have been here up by like West Broadway, because -- yes, you know what, I think we were on Broadway. We would have been right in here between Broadway and West, like around Murray or Park.

The police had one of these eastern cross streets blocked off, like I said, with the suspicious package, which looked like a suitcase or an old fashioned briefcase.

So Watkins and I walked back up and met the rest of the group at Greenwich, at the Travelers building. Got to chasing a few stragglers up. The rest of the group set up there. I don't know what happened to Platt. I didn't see him again. I don't remember where he ended up. I did see when I got to the Travelers building, which maybe that wasn't where we were originally headed. Maybe that isn't Greenwich and something. Maybe they ended up setting up another treatment sector somewhere else.

When we got to the Travelers building, there was a huge amount of units. There must have been 20, 25 units there. But there was an enormous amount of people. There was a queue of like 3,000 people waiting to help. There was some enormous firefighter. I don't know if he was our Firefighter or from somewhere else. The bunker gear, he didn't have the jacket so you couldn't really tell, but his bunker gear didn't look like ours. I don't remember why. It was the wrong color or the wrong something. His job was essentially to organize the volunteers.

What he did was he organized them. They were moved over here. They had a little briefing. Then they moved them over here. Then they had another little briefing. Then they moved them over here. They essentially just paraded them around this section, because there wasn't anything for them to do, because they couldn't send them into the unsafe zone, but there was huge amounts of people.

So again, I remember seeing there, I remember seeing Tommy from Bellevue. What the hell was his name. Used to be Chief Pascale's aide when I was their Division coordinator. I will think of it. I can picture him. Eppinger, was there. There were at least two other Lieutenants there. So I slipped into the familiar -- now familiar role of staging officer and Harold Watkins and I walked around to all the units, who are you? Where are you from? What are your shield numbers? You know. All right, take a roll of 2 inch tape. What's your normal 911 designation, good. Put that on the windshield. Don't have one? Okay, you are now Jersey City one. You are Jersey City two. We labeled all the windshields with who they were. We stayed there for a while. Again I don't really know, time was really kind of meaningless. I know we had at least one command car there. One of the supervisors had a car, because we were storing some stuff in it. Now my briefcase ended up in Pinky's car real early on.

So we didn't see a whole lot of patients there. I don't think we saw any patients there. Sometime during the day a guy in what looked like -- he was in battle dress fatigues, he looked like he was from the National Guard, but I don't know. David something. Came up, said hey, you know, we got a hospital over in the Borough of Manhattan Community College and we got no transport resources. So the supervisors and I and him talked about that for a minute.

I got the assignment to walk down there with him, see what was going on down there, because as far as we knew at that point, at least in that location, by Travelers, we had abandoned the location in BMCC. Went back there and there was in fact a really big operation cranking up there, between Port Authority and I don't even know where they were from.

An emergency room physician had brought like a bunch of his staff and the Red Cross was helping out and they were unloading truck loads of shit into this place. Stretchers, you know, little folding stretchers the Red Cross had, blankets, medicines, not a lot of medicines, like a lot of eye wash and aspirin and stuff like that. The Port Authority occupied another piece of it and they were bringing in all kinds of stuff. Brought cases of rubber boots, work gloves, flashlights, all kinds of stuff like that.

What essentially -- I came in agreement with the doctor that was running there is that, you know what, as long as the Port Authority will let us park, because they were controlling that block. As long as they will let us park there, we will keep an ALS and a BLS there. You use them? Send somebody up to us. Let us know where they are going and we will send you another bus.

That's where we kept it. We had a lot of problems with parking and stuff, moving around. That's where we kept it. I don't think they transported maybe a handful of patients. They saw a huge amount of patients, flushed their eyes and stuff. I know a bunch of the Port Authority guys went out to the pharmacies and brought stuff back.

After that, a couple of different times, I went back and forth between those two locations, Travelers and BMCC, but I don't think they really saw a whole lot of patients. They ended up setting up food there, so they probably saw a whole lot of EMS people. What?

Sometime later on, I don't even remember how much later, I walked down to Chambers, which is what, this one, to the command post at Chambers and west side, and I saw Chief McCracken, talked to some of the other people there. Saw Lieutenant Cronin, and saw John Clair and was given the direction to start organizing, breaking down the BMCC hospital, because no one was aware that BMCC was there. They had already set up another hospital in Stuyvesant, which they are literally 3 blocks apart.

So I went back, talked to the doc, I said listen, you know, there is another hospital right down the block. They are going to catch all the patients because they are closer to the scene. What we would like to do is split up your materials and your personnel, send some up it up to the pier and some of it down to this other hospital. It's a more effective way of doing it.

He was very amenable to that. What that ended up meaning is we split up his personnel from the equipment, took all the equipment that they didn't want to -- stuff they wanted to take, I mean, obviously was theirs. But then I think they only took the expensive equipment that they had personally brought.

We moved everything else down to Stuyvesant, which we used I guess a couple of busses from -- I want to say Metro Care, but I'm not sure if that's right. It was definitely one of the big commercials. They had 25 units lined up on the West Side Highway at that time. Like 18 of them ALS. Some of them from as far away as Connecticut. We used 2 or 3 of them, and there was a van there, a regular passenger van from the academy with a driver. I don't know that guy's name, but we used those three vehicles to move the stuff down into Stuyvesant. Put stuff in Stuyvesant.

At sometime during this, the Division 6 ALS coordinator, Al Suriel, arrived with a truck full of pharmaceuticals from our pharmacy. Had to be early on, because I remember bringing some of them up to Borough of Manhattan Community College and trading them for stuff we need. Truthfully, my whole day from that point on essentially doing what I do best, take a little stuff from over here, give it to this guy over here. Oh, what, you have extra, good, take that from over here, bring that over there. Take some stuff extra from over here, bring it back to the first place.

Q. Bargaining?

A. Yes, and just, unfortunately, the whole thing -- well, what we obviously didn't know at the time, but unfortunately the whole thing was, you know, when you work the marathon in one of the tents, what happens is that like about two and a half hours in, everybody starts getting really antsy and if you don't stay on top of controlling the tent, what you end up with is 400 sets of IV fluids set up around the tent and that's exactly what was going on.

People were starting to get antsy to see patients. There was no one to see. I think a lot of movement of equipment was probably unnecessary, but kept people out of trouble too, which is okay. They did see -- I know Stuyvesant and BMCC saw a large amount of crap in the eyes, crap in the lungs. Got a boo-boo. Doesn't need a stitch, no, good, I'm back to work kind of thing.

So that's pretty much what I did the rest of the night. Al Suriel had a MUP student with him, because he was at refresher when he got paged. Her first name was Ronnie, I don't know what her last name is.

Q. Were they there prior to the collapse or after the collapse?

A. Probably not, probably not.

Q. We are mainly interested in people that were there prior.

A. Then we are done. I'm already into the evening at this point.

Q. Anything else you would like to add? Comments, feelings.

A. No, I think that probably the biggest impression I got out of this whole thing was this is probably as close to being in an infantry unit that gets overrun. We are scattered everywhere. Nobody knew where anybody was. Nobody knew who was in charge. It really felt for a moment that I was in Apocalypse Now, where Martin Sheen goes, where is your CO? Ain't that you? No. Uh-oh.

Let's pause for a second.

MR. ECCLESTON: Pausing the tape at 12:50.

(Pause)

MR. ECCLESTON: This interview is being restarted again at 1:10.

Q. Can you please continue with the events.

A. Yes, I mean I think where we left off was essentially recounting what happened the rest of my night, which was at different points shortages would show up in the Stuyvesant hospital. They need more fluid, I would find fluid for them. They need more eye drops, I would find eye drops for them. I remember we moved the multi-lator and the big M tank from the van at the bureau of training center, brought it inside, set it up, treat asthma. We made a little asthma booth out.

After that, there was a whole bunch of false starts where BOT were going to take people back and eventually Al Suriel and Ronnie went back with them to BOT because they were both in refresher and MUP class respectively.

I took over control of the pharmacy truck. I went to the command center and essentially stood by there for direction, because -- I hung out in the MERV for a while. All this stuff, it was already dark by this time. It was already early the next morning.

Then at the end of the day I walked back up to Christopher Street and another postal employee gave me a lift.

Q. Back to the train?

A. Back to the train. I took the train home.

Q. Is there anything else you would like to add to this in regard to the events that happened prior to 12 noon?

A. You know what, I have been over it because I'm sure everybody else has as well. I have been over it in my head a great deal since then. I can't think of anything we could have significantly done better, but truthfully, the section I was in up on West Side Drive certainly north of Chambers for most of the day was not where the action was. It really wasn't where, you know, it wasn't where command post got collapsed on or treatment sectors got collapsed on. It certainly wasn't where I expect any of the missing, our missing, EMS missing people, would be from.

So I don't know.

MR. ECCLESTON: Okay. Thank you very much for conducting this interview with me. This interview is being concluded at 113 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT BRUCE MEDJUCK

Interview Date: October 15, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MS. BASTEDENBECK: The time is now 1123 hours. My name is Christine Bastedenbeck. I work for the New York City Fire Department. Today I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name, rank, title, your assigned command area of the Fire Department.

LIEUTENANT MEDJUCK: Bruce Medjuck, Lieutenant, assigned to EMS operations.

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Also present at the interview today is --

MR. ECCLESTON: Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department, World Trade disaster task force.

Q. Lieutenant Medjuck, we're going to ask you if you could please give us a synopsis of the events that happened September 11th, 2001, in regards to yourself.

A. Okay. Begin?

Q. Yes.

A. I don't know. Tuesday morning I was up -- actually I had done my little tasks in the office, some small tasks. Then I had come upstairs to the office of medical affairs, and I was talking to Paramedic Delgado when we received a phone call from a representative of the New York State Department of Health. Mr. Farrell called in and asked us what was going on at the World Trade Center. We were completely unaware of what was going on. It had to be about 8:30, quarter to 9. We were not sure what time it was.

So we walked over to Laurie Santo, who was sitting at a computer that had CAD and we looked it up, the call, and she said that a plane had just hit the World Trade Center.

So at that point Dr. Cherson walked over and told Manny, "Let's go." The pagers started going off, that the plane had just hit, you know, the group pager.

So I actually ran downstairs to the office. By the time I ran back to operations, Lieutenant Mann and Lieutenant Nevins were getting radios from Lieutenant Frick and they were running out of the building.

So Captain Olszewski and I -- I grabbed a set of radios and all of my equipment. We went downstairs to Captain Olszewski's car, which was parked in the outdoor parking lot. We got into one of the Chevy Luminas. I'm not sure of the number.

I had called the RCC supervisor, which was Lieutenant Vitale at the time, and asked her to log us on, responding into the incident. We actually had to respond there down Flatbush Avenue without my lights and sirens trying to get through traffic.

Janice was driving, and we got into the -- they let us onto the Brooklyn Bridge. There was nothing on the Brooklyn Bridge. There were just emergency vehicles, all unmarked emergency vehicles responding in front of us.

I would note as we were coming out of the girder part of the Brooklyn Bridge just as you could see it clearing. We saw when we first started to go over the Brooklyn Bridge, the building smoking, tower one smoking, heavy black smoke coming out. Just as we came out of the bridge, we could see again the towers also with the plane come and slam into tower two.

There was like a little bit of delay, and then all of a sudden this fire ball just shot out of the opposite side of the tower. When we saw -- I said to Janice: Did you see that, did you see that? She said no, I had my hands on the steering wheel; I'm watching the road.

So we came off of the bridge, and we actually went straight onto Chambers Street, where we came out. You know how the bridge lets you off by Chambers Street. We were trying to cut through all this traffic on Chambers Street in a car without any lights or sirens. Janice is driving as best as she could.

We cut across to West Street, and on West Street we cut left and went over to Vesey. By that time there were emergency vehicles all over the place. I told Janice just park the car on the corner of West and Vesey, which I marked on the map with a 1 next to it. We parked actually on the southwest corner.

We got out, and just as we got out of the car we had noticed -- we went right up to Chief Gombo who was there already. He was with Ross Terranova. Ross was operating the radio. Lieutenant Davila was just coming up to talk to Chief Gombo, along with Captain Pinkus.

Who else? I think that was really it for supervisors. I noticed out of the corner of my eye Chief Ganci's driver/aide Steve Mosiello. He was there.

Chief Gombo told myself and Janice -- he said something and then Rene Davila disappeared. Chief Gombo told myself and Janice to go over to the other side of the building on Church Street and set up a triage area, which was at the corner of Church and Fulton on the southeast corner, which I marked by a number 2. We were right in front of the Millennium Hotel.

Then Lieutenant Davila came over there, and we were pretty much working out the logistics -- I mean, there were a lot of patients coming out of the buildings, a lot of people coming out, mostly with minor stuff going on. We were trying to organize what was going on, but there was just so much going on so quickly that we really didn't have a chance to really get a whole treatment and triage area established.

I do remember when we were coming over from West and Vesey we went down -- we went east on Vesey Street. I remember just as we came past the PATH train by Seven World Trade, the entrance to the PATH train over there, just as we came out from underneath that underpass right there, we saw a whole bunch of what I thought -- and I don't know but I thought was airplane parts, pieces of the airplane.

I commented to Janice -- I was commenting in my own words about all of this -- all these pieces of plane that were hanging out -- that were just laying on the ground.

I got over to the other side. We set up the area. I remember there were people coming up asking us if they could help, people that were trained, doctors and nurses. Everybody was volunteering to help. They were just dragging people out to us in the area there.

I remember that Dr. Cherson came up at some point with Manny Delgado, helping us out over there. There were a whole bunch of units. I remember the Beekman unit was there. There were BLS units. Cabrini was there, New York Hospital. Cornell was there. There were some EMS units. I remember Alex Loudski being there, doing some tracking for Lieutenant Davila.

And then I remember someone coming up to me and telling me they were 49 Henry, a haztac truck, and they took out their hazmat tape and they cordoned off the whole area. We started to get people who weren't patients, throwing them out of the area and just bringing patients in there.

Let me see what else. There were a whole bunch of people coming over to us, units just coming in and telling us that they were helping us out. And I really don't remember all the units because there was -- a lot of it's a blur.

I remember them telling us that some cops came out of the building -- after we had started to establish in this chaotic area, a triage area. Even though it was chaotic, we still had some -- something going on there. We had divided all the stable people and all the critical people. We were taking and moving out the critical people as they came. We were actually starting to move out the stable people, some of the stable people, also.

I remember cops coming out of the World

Trade Center saying that there were a whole bunch of people stuck in an elevator shaft and that they needed us to go in there and bring them out. We were like you have to bring them out to us.

Some ESU cops -- the next thing I remember was quickly getting from one of the medics reevaluating patients and who really was -- we did a whole re-triaging the critical and non-critical patients.

I remember them then bringing out this lady on a door that they had made a makeshift long board for her. They put her on the board, and she had burns on her and she had this back injury.

I remember Dr. Cherson saying that we have no time, because there was a doctor there also that wanted to do, you know, multi traumas with sterile -- with water and everything for the burns. Dr. Cherson was saying, we need to get these critical patients out of here, go to the hospital.

I remember there was a lot of -- and you couldn't control it. A lot of -- as ambulances were coming in, patients, they weren't even getting to the triage area but they were just getting loaded up with patients and going.

I remember Commissioner Drury coming up to me and saying to me, "Where is the command post?" I sent him to the other side to West Street.

Cops coming and helping. Everyone was just coming and helping, but it was so chaotic. Actually now it's kind of like really a blur.

Then I just remember that, distinct noise like an airplane being on a runway and it's ready to take off. I heard the loud roaring of like the engines, and I thought another plane was hitting the building.

Someone yelled run. I looked up, and the top of the tower I saw was starting to move over. It was bending like it was going to come down. Everybody started running. I ran up the block, and I didn't know what to do. I was all confused. I mean, everyone was running. People were falling on the floor. Nobody was helping to do anything. Everybody was just running for their life.

I know I made it about a third of the way up the block, and I went to go get underneath a car, the trunk area of the car. I slid underneath there. And as I slid underneath there, this big blast just came and knocked me down the rest of the way.

I remember my helmet falling off, and I was in the fetal position underneath the car. As I turned my head to see what was going on, to see if I could see underneath the car, because I really didn't know what was happening, I thought a plane had actually hit the building, a third plane. It was just this huge blast of smoke that hit me in the face, white smoke. Then it was pitch-black. I couldn't even see.

I didn't think I was going to die from stuff falling; I thought I was going to die from the asphyxiation. It was just incredible. I couldn't breathe. I was trying to spit this stuff out. I'm feeling around for my helmet because I really don't know what's going on.

I looked over my shoulder. It's pitch-black, and I remember seeing this ball of flames shooting down the street, and then it just sucked right back into itself. It went away.

Then it started to clear up.

There was a lady in front of me leaning underneath the car, and I asked the lady if she was okay. She kept saying to me: No, I'm not okay, no, I'm not okay. I didn't know, if she wasn't okay, I couldn't do anything really for her.

So I had gotten up, out from underneath the car, and I looked around. It was still white smoke, like you couldn't breathe. For some reason I walked back towards the Trade Center, and I walked in the whole area that we had just had the triage area. I remember leaving people there, the critical people that couldn't walk, that they dragged out and they weren't there anymore. Nothing.

Ambulances were trashed over there. There were cars that were parked in the middle of the street, marked, unmarked police cars. I don't know who they belonged to. Things were just crushed and blown out.

I was walking around. I was walking towards the Trade Center, and someone -- an EMT came up to me and kept on saying, Bruce, are you okay, are you okay. It was Jai Zion of Battalion 4. I was like yeah, I'm okay, I'm okay.

He said come with me. I said no, I've got to look for everybody. I've got to start to regroup everybody. He's said no, come with me, come with me. I really don't have time for this. I said you go and come with me to the area.

Then I started walking back up the block in the opposite direction of the Trade Center, and I ran into -- the first one that I ran into that I knew was Bill Melarango, Lieutenant Melarango. I saw him. He was walking up the block. He turned around and walked up the block.

Then I ran into -- at the corner of Broadway and Fulton, I ran into Jay Swithers. I also remember running into Bonnie -- I don't know what Bonnie's last name is. She works down in BHS. She's a medic who worked down in BHS. I don't know what her last name was. I remember running into her, and she was helping someone walk.

I got on the radio at this point, because I had a radio with me. I told them -- I heard Captain Sickles on the radio, talking on the radio now. I told him that we were regrouping and we were now at Broadway and Fulton for a triage area.

We found an ambulance that was just driving into the area, and we stopped them. We had a whole bunch of people just coming to the ambulance. People were bringing out stuff from stores, wheel barrows, garbage cans filled with water and drink and stuff like that.

I remember going into the ambulance looking for a mask, and I couldn't find one. So I took a cravat and I tied it around my face like a bandanna so I wouldn't get killed by this smoke.

I don't even know how long we were there. I remember Captain Sickles on the radio telling us that we needed resources over there. I remember seeing a fireman riding a motorcycle coming -- driving down there.

I was talking to Jai and trying to say to Jai I lost Janice, I lost Phil Ashby. He was a medic that was with us. You know, all the people that I didn't know where they were.

Anybody who was with us in our triage area, I had no clue as to where they were.

Then I ran into Dr. Cherson, and he's like where's Manny Delgado? We couldn't find Manny. We were looking for Manny. So we were like let's get this triage area and we'll find him. So now we were getting the triage area back in order, and he was helping us out.

We didn't know what was going on really with anybody. I remember seeing Car 33 pull up and Lieutenant Mendez was in the car and Dr. Garcia was in the car. I don't know who else. And Jai was there and his ambulance crew. I remember St. John's paramedics were there in this area.

We were getting overwhelmed with patients. We were just throwing patients into the ambulance. There were people coughing up, lying on the ground there.

Then before -- all I know is that someone yelled another building -- the next building -- the other building's coming down. I didn't even hear the rumble this time. I just started running. I ran up a block. I didn't know what block at the time it was, but I figured out afterwards where I came out. I ran up Ann Street.

I was running up Ann Street, and there was a bay door open, a loading dock bay door. I saw a few people running in there, and I ran in there. I ran in, kept running into the bay. I rested on like the step where the trucks back up into to make it level.

I remember them yelling close the door, close the door, close the door. All I know is I looked over my shoulder and I saw that big mushroom cloud coming in the door again. I jumped up on the bay, on the dock, and I ran into the building with all these other people running into the building.

I just kept running, down -- everybody was running down two stories. I was running down two stories with them. We went into the basement, and I remember [redacted] was with us. It was just me and him in this building. I told [redacted] -- I said, come on, we've got to go back upstairs. He said I'm not going back upstairs, I can't, I can't. Okay, stay down here, I'm going to go upstairs and check it out.

We couldn't find our way out of the building. We eventually came out in some diner that was part of the building, a little restaurant, that was part of the building. Everybody was in there: cops, people -- I remember I ran into a traffic agent telling me that she was having an asthma attack. I told her to just sit there, relax, I don't have any equipment with me.

Then I came out of the building and I was like -- now it was a ghost town. I mean, after the second tower came down, Broadway -- there were cars, emergency vehicles all over the place, but there was nobody to be found.

So I walked out. Again I ran into Dr. Cherson, for the second time. Every time a tower dropped, I'd find him. He was the only one that I would find. So this time I decided to stick with him.

We found Pat Scaringello there. He was walking around in a daze. I said come on. I hear on the radio -- now I'm not talking on the radio. My battery is going dead. It's beeping -- it was one of those new radios. It was beeping away. I told him that I heard them on the radio anyone south of the event should go to the ferry terminal; everybody north should go to Chelsea Piers.

So I was like -- we're right smack in the middle. Let's start making our way. I told Dr. Cherson and Scaringello let's start making our way to the ferry terminal. So we said, you know what, we're not taking any chances. I said let's walk along the water so it's all clear.

So I remember we started walking the wrong way. We were walking north on Broadway, because we really didn't know where we were. I worked lower Manhattan. I remember the Brooklyn Bridge. I remember people coming off.

I remember we started to walk north on Broadway, and we saw this unmarked car -- we didn't know who it belonged to -- and a cop, an ESU cop, in the car in the passenger seat not moving. We were banging on the window. He didn't do anything. We opened the door, and he was in there petrified. We just closed the door and left him.

We had seen an ambulance come over. They were going back to Brooklyn. They were getting out of there. Then we started walking in the right direction, and we walked up some street. I don't even know what street we walked up. I think it was Fulton Street. We ended up walking up, me, Dr. Cherson and Pat Scaringello, walking up Fulton Street to the east side to the seaport.

We found the St. John's medics -- we found the ambulance from St. John's. There was nobody in it, and it was running.

Then we were walking up to where we found Manny Delgado right by Beekman Hospital. He was in that little square by Fulton Street -- and I don't even know what the heck the name of the street was. We found him standing there. So we got him together, and Pat.

Then we hiked it. First I went to the ER to see who was in the ER. I saw a lot of ambulances there. I was trying to gather everybody to get them. But none of them were our ambulances. They all belonged to the volunteers.

I walked inside to the ER, and it was a madhouse in the ER, people all over the place. I remember saying you know what, I can't do anything here, there's nobody from us. So I walked out with Scaringello and left him there. He didn't want to come with us to the ferry terminal.

So me, Manny and the doctor hiked it to the ferry terminal, and that's where we found Chief Basile standing there with Louie Cook. We were talking with him, and he said that we were putting together a treatment area up on the second floor of the ferry terminal, and he put me in charge of it, going to put it all together with Lisa Desena. She was the ALS coordinator for Division 4.

So we were there. We set up everything over there. We set up everything over there, and we were just -- people were coming in dribs and drabs, but more emergency personnel. They were making this a staging area.

That was it. I mean, we stayed there until like 4:00. They brought food in. I ran into EMT Zion again. I mean, there were no real specifics going on there. That was the first time I ran into Chief McCracken. The first time was there where I ran into him with Pauline Cronin.

I got to use the phone for the first time. His phone was the only phone. I tried on my cell phone to make phone calls to tell someone I was okay. I couldn't get through. So I finally got through on Chief McCracken's phone. I called here and spoke to Kathleen McCrory to call my wife and my mother to tell them I was okay.

A lot of people were coming into the ferry terminal. I remember that off of the boats -- firemen were coming off of the boats from Staten Island. We set up a whole treatment and triage area over there.

And we stayed there until like 4:00. Then we wanted to get out of there. So I left Chief Basile, Louie Cook, Chief Villani was there and a whole bunch of other people. We decided it was time for us to leave.

Me, Manny and the doctor found his car. We walked back to Broadway and Fulton, found his car and drove his car out of there and went to Battalion 4 to clean up. Some guy cleaned our car for us at Battalion 4. We were in Dr. Cherson's car, because the car I drove over there, I have no idea what had happened to it.

They told us -- after we got done at Battalion 4 and making phone calls -- because they actually had phones working at the time. I remember calling the office here, and this was like after 4:00 already.

So then I -- what did we do? We were coming back to Metrotech here after 4:00, and they told us on the radio that they wanted us to go to Chambers and West Street to the command post there. So we drove back there, and we stayed there till -- I stayed there till like 10:00 at night.

Dr. Cherson was doing what he had to do. Manny Delgado, about five minutes before me, caught a ride back to Metrotech. I caught a ride back. I took Chief McCracken's car back to Metrotech at 10:00 at night with Lieutenant Cronin. There was someone else in the car with us; I can't remember who. Some Chief's aide came back with us? I don't remember who came back with us here to Metrotech.

We cleaned off the car. They brought me back in here and it was like go downstairs, get into uniform, take a shower. Then I took a shower and went home, and that was it for the day.

To think about the people, all the EMTs that were lost and the medics that were lost in the World Trade Center, were all from our one triage area. And I don't know whether it was after the first collapse or the second collapse, because I never saw them -- I never saw anybody from our triage area after the first collapse.

I was like I don't even know why I didn't go -- I never went back to West Street. I remember things like Captain Olszewski telling me in the triage area, maybe it would be a good idea to move the triage area back a little bit and I told her no, everything looked like it was starting to get organized. We wanted to set up a staging area, and we had set one up and it wasn't working because units were coming in from all over the place and just parking all over the street.

So I said well, let's just leave them park on Church Street. Janice said all that debris down there. I said that's the whole point, nobody's going to go down into that area because -- this was before the buildings collapsed. There's debris there, but there's like no one going over that area. So that would be a good area to start parking the ambulances, because I had seen the command car from Battalion 4 parked there.

I don't know. I think that's -- you run in with Dr. -- with other people. You start talking to them. Like I was talking to Jay Swithers, telling me when I saw him, you know, that things had occurred that I don't even remember, because people were asking me like the most ridiculous things like are any ACRs being done on these patients, any tracking being done on these patients.

I was like you guys have got to be kidding. Like who really cares about that right now? There were so many patients there, we have no way of tracking them, you know. I couldn't believe supervisors were actually asking me these questions. I was like to hell with it. You get your tracking done at another time.

I remember Amy Monroe in our triage area. I remember she was in charge of the transportation end of it. Everybody who had transportation, Captain Olszewski told her to take transportation for our area. So she was handling that.

I don't know. It's all like kind of a blur. The worst part about it is just remembering that thick, black smoke and that you couldn't breathe in it and worrying what was going to happen to me, am I going to die right here and now.

The other thing that went through my mind was after I realized it was a terrorist attack, when the building came down, I didn't know it was the building coming -- I thought a third plane had hit the building, causing the building to come down. The things that went through my mind was there chemical warfare going on now. I mean, what's going on? I didn't realize -- I had no concept of what was going on. So many things going through your head.

That was really about it, that I remember. Little things that I don't remember, someone -- how people tell you about it and you just -- oh, yeah, that did happen. They refresh your memory. But that's about all that I can remember from my memory right now.

Q. Anything else you wanted to add, Bruce?

A. No.

MS. BASTEDENBECK: This concludes our interview with Lieutenant Bruce Medjuck. The time now is 1155 hours.

Thanks, Bruce.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMS LIEUTENANT CHARLES FRASER

Interview Date: October 16, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. FEILER: Today's date is October 16th, 2001. The time now is 1007 hours and this is Monty Feiler of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I am conducting an interview with the following individual:

Q. Please state your name, rank and assigned command.

A. Lieutenant Charles Fraser, EMS Division 4.

Q. Of the New York City Fire Department.

We're conducting the interview at the conference room of the Division 4 EMS command at Queens General and the interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001. Also present for the interview is.

MS. MAGGI: Diana Maggi, investigations and trials.

Q. Go ahead, sir. We're looking into your participation in the World Trade Center incident.

A. The morning of the incident, I was at the EMS Academy at Fort Totten in Queens and we were alerted that there was a plane crash at the World Trade Center. We saw a small clip of it on television. Shortly thereafter I was advised to start out to the scene with Lieutenant James Scullion. That was at the direction of Chief Charlie Wells that they were doing a recall of the hazmat trained and special operations division supervisors.

I started out in the Bronco with him. He was driving and he said that we had gotten Charlie Wells on the cell phone and he said to direct ourselves into the lobby of 2 World Trade Center and set up operations there and that we would just coordinate with him what needed to be done. We took the Brooklyn-Queens Expressway over to the Brooklyn Bridge, and I recall we got about a quarter of the way onto the bridge and there were thousands of people just evacuating into Brooklyn over the bridge. As we headed into Manhattan, I looked over and we started to see the first tower come down, just a devastating sight, to the point where we had to physically stop because there were police cars in front of us. We looked over and I remember thinking, oh, my God, you'll never see this in your life again, and I remember actually blessing myself with the sign of a cross thinking, my God, there were people in there, there were guys in there, let alone our people, between police, fire and civilians.

We came over the bridge, we went over Park Row, past City Hall, which they looked like they were attempting to secure and lock that down. We came down Park Row to Fulton Street, we came across Fulton, and as we pulled up on Church Street, we got out of the vehicle, we started to get on our bunker pants and get dressed ready to go into 2 World Trade when the second building started to come down and we heard on the radio a lot of people screaming Mayday, evacuate, it's coming down. We started to look up and we could see what looked like the top of this tower coming down at us, and then like a roller coaster, like a wooden roller coaster sound, and just bodies all over the ground, hitting the ground.

We got into the vehicle, we started to pull out, we made a tight U-turn and we actually struck two metal parking stanchions that were in the way because there were a lot of vehicles on the street that we were trying to get around, and as we struck these two, the bumper came up into the front end of the vehicle and then on top of that two emergency service officers jumped onto the back of the vehicle and actually threw their weapons into the back window and jumped onto the vehicle, and I watched through the rear as people just like disappeared into the black smoke. We made it about a half a block to the east on Fulton and we stopped the vehicle. We couldn't proceed any further and we were just engulfed in a cloud. You couldn't see probably five feet in front of you, and then it just got darker and darker, the wind picked up, and then this stuff started hitting the vehicle, just large chunks of computer monitors and concrete and panes of glass. Then Jimmy Scullion with was able to get the vehicle started again. We drove up further. We actually drove out of it onto Park Row and we stopped at Park Row and we waited I'd say probably about ten minutes or so because you just couldn't proceed. You couldn't see where you were going. You couldn't move.

We walked back down Fulton Street to Church, and when we got to Church Street, I guess we were on like Barclay and Church, we had noticed that there was a large setup of police emergency service. That's where we encountered the first EMS unit, 49 Henry. It was Kevin Barrett and Brendan Mulroy, two of our hazmat trained EMTs. We grouped them up and took them with us, and the next thing we did, I ran into Chief McCracken's son and he had come in to the scene and he had been inquiring if anybody had heard of his father. I didn't hear him on the radio. I'd heard Captain Deshore on the radio quite a bit giving updates on patient counts and access, and then I didn't hear her on the radio anymore. There was a lot of silence on the radio.

Q. What frequency were you on?

A. I was on the Citywide command frequency. It was a lot of silence, nobody talking over EMS.

Then we proceeded down into the subway station at Barclay Street and Church because they said that there was numerous people down there trapped towards West Street. We walked from Church all the way down to Barclay and West, and we couldn't exit the subway because there was so much debris and everything above us, but there were people down there. So we ended up coming out by -- I guess back to West Street, and as we came out on West Street, I ran into Lieutenant Kevin Haugh, who had responded down from Manhattan North, and what we started to do was pretty much safety and accountability, trying to find EMTs and medics that were just wandering. It was like they were shell shocked. They had lost their partners, they couldn't recall where they were, who they were with, where their vehicle was. We commandeered a city bus that was parked on West Street and we started to put everybody into that vehicle.

The next one I ran into was Chief John Peruggia. He was establishing a command post on West Street by Barclay and he had assigned myself and Lieutenant Scullion and Lieutenant Haugh to do the safety officer and to start doing accountability and to try and access vehicles that were down on Liberty Street. There were numerous ambulances, they said, that were buried and could we get down there to ID these vehicles and/or the people.

As we headed on down, it ended up we couldn't walk any further because the bridge had dropped across West Street. So what I ended up -- what we did was we went into 3 Financial, the American Express Building, we worked our way through the lobbies and we actually came out on the other side by Liberty. As I recall, I think there were about ten or eleven ambulances there and they were all buried in debris. Two of them were burning, actively burning. We had taken the VIN numbers off of them, the vehicle ID number, so that we could match it up, and later on in the tour we went to the Police Department and they were able to run the VIN number and give us the vehicle number and then trace down the crew that was with that.

The other ambulances that were intact, we cleaned them off as much as we could, we spray painted them to ID what they were, whether it was fire, one was a Metro Care ambulance, and I remember there was a civilian dead next to that Metro Care ambulance but half under the vehicle and the legs were out, and as we pulled the person out to kind of see, the whole back of her head was blown off and it's like she was just decapitated. But she wasn't in a uniform. She was in civilian attire. So we covered her over with a blanket and then we ended up going through these vehicles, getting personal effects out that we could. You know, crews usually have a bag with personal effects. We went through there and tried to ID who was even in that vehicle. Once we obtained that information, we gave it to Captain Dave Fenton, who was doing accountability by then. This was about, I guess, 1:30, 2:00 o'clock in the afternoon.

Then as we proceeded on, most of the rest of the evening I was doing safety officer work and accountability stuff, working mainly off of the back side by North End there, I would say, up by 2 World Financial Center and the Winter Garden, assisting with setting up temporary morgue and safety of EMS people because we had a lot of off-duty people that weren't even tagged in the system that we didn't even know where they were, taking down their Social Security number, regrouping them, keeping them into a triage treatment area.

I think the hardest part that we had on the overnight -- well, I would say right after and preceding the second collapse and then on into the afternoon was just we had no resources, we had no equipment, we had nothing. And radio communications, same thing, we just couldn't get through. You couldn't get through no matter what you tried to do accountability.

Q. The off-duty people, anybody that you recognized, any names offhand?

A. I know Maureen Bartwink from Battalion 49 was there. She had come down with her partner, which was Ron McCue. They were together. Jack O'Loughlin, a lieutenant from Queens was there. Early on, as a matter of fact, we had turned over a triage area that we set up by Park Row and Fulton Street, we had set up a large triage treatment area prior to going into that subway entrance. Lieutenant Scullion and I had gotten a few ambulance resources together along with St. Vincent's Hospital and Lieutenant O'Loughlin said he would take over that sector so that we could proceed on when we got this request that there were people in the subway. So I know he was there off duty. But that's about it that I can recall offhand.

Q. Did you ever enter any of the towers?

A. No.

Q. The second one or --

A. No. They collapsed and on our way back we had been sent -- we had gotten sidetracked prior to reporting to Chief Peruggia because they said that there were five police officers that were buried, and that would be, I guess, I'm looking at 1 World Trade Center, and they were in between 6 and 1 World Trade, and we had gotten down there and ended up -- I remember a police officer coming to me and he had a serious hand injury, actually, it was a detective, in uniform with a detective shield, and he had a left hand with serious, serious injury, burned, cut down to the bone, and we had treated him with St. Vincent's paramedics and they had removed him to a treatment area. But when we tried to get up into where these officers were, it was like walking in snow. Every three footsteps you took, you were back one, and it was just like in a deep, muddy slush.

Most of the entry that we did was down by around 1 World Trade and 3 World Trade later in the afternoon because we had a lot of EMS people. Some were in uniform, some weren't in uniform, and they were just wandering about, like trying to help out in different areas. So what we had worked to do was pull those people out and get them into a unified treatment area so that we'd have accountability of them.

I'm thinking of who. I know I had Steve Scarinzi with me from Battalion 49. He had come down off duty and I linked up with him, I guess, 1:00, 2:00 o'clock in the afternoon, and I had him for a good part of the evening with us.

Q. Where did you leave the Bronco?

A. The Bronco was left on Park Row right by I guess Broadway, Park Row and Broadway, because right here is a cutout on the map where there's some parking stanchion. We had parked it there. There was significant damage to the front end from us trying to pull out. Luckily enough, we had particulate masks that we had found in the vehicle, so we were able to get masks on right away because I don't think we would have been able to proceed any further. I mean, it was just you couldn't breathe, it was just so thick, and those masks only lasted probably 15 minutes before you were saturated.

Q. Is there anything else that you think is important, any other recollections or impressions that you'd like to add before we conclude?

A. Not really, no.

MR. FEILER: Okay. I want to thank you on behalf of the Department for conducting the interview with us. The time now is 1021 hours and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT SAL SANGENTI

S. SANGENTI

MONTE FEILER: Today's date is October 16, 2001. The time now is 9:48. This if Monte Feiler of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I am conducting an interview with the following individual…please state your name, rank and assigned command.

SAL SANGENTI: EMT Sal Sangenti, assistant to the division 4 commander.

Q: Of the New York City Fire Department. We are conducting the interview at the conference room of the Division 4 EMS command, Queens General, regarding the events of September 11, 2001. Also present at the interview is…

DIANA MAGGI: Diana Maggi, Investigations and Trials.

Q: Go ahead starting with when you first became aware of the incident and the events surrounding that.

A: Okay, I was sitting in the office waiting for Chief Carrasquillo to come into the office, he notified me by phone telling me that we were going to the 1040 at the World Trade Center. I was aware of this because we were all monitoring CAD, and at that point myself, Jason Katz, who is Chief Day's aide, and Captain Rivera were here and we all went into Chief Carrasquillo's car and responded to the scene. We went to the command post and at that time, both towers were engulfed. As we were setting up, I couldn't tell you a time frame, but at that point, when we were setting up, the first building collapsed.

Q: When you arrived, where did the vehicle stop? Where did you park?

A: On West, I can't tell you the street…I am bad with directions in Queens, but in Manhattan it was even worse. But I know we were on West.

Q: Okay, and you said you went to the EMS command post?

A: The command post there. Chief Ganci was there, Chief Gombo, Captain Sickles, Lieutenant Moore, myself, Chief Carrasquillo, Chief Browne, Jason Katz, I think that was it. All I remember.

Q: Where was that located?

A: That was across the street on West. It was in front of a parking garage.

Q: Was it on the Trade Center side of West, or on the River side?

A: It was on…I don't remember. It was, it had to be the Trade Center…

Q: Do you remember crossing over a barrier?

A: No.

Q: Okay.

A: It was on the West side, I guess the water side.

Q: Then what happened?

A: Then at that point we were there just trying to strategize and at that point, the building collapsed. Myself and Chief Carrasquillo and numerous people ran into the garage and I found a little room to the left side of the garage. It was myself, a Port Authority female Sargent, and a detective were in the room. We had air for the first 20 seconds, then the room got engulfed. The room had air conditioning, so at that point the air started to circulate a little, and we kind of got our composure, but unfortunately, there was debris in front of the room now and we were stuck in the room. I kind of told everybody, just relax. I don't know how I took the initiative, but I did, told everybody just relax. The woman, I wiped her face off cause she was really engulfed with the ashes. The ash and the concrete and all the other stuff, and the time frame I couldn't tell you. But at that point we were able to get out and I finally heard a fireman who said come on, let's go through the garage. We went through the garage and we ended up outside, I couldn't tell you exactly where I was. I lost my whole, you know…

Q: How were you able to get out of the room?

A: Actually we kind of, it was maybe 2 ½ maybe 3 feet of debris, and we just kicked it. We kicked as much as we could. It was a lot of paper, dust, actually I remember kicking a vehicle mirror. Because I stepped on it and I thought I stepped on someone's glasses, and it was an actual mirror. At that point, we got out and we walked through the garage and came up where I couldn't tell you.

Q: Did you have any radio or cell phones?

A: I had a radio and my own personal cell phone.

Q: Did any of them work down there?

A: No. Actually, I thought I lost my phone, but I had everything in tact, then I couldn't anybody. The only people I was with were the fireman, the Port Authority Sargent, and the detective. That was it.

Q: Did you get anybody's name or commands?

A: There were no names, and at this point that I remember, I didn't see any EMS people at all. At that point, I really thought that Chief Carrasquillo was gone. Because the way it works is, if you ran to the sides I don't know if you would have survived. The building was the way to go cause you had some kind of cover. That was it, and then it felt like an hour, but it was probably just minutes that I walked. I walked to probably by…I'll tell you in a second, I'm bad with directions…it was by the water, so it has to be, I couldn't even tell you, I'm sorry. I remember walking towards the water, I remember seeing the water, and I must have walked like four blocks and I finally saw Chief Carrasquillo.

Q: And where was he?

A: He? Again, I know he was there with Chief Gombo and Chief Kowalczyk. Hugged them and thanked them, that was it. At that point, the second collapse went and we were probably about a block away. The dust and all the other stuff hit us and at that point I couldn't get my composure. I just sat there and relaxed and at that point we started to get everyone together, and we took it from there. We went to Chambers and West and that's when they established a command post. Me, Ron Pfeffer, and at that point was when everyone started to come, Charlie Wells, J.P. Martin. Then everything started to, you know, fall into place.

Q: Do you know the location where you met them? Where they met you actually…

S. SANGENTI

A: Actually it was in the back, where's the school? Where's Stuyvesant?

Q: I think Stuyvesant is up here by Chambers Street.

A: So what I did was I walked over here. They were gonna establish a command post at Stuyvesant, but they weren't sure if there was a gas leak in the school, or it was running underneath the school. So they moved everything, they moved everything to Chambers and West.

Q: Did you ever enter any of the buildings?

A: The Trade Centers? No.

Q: Number 7 World Trade Center?

A: No.

Q: Did you have to treat any patients?

A: I mostly just helped. I helped a lady, she was walking, when I finally got out of the garage, there was a lady there. She was pretty much just dazed, and I helped her I said come on, keep walking, keep walking, and that was it.

Q: Is there anything else that you felt was important? Any other people that you may have seen: firefighters, EMS?

A: No, pretty much like I said, the only people that I know are the chiefs, cause I work with them. I remember seeing Chief Ganci, I remember seeing Chief Gombo, Chief Kowalczyk, Chief Carrasquillo. But once I got into the garage, I lost everyone.

Q: Okay, anything else?

A: That’s it.

Q: I want to thank you for you time so we can conduct these interviews, and the time is 9:57. This interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CHIEF PEDRO CARRASQUILLO

Interview Date: October 16, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. FEILER: Today's date is October 16th, 2001. The time now is 9:16 hours. This is Monte Feiler of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I am conducting on interview of the following individual.

Please state your name, rank and assigned area of command.

CHIEF CARRASQUILLO: Pedro Carrasquillo, Division 4, EMS command.

MR. FEILER: Of the New York City Fire Department.

We're conducting the interview in the conference room of Division 4 EMS command, the property of Queens General Hospital. The interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Also present is --

MS. MAGGI: Diana Maggi, investigations and trials.

Q. Go ahead, sir.

A. Heading into the office that morning, when on the air, I heard conditions 04, Lieutenant Rene Davila, sounding very anxious on the radio stating that there was some form of explosion. I didn't catch it all. I raised the volume and then heard him indicate that there was a plane that ran into the side of the World Trade Center.

So right away I started continuing into Queens General. I called citywide. I told them that I would be responding. I came by Queens General on my way from home, picked up Sal Sangeniti, picked up Captain J.R. Rivera, and I picked up Jason Katz, who were here waiting for me.

We continued in. Then we heard the report of a second airplane crashing into the other tower. Initially I thought it was just one of the commuter planes, or one of the sight-seeing planes along the water there, but then when I heard the second plane, then right away I thought it must have been terrorist activity, but still not knowing what type of aircraft went into the building.

So we responded in. Traffic was heavy. We were able to get through into the express lane and went in through the Midtown Tunnel, taking the drive southbound and seeing the smoke and seeing the World Trade Center. At one point, seeing the gaping hole on one of the towers and the smoke on the other going all the way up, I was thinking everybody from that point on up will probably be dead if not from the smoke, certainly from the fire.

We took the tunnel underneath the tip of Manhattan and came up alongside, I think it's the New York Athletic Club. I parked a couple blocks before the World Trade Center just because I didn't want to go too much closer with my vehicle.

I parked, got out. People were running. I got out, got my helmet, got my turnout coat. At that point, right there, there was some debris, and there were some body parts that were on the street. Some of the police officers were trying to cordon off those areas. So we were very careful when we were walking.

We went over the median onto the West side of West Street and continued up to the command post, which was directly across the street from the World Trade Center. At that point, just before I got to the command post I saw Jack Delaney with his medics from the New York Hospital, Columbia Presbyterian, and they had their vehicles diagonally parked on West Street. They were out in front of the vehicle.

I called Jack and his men over because that location didn't seem to be a safe location because of the debris that was falling out of the buildings. So they came over by the command post. They had given them instructions, and they took off in the south direction to their assignment.

I reported to the command post. Chief Gombo was there. I remember seeing Chief Browne and Jason Katz, who came with me, went with Chief Brown. They got their assignment, and they headed in a south direction.

I hadn't gotten my assignment yet. We were talking. Then all of a sudden we heard a noise. People started running. People were saying that the building was collapsing. At that point I heard the noise. It was enough for me to react and run.

I didn't turn around to look. I just heard the noise coming down, and it was like a jet engine, just getting louder and louder.

At that moment I'm thinking which way to run, north or south. And it seemed like the corners on either direction was falling and I wouldn't be able to outrun this thing. So we all retreated into a garage that had a ramp going down directly across the street. I think it was the American Express building or one of those buildings there.

We went in. As we're running down, I'm looking at where I can hide. There were some little cutouts as you're going down the ramp. So I went to one of them. There were three other firefighters there. We squatted down. Just as we did that, everything just passed right through into the tunnel, into the garage ramp.

At that moment everything was just total darkness. You couldn't see anything. You couldn't breathe. We were coughing. I got out my handkerchief so I could at least use that as some type of filter. I got a couple breaths, and then you're just coughing.

Firefighters there had on their respirators, and then some of them had flashlights. So at least we were able to head -- we were all starting to head in the up ramp direction going up, which is the way that we had come down.

I'm hearing people saying that we were sealed in. So right away the first thing is, that's it, this is how we're going to die, down here. I remember Chief Ganci behind me, hearing his voice, stating that we have to move up. Up is out.

So we started to go up. We're getting towards the top, and you couldn't see. There was total, total darkness. I see a flashlight shining from the top and somebody screaming down that this is outside. We started working our way up towards that light, and there was debris all over. So you really had to be careful on how you were stepping because you would trip and fall.

When we got outside, there was a suburban right next to the entrance. I don't know if it was pushed up there or how it got there. So at that point you still couldn't see anything, but you could see silhouettes of trees, so we knew we were on the outside.

I started heading north to the corner, which is Vesey Street, and there we started to regroup some of the people. As I was walking West on Vesey, I ran into Captain Stone, who appeared to be injured. His shoulder was hurting him. I saw Artie Gonzalez who was a paramedic out of Bellevue that was there.

Then I went into the lobby of the American Express building. In the lobby I ran into a couple of other EMTs, but at that point I really couldn't see much because I was covered in the soot. So I was able to get some water to clean my face, cough, spit, gargle, trying to get some of that soot out of me and clean my glasses.

Then we started -- we were hearing of possible gas leaks and possibly the next building coming down. So we started to get everybody mobilized at the west -- West of West Street by --

Q. I have a map.

A. -- Vesey and North Street, I believe it was. We started to go up Vesey Street, and we started heading towards North End. At North End on the northeast corner there's an Embassy Suites. We started to make that a triage treatment area for all the people that we were bringing in.

At that location we started to meet Captain Sickles, J.R. Rivera again, Sal, I saw them, because we lost contact once we ran down into the garage. Then Chief Gombo was there, Chief Pascale. I don't know where they were before. So we started making a treatment area.

Then I went back down Vesey Street to make sure that everybody started to clear out from the American Express lobby that we were at.

Then I decided to take a walk towards West Street just to see if in fact that tower, the whole tower, had come down, which confirmed, yes, that it was completely down.

I started to walk back again, making sure everybody was out, and started to get all the vehicles, all the personnel to North End.

As I was walking back, I heard the second sound, which was the second building coming down. I ran into the American Express or right in between here, looked around. I saw a lot of windows. Now I'm looking for a place that I'm not going to get hit with flying debris.

I had two EMTs, that I don't know who they were, male and female. I told them come on this way. There was a civilian that was going to walk out. I said you can't walk out there, the tower is collapsing. I grabbed him. Then we went behind this marble pillar, a huge marble pillar with a wall behind it, back there and squatted down.

The second wave came down through Vesey Street, blowing out the windows along the sides there. Then I told the guy can we get out another way, and he said yes. We were able to go through some hallway. We came out on North Street. We were able to go underneath and came out here and then walked over to the Embassy Suites lobby there.

There we tried to regroup who was going where. Chief Gombo, everybody was going now to I think it was police headquarters. They told me to initially go to Chelsea, but then they assigned somebody else to Chelsea and I stood there.

Q. How did you receive those orders?

A. No, no, no, we were there in the lobby. Chief Gombo was there, Peruggia was there, Fran was there, Chief Pascale and myself.

Q. That was in the lobby of American Express?

A. No, this was in the lobby of the Embassy Suites.

So everybody got their assignments. I think Chief Basile was there as well. He went to the ferry terminal. He was working his way out to the ferry terminal, I believe. Chief Villani was heading that direction as well. Chief Pascale went to the Chelsea Piers for the staging area out there. And I stood at Vesey.

We were treating people, and we started to -- I started to let everybody -- we need to get these people into vehicles and out of here and to the hospital or to an area of Chambers Street, because now we're getting reports there was gas leaking and possibly rupturing. So we were not in a safe area.

We started to do that. We got everybody outside. Then we drove all the vehicles -- some of the patients got into the vehicles, and we transported them out to the area hospitals. The rest of the vehicles continued now northbound to Chambers Street.

At Chambers Street, we regrouped there, and we were going to start a treatment area by the grass area. We went up Vesey, and we went up West End. We worked our way back here to Chambers Street, which is right near Stuyvesant School.

We were going to go into this area that's indicated North Park to set up some sort of a treatment area there so that in the event that we needed to transport people and the area was blocked off and we couldn't get vehicles, there were some ships, boats, that were coming in. So we would use them to get the people out of there and take them either uptown, downtown or to Jersey, if needed.

At that point, however someone came by and we had to evacuate that area because there were gas lines underneath there and that would possibly blow up. So we regrouped then and just went down the block on Chambers, and we went to Chambers and West.

As we were retreating from some of these places -- I mean, a lot of equipment too was just left behind, and vehicles, until we were able to come back later on. At any rate, we regrouped to Chambers and West. Chief Peruggia and myself were there. Then we set tried to set up a plan.

He stood in control of communications, and then I went as the liaison with OEM at the Fire Department. And we just kept on operating at that location with some of our units. As we would get patients, we would treat them and take them out of there or transport them or treat them and release.

At that point we wound up getting a large contingency of people from the academy. So they were outside, and we told the captain from the academy -- I don't know his name -- to get all the personnel and bring them into the area of Stuyvesant School and leave them in there, because outside were all the dust -- every time the vehicles drove by, it just picked up all the dust and debris. Then as we were going to utilize them, then we would call them.

Then I just worked as the liaison office with OEM, and I was just coordinating whatever resource they needed. Then we started to try to get a sense of who was missing. We didn't know how many units were assigned and so on. So we just took a tally of the units nearby.

Then we just continued to operate. I attended a couple of the OEM meetings, what we needed, where we were going to set up. We talked about possibly having a field hospital. We were going to set it up at the North Park area, because now it was secured so we were able to get -- we were going to try to get the Parks Department to set up some tents.

We had a Coast Guard cutter that was anchored along the side, and they were able to provide us with generator power and supplies and water and so on.

So that was a plan. We were trying to get a hold of the medical examiner to set up a morgue sector or request for a team, because we knew we were going to have to process a lot of bodies there. So we were trying not to anticipate a lot of things.

Following the meeting, OEM -- because OEM got established in the Stuyvesant School, we were there. They told us in the morning they were going to get a ship, a hospital ship, that was coming in and anchoring at the pier. Then the rest of the resources and some troops and whatever things that we needed.

So we spoke about DMAT teams coming in to try to set up as treatment areas and just continue to operate there throughout the night.

Q. When you were coming in, you said that you heard Lieutenant Davila talking. Was that on citywide?

A. Citywide, yeah.

Q. That's the frequency that you were listening to?

A. Yeah.

Q. And when you called citywide, you did that by radio or telephone?

A. Telephone.

Q. Did they give you any specific area to respond to?

A. No. I just told them I would be heading in, going to the command post. Then I called RCC. I called to RCC and told them call all the stations throughout the city, anybody that's going home, they have to stay, and try to keep as many people as possible, in the event that we would need more resources down there.

I wasn't the incident commander, but I'm sure that the people there had their hands full and I didn't know if any of them had relayed any information, so I just did that on my own.

And I spoke to -- just before I left here, I told the crew here and the L S U crew here to respond not to incident but just on the other side, on the Queens side of the Midtown Tunnel area. In the event if they needed them, they would be right there so they can just go in.

Q. When you arrived at the scene, you came out of the tunnel that connects to the FDR Drive and the West Side Highway?

A. Correct.

Q. Where did you say you parked your vehicle?

A. I parked my vehicle on the east side of West Street or the West Side Highway right near the New York Athletic Club, the club down there.

Q. You know what, mark it if you see it on there.

A. I believe it was --

Q. Is that where the vehicle stayed for the remainder of the incident?

A. Until about 3 in the morning, when I looked for it. I brushed off all the debris.

Q. When the first building collapsed and you retreated into the underground garage, you said you met up with three firefighters. Were you able to determine their names or where they were from?

A. No.

Q. And then you heard Chief Ganci?

A. I heard his voice, yeah.

Q. You never were face-to-face with him?

A. No, you couldn't see.

Q. Did you meet up with him any time after that or you lost contact?

A. No, I went back to Vesey Street, and I went into the American Express building to try to first clean myself off and then try to establish some form of a treatment area.

Q. Other than the people that you mentioned, did you see any other EMS officers, EMTs, medics, fire officers that you know?

A. No. Those are the people that I recall. There was another medic that I saw in the lobby, Perez, from -- I think he's -- he used to work for us. That's the only one I recall. He asked me if I was okay. Then that's when I just cleaned myself off, at least my face, anyway.

Q. Besides the American Express and the Embassy Suites, did you ever enter either one of the trade towers?

A. No.

Q. Building number seven?

A. No.

Q. Initially you said there was an EMS command post that you met up with Chief Gombo. Where was that?

A. That was there, right across the street from the Trade Center, just next to the garage.

Q. The north tower or the south tower?

A. It was in between both towers.

Q. Can you just X that, make it D.

A. I think it was in this area here, because I remember this pedestrian bridge being on the outside and looking trying to see where. This is the area.

Q. Is there anything else that you think is important that you would like to add before we conclude?

A. No.

MR. FEILER: I want to thank you for your time and providing this interview. It's 9:38 hours, and we'll conclude this interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT ROBERT SHORT

Interview Date: October 16, 2001

R. SHORT

MONTE FEILER: Today's date is October 16, 2001. The time is 11:01 and this is Monte Feiler of the New York City Fire Department. I am conducting an interview with the following individual…please state your name, rank, title, and area of command.

ROBERT SHORT: Robert Short, EMT, 5071 MERV operator for Division 4.

Q: The New York City Fire Department. We are conducting this interview in the conference room of Division 4 at Queens General Hospital regarding the events of September 11, 2001. Also present is…

DIANA MAGGI: Diana Maggi, Investigations and Trials.

Q: Okay, if you can just start off with what your assignment was that day and how you became aware of the incident.

A: My assignment was Merv 4 operator. I got assigned, I don't remember the exact time I got assigned on the job.

Q: Who assigned you?

A: The citywide dispatcher. We were told not to go through the tunnel, so we went up 59th street. Not 59th street, Queens Boulevard, over the 59th Street Bridge, and down Second Avenue, cause they had it completely closed off. As we were going down, that's when we seen, I guess it was the second (I don't really remember) you know, hitting the tower. Cause the first tower was on fire, as we were coming over the bridge, we saw that. Then we parked at West and Vessey.

Q: Who directed you to park there?

A: Lietenant Hadala

Q: Where did you meet up with him?

A: We all parked. He was in his command car, it was an LSU truck in front of me, then it was me with the MERV. As soon as we pulled up, we immediately were contacting patients.

Q: Okay, who was in the MERV with you?

A: A paramedic Dibriano. We started treating the patients, most of them were firefighters. I remember one--then I think the building collapsed. All the smoke, or whatever it was, the debris and everything, we got knocked out of the MERV. Whoever was in the MERV, I don't know what happened to them. Cause a lot of them ran out, ran in. All of our equipment got blown out and everything so we ended up, I don't know where I ended up because it was dark. But we ended up somewhere near the water. I was by myself. No EMS personnel, I don't know who it was, but I guess it was near the water, yeah. Then I went back to the MERV and started cleaning out the debris, cause it was mostly all dust and everything. Then a fire captain, I remember this clearly, a fire captain ran up to me and said look, I lost all of my men. I can't get into contact.

Q: Do you know what his name was?

R. SHORT

A: No, I think he was from, I think it was Rescue 3. Cause we had Rescue 3 guys who were walking up West Street, we gave them a ride up. We rode 'em up, we said guys hop on, they hopped on, I don't know what happened after that. I heard later on they all got killed. Well, either he was from Rescue 3 or Ladder 43, I remember seeing a 3 on his hat. A white hat. On the MERV we have all the channels for the fire telephone radio, so he started doing command orders or whatever. I don't know what he was doing, and we were doing patients. Then the second building collapsed. Again, we just ran.

Q: Were you in motion at that point?

A: No, actually we stayed on Vessey.

Q: So you stayed there?

A: Yeah, we stayed there. Because I believe it was the Verizon Building, I don't know if that's on Vessey, cause I remember we started off on Vessey, and then we moved under these, like an overlook that goes across from building to building. I don't know what it is.

Q: Like a pedestrian walk?

A: Like a pedestrian walk. We moved back or forward, I don't remember. But then the second building collapsed, and then again we ran. We couldn't see nothing. Then we ended up on West and Warren by foot. We left everything there.

R. SHORT

Q: So when you first arrived, where did you park the MERV?

A: Vessey. West and Vessey.

Q: And that's where it stayed?

A: Yes. But, oh yeah, here's the pedestrian bridge here, so I was right. We parked here in the beginning. Then the second thing collapsed and we got caught in it. Then we just started around, I don't remember, just all these people tramping on you basically. Then we moved the MERV, I guess it was up to here.

Q: So just south of the pedestrian bridge?

A: Yeah.

Q: Now were you on the river side of West Street, or on the building side?

A: On the, well at the beginning we were here, on the building side. Then when we moved it after the first collapse and everything, we moved over here somewhere, so we were near the water.

Q: So you were on the south side?

A: Yeah.

Q: And when the second collapse, where were you then?

A: Over here.

Q: You were in the vehicle?

A: Yeah, I was in the vehicle. We were in the vehicle, cause we were seeing patients, and then we were in the vehicle. When that came down, everyone just looked up and we just ran. I ran this way.

Q: Did you ever get back to the MERV?

A: Yeah, I ended up meeting up with the LSU guy, cause I didn't know where he was.

Q: What's his name?

A: Mark Mazzur. He was actually in here, because he was ahead of me with Lieutenant Hadala. So I thought, when I moved the MERV after the first collapse, I moved it up here. Cause we got the lights on, people are running and everything. I thought they were killed, cause they were over here. That's where the building with Chief Carrasquillo and Chief Browne, and everyone was over there.

Q: Did you see them there?

A: Well in the beginning, when I pulled up here, I saw their cars. We said we're gonna set up here and they went ahead. So I knew they were in the same area here. So when the second building, I guess collapsed…well, it was the first building collapsed, I moved forward, and then the second building collapsed, and that's when I walked over here and saw all the debris. That's when I said "I gotta get outta here". I started going back to the MERV, and you know, the second building, everything went off. The power and everything. So I just went up and started running this way.

Q: North up West Street?

A: Yeah, and I ended up on I think it was Warren, I think it was over here.

Q: And who treated patients on the Merv?

A: It was just me.

Q: You were the only one, you had no medics, doctors?

A: I don't' know where anyone was, no. After the initial---it was me and Dibriano, but then you know, after that, it literally just blew us out of the MERV. Cause we had the back door open with the ramp, and just everything went right out the front.

Q: Did you ever see Dibriano past that time?

A: No, I didn't see him till maybe 6, 7 hours later. But I met up with Mark Mazzur. Like I said, he went in this way after the first collapse, and I was treating patients. He was tying to…cause there was a lot of rubble. So I guess he was looking for the chief, cause we didn't know where anyone was. Then the second collapse, I left it there and I ran this way. That's where I met Mark, I think it was about an hour or two later.

Q: At about Murray and West? Warren?

A: Yeah, it was up here. They had a, Hazollah ---had a big MERV, and they were cleaning us up. I had shit in my eyes, and you know…

Q: Did you get any direction from that point?

R. SHORT

A: Well from there, the MERV was here. When I met up with Mark, and you know, they flushed out our eyes, and we washed out our face, took on a little oxygen and stuff. We went back to the scene, me and Mark Mazzur, we went back, got an ambulance, jump started the MERV, and got the LSU. Then we set up staging on I guess it was this side of Vessey, towards the water. Like right over here. Cause there was still a lot of people coming down this way. Also, we met up with Lieutenant Hadala, who lost his command car somewhere over here.

Q: Okay, so you re-located your MERV between North and West Street on Vessey?

A: Yeah, right over here I'd say. Cause this is the water, so…

Q: What ambulance did you use?

A: Um, I don't know.

Q: You don't remember where you found it?

A: No, there was people in it though.

Q: Did you recognize them?

A: No, I didn't recognize them, no.

Q: Was it a Fire Department ambulance?

A: Yes, Fire Department ambulance.

Q: Okay

A: They had cables. I said, do you have cables, and they said yes. I gotta get this thing outta here, cause of ----Then we turned it around and we set up, that's where we all kind of grouped together, we were finding people. Then we sort of set up right here, cause here's the water, and then we started taking in a lot of patients.

Q: Civilians?

A: Mostly civilians at the time, I don't think there were any firefighters.

Q: What type of injuries?

A: Eye, smoke, we have the multi-regulators. This MERV can hook up 16 people at once. Plus we had another 12 multi-regulator, and plus we had 2 more on the LSU. So we had I'd say about close to 40 patients just between me and Mazzur. So mainly oxygen.

Q: Okay, and were you able to maintain radio communication?

A: NO, after the first building collapsed I told them on city-wide "listen something's going on, we're getting outta here". They were like "where's the MERV? where's the Merv?" I said I left it a long time ago. Then when we came back, we couldn't transmit for some reason, I don't know. I guess cause they said the tower had the thing on it. But after that, I would say for about 3 ½ hours we couldn't transmit. We didn't know where anyone was.

Q: Did you enter any of the buildings?

R. SHORT

A: Did I go in? No, I didn't go in. There was a big pile of rubble, that's about it.

Q: Okay, is there anything else you would like to add, any recollections or EMS people you may have seen that you knew, that you can identify?

A: Lieutenant Remz…

Q: Where did you see him?

A: Up here somewhere…

Q: That's Warren Street between West and…

A: Yeah, and we ran up here. IT was Lieutenant Rems, Lieutenant Santamaria, and they were with the Hotzollah truck.

Q: And where was that truck parked?

A: They were parked on West between Warren and Park Place.

Q: Did they give you any direction?

A: Well, they were treating me at the time, cause in fact, I had an eye infection from it. After that was done, we ran back, seen an ambulance, jump-started the MERV, got the LSU, and then we set up over on this side of Vessey near the water. Then as the day, we were like all around. We were there for like 25 hours, okay.

Q: Anything else?

A: We need respirators like the Fire Department, that's all I have to say.

R. SHORT

Q: Okay, I want to thank you for participating in this interview. The time now is 11:14, and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT-P LISA DESENA

L. DESENA

MONTE FEILER: Today's date is October 16, 2001. The time now is 10:42, and this is Monte Feiler of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I am conducting an interview with the following individual…please state your name, rank, title, and assigned area.

LISA DESENA: Lisa Desena, paramedic, ALS coordinator, Division 4.

Q: Of the New York City Fire Department. We're conducting the interview in the conference room at Division 4 EMS command center at Queens General Hospital, and the interview is regarding the events of September 11, 2001. Go ahead.

A: Okay, we were in the office when we became aware that the first plane hit. There was some confusion as to where we should go. Whether I was supposed to go on the MERV. What ultimately happened was we received a phone call from Joe Cahill, the Citywide ALS coordinator who instructed me to take a full set of ALS equipment, put it on vehicle 833, and come down to Division One. As I was loading the equipment in, Lieutenant Maggiore stopped me. He wanted to accompany me. There was also another paramedic there, Christopher Lefkidakas. Because I was with Chris, I was able to sign out narcotics with the ALS equipment. Lieutenant Maggiore put his equipment on, and we proceeded to the incident. Do you want to know which route we ended up taking?

Q: Sure.

A: We took the Grand Central Parkway. We went over the Triboro Bridge. We came down the FDR Drive. We briefly stopped at Division One to receive instructions on how to proceed. We continued up the FDR Drive and around the Battery, Battery Park.

Q: Who directed you from Division One?

A: The ALS Coordinator for Division One.

Q: Where did she tell you to go?

A: She gave us a number of locations. She said she didn't really have specific instructions. She basically just told us where the staging areas were. So we proceeded down, we ended up at the Staten Island Ferry Terminal. This was just right after, I think the second tower had just fallen, or was falling at the time. We stopped at the Staten Island Ferry Terminal. We unloaded all of our equipment. We set up the triage area, and then from there, Lieutenant Maggiore and I went down to Liberty plaza, where we had to set up another triage area. One had been set up, but a lot of the people who were there at the time were missing or had gone to hospitals.

Q: Liberty and what? Do you know the cross street?

A: It was One Liberty Plaza. It was the building right next to the Trade Center. I'm not that familiar…yeah, it was right there. It was on the corner of Church and I guess Liberty.

Q: Okay. From the time that you got your assignment to the time that you got to the fire terminal, if you spoke to anybody was that by a cell phone or by radio?

A: We spoke to Citywide by radio. I can't remember, Lieutenant Maggiore may have also tried by cell phone to get the best route to get to the incident. By the time they gave us instructions over the Queensboro Bridge we were already right next to the Triboro Bridge. I know there were several academy vehicles, ambulances, behind us. Since we were in a command car, we were able to get through and stop traffic so that the academy ambulances could follow us. They came the same route we came, but once we got on the FDR Drive, I don't know where they ended up. I'm trying to think…I know that they had, I think, all the units go to Manhattan South and all the supervisors stay on Citywide. Then we were on Citywide. Lieutenant Maggiore had that radio on. The only radio I had was the Division radio. I was on the command frequency, 4E. So he really had the radio. Like I said, we went to the Staten Island Ferry Terminal, we set up a triage area there, saw a number of supervisors at that time.

Q: EMS Supervisors?

A: Yes.

Q: Do you know their names?

A: Chief Basile, Chief McKracken, Lieutenant Cronin, paramedic Louie Cooke was there. Chief Browne was eventually brought in, and his aide Jason Katz. Dr.Cherson, Bruce Medjuck, I know there was more, I just have to think. Then we went over to Liberty Plaza and the only supervisor on the scene, the only person there was Lieutenant Soto. Lieutenant Maggiore and Lieutenant Soto took over command and I tried to go inside and set up that triage area. But there were no FDNY people there except for me.

L. DESENA

There was a number of units from New Jersey, and a lot of doctors were there. There were no other FDNY units there. I was the only one there.

Q: Do you know what departments were there from New Jersey?

A: Actually no, down at Liberty Plaza was so chaotic that it took a long time just to get any semblance of order. The doctors continually kept trying to run down the street and go in the hole. Every time they thought there was someone down there. There were three different building collapses at that time, so everybody was really running all over the place. I honestly don't know who the Jersey units were. I just know there were no FDNY units down there at the time. I stayed down there till 6 AM the next morning.

Q: Did you treat any patients?

A: We had a number of firemen who came in for exhaustion or dehydration. We did have some minor injuries. We had one person pulled out who had been pinned down for several hours. But he wasn't there long, cause Dr. Gonzalez--- he already had blood, an IV. They were giving him blood. They rushed him went to the hospital.

Q: A civilian?

A: A civilian, yeah.

Q: Where did you get the equipment for the triage?

A: My equipment remained at the Staten Island Ferry Terminal, so when I got there, there was equipment there. As time went on, they brought down more stuff. We would tell them we needed oxygen, bandages, fluids, and it would end up getting delivered. At the beginning there wasn't a lot of stuff. I think the doctors brought down some stuff with them. So there was some stuff there. It looked like it had been set up prior to the building collapsing Then all the people that had staged that, I guess went all different places. So we're stuck there, and there was stretchers set up when I got there. The people who were originally there weren't there.

Q: Did you have the opportunity to enter any of the buildings?

A: Except for Liberty Plaza? That morning? No. I stayed there. I was down at the site several times. But because it was so unstable and buildings kept collapsing at the time and because there were no other officers there, Lieutenant Maggiore asked me to stay there and do triage and transport. Which is what I basically did.

Q: Did they have ambulances there?

A: Yes, mostly either the voluntaries or a couple of the volunteers from Long Island, and an occasional FDNY unit was there. We didn't have any problem with the ambulances. Once we were able to set up a staging area, the ambulances would come in. We'd have about 4 or 5 of them there at a time, and as they left we backed up. But that wasn't a problem.

Q: And that was to transport them to the hospital?

A: Yes.

Q: So who was transporting the patients to the triage area?

A: Either firemen or…

Q: This was on foot?

A: Yeah, cause we were that close. We were half a block away from the incident. Yeah, the firemen would bring them. The police officers would bring them. There were some people at the pile, and occasionally they would bring people back. But as I said before, most of the people at that time were FDNY, or uniformed service people who had gotten injured, or needed to recline. Most of the walking wounded people had left the area.

Q: Is there anything else that you think is important that you would like to add? Any observations? Any other personnel that you may have seen?

A: No, I don't think so. Anybody else that was down there that'd I've seen was accounted for and working today.

Q: Okay, I would like to thank you on the behalf of the Department for participating in this, the time now is 10:52. This concludes this interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMS LIEUTENANT ADAM BRYNES

Interview Date: October 16, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. RADENBERG: Today's date is October 16th, 2001. The time is 1244 hours. This is Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I am conducting an interview with Lieutenant Adam --

LIEUTENANT BRYNES: Brynes, B-r-y-n-e-s, Shield No. 0109.

MR. RADENBERG: -- assigned to EMS Battalion 57 of the Fire Department, City of New York. We are conducting the interview at EMS Battalion 57 regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

A. I was assigned as conditions 572 on 9-11-01. I received a call from the Brooklyn North dispatcher to switch over to Citywide and respond to Manhattan for a report of a signal 1040.

I responded over the Brooklyn Bridge, came around by City Hall, noticed an ambulance treating approximately five people. At this point Tower 1 was engulfed in flames and heavy smoke condition, and the ambulance turned out to be 10 William, Tour 2. They were treating some soft tissue injuries and some burns and some respiratory distress patients, and their location was in front of City Hall by -- what street is that? Between Park Place and Barclay Street off of Centre Street there.

I was trying to receive additional resources for transport of these patients to the nearest facility. I had difficulties -- I couldn't raise anyone on any of the tactical channels to have any further ambulances deployed to me. So I assisted in treating these patients with 10 William when we heard a loud explosion and noticed Tower No. 2 engulfed in flames.

At that point further attempts to get in touch with Citywide or any operations officer at the MCI were unsuccessful, at which point I remember Tower 1 collapsing. I assisted 10 William in getting everybody in their ambulance and I directed them to transport to the nearest 911 facility.

At that point I continued down Broadway. I reached about Dey Street. I was attempting to get to the command post to assist in this incident when I was engulfed by tremendous amounts of debris and smoke and dust, making any further travel impossible.

During this time I had numerous people banging on my command car for help. I decided that, in the best interests of my personal safety, that I would egress from that location. Prior to doing so, I exited my vehicle and grabbed as many people as I could into my command car and then I proceeded to turn around and I drove from the location with approximately six people in my command car that were all suffering from severe trauma. I advised the Citywide dispatcher that I needed a place to transport the personnel. The dispatcher did not know if any of the treatment areas still existed, so at that point I concluded that the nearest place I could get to was Beth Israel Hospital, and I started transporting those six individuals to the hospital.

At that point I noticed another command car, a Fire command car, behind me, trying to get through the traffic, and that command car followed me up until about 14th Street and Park Avenue, at which point that command car died. I went up to the command car and found Lieutenant Monroe, who was suffering from acute stress regarding this incident, like all of us. She had about five people in her command car that were suffering from trauma and associated injuries from this event.

I got back on the Citywide frequency and requested two ambulances to my location to take care of all these people, but after a few minutes I realized that the likelihood of receiving an ambulance at that time was not going to be expeditious, and in an effort to provide the best care I could to these approximate eight to ten people, I decided to take Lieutenant Monroe and all of the people in her command car in my command car, where I transported everyone to Beth Israel Hospital. After getting everyone into the hospital, I land lined Citywide advising them that I had brought Lieutenant Monroe into the hospital and about eight civilians and requested further instruction.

At that point I was directed to respond to -- what they had at that time was a Battery Park command center. I traveled across town from Beth Israel down to the West Side Highway. En route down the West Side Highway, I noticed a group of EMS personnel and ambulances and a Chief and I mistakenly took that to be the command center. When I approached the Chief, whose name I cannot recall at this time, he told me that he would need my assistance gathering the personnel to set up a staging area.

I assisted in that for about 20 minutes, when I heard reports of a massive gas leak and there was a massive evacuation. I saw numerous people in vehicles driving north up the West Side Highway to evacuate the immediate area. I was told that there was a massive gas leak and that we needed to evacuate. So we evacuated all personnel to Chelsea Piers, where a new staging area was set up. I assisted in logistics at that staging area, at which point I met up with Chief Kowalczyk, who requested that I transport him down to the command center that was established on West Street and Chambers Street at that time.

I responded down to West Street and Chambers Street with Chief Kowalczyk and his aide. I was given direction at that point to become a staging officer for all extra resource personnel that were sent in, and we established a treatment command center at Stuyvesant High School auditorium, at which point, sometime later, I was directed then to become the transport officer for the operation, where I responded to, again, West Street and Chambers.

I assumed transport operations for some period of time, several hours. Then I was directed to the command post, where I became the recording officer for Chief Kowalczyk and Chief McCracken, until about 2000 hours, at which point I was relieved and I retrieved my command car and responded back to Battalion 57, where I signed out at 2100 hours on 09-11-01.

That basically is my recollection of my operations on that date and time.

Q. The people that you had in your car and that Lieutenant Monroe had in her car, as far as you know, they were all civilians?

A. Yes. As far as I knew, they were all civilians. I didn't see anyone in any uniform and no one at that time identified themselves as being a uniformed member of any service.

Q. When you came down from Beth Israel, you said you were coming down the West Side Highway?

A. Correct.

Q. Do you remember how far, about how close you got to the incident when you came across the Chief and --

A. I believe that I stopped somewhere maybe 20 blocks south of Chelsea Piers. If they were named streets, I didn't see a name on them. But it was about 15 blocks south of the Chelsea Piers, about 15 blocks south of that.

Q. What is Lieutenant Monroe's first name?

A. Amy Monroe.

Q. Do you know what battalion she's at?

A. She is Chief McCracken's aide.

Q. Do you remember the collapse of the second tower?

A. No. All I remember is that I found out about the collapse of the second tower when I got to Beth Israel Hospital.

Q. So immediately after the collapses, the collapse of the second tower, you didn't actually make it down to the Trade Center complex?

A. During the collapse of the second tower?

Q. Yes.

A. No.

Q. In that period?

A. No. Because I got stopped, you know, I was coming down West Side Highway and I got stopped there before I got down any further. By the time I got back to the command center with Chief Kowalczyk, No. 2 building had collapsed. There were massive fires everywhere, so we weren't allowed to go south of Chambers Street at that time.

I do remember seeing the collapse of 6 World Trade Center. Was it 6 or -- I think it was 6. Did 6 drop? It was one of them, 6 or 3 or 7. I just remember watching the collapse of another building at that time and that got us pretty nervous because there was, again, a big smoke-like cloud coming towards us and I just remember everyone at the command center running for cover until after that blew over. But that's the only other building I saw collapse. I think it was No. 6. I think, I'm not sure, but I think it was No. 6. Somebody told me it was No. 6 that had collapsed.

That's the best I can remember it. It was without a doubt a very hectic and totally uncontrolled environment. But that's what I can recollect.

Q. When you first got into Manhattan, you met up with 10 Willie?

A. Correct.

Q. Are they a Fire unit or voluntary?

A. They're a private, voluntary unit.

Q. Do you remember what hospital they're from?

A. I'd like to say New York Hospital, but I can't be sure.

Q. Okay.

A. Tony Brooks was one of the paramedics. I remember him because I used to work with him as a medic before he left EMS.

Q. From the time that you were with 10 Willie until you started to transport up to Beth Israel and found that Lieutenant Monroe was behind you, did you see any other Department personnel?

A. No, not that I can recall.

Q. Any other thoughts or comments that you'd like to add?

A. No. I'd just be interested in going over the post-MCI critique about the incident. I've had some concerns regarding communication ability during something like this. I felt that something can be done in the future to allow us a better communication capability when something this big happens. I'm not saying that anything necessarily failed in this case, but I think that something could definitely be improved on to probably help our ability to perform our job.

That's about it.

MR. RADENBERG: Okay. The time is now 1301 hours and the interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT MICHAEL OBER

Interview Date: October 16, 2001

M. OBER

CHRISTOPHER ECCLESTON: Today's date is October 16, 2001. My name is Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department. I am conducting an interview with the following individual…please state your name, rank, assigned command area of the Fire Department of the City of New York regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

MICHAEL OBER: My name is Michael Ober, I am an EMT with the New York City Fire Department. I am currently assigned to Division 3 in Brooklyn.

Q: Mike, were you working on September 11th, the day of the World Trade Center disaster?

A: Yes, I was.

Q: And were you assigned to the World Trade Center disaster?

A: Yes, I was.

Q: In your own words, can you please tell me about the events of that day?

A: Um, the morning of the 11th, I was in the office, I am currently assigned to Chief Kowalcyk. He was up here in the office, and he called down to me, "get the car ready". I said why? He said a plane crashed into the Twin Towers. I didn't really believe him at first. Then on the way out the door, one of the people who works here turned the TV on and we could see the towers burning. I said all right. I didn't think it was going to be so massive. I thought it was a Cessna or something like that. I had no idea it was going to be a 767. So I ran downstairs, got the car ready, we started to leave. I don't know what road we were on, but I could see a nice picture of the city skyline. You saw the towers right in front of you, and the first tower was hit. I couldn't tell at first if it was papers or birds, but something white was you know, like flickering up in the sky. It just seemed weird. But anyway, we got into Manhattan. The Chief was trying to prepare us for everything. He said, "you know, just get ready, this may be a bad day. You might see a lot of dead people. You might see a lot of bad things". He was also saying that, just be prepared, cause it might be a terrorist act. At this point we still had no idea what was going on. We just heard that a plane hit the Twin Towers. He said, "be ready for secondary explosives". Just, you know, stuff like that, just trying to give me an idea of what he wants me to do when we get down there. We got out of the tunnel. Do you want this to be really descriptive, or do you just want to know…?

Q: Absolutely, sure, as descriptive as possible.

A: We were coming down what I believe is West Street, and the Chief says, what is that in the road up there? We just saw a pile sitting there, had no idea what it was. But we came closer, and found out it was body parts. We turned back the car, I have no idea exactly where, to be honest, I can't remember the street. We started walking to the building, I believe the building we walked into was the South Tower, I'm just not sure. But it was where the fire command post was, whichever building the fire command post was in, that's where we went. We walked into there, on the way into the building, there was people running around, people that was jumping landing on the grounds. Whatever building we walked into there was a glass canopy, foyer type thing where from the street you can see into the building. As we were walking into the building, we just heard a huge bang. As we looked up, it was someone who had jumped, god knows how far up. We got into the lobby of the building and it was like chaos, there were people everywhere. Once we got in there, I don't remember exactly who it was, I think it was one of the fire Chiefs who said "you know it's not safe, we gotta get outside". So we left to go outside, and as we stepped out of the building, it was like, raining people. People were just jumping from everywhere. Just all over it was bodies and parts just scattered. We walked across, I believe it was West Street, and we set up the command post over there next to the fire command post, just trying to get everything in order. At the same time we're trying to watch to see what's going on. The only thing that was going on was you could see the buildings burning and people just jumping. You could watch them fall from like the 90th floor all the way down. It's like you go to school for so long to be able to take of people and treat them and be able to fix them when there's something wrong with them, and there's nothing, they hit the ground, and that's it. I saw one guy got split in half by a light post, his torso and his legs weren't together. You just feel helpless, there's nothing you can do. So we're sitting there trying to set up the command board. I really don't know how long we're there for, to be honest, I have no idea. Then we heard a rumble, some twisting metal, we looked up in the air, and to be totally honest, at first, I don't know exactly…but it looked to me just like an explosion. It didn't look like the building was coming down, it looked like just one floor had blown completely outside of it. I was sitting there looking at it. I just never thought they would ever come down, so I didn't think they were coming down. I just froze and stood there looking at it. Then I saw everybody running past me and I said, I better start running. I turned around, luckily there's a parking garage behind us. We ran into the parking garage, and right before I got into the parking garage, I turned around and I could see the debris starting to come down.

Q: When you say we were running, can you tell me who else was in this group that was running?

A: Well, the command post was set up, I believe it was right on the sidewalk directly across the street, and directly behind us was like a driveway into a parking garage. The command post in front was myself, Chief Kowalcyk. There was either a Lieutenant or a Captain from Manhattan, one of the EMS officers. Then it was either directly to our left, or just a little behind us was the fire command post. Chief Ganci was there, Commissioner Feehan, all the guys who didn't make it out were standing right over there.

Q: How far from you were they?

A: Five, ten feet max. Then behind us, there was just lots of firefighters, I can't even begin to tell you how many. There was some cops back there, a lot of firefighters. They had all their gear sitting there, I guess they were just waiting for orders, just sitting there. After hearing this and looking up and seeing the building, what I thought was an explosion, everyone was running, I turned around and decided that I should probably take off like everybody else. So when I got to the entrance, I turned around and saw the debris coming down. I didn't know if I was gonna die or get trapped. I was just like, I kept thinking, I don't want to be alone. I need to find somebody. I went into the parking garage, I made it about 5 feet. I saw some firefighter up against the wall, he was on the ground right close to the wall. I just jumped on this guy's back, I had no idea who he was. I said, are you all right? He was just like, yeah buddy, are you all right? Yeah, I'm fine. Just as he said that, a huge gust of wind just started coming down. It wasn't like huge chunks of debris, but it was a lot of dust, you know, just dust, it might have been ash too. But it was pitch black. We just layed there till it stopped coming down, then we finally got back up, it probably had to be inches of just stuff on top of everything. It had to be probably like six inches of dust and all kinds of stuff. After it stopped coming down, I finally got up, and thought we gotta get outta here. We got up. We're trying to figure out where we were. It seemed like a movie, it was just like guys in fire companies were screaming out their company numbers. I think it was 16, I'm not sure. But I remember just hearing someone in the background screaming 16, where are you? It didn't seem-- I just felt like I was in a movie. So myself and this firefighter, I have no idea who it is, decide that we're gonna walk towards this entrance where we came in. We walked, and I'm like, we're stuck. He said, no we're not at the entrance yet. Somebody says no, you're outside. I'm like we're not outside, it's dark out. He said look at the air, there's so much stuff in the air, no sunlight's getting through. The amount of stuff that was in the air, you couldn't see it. It was like a curtain of just dust that blocked out all the sunlight. Breathing was horrible, it was just ash and dust. Every time

I took a breath, I could feel more of it going into me. You try covering up your mouth, but it was still getting in. Cause it was just so thick in the air, it was hard to see 10 feet by you. It was horrible. There was just gear everywhere. I had no idea where I was, I had no idea how I was getting out. I somehow stumbled over a Scoot Pack and picked it up, just in case. I never used it, but I just picked it up and brought it just in case I needed to use it. We found out we were outside. At first you really couldn't see anything, it was just dark. Then after that, we were just looking for people, anything around us that we would know, that could get us out. Someone that could help, it was just confusion at first. I didn't know what to do, where to go, who to help, who to look for or anything. Then the air started to settle down a little bit, and some of the air was coming through, and it felt like I was looking at a black and white TV. Everything was a shade of gray. Everybody around me was just covered in gray. I saw a fire engine that was just completely destroyed, and it was just gray. Every fire engine was just a different shade of gray. It was just crazy. Actually, with all the devastation that was going on, that was the real cool thing to see. I don't know why, it was just really interesting. It was just like I said, it was like a black and white TV.

Q: At this point, did you know where your partner Chief Kowalcyk was?

A: No. I had no idea.

Q: The last time you saw him was at the command post?

A: Once I finally got situated, and got a hold of myself, I realized what was going on. I started looking for him. After a couple minutes of looking for him, another Chief's aide, who I don't know his name, I know his face, he came over to me and said where's your Chief? I had no idea. He's said where's your Chief? I said I don't know. We started walking around looking for him. I don't even know how long we looked for him, time was just a big blur. We didn't find him anywhere, we went back into the parking garage, we couldn't find him in the parking garage. We walked down to the corner and both of our Chiefs were standing there together. We started heading down the block to get to the Chiefs.

Q: Who was the other Chief who was with Chief Kowalcyk, do you know?

A: I'm not sure…sorry. I can't remember.

Q: No, no, it's alright.

A: Just as we got to the Chiefs, the rumbling started again, and it was just like a sound I'll never forget. Days afterwards I heard a rumbling noise and I was hiding. You knew what was happening, we turned around and the second building was coming down. So we took off running again, and I don't know what building it was, sorry I don't really know the area very well…

Q: It's fine, it's fine.

A: I just found a safe area, so I didn't care what street it was. We ran behind this building, and had shelter in that building. People were just coming in. They let people in the doors. Then from there, for a while I don't know what happened. I know we left the building, we found an ambulance crew and we told the driver that we had to set up some kind of staging. Set up some kind of triage, we had to get some kind of order. We figured the best way to do that was to take a step back. So Chief Kowalcyk said take them down to Chelsea Piers. He figured it was a big area, they had a lot of big open rooms in there. If need be we could make it into a make-shift hospital, or a triage area. We took a ride down there. I don't even remember how long we were down there for. I just remember flying through the streets of Manhattan, going down there. When we got down there, it was just like, go down to the end, there was a little cobblestone driveway. It was maybe like 2 cars wide, maybe a little bit bigger than that. Then there's like a main road, you just go to the end of the driveway. He just told me to switch any ambulance that shows up over to the command frequency. Keep the driver in the car, tell them don't leave the ambulance. He just had a lot of orders. Write down the unit number. I went down to the end and the ambulances just started showing up from everywhere. Ambulance companies that I had never even heard of before. People just from everywhere were showing up. There had to be hundreds of ambulances lined up there. I had ambulances show up, and all I had to do was write down what kind of crew they were, whether it was a BLS crew, an ALS crew. Whether they had you know, two people or ten. The ambulances would show up and I'm like well, what's your crew? They'd be like, well it's myself, my partner, we're both EMTs. I have five doctors, and four nurses in the back. There was so many people. So many people with so much training and so much knowledge. These amazing skills that they could treat these people with, but there was no patients. We had all kind of medically trained people there and nobody to take care of. We had ambulances just lined up, and everybody's getting frustrated cause they know what's going on. It's like everybody who came out here who had bumps and bruises. Or they didn't come out, they were dead. There was really nothing that anyone could do down there, so they were getting frustrated. Then I just, I don't even know…time was just a blur, I don't remember what time it was. There was a rumor about a gas leak going on down there, and about 2 minutes after this rumor of the gas leak, Chief Kowalcyk calls me on the radio and says we're going back down there. I remember getting down there, that's about it. I don't remember exactly what we did once we got down there. It was weird, it was probably the most devastating thing I've ever seen in my life, and so much of it I can't remember. I don't remember where I parked the car, you know, I don't remember the people that I saw. I saw so many people, and it's like, a lot of them I know by face, and I will never forget faces. But I don't know names. Both people that I work with, and both victims that I saw parts from were like, someone's face that I saw them jump, and they landed 5 feet from me. I don't remember the sound of the building hitting the ground. Somebody told me that it was measured on the Richter scale, I don't know how true that is. If the building is hitting the ground that hard, how do I not remember the sound of it? The smell was just --- it has a distinct smell. I've been to Manhattan many times since then, and that smell just brings back every single…I don't know if it's like World Trade Center cement. I don't know what exactly it is. It's just that like, the smell that we inhaled so many times with the rest of the dust and everything in the parking garage. It's just a nasty smell. I mean, it's not that bad, but I just don't like the smell. Um, I don't know…we were down there, there was rumors about the other stuff going on. But nobody had definite information.

Q: About what other stuff?

A: One rumor I heard was that they were taking out the tunnels, which seemed pretty damn scary considering we took the tunnel on the way over here.

Q: The Brooklyn Battery Tunnel?

A: The Brooklyn Battery, there you go. The Brooklyn Battery Tunnel. Then we heard about the Pentagon. Somebody also said the Sear's Tower was hit. That's about it as far as I know. People were just talking. You didn't know what was true and what was not true, you know? I remember standing on, I think it was on West Street, and it was the first plane I had heard in awhile. I started flipping out. I turned around and I'm looking at the Empire State Building, and I'm like, it's gone. All I heard was the rumbling of an airplane, and I'm like, they're taking out the Empire State Building too. It was some kind of F-15 or something came like, screaming over our heads. That was the greatest thing I saw all day long. I'm like, they're not hitting us with anymore planes. It's just like I said, a lot of the stuff I'll be getting here and there. It's all bits and pieces.

Q: Is there anything else that you feel you want to add to this interview? Anything at all?

A: Sure, I probably should have said, or told you about. I know this is just a personal feeling, but the amount of devastation that was going on down there, it's just unbelievable the number of people who came out. When I was down at Chelsea Piers lining up the ambulances, I had people coming up to me who wanted to just do something. Someone was like, I'm a retired Vietnam veteran. I can help you know. I'm, used to this kind of situation. What can I do to help? There were people everywhere, "I'm a lawyer", and you see them out there directing traffic. They tried so much to bring us down, whoever did this. It's just not gonna happen, you know? It's just so many awesome people out there. Just the way everybody's doing the job, it's unbelievable. This city, I'm proud of where I work.

Q: You should be. You have good reason to be proud. Well Mike, I thank you very much for conducting this interview with me. This interview is being concluded at 11:02. The counter on the cassette player is 313.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT-P ERIC RODRIGUEZ

Interview Date: October 16, 2001

E. RODRIGUEZ

MIKE TAMBASCO: Today is October 16, my name is Mike Tambasco, assigned to the World Trade Center Task Force. I'm conducting an interview into the events of September 11th at the World Trade Center. The interview today is with paramedic Eric Rodriguez, who is assigned to Unit 35 Zebra, tour 2. We are in the Battalion 57 locker room. Alright, Eric.

ERIC RODRIGUEZ: My name is Eric Rodriguez, I'm a paramedic assigned to 35 Zebra 2. On the morning of September 11th, my partner and I, Joel Pierce went over to Carl's Place, a little deli over on Union and North 8th where we get our breakfast every morning, cause it's right around our 89, and it's really relaxing. As we were sitting down eating, all of a sudden we heard a lot of Brooklyn units getting switched to Citywide. A lot of 31 Units down by the Brooklyn Bridge. So we looked at each other and said wow, something must be going on, let's see if we can, you know, something good to buff. So we switched over to citywide and we started hearing all these reports about we have fire showing at the World Trade Center, explosion. So we go woah, so we drove over to Kent Avenue and as we got around Kent and North 6th, we could see that the North Tower had been struck. I didn't know what it was. I mean, the plumes of smoke were coming, and I remember getting on the phone and calling my wife and my mother saying turn on the television. There's a hole in the World Trade Center. So now at this point, my partner is calling Citywide, telling them we're an ALS haz-tac, we can be over the bridge in 5 minutes. You know, put us on the job. Cause at this point we had also heard the MCI code for an airplane crash. So we're thinking haz-tac, we can get there and really get in on the job. We couldn't get out on the phones and we're trying to get through on the radio, but not stepping on anybody. As we're standing there watching the buildings is when the second plane hit. It was then that we realized that this was not just a fire. That whole feeling just like, your stomach dropped out. At that point, we got on the radio and said 35 Zebra, we're going. We had our Sargent from the 90 Precinct, was down there. He had already got --cleared traffic for us straight down Broadway to the Willie B. I remember going across the Willamsburg Bridge, I looked at my partner and said brother, no matter what happens, we go home alive tonight. Cause even then we were thinking there's got to be very heavy patient care. But who else knows what's going on. When we first got into Manhattan over the Willie B, we got directed over to Canal down to Broadway. We were coming down Broadway past City Hall, and it was pandemonium. There was all kind of resources over here, we're trying to look for some kind of EMS command post. There were crowds of people over here, we wound up coming down, coming across over here. There was wreckage everywhere, and there were body parts.

Q: So you came across West on Vessey Street?

A: Yeah, and there was nothing but, it was absolutely like Berlin 1944, 45. We couldn't get across over here because there was too much debris, it didn't look too safe. We didn't see too much trucks or apparatus. So we came down here.

Q: You came down Church Street going south.

A: Then we had to divert back over this way, cause we couldn't, there was too much debris. You know the stairs that's over here, across from the hotel that's usually over here?

A: There was far too much stuff here, and there were body parts in the street. We didn't want to run over them, so I came back across over here on this little street, I guess that's Dey.

Q: Dey Street, you went over east, right?

A: We got back to Broadway, then we started, we lit it up again and went all the way down Broadway.

Q: Southbound on Broadway, right.

A: We started picking up all these ambulances. They just started jumping in line behind us. We came down across by the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel, and got over to West Street, and just headed back up.

Q: Right, up north.

A: Up north. Now at Liberty, we saw a command vehicle with an EMS officer standing at Liberty and West Street. So we figured that's where it was. I was listening to the radio, I was hearing Chief Goldfarb on the radio. I know his incident command is second to none. So I figured that's where he was, and I pretty much trust a lot of his decisions. Okay, we're here, we're haz-tac, what do you want us to do? Well, it turns out he wasn't there. But there was a captain, I forget who he was, but he was newly promoted, a kind of heavyset guy.

Q: Captain D'amato maybe?

A: Maybe. We're like, where do you want us? He said, give me a second, I just got here, this isn't a command post as far as I know. But at this point we're standing there talking to him and other busses are going around us and starting to line up behind his command vehicle. It also looked like PD was setting up a command post right there, they had a lot of units in plainclothes. Apparatus were still showing up, so we initially started staging right underneath that little walkway that goes across…

Q: That goes across West Street?

Q: Got you.

A: That's when we started noticing that people were jumping on that side. At first I said look out, there's debris falling. We looked up and said no, that's not debris, those are bodies. We're thinking bodies from the fire floors. Then we started seeing they were screaming and they were moving, and we were watching them hit the ground. At that point there's nothing you can do to treat them. You know we might need to move back cause they're gonna start taking some of us out. So we moved back here where South End and Liberty meet.

Q: West, where South End, right.

A: We started staging over here, they wanted us down on South End. They told us listen, you guys are haz-tac. We have about 2 or 3 of your haz-tac units here. What we want to do is, we want you to stay up close here because we're gonna consolidate you guys, you're gonna Scott up, you're gonna go up and do searches.

Q: Do you remember who told you that? Was it an EMS captain?

A: There was a captain. No, there wasn't cause I had to tell the captain. Who was it? It was a chief said it, I don't remember what chief was there.

Q: Okay, fine.

A: Cause it wasn't Chief Goldfarb, cause I know his aide. It was someone I didn't know. It might have been Chief Wells, I'm really not sure.

Q: Okay.

A: Cause at this point I hadn't actually physically seen any of the chiefs, but I was hearing them on the radio. I was hearing Brynes on the radio, so I was trying to get a sense of where everybody was. I knew there was a command center inside, there was a forward triage. I was thinking I don't see too many medics here, I see a lot of EMTs. So me and my partner are like we gotta get in, at least maybe we can do something over there. So we're standing there, and we're hearing the reports, patients with major burns and all that. My partner says listen, I want to go find out what's going on. So he starts walking over towards West Street and Liberty and South. I was on the corner of Liberty and South End Street. I went into the back of the truck and started hanging trauma lines. I figured if we get a burn victim or whatever, we're prepared. I don't know how much time went by. I know I slipped out of the truck for a minute and then Chief McCracken was there, and I think it was Chief Grant was there. I remember Chief McCracken saying chief Grant is taking over, he's assuming command of this sector right here. Anybody needs directions, I want all the drivers to stay with the vehicles and everybody else to come over by Chief Grant. Well my partner was already over there, and I was driving that day. So I figured well, I'll finish hanging all the trauma lines. I was in back of the vehicle and I heard, it sounded like I thought another plane had struck the building. This loud bang and then it sounded like a locomotive, or like when I used to live in Howard Beach, when the planes used to come in at night, flying right over the house. Everything started shaking and I heard like a thunderstorm. Somebody screamed it's coming down. I don't remember if it was on the radio, because the side door of the bus was open. The back door of the truck--I could see out of. I looked, and I bent all the way down to look up as far as I could, and I could see the cloud coming. I thought the building was actually falling over. I didn't know it was pan-caking. I was like, I'm not getting out of here. So I dove on the floor of the truck. I was praying, if something hits this bus, don't let it collapse the box. If it does, I hope there's a big enough void that I'll be alright. I remember something hit the bus hard enough that my siren went off. Then the siren died.

E. RODRIGUEZ

So the siren went off and then it died. It was pitch black, and I heard the May Days come across. I couldn't breathe, you know.

Q: Can you remember anyone specific you heard on the May Days?

A: No, I just heard someone say May Day, May Day. We are pinned, we are pinned, like that. People stepping on each other. I remember hearing Central say units, calm down, you know-- of that nature. I was suffocating and then I realized that…and then I remembered that we had Scott packs. There was a piece of metal that was like, wedged in the doorway. I grabbed my mask, I was able to get the metal out of the way, and the soot and stuff was about halfway up the side of the bus. So I was able to dig through that, get to the compartment, and get my Scott pack on. I thought I was actually under a debris or something, and I'm thinking whatever's on top of me I hope isn't a fire part. Cause I don't want this to just collapse and then you know, fry and all that. As it started to filter down, I'm thinking, where the hell is my partner? There was a Lincoln Navigator that was right next to the bus, that when I went to step in, I had to move the door cause it wouldn't open all the way. It was gone, I mean it wasn't…it was gone. There were a couple of ambulances that were completely totaled. You know the Hottzollah MERV that they had up there was completely flat. As it was clearing up, I could see more and more of the apparatus that were there completely destroyed or gone. Then I don't remember seeing anybody move, it was dead silent and it was like being on the surface of the moon. Cause all I could hear was the Scott pack, you know? So I'm looking, I'm looking and I ran into Timmy Keller, from Batallion Fifty.

E. RODRIGUEZ

He was kind of standing up, he looked a little dazed and I said Timmy, are you alright? And he goes, I can't find Karen, Karen DeShore. I said, where was she? She was right next to me before everything happened. He said, I jumped under the car, I can't find her. I said, well have you seen anyone else? He said no. So now I'm still looking for my partner. I finally found Joel, he was having a hard time breathing. I said, lets go get your Scott pack and get out of here. He says no, we got to go back to the first tower and start digging. I said listen, if this one came down, the other one's probably gonna come down. Trust me, turn around, get on my ass, we'll get out of the area. If they say it's not gonna come down, we'll come back. Until such time, we need to get out of here. When we got back to the truck, he got his Scott pack on. The vehicle was dead, it wouldn't move, I think one of my rear axles was busted too. The vehicle was dead. We started hearing on the radio, all units within the vicinity of the World Trade Center, you need to evacuate the immediate area because the North Tower is beginning to lean. So, we started hoofing it, and we found another crew was there. They had no stretcher in their bus. There was this paramedic, and I know I've seen him, but I can't remember if I've seen him in Manhattan or from when I worked in the Bronx.

Q: One of our units?

A: One of our guys. I said, does that truck run? He said absolutely, everybody get on. So we jumped in the back right as the North Tower collapsed.

South End is not a very big street, but he was flying down that street and that cloud was coming. It looked like we were parked. We got to the end of South End Street, by that building over there, and they had all those boats, they were trying to get people on them. That's when the second cloud came. I got separated from my partner at that time again, so while we were standing there, I'll never forget it. It seemed to be just completely disorganized, and people were like, let's just help these people to the boats and all that. The paramedic who was driving that rig turned around and said listen, get a pen and a paper, we need to start writing down who's here. I'm assuming command of this area. We started doing that, and I told him, I'm gonna go find my partner. He was like, I wish you'd stay here, and I was like, well, no. I finally found him. We made our way down to South Ferry, and we met Chief McCracken. Then we wound up going over to Liberty Street. Not Liberty Street, Joel went back to Liberty Street, I stayed down in South Ferry. Where I met him, he was on the north side of everything when it happened.

Q: Anything else you want to add to it, Eric?

A: Nothing else. That's about it.

Q: Thank you. This interview concludes at 13:13. By the way, it began at 12:58.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMS CHIEF WALTER KOWALCZYK

Interview Date: October 16, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. TAMBASCO: Today is October 16th. My name is Mike Tambasco, assigned to the World Trade Center Task Force. The time is 10:47 a.m. I am in the office of Chief Walter Kowalczyk in the Battalion 58 building. We will be doing an interview into the events of September 11th at the World Trade Center.

Q. Chief, if you would just be good enough to tell me in your own words what happened.

A. On the morning of the 11th, I started my tour of duty at approximately 5:30 in the morning. I was in my division office. I was also scheduled to be, for the date of the 11th, the citywide EMS chief. What that means is that for the 24-hour period starting at 8 a.m. on the 11th and terminating at 8 a.m. on the 12th, I am the ranking EMS officer responsible for EMS activities.

I was sitting in my office doing my work. I always monitor the fire scanner as well as the EMS dispatch frequencies. At which point a second alarm came over on the Brooklyn fire frequency. Brooklyn fire transmitted a second alarm for the World Trade Center. I immediately turned the fire scanner to the Manhattan frequency, and there was a report of a plane into the Trade Center.

At that point I advised my staffer to get an overview of division operations. I'm responsible on a day-to-day basis for EMS Division 3, which is approximately 700 people and about 65 ambulances at peak shift.

As I was preparing to leave, there was a TV on in the other room that had a live shot of this. I realized going out that this is probably something fairly major. However, in my mind I thought it was probably a small plane into the Trade Center.

My aide Michael Ober and myself responded to the Trade Center. The best access route that we took was the Prospect Expressway into the Gowanus. As we approached on the Gowanus, the enormity of the situation was live in front of us. And there was not much we could do because we were facing some heavy traffic.

I remember turning to my aide and saying we need to use caution going into this, looking at the enormity of the situation. From a safety perspective I was also concerned that this could be terrorism. I have taken a good number of courses in preparation for the medical aspects of bioterrorism.

We were stuck in traffic for a little bit, and then traffic started to move. It appeared that the Police Department had very quickly put some traffic patterns into place to pull emergency traffic through the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel.

As soon as we came through the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel, the devastation was almost immediate. In my career I have managed many multiple-casualty incidents from plane crashes to severe train derailments, so managing high-scale incidents never scared me.

However, as you're driving down West Street and you have to maneuver the vehicle to avoid driving over what appeared to be body parts as well as debris, my mouth went dry. I had the sensation that I had a job to do. I had to ensure the safety of the EMS work force. But how do I do this if I can't talk?

I asked somebody for a -- so we parked our car and came down West Street. There was no clearly defined staging area at that point in time. It was a fairly chaotic event. And at that point the only thing that was evident was fire from at least one of the towers.

We positioned our vehicle on Liberty Street between West Street and North End. I pulled my safety gear out and my portable radio and we took a command board. That was the last time I was to see my vehicle in an upright position.

We proceeded north on West Street, trying to find the command post. In most incidences to find the command post is very clear and evident. However, at this point in time it was not clear and evident. We found some officials to say that the command post was in the lobby of One World Trade Center, which is the north tower.

Q. The north tower.

A. I think the most devastating or one of the most devastating views I had was as we were entering Two World Trade Center there was a torso on the ground. It looked to me a little like a CPR mannequin. But I had to focus to keep going.

Debris was coming down around us. We entered Two World Trade Center through a shattered window. We found Chief Gombo, who was the ranking EMS officer on the scene. I remember seeing Chief Peter Hayden from the Fire Department there.

At that point they indicated we needed to move the command post. There was a report of another plane coming. In retrospect, knowing the events that had occurred, I'm not sure if that was the second plane that was coming or the second plane had already come and now intelligence was starting to develop and maybe there was a third plane inbound.

We moved quickly but cautiously outside and started to establish a command post in the driveway in front of Two World Financial Center, which is on West Street, basically midpoint between the intersections of Vesey and Liberty Street.

At that point a formal command post of fire officials started to develop, including

First Deputy Commissioner Feehan and Chief of Department Peter Ganci. I think Chief Ray Downey was there. Chief Gombo came over.

Basically I started to assume the responsibility of the EMS operations chief. I started to, in the midst of the chaos, establish some type of infrastructure for the EMS operations. I remember deploying chiefs and officers to Vesey and West and to Liberty and West with global direction of trying to set up operation there.

It was very difficult to concentrate, given the enormity of the situation. Probably the most emotional piece was when we saw the bodies coming off the Trade Center. Now, I'm not talking about one or two bodies. We had to have watched between 10 and 20 bodies come down. I will never forget the sound of those bodies hitting the ground.

I believe it's the front of One World Trade Center, it's structured in a manner that has a glass canopy over the driveway. Again, my recollection could be wrong. It could be either that or Three World Trade Center. It was one of the buildings on West Street. I believe it was One World Trade Center.

The bodies were coming down and going through those plate glasses. The sound -- if you ever heard sounds of plywood dropping on the ground, just that force, it was multiplied. I thought I was at an event at Universal Studios, on the side, watching a movie being taped. But this was no movie. It was real life, and it was moving in slow motion.

There were some thoughts or words of people that you just can't forget. I'm sure it wasn't the last words that Chief Ganci said, but I remember words such as "oh, shit, those bastards." That's the last words I ever heard Chief Ganci say.

We were trying to get a handle on running the EMS operation when suddenly what appeared to be in slow motion was a humongous black cloud starting to descend from the sky. That black cloud was, later I realized, the collapsing of I believe the north tower. In retrospect, it happened in slow motion, but yet it happened so quickly. I don't remember which one it was.

We turned, and we ran down this driveway. As I'm running down this driveway, I probably said why am I doing this? Why am I running down a driveway into a parking garage that would be a natural flow for debris? Again, in my mind I had been to building collapses, and building collapses usually come down at an angle.

[redacted]

[redacted]two fantastic children. As I was running, I wasn't sure if I would ever see them again.

We ran into this garage along with Chief Gombo, Lieutenant Terranova and members of the Police Department and firefighting operations. I believe Commissioner Fitzpatrick was with us along with emergency service officers. I thought we were going to die.

A haze was starting to develop. We could not see the driveway. That was black. I wasn't sure if the haze that was developing was a smoke condition starting to impact us or the debris.

I heard a fire officer scream: 18, where are you? It was either 18 or 16 -- 18 or 16 Truck, where are you? It seemed like a scene from Backdraft where they're trying to recall their members. But this was no movie; this was live.

Then we were all scared. There was probably 15, 20, 30 people with us in the garage. Chief Gombo was coughing, and I was concerned about him. We were all covered with soot. I wasn't sure if I was going to get out. Nobody could find an exit, nobody.

I didn't know what would happen then. I kept hearing the sound of -- I guess it's the sounds of silence. But it wasn't silence; it was a cloud just coming down on us.

We regrouped. People were trying to get out on cell phones or radios to no avail. There was a phone there. I'm not sure if anybody ever got out on the phone. I'm not sure if we knew where we were, except across the street from the Trade Center. That really doesn't narrow it down in New York City.

Somebody found an exit. I'm not sure how long we were there for. We came out, I would probably say at the south side of Two World Financial Center. People said that it was near the area of the Winter Garden. It looked like a snowstorm, covered with white, and quiet, ever so quiet.

The other scary thing -- to go back for a second -- I couldn't find my aide. My aide is a young man who happens to live in my neighborhood. I couldn't find him. For that moment, while I was trapped, I knew I was breathing and alive. I didn't know where he was.

As we got out, we looked around, and people were devastated and just did not know where to go. What was weird is behind Two World Financial Center there's like a little cove. On the map it's indicated as the North Cove Yacht and Harbor. And I knew water was there because I had done planning in the past for the Statue of Liberty celebrations. You couldn't see the water.

We regrouped, found Chief Goldfarb, Chief Villani and Chief Gombo. Probably the happiest moment of that day was when I saw my aide Michael. He said he came into the garage. I didn't see him. So I'm not sure if he even did. Once we were in the garage, there was a separation between the front and the back from debris.

We went into another building, which I think was Three World Financial Center, or it might have been Four World Financial Center, one of the other buildings to the north, to try to strategize. We had discussions that we needed to reorganize and move north. We did not know what the issues were at that point in time.

So people spoke about setting up staging areas on Chambers Street. I recommended that we go further north, just to stabilize. We later decided to move up to 23rd Street, to Chelsea Piers. I've commanded many operations. I'm a very aggressive, on-scene commander with the safety of the people that work with us first. But at that point in time I think I got selfish and I aggressively volunteered for the 23rd Street operation.

I had fears I would never see my kids again. And I had an opportunity of life again.

I found an ambulance crew. My aide and myself got into this ambulance, and it was like a slalom course, driving through debris.

At that point the man-made snow of the World Trade Center was fairly deep. Somehow the operator of the vehicle -- to this day I don't know who it was -- got us up to 23rd Street.

I met with representatives of Chelsea Piers. I asked for their assistance. They overwhelmingly welcomed us, whatever you need. That location would later be a very beneficial strategy point for days and weeks into the operation.

As I was managing that, ambulances from all over were coming in. We tried to organize them, move them inside from West Street so they were safe. It was like I was at the gates of Shea Stadium at the end of a game. People were just running towards us.

Ambulance crews were approaching me: Chief, I'm a haztac unit, let us go in there. I said let's get organized, they know we're here. About ten minutes later that same haztac crew came to me and got in my face. He wasn't insubordinate, but he was very aggressive. I pick him out as a sample of the work force there. Employees with an unknown danger but wanting to go and do their job and help people. I again, in a firmer tone, said you have to wait to get direction.

Later that crew -- and one of the things that I clearly said to that paramedic or EMT, I'm not sure what his medical certification was, that it's my job to get you home at night to your family. Let me do that job. Some half hour later that same individual came over and thanked me and understood the reason why I stood my position.

As time went by, many more resources started to arrive. We had Secret Service personnel at that location that helped us to develop a secure area separate from the public and to operate.

Chief Pascale arrived. Several supervisors arrived. At that point it appeared that Chief Peruggia was the only person we were hearing on the radio. Chief Peruggia was trying to manage the operation.

Sometime later -- and again, the clock stopped -- he requested my response up to the command post location. At that point you have to envision that the only thing we're able to see is large columns of smoke and hundreds and thousands of people running towards us.

I remember going over to Chief Pascale and turning the Chelsea division over to her. I remember hugging her. I said Fran, they asked me to go to the command post. I'm not sure if I'll ever see you again, because of the unknowns of the situation. She said let me go, I'll go for you. It's okay. They asked me to go to the command post. I'll go down there.

I took my aide, along with Lieutenant Byrnes in a command car, and we proceeded down West Street. I was scared. I was scared.

We approached the command post. Chief Peruggia asked me to come down because he needed the help. I started to manage the operation, and I saw that command by committee was not going to work here. Everybody was putting ideas in.

I said to Chief Peruggia: Don't take this the wrong way. But I'm going to take the job from you. At that point in time I assumed the responsibility for EMS operations, located next to the Fire Department command post and tried to put a strategy together.

The hardest thing is that we didn't have contact with the outside world. We couldn't get through to headquarters. We were not sure what system policy decisions were made or implemented. We knew the people would come through and do the right thing, because that's what the Fire Department is made of, specifically the EMTs and paramedics, no different than the firefighters. When it comes down to it, they want to try to do the best job they can.

We were setting up our operation and probably the most frustrating thing was that there were no patients. We had been trying to get a handle on the divisions and we put some structure to it. We set up a north and a south division; south being down by Battery Park, north being up by Chambers Street. Slowly an organizational structure started to be developed.

It was sometime later that Chief McCracken made it up to the command post. We spoke about some policy issues and where I saw the organizational structure needing to go. I tried to provide my recommendations. One of the objectives was to get the EMS system back in operation.

One of the hardest things to swallow was when I asked for a call status on the city. The dispatcher indicated that they were holding in excess of 400 assignments. I had to make a decision. I was looking at the enormity of this situation. I had to be concerned with Mrs. Jones having chest pains in the Bronx or in Brooklyn. We had a large number of resources up at Chelsea.

Initially, I conferred with the fire incident commander, Chief Nigro, Chief Burns and Chief Carruthers and, I'm sorry, Chief Butler and Chief Carruthers. They asked me not to de-escalate any resources at this point in time.

Losing the concept of time, I eventually -- or we eventually released 20 to 40 ambulances back to 911, and the 911 system started to come back.

In speaking with Chief McCracken, we had the concern of putting the 911 system back into operation. The way I recommended to do it initially was to utilize mutual aid resources for the scene operation and return the city units back to operation.

That would do two things. A, we get the city people eventually back to their stations so we can regroup. It's difficult to take units from New Jersey and outside New York City and ask them to do 911 calls in the system when we didn't have the infrastructure for it.

It was very hard to keep focused at establishing a strategy with the devastation in front of you. It was like building an EMS system from scratch. I remember through the night meeting with Coast Guard officials about hospital ships coming in, talking about DMAT, disaster medical assistance teams, coming in. It was like putting a system together from scratch.

During this period the news started to filter into the command post about the passing of Chief Ganci, Father Judge, Commissioner Feehan, the reports of EMS, firefighters, police officers and civilians missing. This was not going to be an operation that we will secure in an hour.

As I indicated, I started my day about 5:30 in the morning. In between and amidst the chaos, I had to get phone calls to my kids and to my parents and to my in-laws to let them know I was okay and to make arrangements for my kids. I knew I wasn't going to be home that night.

The day that started as any other day at 5:30 in the morning on September 11th ended when I went home about 9 to 10:00 the next morning. The days and weeks following it were scary. [redacted], but things evolved, structures were put in place, things were modified. I probably did not talk to my staff from Division 3 for several days.

It was an event that I will not forget. I think what's most troubling is in doing major assignments in the past, you go home and people watch them on the news and it's a forgotten memory in a day or two. In my local parish in Williston Park there were approximately 17 to 20 people missing from our little neighborhood.

[redacted]

[redacted]

So here as we sit on October 15th. Tomorrow I have to go to the funeral of her friend's father, along with many other funerals and memorial services.

I think what's frustrating is usually I have to deal with this stuff inside myself. [redacted]

[redacted]

Thank you for this opportunity.

Q. Chief, if I might just ask you one other thing. When you were, just going back to running into the garage in the World Financial Center, that, I assume, was building one coming down, the first tower.

A. That's correct.

Q. After that do you remember where you were when the second one came down?

A. There's two other collapses that I remember. I believe when the second one came down we were probably in that Winter Garden area. I remember again that same silence but yet roar and the vision.

I remember when we had gone down to set up the command post. I was working with Chief Peruggia. It was another fear for our life when Seven World Trade Center wanted to come down.

Sometimes you just don't know where to run.

Q. Chief, unless there's anything else you can think of or you want to add, I thank you ever so much for the interview, your thoughts and all the rest.

[redacted] I cannot begin to fathom the feelings of the families of the police, fire, the EMS and all the civilians who are groping with this horrific disaster. We just don't know where it's going to go next.

[redacted]

[redacted]

Q. Once again, thank you ever so much, Chief.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT CHAD RITORTO

Interview Date: October 16, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. RADENBERG: Today's date is October 16th, 2001. The time is 1541 hours. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department, City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with --

EMT RITORTO: Chad Ritorto from Battalion 43, EMT 3015.

MR. RADENBERG: The interview is being conducted at the Fire Department headquarters, fourth floor, in the BITS offices. This interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Please start with when you went into Manhattan.

A. Well, previously I called my battalion, told them that I was available. They stated that they didn't have anybody for me to work with at that time, to stand by. I then decided to proceed down to the World Trade on my own. I put on my Fire Department uniform, got all my gear. I went down in my personal car, down to the World Trade Center.

I parked my car at approximately Albany and the West Side Highway. I then proceeded on foot to where they were doing forward triage, which was at Liberty and the West Side Highway. I met up with an EMS chief; I'm not sure of his name. I met up with a chief, and he made me staging officer.

We were in the process of collecting keys, and all of a sudden we heard somebody say run, the building was coming down. We looked up. Sure enough, the building came down.

I then proceeded to attempt to evacuate the area by running west across West Side Highway from Liberty and managed to hide underneath the pedestrian foot bridge underneath the concrete staircase that leads from the street to the bridge.

At that point I took cover. Building debris came down. I was struck on my head, my arm and my leg. I received a laceration over my right eye from it. With several other EMTs and paramedics from unknown destinations, we then went into the World Financial Center, and we managed to go through that building and come out on the gateway plaza walkway. From there we proceeded down towards Battery Park along the esplanade when the second tower came down.

After that I went back to where my car was and got in my car and proceeded north of Chambers. There were numerous patients that we were treating. There was debris falling from the windows of the buildings. There were bodies coming out of the windows. There were body parts all over the street.

I don't know. That's pretty much the gist of what went down. It was scary.

Q. So when the first tower collapsed, you were under here?

A. Right.

Q. In here?

A. Right. I was actually on this corner, because they were --

Q. On this side?

A. Right. They were pulling people out of this building. People were coming out of this building here, out of Two World Trade Center. There was an exit right here. This was forward triage. Initially they wanted us to go in there, but one of the captains didn't want EMS in there.

Q. A fire captain or EMS captain?

A. An EMS captain. A fire chief told an EMS captain to bring about 30 EMTs into that tower, and the EMS captain didn't want to do that. So the fire chief got a little annoyed at him. All the EMTs stayed outside. But if the EMTs weren't outside, we would have had a lot more EMS fatalities when that other tower came down, because most of the EMS was outside and they were able to actually scatter down Liberty, down Washington, and down the West Side Highway.

I was tripping over EMS guys underneath this bridge. They were like Hazollah guys and guys from Cornell and people from Metro Care.

Q. This was forward triage over here?

A. Right.

Q. Liberty and Washington.

A. Right.

Q. Do you remember who the EMS captain was?

A. I don't know. I don't really remember. Everything just happened like so fast. You were more worried about looking up. I had this feeling that we were too close because there was debris coming down. The aluminum siding, that was just coming and it was just flopping down. It was in the air and looked like paper, but when it came down, it made such a crash.

I told one of the chiefs we were way too close, we were way too close, we need to pull back. No, no, no, we're safe from here. I'm like, all right, whatever.

Then somebody just said run, the building's coming down. We ran. I remember looking at the building. I was running for the building. There were guys in the doorway waving everybody in, trying to pull everybody in. I wasn't going to make it.

I hid under that bridge. I tripped over somebody, and my helmet flew off. Then I got pelted. I managed to put my helmet back on and then just prayed. Then all of the debris came down. One minute there was light and air, and the next minute there's nothing. It was darkness and dust.

You took one breath, and all the soot went in your mouth. It just dried your mouth instantly. You're taking it out of your mouth. It was like I didn't want to take a deep breath.

I'm taking small shallow breaths so I don't inhale all this stuff.

I'm fumbling over debris, big bricks. I remember I saw the windows of the building, and I grabbed something. I burned my hands on it. You can see the scar here. I burned my hands on it. Then I went through the window. Then I remember seeing all the computers, and the lights were still on. The computers were all intact. There was really no debris on the ground. It was just really dusty in there.

I managed to meet up with a bunch of other paramedics that were all in there.

Q. That was --

A. That was in that building right there.

Q. This here?

A. Yeah, the building that had the green dome on the roof. It's got to be the World Financial Center.

Q. Yeah, one Financial.

A. That's what I'm thinking, One World Financial Center. It's the only building that's right there.

Q. When you initially got into the center, you said you parked your car down here around Albany?

A. Around Albany or Carlisle.

Q. At what point in what was going on was that that you got there? Was the second tower already hit?

A. The second tower was already struck. I got there probably a half hour after the second tower got hit. So we were there for about maybe 20 minutes, 25 minutes, maybe. Time is like really sketchy. When we pulled up, it looked like a Sunday afternoon. There was nobody around, but there were cars everywhere and you can hear the sirens. You can actually hear the fires burning up in the buildings.

There were like body parts all over the street. You couldn't even recognize anything. You just knew it was body parts because they were wrapped in clothing. It's like you're thinking, wow, that must have been some -- because there was debris everywhere. There were pieces of metal. There were people laying around. It was incredible.

This was down over here. This wasn't even anywhere near. There were body parts along the West Side Highway about as far as here, about two blocks south. It was incredible.

We looked up, and it was just like a scene out of a movie.

Q. When you got up to Liberty and Washington, that's where you met up with the EMS captain?

A. Right.

Q. So there was an EMS chief there too?

A. Yeah, because he asked me, "Who are you with? What unit are you on?" I was like, "I'm extra personnel from Battalion 43." He said, "Good, you're staging officer until I can get somebody else down here. You're staging officer."

Q. You don't remember who that was, the EMS chief?

A. No. An older guy with a mustache, grayish-black hair. There weren't too many EMS chiefs there. I don't know if it was Chief Grant or -- Chief somebody. I don't know. I couldn't even remember.

Q. How about EMS units in that area?

A. There were two or three Fire Department ambulances there. When I was doing staging, I was collecting keys. Most of the ambulances that were there -- we had Hazollah there. There was Metro Care there. There were two ambulances from Broad Channel Fire Department there. There was a Cornell truck there. I remember seeing the Metro Care MERV. It was down closer to over here, to where Three World Trade was. They were closest. They were in front of that.

That's pretty much as far as ambulances goes. Mostly Metro Care and voluntary hospitals and like three or four Fire Department ambulances.

Q. Did you recognize anybody on the crews from those?

A. From Metro Care. I used to work there. So everybody that was there I knew. I pretty much rendezvoused with them because I was doing staging and just sticking with people we knew. It was just easier for me to know whose bus is what.

I don't recall if there was anybody -- I don't think there was anybody there from my station. There was nobody there that I knew from the Fire Department. Nobody there that I knew from the Fire Department. Some from Metro Care and that's it.

Q. You were down over here when the second tower came down?

A. When the second tower came down, I was on the esplanade helping carry some injured firefighters to an ambulance.

Q. Could you show it on the map?

A. Yeah, right over here, because this is where -- we walked down from here, and we were carrying the injured firefighters to this point. There was an ambulance here. We took their stair chair because he couldn't stand anymore.

So we took the stair chair, and we grabbed the stair chair and wheeled him just about as far as we could find an ambulance that was running. We tagged a Lutheran truck, and we put him in the Lutheran truck and they took off. Wherever they went, I have no idea.

Q. Do you recall his name or company or anything like that?

A. No. All of that stuff is just -- those minor details, they're just gone with the wind.

Q. Where did you pick him up?

A. He was right outside -- he was in the gateway plaza. He was in the park area, where the park was. Because when we ran into this building, there were mostly EMTs. I think there was one ESU cop, and the ESU cop was leading us into the bowels of the building. I'm like, "Where are you going? You're bringing us further into the building. We don't know what kind of damage is up top. We need to get out of here."

So we went back the way we came, and we found the door. It was a door like this, and it had sheetrock. The door was locked, so we kicked out the sheetrock. When we opened up the door, we happened to be like in the lobby.

When we were in the lobby, that's where all the firefighters were in there, and they were waving us out. We saw the flashlights and stuff. They were waving us out, and we all ran out. That's when we hooked up with this injured firefighter, and we started carrying him down.

We walked down just about as far as you can. It's like now that I think about it, what we should have done, we should have walked north, because as you're walking south, when the second tower came down, we were already down like by -- there's a pier down here or something. There's like a little pier or something.

Q. Okay.

A. And they were bringing up boats, power boats or regular boats. They were shoveling people off, and whenever they were bringing them, I don't know. It got so crazy. Then the second tower came down, and then an even darker cloud of dust started creeping over the park.

People were just freaking out and trying to jump on the boats. It looked like a riot. Women and children first and everybody -- I'm like, look, the towers are down. That's it. The towers are down. Everyone needs to relax and keep walking, keep going, keep going. Everybody was just freaking out. The harbor boats were packed. They were starting to teeter-totter.

I don't know. It was crazy. I was like, you know what -- then an EMS lieutenant, I met up with her, and she was like, "Oh, we have to go to Liberty Island." [redacted]

[redacted]

Q. Do you know who that lieutenant was?

A. No, it was just a female EMS lieutenant that was down there.

Then I met up with one of the guys from Metro Care that I knew, and we just started walking. We walked back through the plaza, and I think we went down Rector Street. We came through here and walked back up West Side Highway. It was like, all right, you know what, we need to get out of here. We need to get out of this dust cloud. It's not doing anything for us.

I was walking back to my car, and I expected to see an I beam through my car. I thought my car was going to be destroyed. But my car just had dust on it. We got in my car, and we just drove around the entire plaza like around 1 PP. We went all the way around and came back up to over here. I just parked my car somewhere up here.

Then we just started walking around. Then we went into the Port Authority building that was over there. We got equipment, flashlights, helmets and stuff. They evacuated us out of there because they thought the building was going to explode or something. They said there was a gas leak. So we ran out of there.

I met up with one of my good friends from Cornell somewhere on West Street. He saw the injury on my head. He said, "Where are you going?" I was like, "I don't know. I've got to go to a hospital. I'm going somewhere." He said, "Well, park your car somewhere." I jumped in my friend's car, and we jetted up to Cornell. I was like the first patient into Cornell.

There was a Fire Department liaison there. He took my name, he took my shield number, he took everything. He had my equipment. He had everything. He took everything down. They did whatever they did. I got stitches and whatever. Then I met up with him. I never heard anything from him either. The Fire Department didn't know I was there.

What did the Fire Department liaison do? He had Fire Department ID on, and he was like, "I'm a liaison. Give me your name, give me your shield number." I specifically told him I'm from EMS, the Fire Department but I'm EMS. I'm not a firefighter; I'm EMS. Make sure you -- it's a big difference.

Q. He was from the fire side?

A. Yeah. He was a Fire Department liaison. I'm pretty sure it was the fire side. I don't think we have any. He took my name and stuff, and that was it.

Q. Okay. Anything else you want to say, comments?

A. No. Pretty close experience. Pretty scary. It might sound stupid, but I would do it again if I had to. I'd do it all over again. I don't care.

Q. I thank you.

A. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER JAMES DRURY

Interview Date: October 16, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. TAMBASCO: My name is Mike Tambasco assigned to the World Trade Center Task Force. I'm conducting an interview with Assistant Commissioner James Drury, of the Bureau of Investigations and Trials in the Fire Department. We are in his office located at 9 Metrotech, 4-E-18. The time is 1632 hours and Commissioner, I would ask you to tell us your story.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER DRURY: I was driving to work that morning on Third Avenue when the pager went off, indicating that a plane hit the World Trade Center. I continued on into work as fast as I could, arriving I would estimate, just around 9 o'clock or shortly thereafter. I parked in the garage and I went into the lobby planning to take the elevator up to my office. As I pulled into the garage there were no cars in the garage, which led me to believe that everybody who had been in the building had left to go to the World Trade Center. My plan was merely to drop my things off in my office and then head over there, but there were two EMS individuals in the lobby when I opened the door of the garage lobby and they were literally begging me to give them a ride over to the World Trade Center. They were Captain Abdo Narmod and EMT Richard Zarillo. My car is not equipped with a siren, but it does have dashboard lights, so we headed over the Brooklyn Bridge, where we could see both towers now on fire. I got off the bridge and took Chambers across. At that point you could notice mass panic and hysteria. People were running everywhere across the street. We made the left on Broadway and I parked the Department vehicle that I was driving in front of Saint Pauls Chapel at Park Row on Broadway, right in front.

The Captain and the EMT got out of the car immediately and started running on foot to find the EMS command post. I then walked down Vesey Street from Broadway until I reached the corner of Church. I could see mass panic and hysteria there too. People were evacuating the World Trade Center, running, people running in all directions. I noticed police officers with First Deputy Commissioner Joseph Dunne of the NYPD in the intersection of Vesey and Church. You could see airplane parts on the ground and although I didn't realize it at the time, I later realized there were body parts, both on the concourse and on the street.

I made a left on to Church, heading down now past 5 World Trade Center on my right, the concourse, which is also on my right, where people were evacuating the building trying to find the FDNY command post. I came upon EMS Lieutenant Bruce Medjuck, I guess near the corner of Church and I guess it would be Liberty. More Church and Fulton or Dey Street. He informed me that the FDNY command post was down on West Street. They were treating an injured person and they placed that person on a stretcher. I then retraced my foot steps all the time looking up at these two buildings on fire, back up to the corner of Church and Vesey.

I now made a left on Vesey and walked down the street on the 7 World Trade Center side, where I could see more airplane debris and building debris on the sidewalk and on the street. I passed underneath the foot bridge that ran, I believe from the north tower to 7 World Trade Center and arrived on West Street where I observed numerous Fire Department rigs and ambulances on West Street. I crossed over West Street where I found the FDNY command center in front of the World Financial Center or the AMEX building there in a driveway leading me to a garage.

I saw, among others, Chief of the Department Ganci and First Deputy Commissioner William Feehan, who I nodded to and he nodded back to me. I was merely trying to observe what was going on, and at that point in time, more firefighters arrived. I also saw Deputy Commissioner Gribbon in there and at some point, I saw Commissioner Von Essen. While he was talking to a couple of people from the Department, I stood to the side and was watching him speak to them and in the background I could see Mayor Giuliani and his aides, walking along, I guess in front of the World Financial Center there.

At that point Commissioner Von Essen left, and I was mainly observing. Of course, at that point, you could see numerous people jumping and floating down to their demise, making a gruesome sound when they hit.

At some point, Assistant Commissioner Tom McDonald approached me and asked me to give him a hand moving north from the command post to try to get some Fire Department rigs moved so that we could clear a path for ambulances.

I joined him and started heading north back towards Vesey Street and beyond. As I was approaching Vesey Street, I saw a cop I knew from from the ESU unit, Officer Sullivan, and we nodded to one another. Then we got another Fire Department individual to join us. We were in the process of getting some rigs moved when I turned, as I heard a tremendous roar, explosion, and saw that the first of the two towers was starting to come down.

At that point both Commissioner McDonald and I started running north. He was behind me. Then I lost track of him. But I started running north as the cloud approached, winding up somewhere farther down on West Street. I waited a while till some of the dust cleared. I realized then that my cell phone wasn't working, my pager wasn't working and I borrowed a radio from some voluntary hospital EMT.

When the dust started to settle, I headed back down towards the World Trade Center and I guess I came close to arriving at the corner of Vesey and West again where we started to hear the second roar. That was the north tower now coming down. I should say that people in the street and myself included thought that the roar was so loud that the explosive - bombs were going off inside the building. Obviously we were later proved wrong.

But now the second tower started coming down and I had to run again back up north. Again the cloud was approaching. I ran several blocks north. I think I got up as far as that community college or even Saint Johns University and at that point after the dust cleared, I decided I had enough, I wasn't going to go back all the way down, although I did start heading south again, where I came upon Commissioner McDonald lying in the street with, I believe his right leg bandaged. I went over to him and told him it was great to see him and glad he was all right and he told me that while running, he had torn or injured his calf muscle in his leg. I believe he was assisted over to a FDNY van, and placed in there.

I then saw Deputy Commissioner Fitzpatrick and I inquired as to whether or not he knew whether everybody was okay and it was there for the first time that I found out that both Chief Ganci and First Deputy Commissioner William Feehan were missing. I then saw, like a ghost appearing out of a haze, Commissioner Steven Gregory, covered with soot and dirt and a little dazed. I tried to get him to sit down, but he just wanted to continue on.

I then hooked up with him and we headed over towards where I had parked my car because that's where we heard the FDNY was now setting up a new command center, over at Park Row and Broadway. We stopped at a McDonald's that we found open so that Commissioner Gregory could call his wife. The owner of the McDonald's was very accommodating. He gave us water. There were other firefighters and cops that came in there. We got some water and Commissioner Gregory was able to clean off his face. He called his wife and then we continued on over to Park Row and Broadway.

Now it had been a beautiful sunny day, but as we headed down Broadway in the Park Row area, day literally turned into night. This heavy dark acrid smoke was covering the entire area. The Fire Department was trying to muster their companies and men to see how they could attack the fire and start a rescue operation. I lingered there at the command center post for a little while. Then because the smoke was choking, I didn't have a mask or anything, I went over to my car, which was covered with soot, dust and paper and firefighters had put a couple of pairs of shoes and a couple of tools on it. I got the dust off as best as I could and I got the tools off of it. I got into the car and was able to drive it out of there. Driving down Broadway, cutting over back streets, turning around back up to Park Row and the Brooklyn Bridge.

I then proceeded over the Brooklyn Bridge very slowly, because the car was still covered with dust, dirt and debris. There were hundreds of people walking over the Brooklyn Bridge. At that point in time I was the only car on it. I made it back to headquarters, parked my car, went upstairs and reported up to the 8th floor, where I learned for the first time that Commissioner Feehan and Chief of Department Ganci had been found dead at the site.

I then teamed up with some of the eighth floor aides and wound up driving with them up to the new OEM command post up at the Police Academy. There we tried to follow the events that were going on and watched on TV the press conference the Mayor and the Commissioner gave.

From there I left and went back down to Ground Zero with a couple of Fire Department aides, where again I saw Commissioner Von Essen. I ran into Chief Nigro, who I saw at a field communications unit there and I went over to chat with him. As I remember he was quite upset, quite distraught, but in a quiet way. I must have lingered there. There were hundreds of firefighters waiting to -- they were waiting for 7 World Trade Center to come down as it was on fire. It was too dangerous to go in and fight the fire. I lingered there for quite a while, but the smell and the smoke was finally too much and I decided I wasn't doing any good there.

So I decided I was going to try to get back to headquarters, but I wasn't able to get a ride. So I walked and I walked all the way over to the City Hall Park, Pace College area, to the Brooklyn Bridge entrance where there was some guy in an FDNY van sitting there, who I asked for a ride. He agreed to drive me back over the Brooklyn Bridge to headquarters, which I appreciated very much.

The memories I have of the day are after the first collapse, running down that street just feet ahead of that cloud. And the amount of EMS and fire personnel and civilians put out on the streets, and walking literally for hours, both after the first collapse and then after the second collapse. I guess I didn't get back to headquarters for the first time until, guesstimating, maybe two or three in the afternoon. I just remember the panic in the street, people didn't know what to do. I heard that EMS was setting up a triage center at Pier 92 I think it was. I remember running into other EMTs on the street, seeing dozens of firefighters arriving and then basically that was it. I spent the rest of the day in headquarters trying to help out in any way I could. I guess I didn't leave headquarters that night until 12 or one in the morning.

That's basically what my memories are of the day. The sight of the jumpers was horrible and the turning around and seeing that first tower come down was unbelieveable. The sound it made. As I said I thought the terrorists planted explosives somewhere in the building. That's how loud it was, crackling explosive, a wall. That's about it. Any questions?

Q. Any other feelings or thoughts that you might want to have included in this?

A. No, it was just unbelieveable. Seeing how close Commissioner Von Essen and the Mayor were to that location was also quite startling. That's about it.

MR. TAMBASCO: Commissioner, I thank you for your interview and input. This will conclude now at 1650 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMS LIEUTENANT AMY MONROE

Interview Date: October 17, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. FEILER: Today's date is October 17th, 2001. The time now is 0934 hours and this is Monty Feiler of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual:

Q. Please state your name, rank and assigned area of command.

A. Lieutenant Amy Monroe, EMS operations.

Q. We're conducting the interview in Chief McCracken's office, 7th floor, 9 MetroTech, Fire Department Headquarters, and the interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

If you can, begin with the morning's activity, lieutenant.

A. I responded to the triage, actually the staging center at Broadway between Fulton and Dey Street. Immediately after staging some of the vehicles, I immediately moved to the triage center, which was in front of the Millenium Hotel. That was at the intersection of Church and Fulton, directly in front of World Trade Center 1, which is the north tower, and I began to work there as the transport officer responsible for transporting patients and making sure patients were being transported to appropriate hospitals.

Q. How did you become aware of the incident?

A. I actually saw it on TV at home. I called my battalion and the officer there -- I was actually at that time working for Battalion 4 -- was screaming and saying get in here, just come in here.

Q. How did you get down to the location?

A. I drove my personal car to the station and I drove an ambulance to -- had somebody drive me in an ambulance to the location.

Q. Were you given any specific direction on where to go, where to stage, anything like that?

A. I can't recall how I knew, but I knew where the staging area was. I think maybe I just heard it over Citywide. But I did know where to go.

Q. When you arrived, where did the ambulance leave you?

A. We parked the ambulance on Broadway, Broadway maybe and Dey, maybe a little bit further down, further south.

Q. Did you encounter any other officers?

A. I did. Lieutenant Bill Melaragno, he was staging up on Broadway as well, and as I walked down to the triage site, Captain Janice Olszewski was in charge there and Lieutenant Bruce Medjuck was there. I don't think I recall any other officers being there.

Q. As far as time reference, this was the first plane, second plane?

A. This was after the second plane had hit.

Q. Then what happened after that?

A. We proceeded, like I said, to transport patients, and during the middle of transporting -- we had a lot of patients triaged which were sitting against the Millenium Hotel and which were walking wounded. Some of the burn patients we were transporting. We didn't have a lot of units down there at the time. They were trying to hold the units back onto Broadway. So we only brought the units down when it was absolute they were ready to pick up patients.

Q. Right.

A. Then World Trade Center 2 collapsed, and when 2 collapsed, I actually ran east on Fulton. I was at the triage on Church. I ran east on Fulton, right near St. Paul's Chapel.

Q. That's where you stayed?

A. Yes. I ended up actually on Broadway and was caught in the collapse.

Q. What happened after that?

A. After I was caught in the collapse, I eventually -- there were three civilians. We were in a vehicle. Eventually we were able to drive out of the collapse. One of them was pretty serious. We all, of course, suffered from smoke inhalation. We drove as far as we could. The vehicle died because it had been exposed to, I guess, so much dust and everything.

We drove to 14th Street and Broadway, and another lieutenant who had seen us who was not in the collapse was driving a command car, which was Lieutenant Adam Brynes. So when our vehicle died, he picked up all of us and the patients and we proceeded to Beth Israel Hospital. I ended up at Beth Israel Hospital for some time and the other patients, the three civilians, were treated there.

Q. Anything else that you think is important, any other EMS people that you may have run into or spoken to that you recall?

A. No, I did not really. I actually -- I'm trying to think. I did leave there. I was actually medicated, I had an IV, but I left there because I was actually on the FEMA team. So I left there and walked home and then went back down and redeployed right after that with the USAR team.

But as far as the officers that I ran into, you know, after the collapse or during the collapse, no, it was just so quick, it was so sudden, and then really everybody was separated, totally separated.

Q. Did you have a radio?

A. I did have a radio, but there was really no radio transmission until just -- during the collapse it was so silent, and then after that I think the -- I believe I did hear over the radio, what I was hearing, what I thought I heard -- it might be wrong, but this is what I thought I heard -- was deploy the weapons of mass destruction, the antidote kits, and that's the only thing I heard and that's the last thing I heard and I didn't hear anything over the air after that. I don't know if my radio went dead or whatever. My radio was covered, though, so it was broken.

Q. The crew that drove you down there, do you remember who they were?

A. The crew that drove me down there? EMT Peter (inaudible). He was actually on light duty. He drove me down there.

Q. Anything else that you think is important?

A. No.

MR. FEILER: I want to thank you for spending the time with me for the interview. It's 0940 hours and this interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CHIEF JERRY GOMBO

Interview Date: October 17, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. FEILER: Today's date is October 17, 2001. The time now is 0828 hours and this is Monty Feiler of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual:

Q. Please state your name, rank and assigned command.

A. Assistant Chief Jerry Gombo from the EMS operations.

Q. We're conducting this interview in Chief Gombo's office on the 7th floor at EMS command. The interview is regarding the events of September 11, 2001, and if you can just begin at the morning of September 11th.

A. Sure. I logged on my usual early time, somewhere prior to 0530, on that Tuesday morning and arrived at my headquarters somewhere around 6:00 o'clock. At that point I was just doing my usual morning activities, reviewing UORs, just checking the schedule, making sure that everything is in place as far as getting prepared for the day for the most part and reviewing the night activities.

Then I recall somewhere prior to 9:00 o'clock Ross Terranova, Lieutenant Terranova, who at the time was working down or situated down at 5 Operations, came running into my office informing me that a plane hit the World Trade Center and it was observed by Chief Ganci from his office. I ran down the hall just to see because you could see the towers from the other side of the building, which is just a few yards down, and I actually saw what appeared to be flames and smoke in one of the Trade Centers.

I gave Ross the keys to my car and I came back here to secure my radio, which was charging, and we went down to the garage to start responding to the assignment. From looking at the job history for that day, I know that they assigned me to that job at about 0855 hours. At the time three cars left from the garage heading in that direction. It was Chief Ganci, Chief Nigro, followed by myself. We went over the Brooklyn Bridge and headed towards the Twin Towers.

Q. Were you with anybody?

A. With Ross. Ross Terranova was driving the vehicle and it was just the two of us in the car. We were there quickly. As quickly as we left here, the entrance ramp to the Brooklyn Bridge was already shut down by PD, you know, accept for emergency vehicles. So on the approach to the World Trade Center listening to the units getting assigned to the Center, we knew that -- well, obviously, we saw that there was a plane at that time, we didn't know the significance, whether it was a small plane, a large plane. The initial information was extremely sketchy at that point and I believe there was no Manhattan Chief on duty at the time. I believe Chief Hart was in refresher. So I knew that I was for the most part the first due Chief in coming from Fire headquarters.

Anyway, as we made our way downtown, you know, traffic started getting a little congested already. As we approached the towers, we ended up leaving the car in close proximity of Trinity Church, you know, there's a cemetery there, downtown.

Q. On the map, where would that be? What would be the cross streets?

A. Okay.

(Pause.)

A. I don't believe it's on your map.

Q. Would that have been somewhere on Church Street?

A. It's off of Church. Trinity Church.

(Pause.)

Q. Actually, we can look for that later if you'd like.

A. Okay. Anyway I parked over -- well, actually Ross parked over in close proximity to the church and then we walked on foot towards the World Trade Center, which was down the block. It was in close proximity, but not so close as to interfere with any type of responding vehicles or anything like that.

As we approached the towers, this would be from the east side heading west, we saw people it appeared, lots of people, you know, possibly hundreds, evacuated, which was a good thing. It seemed to be fairly quickly but in an orderly fashion as well. We saw several EMS units and I believe they were Fire Department units at the time. I know I did converse with a few of them because they were treating patients laying on the floor and this was on Church. Everybody was wearing their helmet, which was good because there was debris, like just different types of parts. It might have been like plane parts, in fact, they did look like it, on the floor with stuff coming down as well.

So I told the crews to cross back up to the further side of Church and that's where they should set up their treatment and triage area at that point. I don't believe there were any officers there, but there were like two or three units operating and they were setting up triage. I don't recall any of the employees' names.

At that point I wanted to head to the other side of the tower where our planned staging is located. I walked around on foot, of course, the other side of the tower. Now I'm on the south side of the tower, which was West Street, and there I encountered several other EMS units that were coming into the area. People were exiting the building, the Trade Center. Lots of people, it appeared, in orderly fashion, but there didn't seem to be any patients, if you will. Everybody was like walking and no one was complaining of any types of injuries or ailments or anything like that. So we set up a staging area on West and Vesey and I think that was communicated to citywide that that's where the units should come in to.

At that point I did come across several EMS officers. Captain Olszewski from this office as well as Bruce Medjuck, who I sent around to where I initially came, because when I arrived there, there were no supervisors operating on the east side of the building.

Q. Church Street?

A. Right. So there were no supervisors there. Although I knew more bosses were responding in, I felt it important to get at least a captain and a lieutenant there. So they were both directed to go over there and to set up a staging and treatment sector there.

On my side now, I ran into several people, Captain Stone, Captain Pinkus, and Ross, who was with me the whole time. He had the radio and stuff like that. Those two captains, I believe Chief Basile and maybe Captain Sickles as well. I did a similar type of setup on that side as well. Because there were no patients at all, we communicated that staging should be set up there. I believe I left Captain Pinkus over there to coordinate staging, which at that point was going to be our primary staging location.

I inquired as to where the Fire command post was set up at that point and I was told that it was in the lobby of the tower.

Q. The north tower?

A. Tower No. 2.

Q. Which I believe is the south tower?

A. Let me just look at your map. This is the north tower. Where is the south tower on your map?

Q. Right here.

A. I believe it was the north tower, correct.

So I made my way over to the command post with I believe Captain Stone, and we took a crew with us on foot, you know, the ambulances were staging there, and we headed towards the lobby of the command post.

As we were approaching the lobby of the command post, at that point we saw there were a significant amount of body parts, torsos, half torsos, arms, the whole gamut, as far as what one might expect from this type of disaster. I made my way into the command post. I informed Chief Hayden, who was at the time the incident commander, that we're here and that we're going to be setting up EMS operations staging outside. Obviously, he was involved with coordinating a significant amount of Fire resources. And I said, if you need anything, I'll remain in eyeshot.

Once again, although there were a significant number of body parts exterior, there were really no viable patients to contend with. There were not many civilians in the lobby where the command post was being set up. It was I believe the security desk. You know where when you come in into the center you check in.

Q. Right.

A. So there were like security personnel by the command post, building security that is, you know, and a significant number of Fire personnel as well as PD, but beyond that, few if any civilians that I noticed.

I did run across Chief Gabriel, who was assigned to OEM. We conversed a little as to what the game plan was going to be as far as EMS, once again, keeping in mind that people were exiting and we weren't being overwhelmed with patients.

I believe at that point we couldn't transmit over the radio from in there, the citywide frequency, you know, it was just too much interference. Even though we were in the lobby and the majority of the windows were blown out, we weren't able to transmit. I don't know whether it was because it was just interference or whether there were too many units on the frequency.

So we were there for a few minutes and Chief Callan from the Fire Department, one of the tour commanders, I believe it was him that initially told me, but it could have been Chief Hayden, I don't recall which Chief told us that they were going to secure the command post from the tower lobby and move it directly across West Street. Also, that I should pull the EMS resources out of the tower, it was deemed not safe, you know, and that they would be pulling out the Fire resources as well and set up across the street.

I believe I left Chief Basile and Captain Stone there to make sure that all the EMS resources were pulled out. There was a lot of emergency personnel coming in and out and given the fact that we don't have protective clothing, the decision was made for EMS to evacuate. I left them there to make sure that EMS personnel were evacuated from that area and returned to the staging location. Then once again on foot with Ross I started to make my way out of the tower lobby and go to the command post, which was going to be on the other side of West Street.

So I arrived at the command post there and at that point they had the Fire command post set up there and Chief Kowalczyk was on the scene. He was the major that day, so he functioned as the operations officer, and I was there. I recall being with Chief Ganci and Commissioner Feehan and several other Chief officers from Fire and, once again, Fire set up their post, their command post, and we set up a few feet away in eyeshot. I asked Chief Kowalczyk to continue functioning as the operations officer. Apparently, he was able to communicate with the radio at that point.

I believe that the initial staging that was set up on both sides of the building were functioning and active. However, once again, there weren't a significant number of patients to deal with.

No sooner than, I don't know, it seemed like a few minutes -- and I have to just share with you at this point, my times might be off. At the corner of my eye, the second plane now comes into the building. I know that there was a time line that you shared and...

Q. 9:06.

A. 9:06 was the second plane?

Q. Right.

A. Okay. At that point I would say that we knew it wasn't an accident. I mean, two planes on a clear, sunny, warm day, into the Trade Center, we knew that there was something very unusual going on. At the time of the impact, we were able to feel heat that was generated from the explosion at the command post, which was across West Street, and West is a fairly large street with that island in there, and debris was showering all over West Street. And I can only tell you from what was within my eyesight.

It appeared after that the pace of the civilians exiting the building increased, but throughout, for the most part, there was an orderly evacuation of personnel. I guess the sense was disbelief, you know, because here you're dealing with one major operation and before you know it, it's like a mirror image, if you will, but this one, when you were there and you heard it and you felt it, it had more of an impact.

So at that point I believe I was conversing with Chief Kowalczyk about the operation and the deployment of some resources, both ambulance and Chief officers, further down West Street to deal now with this other plane into the tower that we were going to have to contend with.

No sooner than that, I guess the best words that I could describe this, it felt sort of like an earthquake. The sky darkened and you heard this thunderous roar. It was like a volcano, if you will, not that I ever experienced a volcano, but I guess that's the way I could describe it, and this cloud just coming down. The ground was shaking and this roar and at that point everybody from the command post -- I forgot to tell you where.

The command post was in the driveway of 2 World Financial Center. It was a fairly large-sized driveway. So we were on the incline, we meaning the Fire and EMS command post.

Q. Where would that be on the map?

A. Right here.

Q. Okay.

A. 2 World Financial Center, there's a driveway leading to West Street, similar to the driveway when you come into Fire headquarters, but whereas this you drive into the building and it's covered as soon as you enter, there the driveway was open; there was no roof on top of it. So you had the incline and we were set up right at the base where the street met the driveway and, like I said, Fire and us, and then this thing came down on us, which obviously was the first tower that collapsed, and everybody took cover or ran.

I'm not sure whether I was pulled or it was instant, but based on the incline, we went into the garage of 2 World Financial Center. I know Ross was with me. I believe there were maybe up to 20 other emergency service personnel there. However, it was difficult to tell because what happened was we ran in, we dove behind this white van that was parked like at the base of the driveway. We ducked behind that and then the whole place became dark as a result of debris just filling the whole driveway. And mind you, this was a significant-sized driveway. We knew there was a lot of debris out there and, like I said, it appeared that some of the people ran in the opposite direction from the garage and quite a few people did retreat to the garage.

There were no lights. It was dark. As much as you wanted to breathe, it was extremely painful. I'm sure I'm going to reiterate what other people experienced. Every time you took a breath, your mouth filled up with this soot, powder, cement, whatever it was, and although you didn't want to breathe, you didn't have a choice; you had to breathe.

I carry a flashlight on me always and I know that people always are like why do you need a flashlight? So I took out the flashlight and I turned it on and you still couldn't see in front of you; there was that much debris and stuff. So what I attempted to do to the best of my ability without having good vision -- and there were a few of us. We were talking. We were able to communicate with each other. I think what we wanted to make sure was, before we advanced to the back of the garage, because we were not going to be able to exit the way we came down because the whole exit or entrance to the garage was covered with debris, we just wanted to make sure that we weren't leaving anybody that was like partially trapped, if you will, behind us. To the best of our ability we made sure that we moved forward not leaving anybody behind. However, you know, we didn't know what was going on at the other side of the rubble.

We made our way up a small staircase that looked like maybe the attendant or security office of the garage, and I recall seeing this water cooler, you know, the five-gallon jugs of water. There were a significant number of people down there at the time and we were all rinsing our mouths just trying to get some of the soot out of our mouths so that we could breathe. There were a few Fire personnel. I remember an OEM, Harry Winters, was down there with us. Who else? Several firefighters.

We asked them, because they had their Scott packs and stuff, to find us an exit because clearly we weren't getting out the way we came in and we couldn't see any doors right in the back. There was a phone on the desk where this water cooler was, but it was dead. I mean, there were no phone calls. So at this point we didn't have any type of radio communication, the cell phones didn't work, the hard line phone didn't work, there were no lights, and once everybody got into the office area we closed the door behind us and put something by the door to try to keep the area as clean as possible without all this soot. I mean, it was beyond belief the amount of soot that was in the garage.

We must have been there, although it seemed like an eternity, a few minutes when they informed us that there was an exit onto the marina side. If you look over here on the map, it would be the North Cove Yacht Harbor. So we exited from the back through a staircase. We had to go up because we were in the basement and we came down on this side and it was amazing. When you exited on this side, it was a sunny, beautiful day. There was no debris, no anything over here.

So at that point we decided we were going to, once again, return to the command post. The way we were going to go about doing that is there was a walkway or a driveway that led you onto North End. We were going to go back down Vesey to West and be at the command post, you know, to continue coordinating the operation. When we got to Vesey and North End, right over here, there were a significant number of EMS resources staging there.

Now, it was like wild because when we were in the harbor here, it was like nothing happened, and as soon as we were able to make that turn and visualize what was going on, it was like going from one extreme to the other. There was still soot coming down, and one of the amazing things, that paper, I mean, as much as that doesn't seem significant, mounds and mounds of paper just scattered all over the place. So, as you were walking, if you could imagine walking in a snowstorm?

Q. Right.

A. That's what it actually was. You had this soot coming down on you and then in lieu of snow on the ground you had mounds and mounds of paper, I mean, an unbelievable amount of paper. I'm not talking about one. Just every time you took a step there were mounds of it, it was inches high, plus all of the soot and debris and stuff like that.

So there were quite a few ambulance resources not limited to Fire, you know, and the MERV ended up here. At that point we were informed that the initial triage that was set up on West and Vesey retreated one block at the time of the collapse.

Now, when we ran into the basement, we lost contact with the world. We really didn't know what was going on on the outside, and our initial objective was to make it back to the command post.

Anyway, we did bump into a whole bunch of EMS personnel here and they had a treatment sector going on in the lobby of the building here. I don't recall the name of the building. But, once again, it was a fairly large lobby and seemed to be a safe environment because you didn't have all that soot or garbage coming down, and there were patients and treatment going down there.

Q. Civilian patients or a combination?

A. I believe primarily civilian patients.

So I recall at that point seeing Chief Carrasquillo, I believe it was, and it seemed to me that they were able to deal with the patient load that they had there. So I was going to attempt once again to make my way up Vesey back to the command post.

No sooner did we get, I would say, several yards down Vesey Street heading east to west when the second tower came down, and once again this huge mushroom cloud, not going up but coming towards us. So there was a rush of primarily uniformed personnel. Now, according to this, the north tower, that was at 10:29.

Q. Right.

A. So I take it that that's an approximate time that we started making our way there. So once again we retreated back to this lobby area.

Now, at that point there were several EMS chiefs that were there. I remember Chief Goldfarb, Chief Villani, Chief Pascale, Chief Carrasquillo and Chief Kowalczyk, besides myself. We went into the stairwell of the building here just to converse for a little while and to put together some type of strategy.

Once again, mind you, we have no communications with the outside world and, in essence, what we were able to see is just what we were able to see on this block. So there are no phones, no radio communications.

We spoke, and after assessing the situation, the decision was made that it was not safe for us to try to make our way back up Vesey to West. We did not know whether there were other buildings in danger of collapsing, and at that point the decision was made for the EMS resources to go to two different staging areas on the outskirts of this incident. The decision was made, on the north, Chelsea Piers because there was a large parking area. We really wanted to move back out of this area until it was deemed safe for EMS personnel to operate. On the south, we decided that we would use the ferry terminal, Staten Island ferry terminal. So those were the two staging areas that we were going to send the EMS resources that were there after they finished treating the patients.

I divvied up the chiefs that were with me. I believe I sent Chief Pascale and maybe Chief Villani to the ferry terminal and Chief Basile I sent, I believe it was Chief Basile, up to Chelsea. Mind you, all of this had to be on foot because the cars were elsewhere and we didn't know their condition, and because there was no communication with anybody. I told them, I told these chiefs, we're going to go there. We're going to secure this area with patients. I left Chief Carrasquillo behind until we were able to evacuate that location and go to those two locations.

I decided that I was going to make it to One

Police Plaza. Knowing that we weren't going to have access to 7 World Trade Center where the OEM office is, the most logical thing that came to mind within walking distance would be One Police Plaza. So I figured I would go there. I took Chief Goldfarb, Ross Terranova and Chief Goldfarb's aide with me.

That was the plan. The resources would go to those two staging areas and I would go to Police Plaza and try to coordinate activities there.

Q. At this time I'm just going to change the tape to side B.

A. Sure.

(Pause.)

Q. Continuing the interview with Chief Jerry Gombo, go ahead, sir.

A. Okay. So we started on foot heading towards One Police Plaza, the four of us, and as a result of what was going on and what we were able to determine, we decided that we would need to take the scenic route, if you will, around to One Police Plaza. We were going to walk north and up around City Hall and then come around to One Police Plaza as opposed to trying to make our way across Vesey. Although that would have been quicker, at that point I deemed it to be too dangerous.

We walked a few blocks. I remember a few things that come to mind that I most probably will never forget. The silence. It was just dead silent, like it was like the middle of the night, but yet it was sort of day with this haze. You saw this smoke, the soot was still coming down, papers all over the place, and that was pretty much the way it was throughout our journey.

I came across Chief Callan, who prior to that, the last time I saw him was in the lobby of the Trade Center where they set up the command post. He appeared not to be injured but to be in a daze. I informed him at this point I was going to make it on foot to One Police Plaza. I invited him to come with us so that we could set up some type of operation there and coordinate it with the other agencies, and he opted not to take me up on that offer but to attempt to make it back to the command post.

I asked him that, if he was able to do that and if he saw Chief McCracken or any of the other EMS chiefs operating on the scene, to let them know what we did as far as the two staging areas where we retreated to and let them know that I was making my way to One

Police Plaza. Just like I didn't know who else was operating on the scene as a result of not having communication, I knew that people were going to be inquiring as to individuals' whereabouts and things like that. I knew it was going to take us some time to make it to where we needed to go.

Q. Where did you meet Chief Callan?

A. It had to be several blocks from Vesey and North End. I believe we were walking up North End and I believe that actually changes into some other street. But that was the direction which we were heading in. We were heading north on North End, once again, in an attempt to come around City Hall, which is not on the map here, I don't believe.

Q. This is City Hall park here.

A. Oh, City Hall park. Okay. So our plan was we were going to make our way up North End, City Hall Park, I think to -- well, it had to be somewhere I would say around maybe Murray or Park. The reason why I say that, after we passed Chief Callan, after another few minutes on foot, a police officer from the Chief of Department's office came by in a golf cart and he noticed us. We were wearing our uniforms and helmets and he saw the stars. We flagged him down and asked if he would be kind enough to take us over to One Police Plaza. We were trying to get to command and control. He was gracious enough to do that. So the four of us got onto this golf cart and this officer took us over to One Police Plaza, which saved us a significant amount of travel time because we were going to do this on foot and he was able to take us practically to the door, which was great.

We got to One Police Plaza and we went up to command and control, which was on the 8th floor. I went over to the desk and inquired whether there were any other Fire Department personnel here, which at the time I was informed that there were not. I told them that we're from the Fire Department, EMS, and the room was jammed with all different types of representation from agencies. However, we were the first Fire Department reps to get there.

Within a few minutes they were able to give us some table space and some phones. I made contact with several locations at that time. I called FOP, fire operations. I introduced myself to them and gave them the phone number and I told them that I was at command and control. I made similar notifications to EMD, our office here in operations, and we just tried to coordinate whatever information we were able to get from EMD or FOP at the time.

We were there actually for quite a few hours. We finally left that location at I would say roughly 10:00 o'clock or so in the evening. I called and had Captain Connelly, who was on duty, come down to man command and control. There were other Fire personnel. I don't recall the officer's name, but there were a few other Fire personnel that prior to that, like several hours after we arrived there, also arrived to represent the Fire Department.

When I left in the evening at 10:00 o'clock, we made our way, once again, on foot, back towards the EMS command post at that time. We went past Trinity Church to see if I had a car and if it was there. To my surprise it was. It had a significant number of scratches needless to say. The driver's window was smashed. But the car was there. There was Fire apparatus around it functioning with Fire personnel. There were charged hoses all around the car.

So I figured it was safe. At that point we made it down to the command post where it was good to see some of the EMS personnel that either I didn't see beforehand or I did and we got lost in the sauce, if you will. I stood there for a little while and then made it to my car and I was able to get it out, and that's the story for 9/11.

Q. I just want to ask, after the first building collapsed, you said that the Fire command post had relocated to World Financial Center?

A. No, no. From the lobby. That was prior to the second plane hitting.

Q. Did you ever re-establish contact with them or you never made it back to them?

A. No. We weren't able to do that. We came out on the marina side, because the whole garage, we were buried. We were buried in the garage. So I made it out the marina side up North on Vesey and attempted to go back, but when we made this turn and went up Vesey, that's when the second building came down, and at that point the decision was made that there was no sense in jeopardizing our safety in making it to that location. If we couldn't even make it up this block, we said there would be no way that the command post would be able to be functioning at that location, and that's when we made the decision for the two staging areas in a safe proximity away. Because we had no phones or radio communications, that's when I decided I would hope that One Police Plaza would be the most logical thing. I found out after we were there for several hours that an interagency command post was set up at the Police Academy up on 23rd Street. As to why that decision was made, that was beyond me.

Q. Was there any other EMS personnel or Fire Department personnel that you remember seeing that we didn't talk about?

A. There were so many names and faces. I tried to mention the ones that I had the most interaction with. I'm sure that I left out some specific names and locations. Most probably, somewhere as I was crossing over from the tower to the secondary Fire command post on the other side of West Street, I saw a lot of EMS personnel, but at this point the names escape me. So I was only able to recall the ones that I interacted with or had conversation or gave direction to or things like that. But that's my plight and I'm glad I'm here to share it with you.

Q. I agree.

A. Hopefully I was able to give you some insight as to some of my actions during the course of the day. Unfortunately, afterwards we found out that the people we were with at the command post didn't make it. You know, Chief Ganci and Commissioner Feehan and Father Judge, just a tremendous loss, a tremendous loss.

Q. Is there anything else that you'd like to add?

A. You know what? I think I gave you everything that comes to mind, leaving out some of the gory details, which I'm sure other people have talked about. But as far as an operations perspective, I think I shared with you the most significant things that I'd been involved with.

It was just a very difficult situation. I've responded to my share of MCIs during my career and this was a very complex situation as a result of the ongoing collapses. From a patient perspective, it wasn't that complex, but there was absolutely no communication other than face to face. No cells, no radios. The only thing I could say, in retrospect, I believe that we made the best decisions as to how to proceed operationally given our assessment of the situation and the resources and the scenario that we were presented with.

MR. FEILER: Okay. I want to thank you very much for participating. The time now is 0923 and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

PARAMEDIC NEIL SWEETING

Interview Date: October 17, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Today is October 17th. The time is 11:31 a.m. My name is Christine Bastedenbeck. I work for the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview this morning at Battalion 20 with the following individual.

PARAMEDIC SWEETING: Neil Sweeting-5274, assigned as the paramedic coordinator for Division 6.

Q. Neil, I'm just going to ask you if you can recount the events of the morning of September 11th, 2001.

A. I was in the division office, which is located up in the north Bronx on the grounds of Jacobi Hospital, when we started hearing reports of a plane crash into one of the towers at the Trade Center.

Chief Pascale from the division got paged, and she came out and told us about this. We started hearing reports of it over the citywide radio frequency. We turned the television on in the office, and pretty shocked, just as anybody was.

My first thoughts were oh, my God, some plane was drastically off course and crashed into the building. I didn't realize it was a large airliner. I thought it was a small plane, just seeing these awful photos of terrible fires and smoke billowing out.

We hung out at the division. I was chomping at the bit with everybody else wanting to get down there, but the chief was holding us back until she was assigned.

While we were watching, we were hearing the radio on the citywide frequency, and all these units being assigned and supervisors calling for more help and trying to set up different treatment areas, when we saw the second plane hit.

I remember saying to the other coordinator, Steven Pilla, that we saw the plane go by, and my first thought again was oh, my God, this pilot must have been blinded by the smoke or distracted and then he crashed right into the building. At that point we realized something was seriously wrong.

At this point Chief Pascale said, "Let's go," and we all ran out of the office and jumped in the car and started heading downtown. There were five of us in the chief's car. I was driving Chief Pascale, Lieutenant Mike Cahill, Steve Pilla and EMT Amedegnato.

We started heading down, cut across the Bronx, got to the West Side Highway, and proceeded down and actually got caught in traffic around 125th Street -- 158th Street. The Police Department was turning all vehicles off the highway, but they were ushering emergency vehicles through. But we got tied up in the traffic up until that point, which was annoying but at this point, as the story went, it may have had a tremendous outcome on the five of us in that car.

I remember driving down the highway, and when we got down, oh, into like the eighties and nineties on the highway, we started to get a really good view of lower Manhattan and you could see the two towers burning. It was just surreal.

We started hearing terrible screams on the radio of people yelling, "Oh, my God, there are people jumping! There are people jumping!" I was at the first Trade Center disaster in '93, and I thought that was going to be the biggest thing I would ever experience in my career. I had a feeling this was going to be even worse, not knowing they were going to fall down.

As we got closer, I remember saying to the other people, I said, "This is the kind of fire, there are going to be a lot of people dead in this. This is also a fire that you're going to lose firemen in. This is where people are going to die, unfortunately."

We proceeded down. We got stuck in a little more traffic down below 57th Street when we hit like 12th Avenue, the West Side Highway there. We made it down, and we got I believe it was around West Street and Barclay, which is probably about two blocks, a block and a half away, when Steve actually said, "Oh, my God." I looked up, and the tower's falling.

We didn't hear it, which was really weird, because we had the radios going and the sirens going. So I didn't hear the sound of it initially. Once I looked up, I started hearing it.

At this point hundreds of people are running at us. We pulled over -- we looked for a spot to park initially, but then there were so many people coming at us that I was going to run somebody over. We just abandoned the car on the corner of West Street and Barclay.

Q. Where you indicated the number 1 on the map?

A. Yes.

I remember all four doors opened up before we even stopped moving. We pulled over, we jumped out and popped the trunk quickly and grabbed our helmets and just started running and got enveloped by this cloud of dust that's so vivid to everybody now.

We didn't really understood the magnitude as to what had happened at this point. There was just so many people running towards us. We kind of went west towards the Hudson River. We were just totally enveloped in this cloud. You couldn't see. It was choking. It was in your eyes. I felt like somebody had poured a cup of sand down my throat. It was horrible.

After about ten minutes of this, it kind of calmed down a little bit. People stopped running. We actually headed back down closer in to see what we could do and got down to Vesey Street.

Q. At that time were all of you still together?

A. No, we weren't. No, I'm sorry, we were together. We all ended up back on Vesey. We didn't walk down as a group, but we all kind of migrated, because people were kind of turning back and going down to see what they could do.

We got to Vesey, and we were -- at Vesey and West there's I believe it was part of the Financial Center. We started helping some people that were coming out and looking for a triage area. People came out, and Chief Villani, a chief from the Fire Department from EMS, said, "Let's start setting up a triage area here in the lobby of this building."

We started actually seeing a lot of patients. They were bringing a lot of people in. We didn't have a lot of equipment. We didn't have anything with us. But even the units that were there, people had run and abandoned their equipment during the initial stages. But people started getting stuff, and we brought a lot of oxygen in. It was basically just a quick triage, and we were trying to move some people out.

I remember a battalion chief coming in. There were two chiefs. There was one chief that we were treating who was badly injured. His head was split and he was bleeding bad, and he was just in a daze and just staring straight ahead like he had no idea what had happened. None of us.

Another chief came in -- and he was telling us first, the first chief, "We shouldn't be here. We should get out of here." A second chief came in and said, "Listen, we need to move. This is a terrorist act." That's the first time I thought that way. He said, "We've got to get away from this place."

Q. They were both fire suppression chiefs?

A. Fire suppression chiefs.

Q. Do you know their names?

A. No, I don't.

We started moving out, loading people up. We brought a bunch of stretchers at this point, and we were just loading patients, just putting them on the stretchers. We had some people that were pretty seriously hurt, some head injuries, a couple people -- there was one gentleman that was unconscious, a lot of people with respiratory problems from all the dust, eye injuries from the dust. We started throwing them on stretchers and running and getting out.

I remember the maintenance guys or engineers from this building, this big office building, brought big jugs of water that we were using, and we were wiping people down and flushing eyes. They had a cart full, like a linen cart, full of towels, which was great, because we were wiping people down. It was really very helpful.

I remember when we heard abandon the site, I said, wow, this would be really good to keep with us. So I started pushing this cart, and I got stuck in the doorway with it, when we started hearing this rumble. I can remember -- I specifically remember this like twisting sound of metal. We were probably about half a block away from the complex at this point.

You heard a big boom, it was quiet for about ten seconds. Then you could hear another one. Now I realize it was the floors starting to stack on top of each other as they were falling. It was spaced apart in the beginning, but then it got to just a tremendous roar and a rumble that I will never forget.

We started running. People were diving into the back of ambulances that were open and on the hoods of ambulances, cars. Anything that was moving, they were trying to get into. There was one ambulance, there must have been 25 people piled into the back of it: firemen, policemen, civilians, EMS. It was just incredible.

I remember the MERV bus with the ramp that it had going up the street. The guy didn't even stop to unhook the stairs of the ramp, and everything was dragging down the street. I thought it ironic, watch somebody live through this and get run over by the MERV or wiped out by this ramp that was dragging behind the bus.

We started running, but there was a woman on Vesey Street between the Financial Center and the complex, like the plaza, and she got hit with something. She just went down like a shot. She got up and tried to run and just collapsed again. You could see that she had snapped her leg, her ankle, like right at the TIB-FIB and her ankle. It looked like when horses snap their hoof. Her foot was just flopping. The poor woman was trying to run.

I saw her, and a paramedic from Cabrini Hospital -- I don't even know his name -- he must have seen her at the same time because he ran down and we picked her up, the two of us, and started running west on Vesey Street towards Battery Park and the promenade and towards the Hudson River, when the wave, the first concussion, came down the street.

When you were that close, there was like a wind to it. I'm 6-4 and 240 pounds, and it knocked me down like a rag doll, ten feet away, down the street. I landed on top of this poor woman. She was having a bad enough day.

We picked her up, and I ran to the corner of the Financial Center building and I guess that's part of the promenade there for Battery Park, the walkway there.

Q. Right over here, World Financial.

A. No. Right. Okay. I picked her up like right in here. We ran down here. Actually on this building here, we dove down the side of that building to use it as a --

Q. You're indicating you dove around the corner of Three World Financial Center?

A. Of Three World Financial Center.

Q. The American Express building?

A. Right, into this like courtyard here.

Q. Okay.

A. And used that as a shield to cover us. I think that I had my helmet. Actually since I was -- actually the assignment I'm in right now is a very last-minute, temporary assignment. I didn't have my helmet or coat or anything with me. It was all back in my station in Harlem. So I grabbed somebody's helmet from here. Thankfully when I ran out the door I grabbed somebody's helmet.

When I dove around the corner, I just curled up into a fetal position and covered my head and just tried to ride it out. There was just this roar. It was pitch-black. I could feel stuff hitting me but not like big debris but smaller stuff that was mixed in with this cloud. It was choking. It was hard to breathe. You couldn't see.

Then the concussion and the wave stopped, and you were still encompassed in this, but the pressure wasn't to it that was initially there. We were stuck in this cloud probably for 20, 30 minutes afterwards. The cloud eventually went blocks and blocks up the street.

I grabbed an ambulance. I flagged an ambulance coming down, and I had the guy quickly toss some stuff into my eyes, water, because I couldn't see. I remember reaching in and grabbing one of his masks that he had. I just threw that on.

We picked the woman up, and we just put her on the bench. He had some people in there, so we just laid this lady out on the bench. That was the last I saw of her. It was an ambulance unit from St. Vincent's Hospital, and they just started heading north up out of the area.

I stayed and was walking in a daze. I remember there was so much stuff hitting my eyes I had to put my sunglasses on, which was really kind of funny. Here it was dark. It was almost pitch-black, and I'm walking around with sunglasses, just because I needed something to block my eyes.

Then it was just eerily quiet. It was just so quiet. I don't know if it was from the dust that was just suffocating the air. But for the next 10 minutes, 15 minutes, nobody knew where to go, what to do and where to start.

There were a lot of people walking around, but there weren't a lot of -- now that I think back, there weren't a lot of walking wounded. There really were more just people stunned that were walking around.

I'll never forget how quiet it was. I said it to people that day, but it's actually an analogy that seems to be being used a lot, like after it snows when it's very quiet. You could hear people calling out. You could hear a lot of firemen, their alarms going off on their air packs.

I had a radio with me which I lost when I got tumbled, thrown. It came out of the holster. So I couldn't talk to anybody. I didn't know where anybody was. The four other people I was with, I had no idea where they were. I knew they were with me when we were in the Financial Center and then started running out. I found two of them in about 45 minutes. Another one was about an hour after that as we started heading north out of there.

But Chief Pascale we didn't find for about five hours, and I was like, oh, my God. We had no idea where she went. One of the guys said they saw her running -- when the second one came, they saw her running north. I'm figuring that she wasn't buried, because we weren't right underneath it. We were knocked down by the concussion, but we weren't -- so I didn't think she was buried or anything, but I didn't know where she had gone at this point.

So we tried to see what we could do down there. Some people were coming up to me asking for help. My first 45 minutes of triage just involved telling people "Go north. Get out of here. You don't want to be here." They would ask me, "Where do I go?" I said, "I don't know. But you don't want to be here, go north. They'll be setting stuff up." Just get people out of there.

I don't know who it was that told me, but we finally started moving. When I started running into some of the other people, they had some radios. They were advising people to go up to Stuyvesant High School, which is on the corner of Chambers Street and West.

We got in there, and we were in the building like a minute when people just started screaming, "Run, run, run, run." I'm like, oh, my God, now what? It was one of those things, you just run when everybody's running. People are just storming out the back doors and just running up the highway, West Side Highway there.

I find out that it was -- one, somebody said there was a bomb, but it turned out it was Con Edison was screaming that there was a gas leak and they were afraid something was going to happen, it was going to blow up. Everybody was just so jumpy at the time that just the slightest thing would set them off. People were just running.

So we ran out of there. We were then again milling around, not knowing where to go. We were originally trying to get a triage area set up in Stuyvesant High School. Everybody bailed out on that. Then there were people saying to go to Chelsea Piers, which was a good hike. That's a good 20 blocks away.

We started walking, and I got up to north Moore Street and the West Side Highway. It's part of the Borough of Manhattan Community College. The Port Authority had kind of taken over this building, the police. They were using the gymnasium as their meeting point and treatment area there for their employees.

They started calling, "EMS, EMS, EMS. We have some guys hurt." So we went in there. Again, I didn't have a radio. I couldn't talk to anybody. I didn't have any equipment. There were a few people; mostly walking wounded, but there were a few people that were pretty banged up, a lot of respiratory problems. I didn't even have an oxygen tank.

I guess a few more units or some people must have gotten flagged because some equipment started coming in there. I don't know where Port Authority -- they must have had some type of contingency for their equipment from their other facilities at the airports or bridges and tunnels, because they started bringing truckloads of their equipment in.

So we stayed there, the three of us. We stayed there pretty much for a good four or five hours. I'll never forget, they brought a truck, and it looks like they must have gone to a Duane Reade store because they must have just held the bags up and people cleared the shelves, because there were like hundreds of bottles of Tylenol and bandages and tape and gauze. I could just see they probably cleared out a Duane Reade store.

So we tried to do whatever help we could. Some hospital doctors were showing up, and they started bringing some of their own equipment in. So we started having some stuff. That wasn't one of the actual EMS or Fire Department established triage areas; this was pretty much one of the hospitals started doing it at that point. But we hung out there for a good part of the day helping out, seeing what we could do.

I remember I figured I need to call my wife. I know she's going to be freaking out. She's a schoolteacher over in Queens. I called her school, and I couldn't get through. It was busy, busy, busy. At first I couldn't get her cell phone. I finally -- I guess this whole thing happened before 11:00. I finally was able to get through to her at about 4:00 that afternoon.

I went and started walking around Manhattan College, Borough of Manhattan College, and I left the gymnasium and was walking through the hallways, just trying to find any office that was open that I could use the telephone. I was sitting at some guy's -- I don't even know who it was, somebody's desk, and using his phone.

I called my house. She wasn't home. Something made me just call her family in Queens. It turns out that's where she went, because they had closed a lot of bridges down in the city. She couldn't back over the Whitestone Bridge. I finally got a hold of her; it was probably a little before 4:00.

She had heard the reports of possibly hundreds of Fire Department rescue workers possibly killed or missing and the whole scenario of the towers falling. I cried. I was crying. I left two messages on my machine in case she had gotten home. She said, "You sounded terrible. You sounded like a wreck. Your voice was shaking." I was. I was visibly shaking.

I remember asking one of the Port Authority cops what exactly happened, because I didn't know the whole magnitude. I didn't know anything at this point. It was several hours before I heard about the Pentagon and the plane that went down in Pennsylvania.

I didn't realize the towers had come down completely. I thought it was just the area above where the planes had crashed. I didn't realize they had come all the way down. I thought the tops had fallen off. They were like no, they're down completely. I said, "No, no, just above where --" He's like, "No, I'm telling you, they fell completely."

I didn't hear about the whole other episodes out of town for several hours. Then I started hearing people telling me. I heard rumors that the military shot down planes, they had attacked the Pentagon and there were other sites. I didn't really grasp the magnitude of it at that point.

I didn't get out of there until -- I don't know, it was probably close to -- I don't know -- 10, 11:00 that night we kind of got relieved. Then we were back at 4 a.m. I went down there for another 20 hours. I remember being down there again that day. I was exhausted. I spent time in the morgue, which was just a grim, grim detail the first day or two. Very few intact.

I remember while we were there another building fell, like a half a building that had been damaged. I remember everybody running again, just taking off and running. I just said, I'm tired of these buildings falling down on me. I can't run from these things anymore.

Q. Was that still on the first day?

A. That was the second day.

Q. Seven came?

A. Well, seven fell about 5 or 6:00. I was there. I was several blocks away, but I saw the whole thing go down. Again you could see everybody running. But I didn't run because I knew I was far enough away.

But this other building that fell, it was one of the ones damages that was like a fire damaged building that part of it fell the next day.

It was something I'll never forget. The scariest time of my life. I remember after I got up after diving behind that building, I was counting body parts to make sure everything was still with me.

Last night actually -- this is, what, a month, five weeks later -- I go to graduate school in Manhattan. School had been canceled because of this, and last night, October 16th, was our first night back. It was the first time that I had driven down the West Side Highway since that day. I've been to the site numerous, numerous times, but I always came in from the east side of Manhattan. This was the first time I went down.

It really shook me up because I remember -- I started getting these flashes of I remember the towers burning and watching them and saying oh, my God, this is where we were when we were saying things like people are going to die, this is going to be terrible.

I can still see these pictures in my mind of them burning. It really shook me up when I went to class. Then they're not there anymore. It's just like this major hole in New York City down there. It was terrible.

So that's pretty much my story. I consider myself very lucky since I was close. I wasn't right underneath it, but I was close enough to actually be knocked down. At this time I'm thankful I was stuck in traffic, because I was driving a chief and we would have been going to the command post. There are numerous chiefs in the Fire Department that are no longer here.

I've heard stories from chiefs and fellow chiefs aides who were right there that really had very close calls. I wonder where we would have been if I hadn't lost five minutes in traffic on the highway.

It was tough. Since I've been in this position, I haven't been on an ambulance since I've been working in the coordinator position, and I'll be in this position for like another month. [redacted]

So that's about it. I'm thankful we're here.

Q. Any final thoughts you want to add?

A. I think it was -- even in the total terror and chaos of the first 45 minutes to an hour, even, prior to the buildings falling, there were just some incredible acts performed by people, not only from EMS, the firefighters, the police officers.

But when the towers came down, the way people came together and just started doing whatever had to be done -- there were people that weren't officers, EMTs and medics, that were stepping up and saying this is what needs to be done. We need to set up something here. Let's just do it. People just talking the initiative on their own. I think it was amazing how it ran.

Unfortunately there weren't a whole lot of people to help, unfortunately. At the first Trade Center in '93, there were a thousand people and we were very stretched. But this time we weren't -- unfortunately there weren't people to help.

But people stepped up. We were just seeing people going above and beyond and people walking around in a dazed look but still doing what had to be done. It was amazing.

In a way I feel fortunate in a way that I was there because I got to see people at their best and do what they're trained to do and do what they're not trained to do and pull it together. That's an experience I'll never forget.

On the other sense, sometimes you hope you weren't there because the horrors that were experienced will never be forgotten. I had a lot of trouble sleeping for the first couple of days, because I was working an incredible number of hours. I really had trouble sleeping. It was rough, but we're going on.

This has to be rough on you over and over.

Q. Yeah, it gets a little rough, a little rough.

A. It was close. I had a doubt at one point when the second tower came down and when we picked this woman up, especially when we were knocked down on the street. I really had some doubts for a few seconds there. It was scary, but we got through it.

It's changed me. I'm in graduate school. I have a little ways to go. I was kind of thinking that I may explore other options, career options. Even just prior to this I was getting a little tired of the EMS field and the job. I've been in this for 15 years with the city now. I was looking, kind of exploring things out there. If the right opportunity presented itself, I probably would have stepped up and taken it.

But right now, even after all this, I feel right now I can't leave right now. There's something that's holding me here. I haven't looked at anything since, but it's just I don't feel like I can leave right now. There's something that has to be -- until that pile's cleaned up and these people are found, I don't think it would be right for me to leave. It may not be the best thing for me to stay, but it wouldn't be right for me to leave. So we're going to hang in and stick it out for a while and take it day by day, see where we're going.

I think that's enough.

MS. BASTEDENBECK: The time is now 12:06.

Neil, I thank you very much for your time. This interview is now concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMS CHIEF FRAN PASCALE

Interview Date: October 17, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MS. BASTEDENBECK: It's October 17th, 2001. The time is 9:45 a.m. My name is Christine Bastedenbeck with the New York City Fire Department. Today we are conducting an interview with the following individual.

CHIEF PASCALE: FRAN PASCALE, division commander of Division 6, EMS operations.

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Also present for the interview --

MR. ECCLESTON: Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department, World Trade Center disaster task force.

Q. Chief, we would just like you to relate to us the events of the morning of September 11th, 2001.

A. Okay. I was in my office, and I was on the telephone. My staff yelled to me from inside of the outer office, indicating that a plane had gone and hit the World Trade Center. They happened to be watching this.

I got up, and I went over to the television. I came back into my office, and I'm not sure if I actually called up citywide or RCC to see if they had any additional information. From there we turned on the radio, and I knew there was quite a few chiefs starting to head down that way.

Right after that we were told another plane hit the World Trade Center. From there I called up citywide, and they had indicated that maybe I'd better go. They hadn't heard from anybody.

What was actually on my mind is one of the things that chief McCracken always stresses, that he didn't want all of the chiefs to respond at one particular incident. Wait to see if somebody calls you, because otherwise all the resources are tied up in one location. So that kind of stuck in my head.

With that I told my staff, "Let's go down into the World Trade Center," especially since citywide hadn't heard from anybody. So I took my staff, and in my head I was already planning that if I go to another sector or part of the division, depending on how they divide up the World Trade Center, I would have a sufficient amount of staff that we wouldn't have to pull from anybody else.

I also told the paramedics to bring their ALS equipment in case we would need them for triage. Most likely we stocked up the car with not only equipment, I had a lieutenant, I had a light duty person. I figured she could do at least recording or tracking, whatever the need would be. The lieutenant certainly could handle a sector, and I had the ALS coordinator, which he could certainly be used as a paramedic. So that was my plan as I was going down there as additional resources.

Ironically we wound up having a lot of traffic, and we were finding it a hard way getting down into the World Trade Center. Anyway, we finally managed to get onto West Street and it started to move, the traffic.

As we got into the area -- and I guess it was somewhere on West Street, 30th or something like that, you could really see the type of disaster that was going on. My initial thought was I wonder what really was happening down there.

As we hit, it was West and Vesey, there was a police officer -- we hadn't even parked the car -- who starts yelling at us, telling us to get out of the way, pull the car and run, the building was coming down. Either he heard a rumbling, whatever. At that moment you could see this big cloud.

We pulled over. It was as we're on Vesey Street we pulled the car to the side. We started to see the debris starting to come down. We really didn't grab any type of equipment. We just figured, well, they know more than we do. We better star running.

At that point --

Q. Would you just indicate on the map where you are with a number 1, where you left the vehicle.

A. It was between -- I think it's called West End and West. So it's on Vesey between West and West End. So it's right in between that block and -- where is it? It's on --

Q. North End?

A. It's probably, yeah, only a few car lengths, figure halfway into Vesey. So maybe midpoint.

Q. Just indicate it with the number 1.

A. I would think that's --

Q. Just an approximation.

A. -- pretty close to it.

We basically got out of the car. We didn't really take anything because by then there was a tremendous amount of debris, and it became engulfed with a black cloud. I did not see where my personnel had ran for cover. It just got very black, very dark. I think probably at that particular moment I was more concerned, thinking of where did they go, because I could not see anything in front of me.

I continued to run up, and I think that's where I ended on West End Street. It was quite a while before I saw anybody. Then all of a sudden as the cloud kind of lightened up a little bit -- I was pretty much covered with the soot and the debris -- I started to see a tremendous amount of ambulances coming my way. That would be actually on West End.

From there what I did is I notified citywide that I had numerous vehicles coming in my direction. At that point I think I was the only voice there because I was standing right on the corner.

What I did is I stopped the vehicles, and by then I saw I think it was Lieutenant Cahill and a few other people that I knew. Some of the ambulances I knew.

So what we decided to do at that moment was to set up a secondary staging. I didn't even know where the original staging was. So we separated the ALS units from the BLS units and make it very easy to identify should they start calling in the units.

I remember seeing Hazollah. I remember seeing some voluntary units. Definitely there were Fire Department units. I did not see any of my peers at that time. I saw a few other lieutenants. I know there was Lieutenant Cahill. I think I may have seen Captain Stone. I'm not sure. Everybody was pretty much running around a little bit.

We were able to set them or at least guide them on both sides, and what we had automatically did with them is make sure that all of their -- they put some type of face mask on because there was really very heavy -- it was dark, but it was clearly up a little bit.

So we got everybody to put face masks on. There were a few patients around. A few people had some minor injuries. We had whatever units were there on site -- whether they were ALS or BLS. We separated them. They were continuing to give some treatment. They actually transported a couple of people from that location.

Q. Where was that staging area?

A. This was all along West End Avenue. Let me just see where -- this is North End. Where they actually came from -- they had to come from the north side behind the Merrill Lynch building. I believe that was the one. That's where I saw all the units coming from. We had a couple stragglers coming up from Vesey, but most of them were coming from that location.

We were doing fine. I hadn't seen still nobody there. All of a sudden we heard I guess a rumbling of some sort. ESU had showed up with their vehicle and stuff and said we have to go before they collapse, get everybody out of the area.

I wasn't sure which way the building was going to fall, so what I did is -- and with some of the EMTs and paramedics that were standing outside with their vehicles, we just told them to get in the vehicles and start moving, just get out of the area.

I ran. I didn't think of taking a vehicle or jumping inside a vehicle. I stood there watching everybody leaving the area. The cloud was worse than actually the first one, I thought. Total darkness, completely darkness, a lot of debris.

I wasn't able to see, and I don't know if it was just the fact that my glasses were so full of soot and everything as well as getting some soot in my eyes. I certainly didn't need anything more. Seeing was difficult enough.

With that, I remember running, and only later on did I realize I was somewhere around the school. Most of the units left. I did not know, actually, at that point where to take cover. There was nobody else with me. I didn't even realize I was in the street until I heard something behind me.

When I looked, turned around, I remember it was one of our vehicles. They were kind of lost. They didn't know where they were traveling, and I just told them keep straight and go very slow, only because we couldn't see anything in front of us. I just reminded this unit -- I think it was the medic unit from Coney Island, and if I saw the fellow, I would know who it was.

So we spoke a couple minutes. I told him to watch whatever's in front of him, because I had no idea if the vehicles had stopped, if there were people just abandoning them, or people were walking in the roadway, like I was walking in the roadway.

If I didn't turn around, he probably could have ran over me. He never saw me, and I never saw him, except he had the lights on and I saw the flashing.

From there I remember a woman coming out of the cloud, and that's the best way of saying. She was coming, up it would have been off Vesey Street. Actually my first initial response was I told her, "What are you doing here? You have to get out of here." I remember her reply, and only then did I realize she had a camera. She turned around and she said, "You don't understand," and she disappeared, just disappeared.

I would not even be able to find out who she was, what she looked like. I know it was a woman. My reaction to her comment was that she must have been media and she wanted to take as much film as she could, because it was a large-size camera, movie camera, that she had. So it wasn't just somebody just walking around with this. She just disappeared.

Then as the cloud cleared up, I was like in a round circle, and I think that is where the school is.

Q. Stuyvesant High School or the college?

A. I think it was Stuyvesant. It goes around. I wasn't too far from there, and that's where I ended up.

I made my way back, and then I started to see other units kind of coming back. I remember speaking to somebody and asking them if they saw any chiefs, anybody around. I think it was CHIEF GOMBO on the air. Somebody had directed me toward the building where there was going to be a triage area.

When I walked in the building, I remember seeing Carrasquillo. There was Gombo there. Who else was there? Lieutenant Cahill was there. I remember seeing Steve Pilla, who is my ALS coordinator, and I couldn't believe that that's where they were, so close but so far away. That was my reaction to them, where were you? I thought something terrible had happened. We didn't know. They didn't have any radios on them.

From what I was told, one group ran in the building and then a couple of my other employees ran into I guess it was a trailer. They all piled up in this trailer. I couldn't even tell you where the trailer was. They said it was close to where I was. I couldn't see a thing.

So I went into the area, and I saw Chief Kowalczyk, I saw CHIEF GOMBO. I asked about Chief McCracken. Nobody had an answer.

They had said they saw Chief Basile around. I wasn't sure who else was down there. I know Chief Goldfarb was down there. I didn't even know that Chief Villani was down there. A lot of people had responded down there. Until much later on I had no idea actually who went down there.

From there CHIEF GOMBO had requested that the chiefs all gather outside of the building, which I'm not sure the street. It was on the corner of that building --

Q. Stuyvesant is up over here somewhere.

A. No, Stuyvesant is where I landed up after trying to beat the cloud, which obviously I didn't. It was on the other side.

Q. The hotel, is that where you came out?

A. No, I don't think it was the hotel. It had a beautiful -- it could have been part of the hotel, come to think of it.

Q. Was it on the water or by the water?

A. Maybe it was Four World Trade Center. It may have been Four World Trade Center. I think they have a large -- I remember taking a look when I got into the building. What do they call it? They had a garden in a dome.

Q. An atrium?

A. The atrium and everything. Then I remember somebody gave me some towels so I could wipe my glasses. Just little things I remember.

I went outside, and then CHIEF GOMBO wanted to basically try to get the sectors and whatever else needed to be done, start some kind of a plan.

I remember Chief Carrasquillo and I -- at first he had indicated that I was going to stay down there, but then he had wanted me to go up to Chelsea Street. He had asked me where my car was, and I told him -- I said, "It's parked, but I couldn't tell you the condition of the car right now."

He had asked me to take somebody with me, preferably a supervisor. I remember asking for Captain Pinkus. He was there, so the first person I saw. He had asked me if there was a way if he could possibly grab some type of vehicle or whatever and get up to Chelsea.

Believe it or not, I guess at that point I had no idea where Chelsea was. I couldn't even think of how far are we from Chelsea. I'm thinking of everything was in such a small area. I would have never thought Chelsea being considerably different, you know, pretty far away. That was off on 17th.

So we looked at each other. We asked where this pier was, and Captain Pinkus and I -- and I couldn't tell you where we grabbed this unit, who this unit was. It was volunteers. We just told them, "We need your vehicle. Take us to Chelsea location."

I don't even know how far you want me to go into this.

Q. Just go a couple hours past.

A. Okay. This particular crew was ironic. They looked at me; I looked at them. They said, "No, we can't take you." I said, "There's not going to be any questions. You're going to take me, and that's the bottom line."

Between the two of us, the way we looked and the captain turned around and said, "You don't realize, this is a chief. Just listen to what she says. Otherwise she's going to take the whole entire vehicle." This poor crew, I couldn't begin to tell you who they were, but I remember they had no stretcher. It was a half-equipped vehicle.

It was so funny, we finally managed to get into West Street again, trying to go up to the West Side Highway. As we were traveling -- it wasn't even West Side Highway. I don't even remember what street we were traveling on. We couldn't get down to the west side. We had to take a detour.

As we were traveling, there was a group of people who actually flagged us down. They said that we had a pedestrian struck. We're looking at each other. We're saying, well, this is good, there's no equipment, no stretcher, no long board, nothing in the vehicle. We better think quickly how we're going to lift up this patient.

Pinkus and I jumped out of the vehicle. The male was actually laying on his stomach. I rolled him over. We opened up his airway. We were able to get a pulse. It turned out that he wasn't actually a pedestrian struck. It was medical-related. Later on I understand that it was cardiac-related.

So we rolled him over. I told the crew -- we did have oxygen. The crew brought oxygen. I attempted to put an OPA in him. He gagged, so that was a good sign for me. There was a couple of us who were able to lift him up, and we were able to put the man on a stretcher. We told the crew take him to the hospital. This was a situation we certainly didn't expect.

From there we jumped out of the vehicle. I'm not sure how far we were. It seemed like we were miles away, because I couldn't even tell you where we were flagged on this. Maybe it was even Broadway. It was a major roadway.

With that we were trying to stop other vehicles, because we had no vehicles. I mean, it was the craziest situation. Any other time you would say, well, I'll grab another command. There was no such thing of grabbing anything. You had to use your common sense.

So with that we went over to -- there was a group of construction workers, and I asked them if we could have a lift from the construction offices. At that point there was no supervisor, and their truck -- we were going to hop in the construction truck. It doesn't make a difference at that point. Their truck was kind of jammed up with all sorts of material. They were actually constructing at a site there.

We ran in the street, and we tried to stop a vehicle. I remember getting very angry at this particular vehicle because it happened to be -- and I'm not sure, but it was definitely either a private contractor or one of their non-911 transport unit.

I remember looking at their name, and I said if I could catch their number, I better not see them again, because they just blew the light. They just kept on going. That really ticked me off, in plain English.

Some of the construction workers came over, and they said, "What could we do?" I said, "Whatever vehicle it looks like you could put two more people on for one stop, and they're going to take us to where we need to go."

Ironically we stopped a vehicle, and I don't even remember the type of vehicle we hopped in, but we got our lift up to Chelsea Street. By then Kowalczyk was already up there. Truthfully just thinking about it, I may not even have seen Chief Kowalczyk at that initial briefing, because he was already up there. He was actually in charge of the Chelsea location. Actually Chief Gombo wanted me to assist Chief Kowalczyk with the staging up there.

I remember us jumping out of the vehicle and we walked over there. We then got word that they wanted Chief Kowalczyk back down to the site. I remember talking to Chief Kowalczyk. [redacted] lot of people reacted differently during different times.

[redacted]

had offered to go back down there at that point. It really didn't make a difference where I was going to be. I stayed in the Chelsea area, and I basically tried to continue what he started. I remember there must have been about 75 vehicles lined up on the West Side Highway. So we were trying to organize that.

With that, I remember two bus loads of doctors jumping out of the vehicles and saying, "We're here to help. We want to go downtown." Basically I didn't want them to go down there. It was dangerous enough to start off with, but I think we needed to -- if we were going to use these medical personnel, we needed to use them the way they should have been, call them in, set them up.

When I saw all these bus loads of doctors, they had just finished a convention. I remember that very clearly. They were at a convention, so the whole entire convention closed down. These were surgical doctors, medical doctors and everything. They had asked, "What can we do in the interim?"

With that I remember Dr. Asada showing up and Dr. Neal Richmond. I had to let them know we had a lot of doctors; what could we do. Also, I wouldn't say this, but to keep them occupied. I just didn't think it was good to get too many people in an area that was really dangerous.

If I would have sent them down there and anything would have happened, I think that would have bothered me. It was bad enough to control your own people that were down there. So we decided that the best thing to do -- and really it was a very good idea, although it wasn't used.

We went into the pier, and I spoke to basically the director of the pier, Pier 36. I could be wrong on the pier number, but I think it was Pier 36.

We got permission to utilize the whole entire pier, and we had a lot of resources which we really would have been very beneficial should the situation turn out other than having so many fatalities as opposed to the wounded.

I remember '93 because I was down at the World Trade Center in '93. We had more injuries as opposed to fatalities. So it was a bit different. We didn't know what was going on as far as fatalities down there.

So what we did is we got permission to open it up, and we set up probably an unbelievable hospital. We set up an area for family members. Should the need arise if the hospitals were inundated, that was going to be an off-site hospital. It would have saved our resources as well as definitely it would have saved the resources from the hospital.

These doctors were very good. Where they got their stuff is beyond me. But if you walked in there -- it took them several hours to set up, but they had every type of surgical, plastic surgeons, medical; you name it, they were there.

We had a meeting with them, and we broke them up into teams. The teams were comprised of their professional -- what they were --

Q. Specialties?

A. Thank you. I couldn't find the word. Their specialty.

Then what we did is we assigned a team leader, and the team leader was either whatever EMT or paramedic we had, anybody who was very familiar with triage, we went over triage with them. They all got their little packet, and with the team leaders we were able to keep track of everybody who was at least in that place. Probably we wound up with 125 doctors and nurses from all the hospitals.

We probably at any given time had 75 to 100 ambulances showing up. We finally got a trailer to have it like a command post and we were able to get that set up. That was all -- initially that was several hours.

From there I think it must have been around -- I don't know -- 4 or 5; it was still very light and everything -- I got a message to report back downtown. They were going to have a meeting. I don't know how I got back downtown, but I was a little bit more resourceful. There were a lot of Fire Department vehicles over there. I think it was a command car. They took me down there.

I was able to get down there. I left Pinkus there. There were a tremendous amount of people. There were people that were constantly showing up over there. We were trying to really manage the unit. They were all over the place.

We had actually asked the police, because we were trying to stop the units from all the areas, as well as our own, just bypassing and heading down to West Street, because everybody wanted to be there. It's understandable, but it wasn't something that really should be. If we needed them, then they go down there. There was accountability of the people.

The only reason I kept this in my head is because when I was traveling down to West Street and after the first building collapsed, I really thought that a lot of chiefs may have been lost. To me it seemed like a very long time before I made any contact with anybody else. That really -- like, who was down there? Did we lose anybody?

Not to jump back and forth, but I remember people saying, "We don't know where this chief is. We may have lost that chief." It was like you didn't know. You really didn't know. So you were really kind of working in a blind there, so to speak.

So I guess when I got up to Chelsea that kind of stuck in my head and really stuck in my head to watch the people, because I lost my own personnel for a brief period of time, and they just ran in different directions. That's it. They just ran in different directions.

If we would have ran up to West Street or if we were there probably -- and this is probably one of our major discussions that my staff and I constantly have since this World Trade Center was if we got there another five minutes earlier, maybe even less, we would have been going to the command post. There's no ifs and buts about it. Maybe not even five minutes. We were right there on the corner. We happened to be in the car.

Not that we joke about it, but maybe in the sense of releasing one's feelings about it, we would say, well, we're glad that it was Neal that did the driving as opposed to somebody else, because we would have gotten there much quicker.

So these are just things to me it's kind of good to talk to the personnel. You sometimes need a little sense of a break or a little -- not that it's a joke or anything like that, but it's kind of a release and it lets everybody think a little bit more and release it out a little bit more, because I think everybody was kind of taken back.

Everybody wants to be very brave and very tough. That's all well and good on the outside, but it's really the inside that you have to worry about.

So anyway, with the request for me to respond back down to the command post, I finally got down there and I remember seeing Chief McCracken. Probably during that whole period of time, "Did anybody see him?" Everybody kept on saying, "We don't know where he is." So when I saw him it was like, wow, you're okay. We kind of hugged each other.

Then I saw Charlie Wells, and I didn't even know the type of personal disaster that he was going through, we were all kind of war-like hugging a little bit and grabbing on each hand and support amongst managers, I guess you would want to say. I remember finally seeing Chief Villani, you start seeing other people.

So we were down there and we were talking, and they wanted to go over another plan to see what was going on and who was going to do what. Already it had to be fairly -- between 5:00. All of a sudden for some reason people started to run again.

I was there, and I remember Chief Fellini looking at me, and he said, "We've got to get out of here real quick." I guess that's when the world whatever came down.

Q. Number seven.

A. Came down. We were standing in the overpass, and I said, to myself, "Boy, these people run awful fast. I'm still here." I remember saying that. Oh, my goodness. I remember Fellini opening up the door, jumping in the car, grabbing onto me and pulling me literally into his car.

I remember another supervisor of mine, which was Lieutenant Haugh, coming up from in front of me, like, and we grabbed him and we told him, "Get in the vehicle." There was one more person in that vehicle, and I think it was Chief Butler.

Chief Butler and Haugh jumped in the back of the vehicle, and myself and Chief Fellini was in the front. He just hopped over his seat. He didn't care, and I just hopped right in there. We closed up the windows and doors.

I said to myself, oh, my God, I don't believe it. It's scary. It wasn't as bad this trip, but it was three times. I said I just hope the fourth doesn't come down. You know what they say, you know -- my husband always says three strikes and you're out.

That cleared at some point, and all of a sudden everybody just kind of walked back. It was the strangest feeling, like where did you just go? They were all jumping. I was just telling them, I can't do all this running. My knees are killing me. You just left me. First my staff ran away from me, and then you guys ran away from me.

It was so funny, and I don't think I thought at that point that we were in a predicament either. I don't know why I didn't think it. But what brought it to my attention is I had seen Chief Fellini the following day in which I was assigned to the operations where Chief Cruthers was there -- I have to really look at that map to see where I really was. It was right by the Manhattan College.

Q. That's Chambers and West.

A. I think it was maybe one block down.

Q. Not exactly at the corner, but that's where.

A. It was somewhere around that area when the other building came down. I remember seeing Chief Fellini because when I was assigned to another job the following day, maybe two other jobs the following day, and there I went to the operations where -- it was the pile; it was ground zero.

I remember Chief Fellini turning around and he said, "You know, for a minute I thought that you all bit the dust." I looked at him, I said, "You know, I never even thought how precarious we were in again." I don't know why. I could not begin to tell you.

I don't know if you could say it was emotional at the time. I can't really tell you. I can only speak for myself to the point that I think it was -- you could not really grasp at first the significance, the catastrophic situation.

It took me a while, I think, and only really until after our first meeting with Chief Gombo did I really think about this as being a terrorist act. I don't know why. Maybe you kind of block it out of your head. I can't really begin to tell you.

I just didn't digest that until they were saying that and somebody was talking about the Pentagon and everything. That just kind of took my breath away, a little bit, I think. God Almighty, this is unbelievable.

Also at that point I did not realize how many people we lost. As I was listening to everyone, it was a devastating feeling, a hollow feeling, I guess, maybe a numb feeling that some of these wonderful chiefs that I got to know -- I just couldn't believe they were not there.

(Pause.)

A. Then I started to hear -- I was very concerned with some of the people when I was told that there was a lot of ambulances, a lot of people injured. I started to hear a couple of my own people -- I lost three vehicles myself. You couldn't help, how did those people get in there so fast. I want to beat them up. I did.

I don't know. They must have been on heavy duty speed mode, because I could not believe -- I mean, here you have what I had heard some of the people were missing. I could not believe somebody from Montefiore could have gotten down there so quickly.

I had heard two of my employees were somewhat injured. They were sent over to New Jersey. We didn't know their status. I knew they weren't critical or anything like that. I knew two more of my employees at that time getting injured.

I guess then the division mode took over, because I wanted to know how many of my people were actually involved. I said, gee, if they can make it from the Bronx, I know my Harlem people must be down there too. These are things that probably go really kind of search your mind a little bit.

Again, a lot of this really -- as you really start talking about the people that were being lost, who was definitely lost really was -- there's really no words for it. There really and truly are no words for it.

I would like to add that he was a great guy. He was the most cordial individual, funny.

He was always happy. It was good, because, you know, when you did the merge and everything you said it's good to have a relationship with these people. It was really very important.

He was a wonderful person to me. And I say that only on the EMS side. I'm sure you have your own wonderful words for him on the fire side. But just to know him of how he was with us was really important.

I could not believe Deputy Commissioner Feehan, I could not. And the Father, I think he was -- Father Judge. My response is how could these people have been in that building at the time. You just could not put it in proper perspective, losing these people. They announce the names, and people are being told that day.

I guess it was just very hard -- you took it in. You just kind of took it in. You walked around very strong, tough, whatever you want to say, because I guess it's the -- through the years what you need to learn, especially when you become any level, you need to be strong for your people. We kind of all earned that one way or the other, so when you go home you're somewhat different.

That was the first day, the day I certainly really would prefer not to remember. But a lot of good people were saved, and we can only be thankful for that. That's the way it goes. Hopefully it never happens again.

Q. Is there anything else you want to add to the events?

A. Prior to --

Q. Prior to the second collapse.

A. It's hard to say -- well, no, it's not hard to say. It was the most disorganized feeling I ever felt. I could say that there was no sense of being organized. It was an impossible thing to be organized. But even though you were tempted at certain points to try to get yourself up and running -- and they talk about we've always learned through the years, EMS, well, I guess we could throw that in the garbage that day. It just didn't work. It just didn't work.

Just the biggest thing is you did not know -- people were just coming in. People were coming in. People coming in. You didn't know where they were coming from. People that did not have uniforms. People you thought were on light duty wound up down there.

You just did not have the control for quite some time. Certainly I don't think it was within the initial 24 hours because so many people just kept on showing up. It was like everything else, people had to be down there. That was something people had to do.

It didn't matter if you were in the Fire Department or EMS, you were a volunteer, PD, whatever, just the strangers we had a tendency to bump into like just going up and down. But probably one of the most memorable --

MS. BASTEDENBECK: This is side two of the interview with Chief FRAN PASCALE.

A. Just a last note, I think probably one of the memorable times that I remember going up and down West Street, if you want to call it going up and down, was probably the people lined up supporting everybody. I think that was so important, and it was for everyone. I think that was really good for our own people. They have a tendency to think they're not appreciated. For whatever reason, they truly feel that.

I remember speaking to the people when I was leaving there to go back to Chelsea. From Chelsea I wanted to go back and pick up the rest of my people. This is late in the evening. I remember just listening to people talk. And these were our units. These are supervisors, not chiefs, supervisors, looking at this and digesting all of this and saying, gee, we are appreciated.

It was really very good at that time to give them support, but the support was coming from civilians. You're not always thanked on the civilian level. These people were showing up with flags, clapping; signs, "We love you." It was so supportive. That went on for the longest time, into the wee hours, every day, every night.

I remember up to only maybe two weeks ago going down West Street and there was still a couple of people standing there, all by themselves, with their signs. Sometimes a lot of good comes out of some times that may be very bad.

This was really very good emotionally for the people who were up there, and that just wasn't our people; it was a lot of different people. PD was up there, doctors were up there. A lot of people were up there. There were firefighters up there.

It was important to give them that boost, that energy, and that's what it was. It gave them that energy to go back down there and do something that nobody really ever thought they would have to do and dig out their own and try to find people alive. That helped people. It gave them that energy to do it, because they knew whatever the end result was they were going to be appreciated. That was even the first night.

So I kind of remembered that, and when I went home I told my husband, "You just won't believe it. People just came out." I don't know where people came from. The west side is not that populated. They did.

That was really very important, and it was very important emotionally for a lot of people who saw it and for people who were going down to the hot area, as they traveled the west side, was the biggest roadway that everybody used to get down to the site.

So it was everybody going down there who I think felt the importance of their job and that people appreciated what they were doing. How bad it was, they appreciated you no matter what.

That was just one thing I wanted to add, how the public I think boosted up morale.

That's about it.

Q. Thank you very much, Chief.

A. You're welcome.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

PARAMEDIC LOUIS COOK

Interview Date: October 17, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Today is October 17th, 2001. The time now is 721 hours a.m. my name is Christine Bastedenbeck. I work for the New York City Fire Department. This morning I'm doing an interview with --

PARAMEDIC COOK: Paramedic Louis Cook, Division 2, ALS coordinator.

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Also present for this interview is --

MR. ECCLESTON: Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department, World Trade Center task force.

Q. Louie, we'd just like to ask you to give us your account of the morning of September 11th, 2001.

A. That day I started my tour at 6 a.m. I was in my office with Chief Basile, when he came out and announced that a plane had struck the World Trade Center. He got this information over his beeper. We all kind of just shrugged our shoulders and thought very little of it. Put on the news, the TV, to see whatever news station was on and saw the north tower burning.

We looked at each other and decided that since this looks like it was going to be a big job, we loaded up our equipment into the car and we started responding to the location.

We went through Queens into Manhattan and down the FDR Drive to the World Trade Center. We parked the vehicle somewhere around West Street, I'm thinking between Albany and Cedar.

Q. Can you just mark that with a number 1 on the map?

A. Sure. I'm pretty sure it was like right around there where we had parked the car.

I do remember seeing Chief Carrasquillo with his aide in front of us parking. I remember seeing Chief Hirth and his aide, and I remember seeing Roger Moore of operations there. They were in the car together.

Q. When you responded with Chief Basile, who else was with you?

A. Just the chief and I. We were alone.

We parked the car, geared up, took our equipment and started towards what was the -- from what I understand to be the initial interagency command post. It was across the street on West Street in front of I believe -- it was like between one and two number World Trade, give or take. You had a very good view of number one. We saw number two and number three, actually.

We walked up West Street northbound to get to the command post, and there I remember looking to my right and seeing an aircraft landing gear tire. I remember we were walking up, we were zigzagging through bodies and body parts. I just remember the smell of it being like a butcher shop with all the bodies around. I remember smelling that distinctly.

I remember Basile turning around, looking at me, and just telling me, "Louis, don't look around. Just let's get to where we've got to go."

So we got to the command post, and I saw Chief Kowalczyk, who was -- I believe he was the major response chief for the evening, and some other EMS chiefs. I don't recall who was there. I can't remember the faces right now. I do remember him distinctly telling -- stating to us before we even got within ten feet of the command post and saying, "Jimmy take tower one."

So we just immediately turned around and started walking across West Street to tower one. I remember a lot of debris falling from the southwest side, a lot of fire coming down, a lot of parts, a lot of debris and some bodies, some body parts.

We went into the lobby to establish a forward command in the lobby command post. I remember running into Chief Pfeifer, the 1st Battalion chief from the Fire Department. I remember seeing him. We got to the command post, and we started to formulate matching plans. It was another fire chief, a deputy. There was a Port Authority police officer of higher rank in a white shirt, a sergeant. There was a New York City police officer there, I believe a sergeant. We all decided what was going to happen.

Chief Basile asked me to find another egress out of number One World Trade Center. He wanted me to find a safe way if I could get civilians out and aided out if there was a way, even if it was covered, would be perfect.

I went to the Port Authority sergeant and I asked him -- I needed a cop who was familiar with number one. He tapped some cop and told him, "Go with him and take him where he needs to go."

I was going around in the lobby, and I was making a circle of the lobby. I wanted to see exactly what entrances and egresses were in the lobby area. I was going to go up to the mezzanine, and at some point I saw another elevated portion of stairs that went up to a landing and looked like it went over West Street.

I asked the police officer where does this go, and he told me this was the north bridge to World Financial Center. It's covered and it goes over West Street, comes out to number one, and you can get out through number one to Vesey Street. That's this north bridge right here, pedestrian bridge.

Thinking that since this was covered and away from the side where debris was falling, I figured it best I should investigate this being a safer area to get people out of. It just seemed like a good idea at the time.

I made it up onto the -- I guess you call it the concourse level, the mezzanine level, and onto the foot bridge when I started to hear -- I thought I heard an explosion of some sort, but I kind of dismissed it. I figured, ah, it's just something burning upstairs. I really didn't think of what was going on.

Okay. I start going across this pedestrian bridge. I'm the only one on this bridge. I'm walking across it, and then I just remember feeling a rumble and hearing this rumbling sound that was really intense. It actually shook my bones.

I turned around to look for the cop, and the cop was gone. I don't know where the hell he went. I didn't know which way to go. I knew number one was on fire. I didn't know which way to go because I thought now the facade or something from number one was coming down, feeling that this rumble was going on.

So I ran. I started to run across the pedestrian bridge, and I got about halfway there when a lot of major debris was hitting the ground, really hitting the ground. You can feel it -- it shook your bones, the things hitting the ground, the rumbling. It was extremely loud.

I remember everything went black. All the windows -- because there are windows on both sides of this walkway -- started to implode in on me, and ceiling tiles -- they had beautiful ceiling tiles in this thing. I think they were mosaics whatever. They just started falling on top of me.

I made it to about halfway, and I couldn't run anymore because of all of this stuff hitting. I decided just to lay against the column and just hold on, because there was nowhere else to go.

It was black. I had some stuff coming in the window, some debris coming in the window on me, and I just waited there until it all stopped, which it felt like forever. Once it all stopped, you couldn't breathe because all the dust. There was just an incredible amount of dust and smoke. It seemed to linger. It didn't seem to settle. It just stayed that way.

When the rumbling stopped, I got up, got out from all the junk, and I started walking -- I kept going across the bridge. I couldn't see, so I hugged the wall that I was next to and I just kept walking and I just kept my hand on the wall so I knew where I was. I was trying to feel in front of me to make sure nothing was going to be collapsing and there were no holes or voids to fall in.

I kept going straight. I got to the end where World Financial Center is, and everything was locked. The windows were still intact. The doors -- the security bolts were intact. So it was locked. I was kind of trapped in there.

I turned around. I can start seeing a little bit now. I decided, well, I could see a little bit down the hall and I'm going to have to go back now because I can't go out this way. I have nothing to break these windows out with.

As I went, I came across this painter's stuff, a cart and it looks like they were setting up to do some paint work or something. I found some painter's rags. I put the rag to my face. They had a jug like a gallon jug of water. I picked that up. I hosed my face off, and I gargled and spit. I took the jug with me, and I started walking back down.

Really I had nowhere to go. I got back to number one, where I met Chief Pfeifer and his aide. I remember that distinctly, because I know Chief Pfeifer's brother. They look very similar.

Q. At this time did you know where Chief Basile was?

A. No. I was totally away from him. My radio was the fire portable, and for a while it was quiet and then there was a lot of transmissions of maydays. I didn't want to come up on a mayday because I didn't feel I was trapped. I didn't want to interfere with somebody else getting rescued, so I didn't want to come up on the radio.

I didn't know where he was. I had no idea what had gone on. I just knew some -- there was a structural collapse of some sort. I had no idea of what was down, where it was.

I got probably halfway back again to where I originally had to stop, give or take -- I don't know, back between the two. I caught Chief Pfeifer and his aide. I gave him the jug of water, his aide, because he was covered in white powder. He wiped and gargled and rinsed off his face.

I think I asked Chief Pfeifer what happened to the command post, where is everybody, and he didn't have an answer. So I turned around and I just tagged on with him because for no other reason than there's safety in numbers, I guess.

We turned around, went back to World Financial. I think the aide had some kind of tool with him. He either had a Halligan or he had an officer's tool or something, and he broke the window out of one of the doors. We got into the lobby.

On the side of the lobby, there were two escape stairs that had a panic button door at the bottom. The dust was really heavy in there because it was below us and it was more concentrated than was up by us.

So he broke it out, and I didn't know where else to go so we went out underneath the pedestrian bridge where you could see number two had been totally down. You could just see it. You walked out into this sea of paper and debris and dust that was like to me -- I'm a short guy.

It was almost up to my knees. I was kicking this stuff. I just remember looking and seeing number two and, holy shit, look at this. I had no idea why number two collapsed.

I asked Chief Pfeifer, "Do you know what happened to the command post?" He looked at me. He got up on his radio. I guess there was another fire command post set up. He reported in his position, and he reported he was with me. He didn't know how to report me. He said, "Who are you?" I said, "I'm 62 alpha," and he reported that to the fire command post over his radio.

I don't know where he went. We stood up, because I started heading into number one back across West Street. It was like all this debris and all this stuff. I really had to reorient myself now because I kind of knew where I was but I couldn't tell where I was because nothing looked really the same. Geographically I had an idea where I was, but nothing looked right.

So I waited a little while. I was making my way into number one again, and there was a problem getting into number one where we went through, because debris had come down across that side.

I remember seeing two civilians on an EMS stretcher and some EMS equipment. The guy ran up and looked at me and said, "Where do you want me to put this stuff?" I looked at him. I'm like, "Right here. There's nothing to do with this." The guy was like, "Oh, I don't know what to do." I was like, "There's nothing to do. Just don't go in the collapse zone. Just go back that way." I pointed him north up West Street.

They were out of masks. They couldn't find masks. They were rifling in the tech bag. So I gave them my shears and cut the stretcher sheet for masks and then they took off.

I made it to one. I couldn't get back into one. I started and went around number one, because I didn't know which way to get in now. I went towards the collapse zone, because I figured, seeing what it was and even though it was down -- this sounds off the wall. I would try to find another way to get into one to get to Basile. I'm not going to raise him on this radio because he has EMS portable, I have the fire portable.

I'm trying to get in, I'm trying to get back, and people are running up to me. They see the blue shirt. They're looking for direction, EMTs, guys I never saw before. They wanted direction. My response to them was not to go into the collapse zone. I told everybody that I encountered. They're running up with all kinds of equipment and junk and SAEDs.

Go back to Vesey and West and wait on orders. Don't go into the collapse zone. I don't know what's going on over there. Just wait there so I know where you are. We'll get everybody there. These guys just -- I don't know where they went after that.

I was trying to get back into one. I'm somewhere in between one and two, and I start feeling that rumble again, start hearing the noise. I didn't look up. I figured I've been through this once. I know what's coming now.

I started running north on West Street. Stuff just kept hitting it seemed like right behind me. I got to past where I was. Somewhere along I passed one of the tactical trucks from the fire side, tac 1 or 2. I remember seeing a guys shoes there. I kept running past everything. I remember not seeing a lot of people. It felt like I was alone.

I was running, and stuff was coming down. This time fire was coming down, because I could feel the heat. I grabbed a firefighter's turnout coat that just seemed to be in front of me. I grabbed it. I threw it over my shoulders. I didn't make it much further than that. I ended up diving down next to some kind of truck. I think it was an ambulance, a van ambulance, of somebody's.

I just waited there. I just covered up. This stuff was really hitting the ground. The heavy stuff was really hitting the ground. It was somewhere -- it was shy of Vesey. It really wasn't very far. I didn't make it to the corner. I just waited there for everything to stop. It was really hot, because this time there was fire. I know that because my neck burned. I was just waiting.

I just laid there. I didn't hear anybody else. I didn't hear anything else. I just laid there and tried to figure out where the hell I was going to go. I thought I was going to die. Once everything stopped and kind of settled, it was quiet.

I knew I was facing Vesey Street, and I didn't know which way to go. I just stayed there. I couldn't breathe. I'm breathing in my shirt. I didn't know where to go. I start -- laying there, I'm not dead. It's all quiet. So I figured, all right, now you've got to find a way out of here because you're going to suffocate.

So I start crawling -- because I can't see, I start crawling and doing one of these, sweeps in front of me so I don't hit anything. Somebody yells, "Is there anybody out there?" I was like, "Yeah. It's Cook." I yelled out, "It's Paramedic Cook." The response was, "Yeah, this is Chief" -- McCarthy or McNally. I want to say McNally. McCarthy.

So I yelled, "Just keep yelling. I'll find you." He started just calling back and forth his name. I remember crawling up to him, and I think I grabbed his arm. I grabbed him by the arm. He reached out and grabbed me. We latched onto each other's arms. We were crawling, and we stood up.

He said to me, "All right. As long as we make it to the water, we'll be all right." I was like, okay. I had an idea where the water is. You still can't see it because it's dark as a mother. You can't breathe. It's so heavy with smoke and dust and ash.

I can't breathe. I have, for lack of a better term, dust impaction in my ears, in my nose. I was coughing it out of my mouth. It felt like I had a baseball in my mouth. I was just picking it out with my fingers.

I get up. We start going. We make it to about -- on Vesey Street. I'm looking at the map now, and I see number Three World Financial, the American Express. We got past there. On the north side of the street there's a bunch of shops. Here I just kind of fell across the wall where it was clear out and waited.

Somebody ran up -- I don't know. Somebody had water, pitchers of water. They came up. They splashed us with it in the face. I remember coughing. He was coughing. I remember it was so bad I was coughing, I threw up everything out of my throat.

I got up, and I didn't see anybody I knew. I went back towards the collapse zone, past the AMEX building. There were a bunch of EMS people there. I remember they were all standing there with their helmets on: our guys, Lenox Hill guys, a bunch of other people. They were setting up some kind of triage area.

I remember a crew was loading up a stretcher with equipment. I walked up to them to find out who they were, where they were going. They looked at me, and they were going to start to treat me as a patient. I'm like, "Listen, don't bother with me. I'm ambulatory and fine. There's nothing you can do for me."

The guys are all gearing up. They're loading these stretchers up with everything, with life-packs, some SAEDs, suction units, and they started marching into the collapse zone. I had to grab one guy. The kid was brand-new. Everything was brand-new.

I said, "Are you out of your mind?

Stay right here. Don't go into that fucking collapse zone. You don't know what's going on. I know we've lost a building. I don't know what's going on. I know there's fire over there. It's real dangerous. You cannot go there. Stay here."

One of the guys turned around and said to me -- he was a medic. He knew my name. I think it was Raoul Perez. He said to me, "Louie, you don't understand. We've got to go in there. Our people are dying in there." I turned around, and I remember saying to him, "You're out of your fucking mind. Everyone's dead who was over there. It's unsafe. I don't know where to send you guys or what to do for you guys. Don't go there."

They all just kind of blew me off and said they were formulating a plan. So I told them, "If you're going to send somebody, two guys go with a tech bag and that's it. One guy stand by the corner to watch them and you guys stay here. Don't go past the line of sight. If you're going to go and just go forward to see if there's anybody immediately right there."

They all kind of thought that was a better idea, and they left it at that. I left Raoul, who seemed to be taking kind of charge, one of the medics.

I went back to the collapse looking for Basile. I thought he was dead, because I didn't know where he was and he didn't come up on the radio. I tried to find him. I went back towards number one. There's nothing left of number one. There was nothing left of number two. I didn't see anybody else I knew.

I got back to one. I just looked at -- I just remember looking at both of them, and I thought -- I saw how bad it was and I was like, there's no way they got out of that frigging collapse. There's no way they get out.

So I walked out and tried to see if there's anything standing that I could get into to see if I could find him. There's nobody there. I came back around to find those guys, the medics and the EMTs that I left.

I ran into Mark Stone. Mark looked at me. I didn't know what to do for myself. He came over and gave me a big hug. He started calling somebody, I think. He started washing my face off again.

Then I saw Richie Zarillo, the guy who's (inaudible). He looked at me and as he's walked around of the building and he had his helmet on and he looked at me and -- I don't know what he saw, but his face dropped. I just remember seeing his eyes light up and his jaw fall when he saw me. He's like oh, my God. He was like totally, unbelievably upset. He was like, "Are you all right, what happened, oh, my God."

Then he asked about Basile. I said I don't know. I don't know where the hell he is. He was in one, we got separated, I went back, I can't find a way to get to him. He was like, "All right. Just stay here." He gave me a bottle of water or some shit, something in his pocket. I just remember rinsing my mouth and spitting and just living with that for a few minutes, sitting against the wall.

I remember seeing -- at that point I think I saw Sal Sangeniti, Pete Carrasquillo's aide now. He was leaning against the wall, and [redacted] I said, "Are you all right?" He's like, "Well, I just ran my ass off and whatever."

He said to me -- he looked at me -- "(Inaudible) and I'm having some chest pains." So I'm thinking to myself, oh, great, this guy's going to have an MI here, fuck. I said, "Sal, what do you want? Come on? I started telling him. Come on. We'll get you help. We'll get you taken care of." He said, "No, just leave me alone." He's like, "It will pass. I just want to be left alone."

So I just stayed with him for a while and didn't say anything. I don't remember talking about anything. We just kind of stood there and looked. [redacted]

He said something funny about leaving to be something ridiculous like, I don't know, opening a deli or something silly. I kind of chuckled at that.

Q. I can picture Sal. I can picture him so vividly.

A. I had to chuckle at that, because I'm like you know, you're right.

Richie turned around. He stayed with me. He won't let me alone. He won't leave me go. He's standing next to me. Mark Stone I think went off, because I remember saying the MERV is close by because I thought I heard the generator, but I'm not sure.

I remember a few minutes later Richie's face -- he turned around and looked at me and he said, "Oh, there you are." I turned around. It was Basile. We hugged each other. I was grateful that he was there. He looked at me and wanted to know if I was all right. He hugged me. He said, "I thought you were dead." I told him, "I thought you were dead too." After that we didn't say much more.

We kind of got back to work. We brushed ourselves off, went into this hotel up on North End Avenue. There was a triage set-up going on up there. There were people getting triaged and treated, things going on. EMS chiefs started to filter in. I remember seeing Gombo. I remember seeing Pascale. I remember seeing Pete Carrasquillo. I was happy to see Pete.

I remember washing myself off in this decorative fountain in the lobby. I was very, I guess, from fiberglass or whatever because I wasn't char burned; I was red. So I just washed myself off, dunked my face and my head.

We went into this conference room or towards the conference room, and we stopped in the hall. We had to formulate a plan what to do. I just remember the discussion. I know probably it wasn't my place, but I don't care. I threw in my two cents with things that were being said.

The idea that I thought was very good was creating two casualty collection points and not doing anything at the site, because there's really nothing for our people to do right in the pit. They're not trained to handle this, let them stay on the periphery and let's have some outer collection sites for people.

So Basile gets told by Gombo to set up at the south ferry, and we just kind of take our stuff and we started walking out of the hotel and we start walking from North End Avenue. We looked. From where we are you can kind of see the pit and you can see the debris and everything going on.

He looked at me and said, "Louis, there's no way we're going to make it to the south ferry from here walking. It's going to be a while." So I said to him, "Well, we'll have to find us some alternate transportation." We were outside this harbor here, the North Cove.

I looked down, and there's these large vessels, these sight-seeing boats. There's a guy up on one of them, a deckhand of some sort, and he's cleaning the dust off one boat. I look at him. Basile doesn't know what I'm up to. I go down the finger planks of the dock, and I whistle up at him and I yell at him. He turned around and looks at me. I said, "Your boat and motor work now?" He looked at me and he said, "Yeah." I said, "Let's go."

He came down and he took us down another dock, and he put us on a boat, on a rigid hull inflatable, one of those Coast Guard type boats, about a 20 footer. He cranks it up. We told him, we have to go to the south ferry, and we have to get there now. So the guy just fires up the boat, and we go.

We make it out into the Hudson, and we're going down the Hudson River. We're looking back, and all we see is this big cloud of smoke and dust. We're just like in shock, how could this happen. We couldn't believe what happened.

I'm at the bow of the boat, and the chief is sitting at the console where the pilot is piloting the boat. I looked up -- I don't know what made me look at this, but I thought it was funny because one of the pontoons in the back of the boat was flat. Something must have hit it and flattened it.

I looked at it and I laughed. I said "Oh, great. We survived all this and now we're going to drown." He looked at me, and Basile's face lit up. He smiled and he's like, "You know, you're a pisser, Louis. You just do the funniest shit."

So we make it to the south ferry, and the boat dies. They get me up to the ladder to climb up onto the dock, and I tell the chief,

"Just stay. I'll get your dock line. Don't worry about it." The boat dies, and they start drifting out into the harbor.

I pick up all these life savers that they have laying on the dock with some line. I throw it to him and of course the line gets all tangled. So I just let it go. They were laughing because I was cursing. A Coast Guard boat comes by and I start waving at him, and they're waving at me like I'm saying hello. Schmucks.

So they get the hint that the boat is adrift. They come back in. The guy -- the prop was fouled on the boat. So he cleared it to get the boat started, brings it back up to the dock, and Basile climbs up the ladder, which is funny to see a guy his size climbing up the ladder.

We just went to work and set up the south ferry. We got there, and there were off-duty EMS people doing some election detail stuff, I remember because they were wearing election shirts. We got there --

Q. Do you remember who any of them were, Louis?

A. Okay, I want to say, yeah, Joan Hill Gardner. I know she was one. I think Bill Haigney was another. For the life of me, I can't remember. But they kept coming in.

(Interruption.)

A. We were in this place. The Coast Guard was there. They were assigned to the station at the terminal. I remember seeing a lot of EMS people coming in. The ferry was coming back and forth. They stopped it on the Staten Island side. I remember speaking with the dock master to hold the ferry for the moment.

Then MEU showed up with a truck, and it was Richie (inaudible). We started setting up the folding cots and started setting up all kinds of equipment, like we do in MASH tents. It was just a lot of activity going on.

I grabbed a Coast Guardsman. The petty officer and I grabbed him and said, "Where's the commander of the station?" He said, "I'll get him for you." He got the commander of the station. He came over. We introduced ourselves. I told him what we were doing.

I told him I needed to know if they were armed. He was like, "Why?" I said, "We're going to need armed guards in front of this place because I don't know what's going to happen. I don't know if we're going to be -- if there's a potential for us being attacked or not or anything's going to happen. I need armed guards."

He looked at me and he said, "This is an unarmed station. I can recall a patrol boat that's armed, but I don't have guys with guns." I was like all right. I asked him if they were trained as EMTs, and he said half the guys at this assignment were EMTs.

So I told him I wanted to choke off the ferry terminal and have people who want to seek treatment to come into a choke point to come upstairs in the ferry terminal, be triaged, treated and we'll get them out. I don't want just civilians wandering in, uninjured.

He agreed with me. He put his people into action. We had the ferry still out. I asked him, "Is there any way we can get in touch with the ferry? I need to have the ferry on our frequency all together. I need to have them."

He said, "What do you need that for?" I said, "If we have to move all our patients, I'm taking them over to Staten Island. I will bring the resources from Staten Island with the ferry. At the very least if we have a lot of fatalities, we'll send them over there too."

He's said, okay. He said, "Let me get the dock master." He got the dock master. He got the dock master's extra radio, and we started listening up and we started communicating with each other. They brought the ferry back, which had people from Staten Island University Hospital or one of those hospitals over there. There were nurses, physicians, EMTs, firefighters off duty, cops off duty, because they were coming like with half uniform, half equipment and stuff.

Some of the firemen stopped who were CFRD and said if they weren't needed here they were going to go over to the collapse. We kind of pointed them the way to the collapse.

We had some units show up. I remember seeing two paramedics from here, Kevin Kelleher and Felix Marquez. They showed up.

Basically we just waited for patients, and we really didn't get any. I remember at some point Dr. Cherson came. I remember seeing Manny Delgado. I remember seeing at some point Jerry Bacchus. I remember seeing Phil Ashby. At some point McCracken and Cronin showed up.

I remember McCracken was getting an abuterol treatment. Basile was needling him. That was pretty amazing. He kind of zinged him a little bit. It was funny.

I remember seeing Roger Ahee. I can't for the life of me now figure out who else I saw. I know I saw volunteers showing up and volunteer ambulances.

I started seeing the exodus of civilians. It was funny. I say exodus because when we were coming down in the boat around the horn of Manhattan, I remember seeing boats coming in, all these boats, tugboats. Every boat imaginable in the harbor was coming in at a full clip. I remember them hitting the sea walls.

Wherever they could stop and take people on, they were taking them. I just remember seeing that. I remember tugboats just coming right to the wall with deck hands and just pulling people. You could see some people bleeding, some people were injured. Some people were like totally lost. Wall Streeters with like half their clothes and no briefcase and stuff. I remember seeing stuff like that. They were just getting on the boats and going. I remember seeing that.

I remember seeing tugboats and I remember seeing fire boats coming in. I remember seeing one of the harbor boats, the cops, loaded with cops. It was just amazing to see these guys coming by boat. People were just leaving on boats.

The civilians would come to the ferry, and they were all -- some of them were injured; some of them were not injured. Those that were injured just kind of came up, got wrapped up, got irrigated, whatever, went home. The ferry came back, and they held it for a while.

Then since we weren't getting any patients, we cut it free. We said, all right, if you feel it's secure enough, take the people who want to go to Staten Island across. They started their route back and forth again, but they understood we would call them immediately if we needed them.

I remember one trip coming back from the ferry, because I took over the dock master's office as a command post. I remember Billy Olsen coming over on the ferry. He said he had a skating rink on the other side set up and iced over for a morgue. He set that up. I didn't know what to say about that. I just let it go. There was nothing I could tell him.

That was it. We stayed there the day, saw next to nobody as far as patient volume, then we -- sometime during the day -- I'm assuming it was the latter part of the afternoon, I saw Mark Steffens. He finally came up, and he was a wreck. He gave me a big hug. He was glad to see me, and actually I was glad to see him. I didn't know where he was. He told me his story. He was really shaking, I remember.

We got a message we had to go to Chambers and West, there's an interagency meeting happening immediately. So we had to find a way back to get Basile's car, if it was even there. I don't know how the hell we got there. I don't even know how we got -- I don't think we walked back, but I don't know how we got back to Basile's car, to get his car. I don't know. I don't know how we got from one place to the other.

We were walking up West Street, because we came south -- yeah, it was just a couple blocks away. We went through Whitehall Street. We came south again from the towers. We tried to find the car. It was amazing to see just what was all over the place. Buildings burning without any fire suppression or anything going on.

It was amazing. It was just chaos, just junk and cars crushed. The bodies that I remembered seeing on West Street when we were going up to the command post originally were just kind of like covered up. They were all covered. I remember just thinking where all the bodies are. I'm walking around now and I can't see them.

We found Bobby Brown's car, which was Billy Day's burned. Billy's probably pissed. Nose smashed in pretty well. I crawled and popped the trunk lid and took his bag and left everything else, personal effects, there.

We just tried to find our car. We found it eventually. It took us a while because everything just didn't resemble what it was. We found it. It was covered in dust and soot. Without exaggerating, a foot and a half of dust on the car. You just couldn't tell whose car was whose. The only way we found it was he said, "I'll try this one," and he stuck the key in there and the cylinder turned. It was ours.

We brushed off the debris and the dust.

(Interruption.)

MS. BASTEDENBECK: We're continuing the interview with Paramedic Louis Cook.

A. We went back around to the south ferry. We picked up Mark Steffens. I was in the car with Chief Basile. I have no idea who else was in the car. I know the car was packed because we were shoulder to shoulder. I can't remember who else was in the car.

So we dropped off some stuff, started up the FDR Drive, got off -- actually the service road of the FDR Drive. We came around by 1 Truck by South Street and I can't think of the cross street, like Beaver or something. We started weaving our way through the streets because we just had no idea where we could get around.

We finally made it up to Chambers and Greenwich. We went up to Chambers and Greenwich through this mess. Driving through this was like nuclear winter with all the dust and everything else. We got to Chambers and Greenwich, and the chief turns around and says, "There's number Seven World Trade. That's the OEM bunker." We had a snicker about that. We looked over, and it's engulfed in flames and starting to collapse.

We're kind of caught in traffic and people and things, and everything's going on. We hear over the fire portable, "Everybody evacuate the site. It's going to collapse." Mark Steffens starts yelling, "Get out of here! Get out of here! Get out of here! We've got to go! We've got to go! It's going to collapse."

I turned around, and I piped up real loud and said, "Stay in the frigging car. Roll the windows up. It's pancake collapsing. We'll be find. The debris will quit and the cloud will come through. Just stay in the car." We pulled the car over, turned around and just watched it pancake. We had a dust cloud but nothing like it was before.

We ended up, up the street at the command post, and it was a sea of people. For the life of me, I can't tell you who was there. I just don't know. Everyone was chattering and talking about this and about that. No one really had any stories. It was just like business. I just remember that.

He looked at me after the meeting at the interagency meeting. I remember seeing Ron Pfeffer at the command board doing tracking, doing tracking and stuff. I spoke to him for a moment.

That was it. They sent us home later that night from the command post, and we came back the very next morning very early back at the World Trade Center. I came here. I don't remember if Basile picked me up or I took the car. I remember we met up down there. We were there together. I don't remember from there. We stayed for days doing our job.

That's pretty much it. That's pretty much it.

Q. Is there anything else you would like to add to the events prior to 11:00 that morning?

A. There was just so much going on. I speak about it and then something else will pop in my head, things that I can remember.

After the collapse I just had a disturbed feeling that I knew we lost people, a lot of people, EMS people. I started thinking about that and I thought about all my friends that I've known for years.

I started thinking, well, where's my sister, because my sister's a cop. I'm like, great, I don't know where she is, I don't know where anybody is, I don't know what's going on.

It was very, very disturbing. I have no bravado. I've seen plane crashes and all the jobs and stuff. I've never quite seen some of the things there that seem to overwhelm my thoughts.

I don't know what else to say I don't know what else to say. I feel like I haven't really contributed much. It's just a lot, I guess, a lot of that going on. I really can't think of a lot else.

I don't remember seeing -- I remember seeing some fire officers and I remember seeing Fire Patrol, the guys with the red helmets. It's sad that we lost all those guys. Basile I think at one point said --

(Interruption.)

A. I can't recall anything else. I know Chief Fanning was with us or Chief Galvin was with us at some point at the command post. Actually that's what Chief Basile told me.

That was it. I just really can't remember much. Everything seems like a blur. I get these moments where I remember something. That's about it. I can't really add. I wish I had more information for you.

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Okay. This concludes our interview with Paramedic Louis Cook. The time now is 816 a.m.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

PARAMEDIC STEVEN PILLA

Interview Date: October 17, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. ECCLESTON: Today's date is October 17th, 2001. The time is 11:27. My name is Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name, title and assigned command of the New York City Fire Department in regards to the events of September 11, 2001.

PARAMEDIC PILLA: My name is STEVEn Pilla. I'm one of the ALS coordinators for Division 6 EMS.

Q. STEVE, were you assigned to the World Trade Center disaster on September 11th, 2001?

A. Yes.

Q. Could you please tell me in your own words about the events surrounding that day?

A. Well, let's see, in the morning I got to work like usual. I heard that there was an explosion -- I heard the radio on citywide in the office. So we heard the lieutenant on the scene screaming that he needs every available ambulance.

It was very interesting because I was at that explosion in '93. I was on the street at that point. I remember when they sent us down there, we turned to citywide. It was a very similar conversation from that lieutenant: Give me everything you've got here. Smoke coming out of the world -- I thought that it was a tape on. They said no, there was an explosion. We turned the TV on. Sure enough, the tower was on fire.

As we're watching the TV, we saw the second plane hit. I'm like, is that another plane that hit? Like God, one could be, two is no longer an accident. The chief rounded us all up, and we started heading down.

Q. Which chief?

A. Chief Pascale.

We took the Henry Hudson Parkway.

Q. Can you just tell me the other personnel that you were with?

A. It was myself; Neil Sweeney, who is vacation relief right now for the other coordinator who is out on refresher; Amedegnato, who is one of the chief's aides here, EMT; Lieutenant Cahill, who was the officer in charge in the division; and Chief Pascale herself.

All five of us got into the car with some equipment and took off down there. We got to the Henry Hudson from Jacobi. We hit a lot of traffic. It was at that point I think they already realized that this was some sort of attack. After getting through barricades and then smooth sailing, to find more barricades. We kept getting delayed getting down there.

We finally get to the end of the West Side Highway. As we turned, we could see both towers on fire. This brought back from '93 when I got there all the smoke coming out, glass breaking and stuff. I had no idea what we were going to face.

As soon as we got there, we just passed one of the walkway bridges just past Stuyvesant High School. There's a walkway bridge. We just passed that, got to Vesey. The chief was saying we have to find the chief, find the command center at West and Vesey.

We see this plume, come down in front of us. Originally I thought basically it was the facade of the building that came down. We made a quick right. I looked behind me. Neil was driving, I wasn't; I was in the back. I looked behind me. I could see this plume of shit just chasing us. They're looking for a place to park, and I'm going, "Keep going. Keep going. Don't stop." It finally overtook us to the point we couldn't see where we were driving.

We parked the car, and then we got out, got our helmets. We were getting ash and stuff coming onto us, this dark plume. One of the firemen who now works as a medic for one of the private hospitals, he comes out and sees me.

Q. Do you know his name?

A. I'll give it to you later as soon as I --

Q. Okay.

A. He comes out and he goes, "STEVE." I said, "What?" He couldn't find his partner. I'm looking to him and saying to myself, you can't find him? I'm thinking the worst. Then someone else was coming out of the plume. The lieutenant and Neil went to get them and came out.

Then we all had to leave because it was getting darker and darker and stuff was getting bigger and bigger. So we all took off I find out in different directions. We couldn't find anybody for a while.

We found an ambulance and got some paper masks to wear for the ash. But it was really dark, like nighttime, just waiting until this stuff goes over. I remember after the darkness went away I could see the sun coming through the sky. I guess the building was no longer blocking the sun.

We walked around. I believe now it was close to water. It was towards the American Express building, I'd say, or Merrill Lynch, one of these buildings.

Q. Okay.

A. The ambulances started coming around from the side. They just filled with all the debris from the tower. The MERV took off with its doors open, the steps on it, bouncing down the street. I was like, hmm, this is not a good thing.

We managed to set up some triage, get ALS up. Then we found the chief, found the lieutenant, found Amedegnato and Neil and tried to get the ambulances together, around the corner, staged. I remember on one ambulance there was an hysterical EMT in the back that couldn't find her partner.

Q. Do you remember who that was?

A. I don't know who she was. She was looking for her partner Patrick.

Q. Do you know Patrick who?

A. Sorry.

Q. Okay. That's fine.

A. So how she's looking for her partner. She wanted to go back. I told her -- someone was with her. I said, "You've got to hold her here. Hold her. Don't let her go back." Obviously we had a big disaster. Like ten minutes later her partner walked up. I said, "Go hug your partner. She misses you."

We set up a triage area in the lobby of the building. I'm still trying to figure out what building we were in. I believe it was the Winter Garden building. That's the only one I can think of. So we're in that building. People started coming in filled with ash and choking and respiratory problems. But no one was really hurt. So we were taking care of that.

Then they said the building was coming down, the other tower. We need to leave. So we all took off. The people who I was taking care of who couldn't walk got out the door before I did. It was unbelievable.

You could hear the roar. Outside you could hear the roar of the building coming down. It just slowly got faster and faster. It was unbelievable. It was like a freight train.

You go around the corner only to be greeted by another plume of smoke from the other building. So now ambulances were taking off, and one ambulance stopped and said, "STEVE, get in the ambulance." I jumped in, and we waited there until it settled. No big debris came towards us. It was just the dust and dirt. When that kind of settled, you could see the light again.

I popped out, went back into the same building, which wasn't as damaged, and did triage again. There were more and more people in there. There was a girl with a broken leg. She got blown just from the force of the ash. She kept going down from the force of the ash. We ended up treating her. She was stable.

There was a chief in there, a fire chief, with a broken shoulder and bloody nose. I was going down the line triaging people. They were upset, they were bent. People with no shoes on I guess from running out of the tower.

A fire chief comes over to me and says, "Listen, son. There was a terrorist attack. This building's next, because they know they're going to start attacking other buildings." He had a very good point there, because you're always waiting for the next attack. This is a terrorist act.

So I got my chief and decided to go into Stuyvesant High School. At that point I was going to get the fire chief out, to an ambulance, get him out of the way. There was a Port Authority cop who crashed on us. He was doing fine, the next minute he had no blood pressure. We got him out to an ambulance.

Q. What kind of injuries did he have?

A. Nothing obvious, but it must have been the shock from the whole thing, or an internal thing is possible. Maybe mashed, he might have been squished, hit by something, and not even know it. We got him in an ambulance and got him out to a hospital.

Q. Do you know who his name was?

A. Maybe this happened -- the time period is like within an hour. It's amazing. On the map I see now we actually ran towards the other buildings instead of running away from everything.

At that point we're getting everything together, and now we're going to move to Stuyvesant High School. Somebody comes in and says there's a gas leak, there's explosions going on, we have to evacuate.

So now we're all running out of the building again. The 20 people I'm treating again beat me to the door. I have no idea where these 20 people are. Someone is running around with a triage cage around their neck.

So we run out. You try not to hear the explosions in the background, things just blowing up; vehicles, I guess, that were on fire from the debris or if there were gas leaks. You could hear them getting closer and closer, so there was a good possibility there were gas explosions.

I get into Stuyvesant High School and the dust settles. You calm down. You figure you're safe now. Somebody comes in yelling there are gas explosions coming towards the high school, we need to evacuate.

At this point you have hundreds of people running into this high school. Now you're evacuating again. Once you get yourself together, you had to run. You just kept doing that for like the first hour. We just kept running until I could see the buildings. We're about this big. About an inch. Okay. Now everybody's safe. What do they do, the rule of thumb. But I used my pinky, though.

We stayed there on the corner for the longest time. Sure enough, people were still coming out of that portion with ash on them and problems breathing. I took my oxygen tank with me. It's like my safety blanket. Everywhere I was going I was giving oxygen to people to get themselves back together. There were 20 people just stopping, giving them oxygen, and going to the next one.

A Port Authority cop came out. Their suits are dark blue. He was white. His whole suit was pure white. They set up their own triage area in another high school, one of the colleges.

Q. Across the street from --

A. No, it's down the block. So they're there for the longest time, because they needed some supplies, needed ambulances. The radios were not working. We had a radio with us. But I knew there was a triage area and transport area two blocks from there. They had like ten ambulances. Another triage and transport area down the other road with MERVs and ambulances. So we were basically running back and forth where they need an ambulance, playing gofer. Somebody just needed a gofer to go back and forth.

We went upstairs to the (inaudible). It was in the auditorium, like a gym. They had doctors that had come in from all over, doing treatment. Great. Some EMTs showed up from Hazollah. They were in there. A lot of walking wounded. No one with real life-threatening injuries. But then again I kind of figured that because all the life-threatening injuries were in the rubble.

So strange we had all these triage areas set up and we were getting dribs and drabs. There were no real patients. You think people would get out of the muck; right? It was like walking wounded or dead. That was basically it. There was no one or few critical. When the first building came down, we did. When the second building came down, it was even less.

It was kind of strange, we had a tugboat set to go to Jersey with a frequency how to get in touch with them. We had doctors at another triage area. But there were no patients.

(Interruption.)

A. Then it was about 5:00, because I was getting hungry. We were eating oatmeal cookies and watered-down Gatorade from the Salvation Army and the Red Cross. They were great. They had plenty of food. But we were getting hungry.

We walked back. We didn't do any further because building number seven was coming down. That was another problem, to wait for building seven to come down, because that was unsecure. It was about 5:30 that building came down.

Again another plume of smoke. Again if you got too close you had to start running again. In the plumes there was like big debris, small debris, not to mention whatever contaminants were in it.

We finally got to ground zero, Chambers and West. I met Al, who was in refresher who was now sitting down there with an ambulance full of patients. He got sent to the pharmacy. So I was standing there for a while, looking at the MERV. Again, there was not a lot of patients coming in, just people coming in with ash in their eyes. That was it.

We didn't do much, to tell you the truth. I was just walking around aimlessly, because there was nothing much to do. You sat there. You were amazed. You just lost two buildings and possibly 50,000 people at most, if not maybe about 10,000 if they got the buildings evacuated. You just watched 10,000 people die. Unbelievable.

I remember going back into the high school and got some food. At that point it really hit, I'm hungry and thirsty. I get headaches when I don't eat, so I was getting this bad headache.

The only thing I remember is walking around and it's like five inches of ash and paperwork from everyone's office. Some were burnt, so you imagine where that paperwork came from. People's personal memos, financial records, everything, on the street.

It was about 7, 7:30 we finally contacted the chief. We had lost her. We didn't know where she was. She didn't know where we were. She came back to ground zero, and we met her. She got all of us together, and we went back to our car to get back here.

We got back to the car. It was filled with ash. It was like it snowed. We didn't even wipe the car off before you got in the car. It was ash; it wasn't even snow. It even managed to get inside the car. It was totally unreal.

I remember somebody saying to everybody, "Don't forget to fill out an exposure form when you get back." God only knows what was in that. You could feel the fiberglass on your arms. You knew it was like pulverized glass and fiberglass. Everything was pulverized.

We got back here and chilled out, went home, hugged my wife, ditched my clothes, and came back to try to see what to do the next day. I've been in the office since. I've never gone back down to ground zero. Some day I do want to go back there just to actually physically see where it was, where I was running to. In the whole maze, you're just running and running and you don't see where you're going.

I know when I ran out the building the building was falling. I looked to the right, and the plume was coming towards us. I looked to the left, and I said I can't go back that way because the building (inaudible). I can't go this way, to the right; I can't go left. I hope my helmet works. That's all I've got left. From the looks of things, it's not going to work too well. So that's when an ambulance pulled up and said hop in.

That's about it. I spent the rest of my time trying to get myself back together again. Today is the first day I actually got myself on a normal schedule. It's over a month.

A plane passes over, you hear -- the only other plane -- I'm in Westchester. The airport closes at 12 midnight it's 2:00 in the morning, and I hear this roar of a plane go by. It's the same rumble. I was dreaming about this building falling down, with the smoke and all.

That's my story.

Q. Is there anything else you would like to add to this in regards to the events that happened prior to 12 noon?

A. No, I pretty much gave you every detail I could imagine.

Q. Thank you very much for conducting this interview with me.

MR. ECCLESTON: This interview is being concluded at 1147 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMS CHIEF JAMES BASILE

Interview Date: October 17, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Today is October 17th, 2001. The time is 839 hours. My name is Christine Bastedenbeck from the New York Fire Department. I'm here to conduct an interview with the following individual.

CHIEF BASILE: Chief JAMES BASILE, B-A-S-I-L-E, EMS operations, EMS Division 2 commander.

MS. BASTEDENBECK: Also present for the interview --

MR. ECCLESTON: Christopher Eccleston from the New York City Fire Department World Trade Center disaster task force.

Q. Chief, I'm just going to ask you if you can recount the events of September 11th, 2001.

A. I first became aware of the World Trade Center incident from my staff, who was watching the morning news. They had turned on the news, and we had seen the original plane had struck tower number one of the World Trade Center. At that point we started to monitor the radio activities here, the CAD job.

Within a few minutes, the other building was struck. At that point I called the Citywide Dispatch Supervisor, informing them we were available if necessary. I felt at that point based on the magnitude of the incident that I should respond.

So I responded from Division 2's office with paramedic Louis Cook. We traveled Pelham Parkway onto the Hutchison River Parkway to the Whitestone Bridge, where we had seen the magnitude of the incident outplayed firsthand. From the Whitestone Bridge, we entered the Whitestone Expressway onto the Van Wyck Expressway onto the Long Island Expressway, where we started to take a real perspective of the incident because of the closer we had gotten.

By the time we reached the Queens Midtown Expressway, that perception now before the tunnel, we had seen how big it really was. My greatest fear was additional attacks at that point, knowing past history with terrorists and how they operate.

By the time we got to the tunnel, there must have been 20-25 vehicles behind us, a few cars in front of us. Chief Hirth was in front of us. Chief Carrasquillo was also in front of us.

We got into the tunnel. We had clear access into the tunnel and onto 34th Street and the FDR Drive.

We traveled the FDR Drive, came through the tunnel down in lower Manhattan and out onto the West Side Highway. I parked the vehicle at approximately West Street and I believe it was Albany to Carlisle. It might have been Albany.

Q. Can you just indicate with the number 1?

A. Carlisle to Rector or Albany. I'm going to put a 1 here.

I exited the vehicle with all my appropriate gear and walked up to the command post, which was located adjacent to the Winter Garden theater at that point. I met with Chief Jerry Gombo and Chief Walter Kowalczyk and was directed to go into the lobby of number One World Trade Center at that point. The buildings are still up and intact.

Louis Cook and I went in together. We found out it was very dangerous entering the premise, that there was numerous parts of the building and other foreign bodies being thrown around from the higher floors.

We entered the lobby. There I met Citywide Truck Commander Joseph Callan, Fire Division 1 Commander Chief Hayden and Fire Battalion 1 Joe Pfeifer, Safety Battalion Chief Stephen King, Father Judge, and OEM Port Authority officials in the command post within the lobby of number one.

We were looking to effect a way of exit for personnel in the building and a place where we could establish treatment sites. I advised the incident commander that was in the Trade Center with me that access from the front of the building was inappropriate and that we should look for other exits. That's when I sent Louis Cook with a Port Authority cop to find a different access for civilians and public safety personnel to come in on.

We were operating in the lobby, and all of a sudden we heard the roar of a jet engine, is what it sounded like. We thought that there was another plane coming into the building. We went from the lobby area into an elevator bank area -- escalators that led into the concourse area. So there was essentially a wall that we went around from the command post area to the escalator area.

Not two seconds later debris and dust started to come in, and essentially we were just shut down. Everything was dark, pitch-black.

Q. Before the collapse, was the lobby still lit?

A. The lobby was functional. When I first arrived there, there appeared to be a lot of people there. The Port Authority had set up some type of chain to help lead people out. I would say within the last two minutes before building two had fallen that the bulk of the people were out of the lobby and it was essentially just the Fire, Port Authority and OEM personnel with me. The lobby was essentially clear.

Q. Did you go into any of the stairways or did you stay in the lobby?

A. I just stayed in the lobby at that point. We heard the roar of the jet -- what I thought was a jet coming in, and I believe the others did, and we went into the escalator area for shelter.

Everybody got down on the ground.

There was some debris that fell. There was a lot of soot and dust. It was pitch-black. The only light that we had was the handheld lanterns, and there was a photographer, a video crew that was following one of the battalion chiefs, that he provided some light.

All access to the lobby area was cut off, and any egress from that level was cut off. I opted to grab a hold of a Port Authority cop who knew the building well and ask for another way out. We ventured to take the escalator up into the concourse level.

I went up to the concourse level. All the glass had been shattered out at that point. We were able to get out. I saw people starting to come out from the building on the concourse. I met with Fire Battalion Chief Turner and a few other firemen -- I don't know their names -- and assisted in moving patients, civilians, out.

I did some quick treatment of a couple of patients. One gentleman had a severe gash to his forearm. I don't know how, but he had gauze with him. So I wrapped him up. I effectively was able to bring out about 300 civilians from the building at that point in the matter of, I guess, 12, 15 minutes.

We were helping people over large areas of debris and channelling them, trying to keep them calm, bringing them over to a walkway that led to number Seven World Trade Center.

When the majority of the civilians were out, I waited a few minutes. There was nobody else coming out. I had a feeling, a gut feeling inside that it was time for me to leave. So I started walking. I went over the walking bridge to number seven. I went into the second level or the main lobby of number seven and walked down the escalator.

As I was approaching the corner of West and Vesey, I heard over the radio that the building was leaning. As I was crossing West Street, that's when I heard that jet sound again. I knew that the building was coming down. I made it about -- somewhere between West and North End there was a fence, approximately, I guess, 200 feet or maybe 100 yards away. I decided to use that as a wall to protect myself from any debris, not knowing what the extent of the magnitude was going to be.

I brought a couple of civilians down with me, a couple of firefighters, I brought them close to the ground. I covered them with my turnout coat with me. I essentially waited and figured that was it, it was all over, because of the proximity to where we were to where the building was.

It went down, got filled with this dust and dirt, debris, again, this cloud. I opened up my eyes. It was total darkness I guess for about two, three minutes. I thought I guess this is what it's like to be dead. Then I heard a woman screaming next to me, and I said I guess we're still all here. So that was good.

We waited until we were able to see a little light. I was able to get the woman up. We went into a bagel store which was located at North End and Vesey, where we took some water. I gave her water and a couple other people. At the back of the deli counter in the kitchen area, they had like a little portable shower, I guess a dish shower. We hosed each other down.

I went into a building off of River

Terrace, I believe, and Vesey where a lot of the chiefs had regrouped. I met with Chief Kowalczyk, Gombo. I don't remember the other chiefs that were there at the time. Essentially we were trying to put a plan together of what we were going to do.

I was directed at that point to set up a treatment site over at the ferry terminal. Louie Cook and I, we wound up finding each other. I thought he was a goner too. I didn't know where he was. I thought it was all over.

We met, and we took a few minutes out. I told Louis, I said, "We're not going back to the West Side Highway. We're going to walk around if necessary." So we were walking down North End. We were down by the yacht harbor. Louie Cook saw a boatsmate who was sweeping debris off of one of the boats.

He called out to the boatsmate and asked him, "Do you have a dingy?" The guy said, "Yeah, what do you need?" He said, "Well, we need a ride out to the ferry terminal." He said, "Okay." So we wound up having a zodiac inflatable boat.

Actually it was a good respite because we were able to get away from the scene for a little bit and clear our heads and the air was clear and we were able to see the magnitude of what had just happened with us.

We got into the zodiac, and we traveled down the Hudson River to the MIL, the marine input center, the Coast Guard station, where they dock their vessels. Of course Louie got off, and he was going to hold the boat for me, and then we got carried out into the water. Then something jammed in the propeller, so we're stranded out there.

I saw some Coast Guard or some New York City cops in another zodiac. I tried to wave them down, and they zipped by. Five minutes later Louie is trying to throw me a life preserver on a rope, which got about two feet off of the pier. It was comical, to say the least. He was able to unwrap the rope from the propeller, and we got started again. I got up the ladder, and I exited.

At that point we went over to the ferry terminal. There were some EMS crews there already. I'm not positive whether I met Dr. Cherson at that point or if it was slightly thereafter, but in essence we took over the second floor of the ferry terminal and we established a medical treatment site.

We had moved all the benches out. We had prioritized all the areas as far as treatments. A number of physicians and health care professionals had come in, civilians from the street. Dominic Maggiore was there at the time and helped set up the treatment and staging areas.

Essentially I spent the best part of the day there, trying to get things established, thinking that there was going to be a mass exodus to the ferry terminal, patients looking for treatment, at least everybody going back to Staten Island.

In essence we didn't treat that many patients. We did about five transports, one being Deputy Chief Robert Browne. He had staggered in. He had severe conjunctiva of both eyes and some back pain. He was immobilized and transported to Penninsular General.

About 4:30 I was asked to go over to the command post which is located at Chambers and West, so I had gotten together -- I was with Mark Steffens, Fred Villani and Louie Cook. We picked up the car, brushed it off. There was about four or five inches of dust on the car.

We traversed around the east side of Manhattan, tried to get to Chambers and West. We had gotten to -- I don't know what street this is -- Washington. We were at Washington and Chambers when we saw number seven come down. That was about 5:20. We watched that come down. We watched this plume of smoke coming at us.

I just drove up the block, and I said, "Everybody stay in the car." We waited for everything.

We went to the command post. I was shot for the day. I had severe conjunctiva. I couldn't breathe. I came back at 6 the next morning.

Q. Anything else you want to add?

A. That's it. I think everybody's story is going to tell it.

MS. BASTEDENBECK: This concludes the interview. The time now is 855 hours.

Thank you, Chief.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT JOHN NEVINS

Interview Date: October 17, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. RADENBERG: Today's date is October 17, 2001. The time is 1327 hours. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

Q. Conducting an interview with?

A. Lieutenant JOHN NEVINS, New York City Fire Department, assigned to fire operations.

Q. We are conducting this interview at 9 Metrotech, fourth floor, in the BITS interview room, regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

A. On September 11, I was at my job location at 9 Metrotech, 7th floor. At approximately 8:35, 8:40, somebody announced in the office that a plane had struck the World Trade Center, at which time, we looked out the window. We could see that there was a large hole in one of the towers of the World Trade Center.

I proceeded with Lieutenant Bradley Mann down to the EMS operations area, obtained radios, and began to respond to the assignment.

We exited 9 Metrotech from the front doors, proceeded around to the garage area where we met Citywide Chief Sal Cassano, exiting the garage. We got into his car and responded into Manhattan. I believe he went -- I'm not sure which way he went through Brooklyn, but he arrived at the Sand Street entrance to Brooklyn Bridge, proceeded over the Brooklyn Bridge into lower Manhattan.

We exited the car. I believe the Chief parked at West and Vesey Street. Actually, the map is more (inaudible). I believe this is Broadway.

Q. Yes, this is West Broadway.

A. Yes, West Broadway, behind the US Post Office Federal Office Building across the street from the 7 World Trade, Lieutenant Mann and myself began down towards West Street on Vesey. Chief Cassano exited the vehicle and I believe he headed towards Church Street. That was the last I saw of him until Thursday.

As we turned the corner and were standing in front of 7 World Trade, the second plane struck tower number 2. Lieutenant Mann and myself paused momentarily to find some shelter in front of 7 World Trade under an overpass. We then proceeded once we were safe farther down Vesey Street to the corner of West Street, where we took over West and Vesey staging.

We began staging ambulances on Vesey Street between West and North End Avenue. I'm not sure of the exact number of ambulances, somewhere between 20 and 30 had arrived from numerous agencies; Lenox Hill, Cabrini, FDNY. Also at this location a MERV was staged approximately between 3 World Financial and 12 World Financial. There is a parking lot in front of the Embassy Suites Hotel. We staged in the street facing North End Avenue.

From there we spent -- at that point, from the staging location, we remained there staging ambulances until the collapse of 2 World Trade Center. Just prior to the collapse of 2 World Trade Center, probably 5 to 10 minutes, Chief Fred Villani arrived at our location and he was transitioning into taking over the staging at that location.

At that point 2 World Trade Center began to collapse. I was directed by Chief Villani to run, at which time we continued down Vesey Street on to North End Avenue. Following the collapse, we attempted to regroup, shuttle ambulances down on to North End and reestablish the staging location at that area.

For approximately 10 to 15 minutes we continued to do that until we were told that -- I believe at the direction of the police, that that area was probably unsafe due to the impending collapse in number 1 World Trade Center.

At that point, I continued down North End Avenue towards Murray Street. At that point I entered a construction trailer, I believe located between Murray and Park Place in an attempt to find a helmet. At that point, the collapse of number 1 World Trade Center occurred and myself and a large group of police, firefighters, and some civilians took refuge in that area until the debris and dust cloud had settled.

Following that, I exited the construction trailers, headed farther down North End Avenue attempting to locate personnel and ambulances. I came around to the park area along the River Terrace, at Chambers Street, and at that point I found approximately 3 ambulances. I believe one was a Lenox Hill bus and two EMTs or paramedics, who stated that they had shuttled the ambulances to that location. However, they weren't aware of where the crews for the trucks had gone or the location of any other personnel.

At that point we attempted to -- I attempted to gather personnel at that location and through the park, I began to walk through the park to see if there were any personnel taking refuge in the park. I didn't find any. However, along the bulkhead of the park, there was numerous New York Waterway ferries, so we attempted to establish a transport center if necessary with them to transport any patients to New Jersey if it became necessary.

I was standing by at that location when the police then directed us to exit the park due to the fact that they believed there was a ruptured gas main underneath the park. I headed down Chambers Street to West Street, at which point I ran into EMT Richie Zarrillo from operations, Chief Hirth and his aide.

At that point I asked Chief Hirth for direction. I was told that he was not sure what exactly -- whether we should head back toward the World Trade Center or head up to Chelsea Piers, where a casualty collection point had been set up. I had heard that previously on the radio, so I decided along with EMT Zarrillo that I would head up to Chelsea Piers.

I started walking along West Street for numerous blocks until I was able to get a ride with a Hatzolah ambulance up to the staging location at Chelsea Piers, where I again became the secondary staging officer for Chelsea Piers.

Q. Do you remember approximately what time that was by the time you got up to the pier?

A. Probably half an hour to 45 minutes after the collapse of the second tower.

Q. When you came over to Vesey and West, prior to the first collapse, most of the vehicles there, the ambulances, were not Department ambulances?

A. No, most of them were not Department ambulances. There were ambulances from Lenox Hill, there were Hatzolah volunteers, there were a few EMS ambulances. One of them was I believe 22 Henry, Staten Island HAZTAC ambulance. I remember that one specifically because they had requested they needed to bring their HAZTAC equipment with them. I believe there was a Metro Care ambulance that was --

There was vehicle 125 and -- unfortunately the list of all the units that were in staging were -- got lost in the ensuing.

Q. Chaos?

A. Chaos of the collapse. There were a few Chief's cars. I believe they were Fire Department, Chief's vehicles, unmarked vehicles, that were on Vesey Street off of West Avenue. There was a small upgrade across from American Express. They were parked along there next to the -- there is a parking lot there.

Q. You were with Lieutenant Mann?

A. Yes, Brad Mann.

Q. He is from EMS?

A. Yes. Fire operations, EMS fire operations.

Q. Did you see any other Department personnel when you got over to West and Vesey that you recognize their full name that you could place there?

A. Not from FDNY, but there were -- actually, one of the FDNY people that was there was Gary Smiley, a paramedic, and his partner. I'm not sure who his partner was that day. I actually had seen him later at Chelsea Piers. He arrived with his ambulance and his partner. Chief Villani was in that area. Again his car was parked on Vesey between West and North End.

One of the others, let's see, Raoul Perez, he is a paramedic for Lenox Hill, him and his partner were in the staging area. I can't think of anybody else that I definitely recognized. There was a Hatzolah crew. I believe they were the midtown Hatzolah. There were approximately 4 to 5 people in their ambulance. They just kept asking me if they needed to -- if I wanted to send them up towards the building. However, I told them to stay with their vehicle.

Q. At that point were there any patients in the area?

A. We were getting reports of patients in the foyer areas between 3 World Financial Center and 4

World Financial Center. However, I hadn't headed over to that area and none of the crews that were with me were reporting treating any patients. One ambulance did come through, I'm not sure whether it had picked up a patient, however, as they were heading out past the staged ambulances, we stopped them and they said they were transporting a burn patient. They were headed I believe to Cornell. I believe they left prior to the collapse.

Q. When the first tower came down, from where you were, debris that was coming down, did it come down into the staging area here or --

A. No.

Q. Can you remember?

A. No, the only thing that affected us was dust and debris. I had actually been standing -- I was standing facing towards North End Avenue, so I was facing away from the building when there was a -- started a loud noise, I remember like a sound, like a cracking sound and Chief Villani ran past me and told me, John, run for your life.

As I turned around it appeared to be the top of the tower was shifting. I just started running down towards North End. I didn't stop until I rounded the corner past the Embassy Suites hotel and at that point, there was a lot of dust and debris, tough to see back down. Couldn't see down Vesey Street to West Street, so I was unable to see where debris had landed. I began in the intersection attempting to get personnel to move ambulances and bring them farther up the street and around back onto North End Avenue.

Also at that point, I'm not sure which -- there was an ambulance from the voluntary hospital treating one patient on a corner, I guess it's the southwest corner of North End and Vesey on the corner. There's an apartment complex across North End, by 4 World Financial. There was a patient on the corner there and I directed one of the voluntary hospital units who had both crew members to treat the patient there.

Again, what happened to that patient and where they went, I'm not really sure, due to the fact that they had loaded the patient into the ambulance, but we were directed to move farther away before they had given me any disposition on where they were going.

Q. Right. Okay. You said the best you remember, Chief Villani arrived after the second plane had attacked, but prior to the collapses?

A. Right. It was very close to the collapse of the first tower. Approximately 10, 15 minutes, because we hadn't even -- I hadn't given him the full report on the ambulances that were in the staging location and what resources were available and patients were being treated.

Q. Any thoughts or comments on the situation?

A. Not really. Very chaotic scene. I think we did the best we could given the situation and then, you know, the ensuing -- once the tower started to collapse, we were -- we did the best we could.

Actually, one thing that just thinking about it now sticks in my mind. The MERV driver should be commended. He went back and -- I have a clear mental picture of the MERV with both ramps hanging out, going around the corner from Vesey on to North End. But the guy went back, definitely, probably the farthest down the block to save the MERV to get it out of there, get it away from the collapse.

Q. The MERV was I assume from Bellevue?

A. Yes, that was MERV 1 from Bellevue.

Q. Is anything else you would like to add?

A. I think that's it.

MR. RADENBERG: Okay. Time is now 1445 hours. The interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

CAPTAIN JOHN KEVIN CULLEY

Interview Date: October 17, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. CUNDARI: Today's date is October 17th, 2001. The time is 1135 hours. I am George Cundari with Richard Dun of the Fire Department, City of New York. I am conducting an interview with the following individual:

Q. Please state your name, rank, title and assigned command.

A. My name is John Kevin Culley. I go by my middle name, Kevin. My rank is Captain. I have been assigned to the Office of Emergency Management since 1997.

Q. Regarding the events of September 11th, 2001, can you tell us what happened that day and where you were?

A. In my capacity at OEM, my assigned tour begins at 0600 hours and my work area is 7 World Trade Center, 23rd floor. I arrived at 0600 and I found myself on the lobby of that floor, the third-floor lobby of that floor, when the first plane hit the north side of 1 World Trade Center.

From the lobby we saw debris falling from above. We could not actually see the impact due to the view. When the debris stopped falling, I left the third-floor lobby, ran out onto the street, looked up, saw fire showing out of two, three floors, on two sides of the building, the north face and the east face of the building. There was no sign that it was a plane, at least not to me.

I ran to my car, which was parked on Barclay, picked up radios, and crossed over into the plaza, into the -- what's that called? Anyway, the passageway that brings you to the PATH trains under the Trade Center.

Q. Concourse.

A. Concourse. We sort of assisted people coming off the trains. The Port Authority Police were directing everybody out of the building.

Q. Were there any apparatuses arriving yet?

A. No. I have no memory of apparatus on Vesey Street. I passed the concourse and then grouped with others at the lobby, the fire command station at the lobby of 1 World Trade Center. In my capacity as an OEM coordinator, I reported in to the incident commander, which was the 1st Division, at that time it was Chief Hayden, and in that capacity what I'm supposed to do is liaison to any agencies other than Fire with the incident commander. So at that scene you had Port Authority, you had some other federal agencies, FBI is one that I recall, and you also had your building -- the World Trade Center Fire Safety Director and his staff, and the Chief starting setting up for high-rise operations in that lobby.

Q. This is in the north tower?

A. This is in the north tower, 1 World Trade Center. The fire command station is located on the north face, the north wall of that lobby.

Q. What were you seeing in the lobby as you got there?

A. In the lobby, all the usual people, the 1st Division, 1st Battalion, reporting in units, I can't remember specifically, the Fire Safety Director, who I recognized, FBI agents, people on the staff, building staff, particularly people that were involved with helping us read the elevator panels.

Our first thought, normal high-rise operation is you want to get people up to the floors, the fire floors. That's normally done on elevators and we had a problem. There were no elevators in operation. What made it more of a problem is that all those elevators were shut down and there were people in them. So we were actually -- once I had staff that could operate the panel, they could speak to each individual elevator, ask how many people are in the elevator, what floor they were on, and if there's anyone injured, and I was passing that information on to the incident commander.

Q. Can you describe what you visually were seeing around, like outside or on the concourse?

A. On the concourse? I don't remember on the concourse. In the lobby? As I said, the usual people that would show up. I saw at least three chaplains there.

Q. Was there a lot of debris falling at the time?

A. Once the plane hit, there was no debris, or it fell. What we did have coming out of the building were people. We were closer to the west entrance to the 1 World Trade Center. A lot of the glass had been taken out upon the impact of the plane. So we could actually hear outside, but what you heard were the thumps and crashes of the bodies.

Also, I'd note that, once I arrived at the fire command station, I was told by someone who had actually witnessed the plane hitting it that it was indeed a plane. Up until that point, I thought it was a bomb.

Q. So you continued the operations?

A. Continuing operations, obviously, this was going to be difficult. We had no elevators. The only report that I remember was that somebody I believe in the FBI had a telephone conversation with somebody on the 51st floor reporting that there's jet fuel on that floor. It wasn't clear to us exactly what floor the impact was on, but I knew it was higher than that.

We were still working on trying to find maybe there would be freight elevators or any kind of elevator that's working. Are all of the elevators out due to the incident or are some just maintenance problems that we may be able to get moving? That wasn't happening for us.

What else did we see? I'm trying to think of things.

Q. Were a lot of civilians in the lobby coming by as you were in there, coming out of the building?

A. A lot? No, I wouldn't say a lot. There were a lot of people responding. This was, I understood, as I found out later, it was a third alarm right away. So we had a lot of Fire personnel and anybody else that usually shows up, emergency personnel, in the lobby.

I did suggest -- I remember bringing it to the attention of the Port Authority Police there that this was most likely a terrorist attack and to look for a secondary event. I was concerned about the safety of the people actually at the command post. So what we wanted to do was provide security in front of the lobby so that something couldn't happen to us. I don't know if any of that actually took place, but I know I made note of it.

Q. Was there a lot of chaos and confusion with civilians trying to exit?

A. No, not that I recall. The lobby is huge and there's a lot of exits to it. Now, I came in from the concourse and I don't recall having a problem entering with all the people exiting. It was not an issue. I do remember civilians in the area exiting, but never like masses of people that were clogging things.

Q. Were there any communications at that point; radios still working?

A. The radio that I carry is an 800 megahertz connected to the OEM channels. I was transmitting and receiving. All the Fire Department radios that I was aware of were transmitting, you know, you could hear all the conversations going on. We did hear the jumpers jumping.

So that brings us up, you know, the next key point is when the next plane comes. We heard the engines of the plane. I heard the engines of the plane.

Q. The second plane?

A. The second plane. You heard this thump and the rain of debris coming down. Then it became clear to anybody that may have had a question about what's going on here, it was pretty clear then that these weren't accidents. It was also clear then that there wasn't any control of that building, no elevators, communications above. Except for that one conversation on the 51st floor, as far as I know, there were no other conversations. That doesn't mean I knew everything. We did have conversations with people stuck on elevators and that was it.

The second plane hits. Now we have -- I was told later. I didn't know this at the time. People had left the north tower to go to the south tower, you know, command people. Also, at that time, I'm pretty sure that prior to the second plane hitting, there was discussion as to moving the command post out of the lobby. Personnel, a lot of personnel, staff personnel, were moving out onto West Street. Certainly after the second plane hit, that was being done. A lot of people were going out on West Street. I stayed, though, in the tower.

Q. At that point, other Chiefs were arriving? And did Giuliani make it?

A. I know that after the second plane hit, sometime before the south tower fell, we had word that Giuliani was going to be arriving. So we were pretty aware that he was going to be coming. He never did come into the north tower. I actually spoke with him later. I know that he got onto West Street. I think he said he spoke to Ganci and then left and was two blocks away when the tower came down.

Q. At that time you were still in the north tower?

A. I was still in the north tower. But if my memory serves me correctly, we had a lot of high Chiefs now. Now you're starting to see staff Chiefs. Some are with us and some had moved out onto West Street or had moved to the other tower. I'm not sitting there logging who's going where. All my concentration is with the staff of the building and the 1st Division.

Q. The first building came down. What was the operation line? What was going on?

A. Nothing really had changed. Like I said, all the elevators were still stuck. I think there were elevators that were on the first floor, the doors closed. Not that I saw it. I looked at the panel and realized that some of these stuck elevators are right here on the lobby floor and people were assigned to go take care of that.

The second tower gets hit. What else was going on there?

Q. When the first tower came down, did people run back into the north tower to escape some of the debris falling?

A. Okay. I can only say what I saw.

Q. That's what we want.

A. I haven't seen any of the TV. So I know that the tower doesn't come down instantly. It starts coming down. What we saw or heard was all the material falling, all the debris falling, like when the plane hit, debris fell. We hear the debris falling and it's coming through the windows on the south side of the north tower, and then we started hearing this noise, this roaring noise. When that was apparent, the group that I was with -- again, I was on the north wall of the north tower.

Q. Northwest wall.

A. We found an opening and ran what I thought was directly down a set of stairs. I found out later we actually were in a hallway for a while and then ducked into some stairs. My belief is that we actually ran out of the building enclosed. The stairwell we were in was probably inside of 6 World Trade.

Q. You knew the building was coming down?

A. No. We were reacting. There was no logical thought. You were reacting to the noise. The noise was getting louder and louder. It was like a jet engine or a train coming at you. So we just ran and ducked. Then you got the debris cloud. We were with the chaplain, Chaplain Judge.

When the debris had cleared -- the noise stopped and we were covered in dust. You couldn't see. It was actually black. Flashlights pop out. We're asking one another, are you all right? Are you all right? Everybody's saying they're all right. But if you're not all right and you can't talk, you're not saying that.

We stumbled upon Judge. He had no pulse. One of the Chiefs just said we're not going to leave him here. We just picked him up and went up the stairs we came down. I can't tell you how we got outside. It was still dark. We ended up in front of-- we ended up on the west face of 6 World Trade Center, which happens to be up on a pedestrian walkway which is like three stories up. We had no way to get down.

So we were still carrying the chaplain. We come around on the Vesey side of this pedestrian walkway. You really couldn't see more than about 60 feet in front of you at best. So I sort of ran ahead of the group to see if we could get over any obstructions, and if it became a dead end, we were going to have to turn around. So that's what I was doing.

We got to the end of 6 World Trade, there's a gap between 6 and 5. We really didn't know what had happened. We heard all this noise, but we didn't know what actually happened. There was a lot of debris out there. It was unclear. I looked to where 2 World Trade -- the south tower was. You really couldn't see through it. I figured it was a dangerous area. We were going to have to run this gap between 6 and 5. It didn't seem like anything was happening.

We took Judge's body in a chair and we ran across that gap. We went down the escalator stairs right there and that gets us down onto the street. Now we can get away from the building.

Q. Were the radios still working at that time that you can remember?

A. I wasn't carrying a firefighter radio. I was only carrying an 800 megahertz radio. I don't recall transmitting anything.

Q. Okay.

A. We get to the corner of Vesey and Church. We turn over Judge's body to some EMTs. I ran into two federal officers, I always think they're FBI, but there's a lot of federal badges, and they said they were going to be setting up -- or somebody had notice that there was going to be a command center set up on either Park Place or Murray, one of those streets just north of the area, and that's where I would normally be assigned. So I started walking north up Church Street when the other tower fell.

So I heard that noise. I really thought it was the south tower. I didn't know what had happened. I thought that might fall right down Church Street. So I ducked down Murray, I think, and when you could actually see there was a debris cloud coming, I broke into an OTB thing and ducked out of the way.

Q. Did you see a lot of injured members on your way running?

A. Well, we were carrying Judge out. It was pretty obvious, debris everywhere.

Q. Right. I know. But like --

A. People were helping other people. I have to say, either I blocked out or I didn't see -- I don't remember seeing any bodies or body guts or anything like that.

Q. All right. You were just looking to see --

A. But I know people were scurrying inside, you know, looking under things.

Okay. That building falls. Then you get the second debris cloud. I leave the building. I start walking -- actually, I started walking east and I noticed that I was coming on to City Hall and, in fact, in my mind, now that I'm making really my first logical thought, I said, well, we just got hit with two planes. Two is enough. I looked at City Hall and said I'm not going there. I turned west. I'm still looking for this command post that never got set up.

I got about halfway down toward -- past Church toward West Broadway and I couldn't see any more. There was a bar open. I went into the bar and had somebody wash my eyes out. It cleared up. I actually made a phone call to a friend to tell him I was alive. I left, found myself back on West Street and Vesey, and I ran into the 1st Division again and we just started going to work and now it was rescue and recovery.

Q. Your vehicle, when you arrived, where did you leave your vehicle?

A. I never used my vehicle. I went around to get my radio out of the car. It was parked on Barclay.

Q. So the vehicle stayed on Barclay?

A. Yes.

Q. The vehicle was recovered?

A. I recovered it later.

Q. So with the secondary collapse, the only persons with you were FBI agents? Were there any Fire Chiefs?

A. No. I was with a group. When we carried Judge's body out, I was with the 1st Division, a couple of Port Authority cops, one of the aides, one of the firemen. I couldn't tell you who else. I remember another OEM fellow who I had met on the way down.

Q. Is he a firefighter? Is he Fire Department personnel?

A. He was an EMT that works in OEM. When I get back to West and Vesey, I run into Chief Hayden, 1st Division. I don't know why, but he decided he was going to work at Liberty and West, which meant we had to get around the World Financial Center and come up from behind there and walk at that point. He probably had that in mind because he has Fire Department radios and there were calls made in that area.

Q. Oh, okay.

A. The one call that I'm familiar with is that Al Fuentes, Captain Fuentes, who was working in the Marine Company, was trapped on West Street, because we ended up right in front of that area.

So at this time, again, I don't see any bodies or body parts. What I'm seeing is everybody coming out from cover.

Q. Okay.

A. I helped the Chief get on top of a vehicle. He got on top of one of the squad apparatus so he could give direction to the crews that were going out and trying to recover.

Q. Did you see a lot of apparatuses on West Street when you were there?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Were they buried or were they in working condition?

A. Everything looked terrible. I mean, the rig we were on was half buried, but we knew we had a surface on the top that we could stand on. I know it was one of the squad vehicles.

Q. Oh, okay.

A. After that, it's just directing people doing digging. But I'll tell you one thing. One of the Rescue 1 firefighters recognized me as being an OEM and he said basically that there's a U.S.A.R. cache from the New York City team located in Queens, and I transmitted that, I put in a request for that through our people, and I found out -- it took me two weeks to find this out, but that call did deliver the material.

Q. Oh, okay. Excellent.

A. If I did nothing else that day, I got that out.

MR. CUNDARI: Okay. Thank you, Captain, for the interview. The time is now 11:55. This concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT SAMUEL HARRIS

Interview Date: October 17, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. FEILER: Today's date is October 17th, 2001. The time now is 1025 hours. This is Monty Feiler of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name, rank and assigned area.

EMT HARRIS: My name is Samuel D. Harris. I'm an EMT. I work in the Bureau of Communications.

MR. FEILER: Fire Department of the City of New York. We're conducting the interview at a conference room within investigations and trials, and the interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. If you can go ahead, sir.

A. I reported for work at 7 a.m. on September 11th. Most of the morning was pretty routine up until the first reports of the airliner hitting the World Trade Center.

About that time I was getting some coffee. I noticed that people who were in operations, which is adjacent to communications, were scrambling. I didn't know why. They were running into FOC I guess to -- at first thoughts I thought that somebody had went down ill in FOC the way people were running and moving. But then when I noticed that nobody was really calling for any ambulances or bus, I noticed it had to be something more.

As I got more to my desk, I noticed people started talking about looking through the window, look out the window. At that point, still at my desk, curious as to what's going on, I was approached by Commissioner Gregory, who stated to Captain Pinkus that a plane had struck the twin towers. So that probably was around 8:50, around that time. He then instructed me, Captain D'Amato and Captain Jace Pinkus, and we got into his vehicle and we headed toward Manhattan.

Coming across the Brooklyn Bridge, you can see that the tower was just engulfed. Tower one was engulfed. As I got across the bridge and I got to West and Vesey, right at what is now considered ground zero -- I was literally right at the corner -- I then was instructed to move my car, move the commissioner's car, further up Vesey toward North End Avenue. But I wasn't able to get up that far because police officers were cutting that block off.

Q. You had originally stopped at West and Vesey?

A. West and Vesey Streets.

At that time I was still in contact with Captain Pinkus. I had lost sight of Commissioner Gregory and Captain D'Amato. As I went to park the car, they scrambled to whatever other areas they proceeded to.

I met back up with Captain Pinkus, and we went back to West Street, where we met up with Chief Gombo, the assistant chief of EMS operations, and Lieutenant Ross Terranova. I was assigned to Lieutenant Terranova to kind of keep a record of what was going on.

At that point Captain Pinkus was detailed to do something else with vehicle operations with staging. Chief Gombo, myself and Ross Terranova, we went into what was the operation command post at that time. It was in One World Trade Center in the foyer basement area.

At that time there were numerous people in there, people from the World Trade Center, people from OEM, people from all over, Port Authority, firemen, EMTs, the Fire commissioner, the first deputy, Commissioner Tierney. You couldn't count how many people that were probably just like right there in that foyer.

I believe at that point after some preliminary instructions were made, I noticed that people were going upstairs. They were shutting down elevators and just trying to move people expeditiously out of the building. Sometime after that, maybe 20 minutes, I don't even think it was, I believe the decision was made that we should pull back to across the street.

Without getting into great detail, it was very graphic some of the scenery that you saw just even walking into the building. But we made the decision -- they made the decision, I should say, to go across the street. As we did, we were on West, which would probably be the World Financial Center or American Express because they're so closely together.

Everybody was basically standing in the garage area. It has a two-door garage in this area at the corner. At that point everybody was making operations. Chief Gombo instructed me to go inside the building and contact Chief Diggs about point-to-point operations and communications so that they can have a whole line that was set up or dedicated that people can talk point to point without any interference.

As I followed that direction, as I started to go into the building, I heard on the radio that what I was instructed to do was already done, primarily. You could hear it over the command frequency that it was already being done. But just to follow those orders that were given to me, I went ahead inside the building. I proceeded to make this phone call.

As I got through to Chief Diggs, I believe I remember seeing Commissioner Fitzpatrick in there for a brief minute. I believe he walked out. At that point I spoke to Chief Diggs. I got direction from him. He gave me direction to relay back to Chief Gombo.

As I related back to Chief Gombo -- or I was getting ready to walk out and tell Chief Gombo what I was told, that's when tower one started to pancake and collapse. The only thing that I remember was the guy in front of me who was standing there in awe of just the earthquake feel, for myself as well.

I had grabbed him because I didn't know if we were going to walk out of that building. The glass was shattering around us. We were in the big foyer. The building that we were in was primarily glass doored, and so was the area that you had to go in to use the phone, which was sectioned off.

As I grabbed him and we ran back inside, some gentleman -- I believe he worked for the building. I don't recall his name. I believe this gentleman worked in the building, in that particular building. He was one of seven people that were in the building with me after One started to crumble.

As we ran down the foyer or down the hallway, at that point it was so dark and so thick and the lights went right away that you couldn't even see your hand before your face. As you turn back to just look down the corridor, you couldn't even see the corridor that you just ran down. That's how dark it was. That's how eerie it was. That's how very scared I believe of us were keep down. But we all kept cool heads. We all stayed together. We were looking for another exit, and there weren't any.

Q. Who was in that group with you?

A. Now with me there was a paramedic. I believe I learned his last -- what's the name? Glenn. He was in there with me. There were two New York City detectives in there with me and the building manager for that building, and the rest were just office workers. There were no other people left.

The two detectives basically -- we coordinated and I was trying to tell them that the building came down. He thought I was being kind of nervous. I told him, yes, I am, but I'm not all that nervous. I just wanted to make sure that we were all alive, that that big building was not going to cave in on this little building and we were going to get crushed, because who knew.

After we made several attempts to look for other exits out of the building outside of the front door, there were no other exits. What we did was the building manager took us into what seemed like a computer room or a security room, and he found some flashlights.

The decision was made for us to wait for a period of time, probably I'd say we waited a whole hour, maybe more before we could even see anything. There was that much dust and smoke, and you couldn't really breathe.

So we waited until some of the dust settled, and then we all -- two people would go ahead and check to see if we can go out the front door. If there was no access way from the front door, we would wait until somebody came and eventually got us. But we would all stay together.

So what we did was we formed a line. We grabbed each other's belts, and we shined the flashlights. We didn't go up to a certain point, and the two men went ahead. They noticed that there was an exit way for us to get out. Thank God.

After we came out --

Q. Where did you come out of?

A. I came right out the front door that I went in, which is probably the World Financial building, World Financial Center building, because this would be the garage area right here. In the first rehaps I believed it was the American Express building, only because it was so closely related.

After we came out of the building, I immediately went to the garage area. The garage area where there were hundreds of people standing there when I left to make this phone call, there was about 25 firemen.

At that point I ran into Chief Kowalczyk's aide, and I was asking him where was his boss. He said he didn't know, and he had no clue as to where he was. He was with Chief Gombo and several of the others before I walked into the building to make the phone call.

Outside of that, the field comm. truck, the van truck was crushed. The guard shack that stands between the two doors in the garage was crushed. It looked almost like the two garage doors were blown open. Debris was everywhere: metal, paper, dust.

At that point after staying there for I'd say 20 minutes trying to find somebody I know, I ran into Captain Sickles, Howard Sickles, and I noticed that he was standing toward the curb or what would have been the curb. He was trying to give a progress report.

I was trying to persuade him to let's move out, to let's get out of this area, for fear of whatever is going to happen again.

Q. Where was that located?

A. That was at the beginning of this building at probably West Street. So we're facing West at this point.

Q. On Vesey?

A. I'm sorry, Vesey. We're facing Vesey at this point. He's at the corner, and I'm trying to get him to let's go up Vesey toward North End. Let's go further up to get away from the aftermath.

At that point as I was trying to persuade him, I did see at that point Chief Ganci. Chief Ganci was trying to rally some of the firefighters that were in the area to also move up toward North End, to move out of the area.

As he was doing that, I was still trying to persuade Captain Sickles to give the 12 and make it brief but let's go. He continued on the radio to the point where I just grabbed him by the arm and was pulling him, let's go, let's get out of here.

There was a firefighter at the corner of Vesey and North End when we walked up to North End, and he said that this was really bad. I said, "Yes, it is. How could something like this happen." I said, "Well, listen, what we should do is move because the north tower is on fire still. I said, "We don't know if this one is going to come down, so let's move out of the area."

At that point police officers and other people were trying to move people up North End Avenue to get them away from -- or more so up Vesey toward North End.

At that point as I was walking up, I approached where the commissioner's car was, and that's when you heard the rumble again and the other tower started to come down. At that point my thought was to try to move the commissioner's car, and right behind me unbeknownst to me was Lieutenant Ross Terranova, who told me, "Forget it. Just go. Let's go," and we all started running, with Captain Sickles behind us.

We ran into North End Avenue, and right in the back of North End Avenue at the corner off to the right was where the MERV was. There's a building of some sort there like a hotel or like a coffee shop right on the corner where the MERV was parked. We all ran inside there.

At that point right behind us about 20 people -- two police officers were badly hurt. They probably got hit with some type of rubble, and they rushed them up that way. There were a few civilians. The LSU unit was there, and me and a couple other EMTs just started trying to bandage who was there and treat who was there.

At that point I was reunited with Captain Pinkus again at that point and some of the other EMS chiefs: Chief Basile, Chief Carrasquillo, Chief Gombo, at that point -- I did see him for a brief minute -- Chief Pascale.

At that point after that area was made for a treatment area for people who were coming in, everybody was being taken care of. Everybody was given water to flush their eyes and to give them some sort of first aid, some sort of comfort, given what they just went through.

At that point about an hour or so, hour and a half after that, me, Captain Pinkus and Chief Pascale proceeded to go to Chelsea Pier, where we stayed basically for the rest of the duration of the evening into the morning.

Q. Were you aware that a second plane had hit one of the towers?

A. Yes. I believe the second plane hit just shortly after probably coming off the Brooklyn Bridge. I didn't really realize it until after, because I believe you felt like the bridge shift as I was coming over, and I never felt it that way. You didn't realize it. My whole modem was just to get across this bridge, get to West and Vesey.

Q. What frequency were you utilizing?

A. At the time I was on the command frequency.

Q. EMS command?

A. Yes.

Q. And were you given any specific locations where to go to; do you recall?

A. No, not until -- no, because when I got to Lieutenant Terranova, basically they were still in the process of setting up staging areas. I believe that the staging area switched quite a few times in the time that I was with him before one had collapsed.

So the decision was trying to put people in areas of safety but the greater number of where we can get the most resources available without anybody.

Q. You said you had seen Chief Kowalczyk's aide. Do you know who that was?

A. I don't know his name offhand. I know him by face. I didn't know his name.

Q. Was there any other EMS people that you saw, firefighters, chiefs, anybody that you recognized?

A. Not so much out of the firefighters.

But like the paramedic, I didn't know him until afterwards. We talked later.

Q. What was his name?

A. Glenn, Mike Glenn.

Basically it was Chief Gombo, Chief Basile, Chief Pascale, Chief Hannafey, Chief Carrasquillo, Chief Scibelli, I saw later in the evening. But most of those -- Alan Cruz on the ALS unit from Manhattan. The MERV driver I knew from 13. I didn't really know his name, but I recall him being. Sedley, Sedley was another LSU driver from Brooklyn. He was there. I remember seeing him.

There was just so many people. Linda McCarthy from EMD. She was there. There was just so many people that I crossed paths with, but then as you're trying to focus on just the task at hand, I was just -- basically coming out of the building after the first collapse, I was nervous for everybody that was standing out there because if it wasn't for Chief Gombo, I mean, I would have been out there too instead of inside.

I don't know. I really don't know, if Chief Gombo would have not sent me in that building, I thought we would have been amongst them. I'm glad and relieved to see that he wasn't hurt or injured during the aftermath.

I lost sight of Commissioner Gregory. I didn't see him. I didn't hear of him until like at least the next day. Also Captain D'Amato, I didn't hear his whereabouts or how he was.

Once I got to Chelsea Pier, Chief Pascale assigned me with Captain Boyle, Jack Boyle, and I was assigned with him for a good many hours. We stayed a good 12, maybe 13 hours together, driving people back and forth, the doctors, setting up the doctors and the triage and the temporary morgue that was all down at Chelsea Pier.

I was able to focus on the task basically that was given to me. It was just hard to forget. Every few minutes you thought about somebody you knew back there that you didn't hear was okay. Chief McCracken, for that matter, for a long time, until I got to see him later on in the night.

I didn't hear the passing of the first deputy commissioner until later on, and also Chief Ganci, who I had just saw at that building. I believe once I started to make my move up Vesey more toward North End Avenue, I believe they made probably the decision to see what was going to happen in tower two.

It was my thought that that's where they were fatally taken away from us at that point, that maybe they went down to building two, which is probable because I didn't see them after that.

Q. Is there anything else you would like to before we conclude?

A. No, without really getting into some of the graphical details, that was pretty much as accurately as I can come to say what happened.

Q. Thank you very much for participating in the interview.

A. You're welcome.

MR. FEILER: The time now is 1052 hours, and this concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER MAUREEN MC ARDLE-SCHULMAN

Interview Date: October 17, 2001

Transcribed by Elizabeth F. Santamaria

MR. CASTORINA: The time now is 1205. We are conducting an interview. We are at Engine 35. My name is Ron Castorina. Your name?

MR. MC COURT: Tom McCourt.

MR. CASTORINA: And your name, ma'am?

A. Maureen McArdle-Schulman.

Q. Could you tell me what your assignment is, and your rank?

A. Assigned to Engine 35. I'm a firefighter first grade.

Q. On September 11, 2001, can you tell me on that particular day what the events were, what you can remember?

A. I came in to work for a roster staff tour. Usually on roster staffing you're detailed out if your company doesn't need you.

I was assigned to 91 Engine. I was in our quarters when the first plane hit. We weren't sure if it was a small plane, a big plane.

So I was in the firehouse when the first plane hit. I had the detail out of the house to 91 Engine and I had just got into my car and left. I got into my car and went over to 91 Engine. I parked on the side street on 111th Street, walked into the quarters. I had all my gear in my arms and the announcement came over that it was a fifth alarm and 91 Engine was responding. It's unusual. It usually comes over the computer. It came over the loudspeaker.

I happened to have my cell phone in my hand, that God. I stuck it in my turnout coat pocket. I got on the rig and responded to the World Trade Center. We ended up going through 112th Street, down to Central Park South. We came out of the park and we ran into all the other rigs. They were all responding. Police cars, unmarked cars. It was like a big caravan down there.

We parked on West Street. You know, basically we were all in line. Whoever was in front of us parked in front of us, we parked behind them. We were on the wrong side of West Street facing the towers. So the windshield was that way so we were on the wrong side of the street. We got out of the rig, got our stuff, carried cylinders, roll-ups, standpipe kit, all our gear, started huffing down West Street. I was a little slower than the rest of them.

Q. Where were you going? Heading on what street?

A. Heading -- West Street, towards the towers.

Q. At this point did the first collapse occur?

A. No, no collapses. The second plane had hit.

Q. So you just saw the two towers burning?

A. Burning. We went to the command center, the lieutenant reported in. There was already 75 to 100 firefighters standing in this parking garage, at the entrance, waiting for assignments.

Companies were coming out, companies were going in for relief. Somebody yelled something was falling. We didn't know if it was part of an airplane coming out, if it was desks coming out. It turned out it was people and they started coming out one after another.

Q. You saw the jumpers?

A. We saw the jumpers coming. We didn't know what it was at first, but then the first body hit and then after that we knew what it was. And they were just like constant --

We were lucky most of them hit the set back, they weren't landing on the ground.

Q. How far were you from where they were jumping at this point?

A. I didn't see anyone landing on the ground in front of us. Most of them were hitting the set back. I'm still across the street in the parking lot. Me and another guy from 91 just -- I was getting sick. I felt like I was intruding on a sacrament. They were choosing to die and I was watching them and shouldn't have been so me and another guy turned away and looked at the wall and we could still hear them hit.

The Lieutenant came up to us and said, "We're going in." So we all got our gloves and Scotts back on and went up to the part by the command center, and they said, "We need forcible entry tools." In an engine we don't carry anything but our hose, we have standpipe kits. We had things that we thought we would need. They were sending us to Tower 2, sub-basement 6.

So I called my husband on my cell phone. I said, "I'm going in. This is where I'm going." I left a message on his machine. He wasn't at his desk at the time. I was standing there and my Captain, who was at the medical office who just had surgery on his shoulder happened to be there.

"What are you doing here? You're on medical?"

He said, "Nobody's on medical anymore. Everybody's at the scene."

Okay. So my Captain and the chauffeur from 91 volunteered to go back to 91 to get us some tools we needed, because there was nobody to let us into sub-basement 6 or anyplace else.

So they went to the left. We're standing at the command center, listening to everybody give their positions. You know, what stairway they were using. You know, escape stairway, rescue stairway. Things like that or what floor they're on. We're hearing the whole thing where everybody is.

Someone comes running over to the table and said, "A firefighter was hit by a jumper. He needs last rites." So a couple of guys went to the right to give this guy last rites with Father Judge, I guess. I don't know who else ran over. My Captain and the chauffeur from 91 went to the left. We're standing there and we're looking up and we're trying not to look at people jumping. We really felt like we were intruding on them. And the building had red fire, a ring of fire. They started pumping and bouncing and I'm standing there staring. Finally somebody yelled "run." It took everybody out of that trance we were in. We ran back into the garage. Anybody that went to the right was killed. People that went to the left were okay.

Q. Do you remember seeing anybody in particular that ran that way?

A. No.

Q. You don't remember?

A. No. I was just mesmerized, absolutely mesmerized by this building. I couldn't -- we just -- it was like watching people jump. You just can't believe what you're seeing and you're just standing there like idiots staring.

And ran back into the garage -- I mean I didn't run, because I was ahead of the pack. By the time I turned around, it was asses and elbows and I have a really bad sense of direction. That's why I stay in the Engine.

So I moved all the way over to the right and there was a curb and I ran my foot along the curb.

I still had my roll-up on my shoulder, ran my foot along the curb cause if I get turned around, I don't want to keep walking in the same direction. So I just was walking along with this stuff on my shoulder trying to stay away from the pack because I didn't want to get killed by anybody running and the thing -- I didn't actually watch it come down. It just came down behind me. I was stuck inside the garage and --

Q. That's while you were on the move?

A. Yeah. I was just kind of walking and feeling close with my foot. I didn't want to get lost. And all I kept thinking was this is the garage they blew up last time. You know, you always hear about secondary problems.

So we got in there and pretty much everybody started "Are you okay? Are you okay?" I was feeling around the ground to see if anybody had fallen and then some guy said, "I know how to get out of here." So by now I put my face piece on and it was full of crap. So I sucked in what I now find is asbestos. It was all in my eyes. My eyes were on fire.

This guy says, "I know how to get out of here."

So we're all like holding on to eachother's shirt sleeves and he leads us outside and the guy next to us starts having an asthma attack. So he says, "I need your mask." So I gave him my face piece and me and someone else pulled in a police van with air conditioning on.

And we were outside and except for a piece of a tree that I was standing next to 15 minutes before that, I didn't know where outside was. It was complete black. Everybody had 2 inches of soot on them. It was just you couldn't breathe. You know, we really couldn't breathe.

So afterwards everybody seemed to calm down. I went back into the garage and I started calling for my company that I was with. The Lieutenant found me and one of the guys from 91 found me. We were still missing one member. The Lieutenant said, "Come on. Let's get out of here." They actually took me into the parking garage and through the building and came out like half a block away. They said, "Go to the rig and stay there."

So I went back to the rig with the other guy, the other firefighter. I said, I got a find our other guy. So I went back to the rig, checked the rig. The rig was still running. Because that's what they would do, is keep the rig running all the time. The lights were still on. So I said to him, kidding, I said, "Let's move the rig a little further." So he backed up a block and we're standing there waiting for everybody to come. Nobody is coming back and there were people wandering all over.

It was, you know, we all kind of started going back towards grounds zero because we were missing people. We felt like you weren't doing anything standing there. And right now the sun was out and all of a sudden you're hearing, there is a guy dressed in army fatigues with automatic weapons shooting people, that there is four more planes missing.

Q. You're hearing all these rumors?

A. Yes, rumors. There was a guy with a little TV, like a civilian, hooked it up to a building with an outlet. He said, there is eight planes all together and they only found four and, you know, we're getting bomb scares on this building and we're running for our lives.

I said, "Where are we supposed to go?" He said, "Go by the water."

Q. And there is supposed to be a guy shooting at you?

A. Yes. "Go by the water at least there is no building there." I said, "But these buildings are so big. If they come down, it doesn't matter." So we went running, not knowing where to go. So finally I get back to the rig and I said, "I got a call my husband." I just called him and told him I was going in the tower. The tower just imploded. So finally I couldn't get a signal on my cell phone. I found a pay phone.

A guy gave me his calling card. The pay phone, he had used it two seconds before. It didn't work for me. So finally I get a hold of my husband. I said, "I'm okay." I must have been hysterical. He said, "Calm down. Calm down." I said, "I'm okay. I made it. I'm all right." Then I called my father, I have two brothers on the job. So I called my father to find out where my brothers were. Both of them already called. I'm one of the few families that lucked out.

Then I went back to the rig again and we were standing there, I'm standing there with this one firefighter. We still don't have the Lieutenant back. We're still missing one member. We're standing there and I look up. The second tower starts with the ring of fire. Some puffing and bouncing.

Q. Just like the first one?

A. So he said, "It's going, just like the first one." So I ran to the back of the rig and got on the back step. I still have my gear on, I'm in a fetal position. I was afraid that if I got in the rig that if anything came flying down the street it would go through the windshield and kill me. So I figure I've got the whole rig in front of me. The hose bed is there. Hopefully if I stay down low enough -- he went and ran under a rig, got under a rig and the second building came down. The second building came down.

So the second building came down, I didn't see him for a while. Kind of like I saw him for two seconds and he said, "I gotta find the rest of the guys." And I said, "You know, I'm gonna move the rig again. I'm a little too close." So we actually moved it with him.

Q. So when the second building came down did all the rubble and the dirt --

A. Yes. Came right down West Street.

Q. Right up to your rig?

A. Just the way -- just the way it shows in the news. That picture of this cloud coming down the street. That's exactly what happened. So I moved the rig another two blocks away and I turned it around to not face the towers and the other guy kind of saw some people he knew. We still didn't have a Lieutenant. We were still missing one of the guys from 91. The chauffeur from 91 I heard they had taken to the hospital. He had chest pains. I saw my Captain after that. I knew he was okay. So I was walking back and forth. "How close should I get."

All of a sudden building number seven now has twelve stories of fire and I ran into one of my guys, from my company, and from there he told me where the rest of my company was. So I found the rest of my company. And they were in the parking garage, which I didn't know when I saw it if it was the parking garage I had been in earlier.

He said he needed search rope. So I found a rig and I found a search rope and I told them to search -- how far the rope went.

So I, you know, I really didn't know what the situation was and 35 Engine had lines on Tower 2. On Tower 1 they were doing some searching and then they pulled everybody out to get away from the scene. So we basically -- I found my Lieutenant, we finally found the missing guy. Everybody in my group was okay. Everybody was accounted for. I told the other Lieutenant, "I'm staying with my own company. You guys are too all over the place for me. I want a company that stays together. My company stays together."

So basically we went back to the rig and by now the recalls were coming down. The bus was stopping right by the rig. Everybody company that got off the bus was taking whatever they could off our rig. You know, tools, whatever. So basically we're standing there. We didn't even have a Scott mask at this point. Everything is gone.

Q. How was your breathing? Were you okay?

A. It was horrible. I had my eyes cleaned out about 12 times.

Q. Did you go to the hospital?

A. No. Somebody left a baseball cap in the rig, so I grabbed that, because the sun was killing my eyes. I mean it took about a week and a half before the --

Q. From the dirt.

A. Plus it didn't help. I put the face piece on and I sucked the air in and the whole thing was full with whatever that was and all the crap went into my eyes too. Pretty much that's it. You know, we stayed at the rig the rest of the day, hung out, got water when we could, found a bathroom I could use, which was real important to me, and stayed down and at 9:00 o'clock I finally we all started wandering around and I went down to where the first overpass is and I saw a Captain sitting at the table. And what happened was I heard one of the other female firefighters on the radio and I wanted to find her to find out -- some girlfriend of the Captain of Engine 6 and I knew her company was the first or second through there. So I wanted to see if anybody knew if she was working. So I didn't find --

Q. So you knew your brothers were okay.

A. I knew my two brothers were okay. My brother Kevin, he's in Squad 41. He wasn't working so he was in on the recalls. So anybody that came in afterwards was pretty much all right. It was just the initial sign-ins. And I passed his rig.

Q. Where does your other brother work?

A. In Queens. I knew he wouldn't be there unless he was on detail, from 84. Again, I saw the guy, the Captain I knew, he used to be a firefighter on 42 Truck, Charlie, and he said to me, "Oh, my God you're alive. We have you as missing." So I said, "okay."

What happened was there was a big communication problem. They kept calling my house from the battalion to see if anybody heard from us. Because they didn't know who went down. Because with the recall, anybody who was here jumped on the rig.

Q. Right.

A. So everybody went. So, you know, that's why rescue companies lost 10, 12 guys. At a quarter to 9 they grabbed everybody they could and got on the rigs. Pretty much that's it.

MR. CASTORINA: Okay. The time now is 1220. This concludes the interview. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER THOMAS HANSARD

Interview Date: October 18, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. TAMBASCO: Today is October 18th. I'm Mike Tambasco with the World Trade Center Task Force. We're conducting an interview with Firefighter THOMAS HANSARD of Engine 209 at the quarters of Engine 209. The interview is beginning at 1438 hours.

Q. Tom, I just ask you to tell us your story.

A. I was here at work, changing tours. They said that an airplane hit the World Trade Center. We went up on the roof, because from the roof you can see the World Trade.

Q. That's right.

A. We got up on the roof and saw the explosion, not knowing that it was a second plane hitting the World Trade Center. As the explosion came in, the box came in and we responded to the World Trade Center. I had the backup position on the engine, and we went.

We went over -- there was a little bit of traffic on Park Avenue. We got down to the Brooklyn Bridge where we took it quickly, and they had the Brooklyn Bridge wide open for us. No cars, just us and police.

We pulled over and we came across Chambers Street. We came straight down Trinity and we stopped at the corner of Trinity and Liberty, which 217 was parked right on this corner and 230 was on this corner, and we stopped on this corner.

We got out and picked up our equipment, our Scotts and extra air bottles and hose, and we started to walk down Liberty Street towards --

Q. The World Trade Center?

A. -- the tower.

Q. So you were walking west. Okay.

A. As we walked down to the tower, we went to 10 and 10, thinking that that was the command center.

Q. Okay. Right.

A. It wasn't the command center. They told us to go down onto West Street, Liberty and West, which was the command center. So now we walked down the block, and walking on this block there were people waving at us and jumping. We walked through like body parts and all of this stuff on the street, littered on the street. We passed a guy, Suhr, from 216, his helmet and his stuff was down, and guys took him away.

From there we came down to Washington. Something was in the street there. We cut up Washington, and we went down Cedar, and then we came back up West Street.

Q. You came back around up West. Okay.

A. We were standing right here on this corner, and the lieutenant from 219 was looking for the command post. We stopped right there while he went to check in at the command post when we were standing there.

As we stood there, another member said, "Let's move a little bit," because a lot of stuff was falling on us. We moved about 20 feet. Once we moved that 20 feet, the first tower came down.

Q. You were like right on West Street and Liberty, right there?

A. We were like right here, West Street and Liberty, and we ran across here to in front of the building here, which was like One Federal plaza.

Q. That's the one that the walkway goes across to.

A. Yeah.

Q. Right.

A. The walkway, we were under it and like over here. I don't know where it is. We just ran across the highway or street or whatever it is, and two guys ran into the revolving door but it was locked. I just stood up against the side of the building, and I found a little corner in front of the building, and the building came down.

It started coming down. We ran just there. The building just came down. I stood there. We didn't know what to do or whatever. Then the next thing, the asbestos or whatever was coming and you couldn't breathe, couldn't see.

It just took forever before you could do anything. I don't know in time how long it took or whatever. But when it finally cleared, I got up out of my little corner, and I heard a cop's radio, which was right near me, and I dug about a foot or 18 inches of cement, looking for some cop underneath this. I didn't find him; I just found the radio.

Q. Just the radio.

A. I found two other guys, two guys that were with me, Frank Dileo and Mike Minogue. They went into that revolving door, and the cop came in and Frank took his night stick and busted the window in order to get into the --

Q. Revolving door?

A. Yeah. So they were good. Then Todd made it around the corner of that building. I didn't know he could run that fast. It was coming out so quickly. It was just get as far as you could.

Now the four of us met up, and Frankie was blind from --

Q. Dust and other stuff in his eyes?

A. I was half blind, and my eyes were all blurry. Todd, I don't know that he was okay.

We regrouped, and we were going to the tower now to look for survivors. We didn't know where our officer was or whatever that we were looking for. No sooner than we started, the tower -- we regrouped like on this corner.

Q. Down by Albany Street.

A. Yeah. We ended up going this way to look for something. I don't know why we ended up over --

Q. Towards the water, westbound.

A. I think over here there was a bar over there and there were people running all over the place.

We regrouped there. Then it's like, okay, we're going back to the building to look for survivors. As we were going back towards the building, the second tower came down. I just stood there in shock. We were further away from the second tower.

I sat there, and I couldn't believe that I was watching this antenna come down. Then finally somebody just grabbed me, and I went back into the building. There's a bar over there.

Q. Right.

A. After that cleared up, however long that took, then we went back, trying to get into tower --

Q. The south tower?

A. Right. And I ran into -- who was it? Was it Cruthers? Mike Cruthers? I knew him from like -- he didn't know who I was. I was just asking him what we could do, because being backup I had no radio, I had no communication. I didn't know what was going on.

We were going back towards there, and all of the rigs now and the EMS and everything was on fire. People were running. It was --

Q. Pandemonium?

A. Yeah. We were trying to figure out what to do. Now I think where the hotel was --

Q. Right, where Three World Trade Center was.

A. That was all down. We were climbing over the rubble. We were trying to get -- from there we were trying to get into the lobby and climb over all this rubble and get into this lobby, because there were reports that there were firemen.

Q. Trapped.

A. -- trapped by some elevator bank. When we were going up there, there was fire burning. I don't know if it was Liberty Street or what, but you could see down maybe four floors to the street. You're climbing over the rubble, and you're trying to get in place.

We had no water pressure. We had some hose lines run. There was no water pressure, and we were just trying to put the fire out and make a push.

From there some squad guys and some rescue guys came in, and they were taking over after this report. From there it was like just trying to search for hours. Finally I walked away like hours later. Time didn't really mean a whole lot.

Q. Right.

A. I went and I was looking for my rig on Trinity. I ran into another guy that was on light duty at Metrotech. He came, and we walked, looking -- we walked back up Cedar back to Trinity, looking for our rig, and I didn't find it. And I was looking for the chauffeur.

He left. He was hurting. I came back to this section I think where Rescue 4 was.

Q. The north tower.

A. Yeah, in the middle somewhere.

Q. The middle.

A. I found our rig over there, like right -- maybe it was back here.

Q. I've got you, right here, away from the buildings on the other side of West.

A. I don't know how it got here and then over to there. But it was there, and it was pumping to tower ladders and to hand lines from the marine unit, which was over here somewhere.

So since I'm the chauffeur, I just took it over.

Q. Right.

A. You know, the guys -- you know we have a new rig. I pumped until like 1:30 that night. The new rig has a computer throttle, and every time we lost water it overcompensated for itself and it started overheating. Then everything was clogged from --

Q. The soot and debris?

A. Yeah, the debris. It started smoking real bad. The chief said take it out of there. I took it out, and another rig took my spot. I just parked it over here. There's like a walkway back here.

I drove the rig down like here and left it here for a while.

Q. Like by that Merrill Lynch building, around the back, closer to the water?

A. Yeah, because there were boats and a walkway. I left it there for a couple more hours.

I grouped up with all the guys from the company, and we all were here just for a while, because guys came in. Everyone regroups and (inaudible). They were going in and out and doing whatever.

I had enough. It was like 1:30. I was there from like 9:15 or 9:20 before the tower. I had enough. They took the chauffeur away to the hospital. They took Frankie to the hospital. They took Todd to the hospital. So it was just me and Mike left.

So me and Mike got on the rig around 1:00, 1:30, and we brought it back to the firehouse. We had nothing. All our hose was taken off the rig, all the equipment. You know, guys just took whatever they could use. When we came here, we restocked the rig.

From there, I called 230 and there were guys that came in and were just hanging here. They came over and --

Q. They got on your rig?

A. Yeah. They helped me, because I was worried about the overheating. We washed out all of the filters and whatever we could do when we got it here to get it running better. They were going to help us ride, and we got the rig back in service.

The lieutenant from 230, he came in. I figured I'd let him be the boss. We went back to the dispatcher, and the dispatcher sent us back out at about 5. Then we went back at 5:00. When we went back again, it was just trying to search and looking for people.

I was pumping water -- at that time I was the chauffeur, and we parked back like Broadway. There were rigs there. We just parked our rig. I didn't even want to pump from ours. I used the other rigs. Actually I was pumping three rigs. I'm trying to think of the numbers. There were three rigs relaying water.

Q. All the way up from Broadway?

A. Yeah. Even further than Broadway, because one was down Broadway and Vesey?

Q. Yeah, Vesey, right around in here.

A. That relayed to here, and then that was relaying to another one, which was like right on this corner.

Q. By the cemetery?

A. They were supplying two towers and a hand line.

I had to make sure, because this one was running out of fuel. Then the one I was in was running out of fuel. I was just one chauffeur with three -- actually I had four rigs.

Q. Running, running, running.

A. Right. The guys went -- they did whatever they could. But I was pretty much from there on the street.

By then somebody came, sanitation or transit, to fuel me up. So we got them all fueled, and we just hung out there, because I'm sitting there ready to go. I'm sitting there saying that things must be organized. These guys must know that I'm -- I'm thinking I'm here doing regular fire and I'd be out of there by 9 or 10:00. I ended up being there until like 4 o'clock.

We went back here and just back to regular. We went back again.

Q. When did you eventually get home?

A. That night on the 12th I got home maybe around 5:00. I got home at 5 because it was my girlfriend's daughter's birthday. I picked her up later, and we went to eat. We passed like 105 and 219. They had their street closed off. I stopped in there, because I know all the guys there. We went to eat, and by then it was like the next day.

Basically that's what happened.

Q. Well, Tom, unless you've got anything else you want to add to it, any feelings like that -- like I said, it's going down as a history, so it's up to you if you want to say anything else; if not --

A. It was just very unorganized. All of the bosses were killed, so no one knew what to do.

Q. Right.

A. Just the way the manpower was and all of the reports that you heard, they said we were under attack. It was like, look, you've got to do this, you've got to get ready for the next one. We heard all kinds of stories.

Q. Sure.

A. The truck was told to go through the Battery Tunnel, which saved their lives, and they had to walk through the Battery Tunnel. So by the time they walked through, everything fell.

Q. It was down already.

A. Then we're here reports that they blew up the Brooklyn Bridge. We're like, wow, we just came across the bridge. You know what I'm saying? I expected worse. I just think that the organization was -- like guys coming in off duty or whatever, manpower, everything has to run even in the chaos.

Q. Right, right.

A. When we got back to Bed Stuy, there was no one here. If there was a small fire or whatever it would spread -- the rest of the city was left defenseless. The building was way too big. We had the one years ago. I felt that they should have torn it down or do whatever then and spread out. The rest of the city, like around here, is vacant, vacant warehouses and property.

Q. They could use a few buildings around here.

A. Yeah. And it's close to the Wall Street area. Now that Metrotech is being built up, people are looking on this side of the river.

Q. Right.

A. That's basically all I have to say.

Q. All right, Tom. Listen, thanks a lot for your interview?

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT JOHN ROTHMUND

Interview Date: October 18, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. RADENBERG: Today is October 17th, 2001. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department, City of New York. The time is now 1655 hours. I'm conducting an interview with --

EMT ROTHMUND: JOHN ROTHMUND, EMT, Battalion 22.

MR. RADENBERG: This interview is being conducted at EMS Battalion 22 regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

Q. All yours, John.

A. Okay. I was working 22 Adam with John Heer, my partner. We got assigned a job along with I believe five other units at the time. They told us to respond to the foot of the Verrazano Bridge and stand by. So we went. We were 63.

By the time we got to the foot of the VZ, they had already called us through to the Brooklyn side of the VZ and stand by. Not a clue, never got a job, never heard anything. We really didn't know what was going on.

We go over the bridge. As we get over the bridge, we look to our left and we can see one of the towers was burning. So we had an idea what was going on. We got about to the foot of the Verrazano Bridge, and they called us again and told us to take it to the Brooklyn side of the Battery Tunnel and stand by.

Once we got onto the Gowanus and over that bridge, there was a chain of emergency vehicles. We just kept going. We got to the foot of the tunnel. There was no way to turn off, no way to go, so you had to keep going.

We went into Manhattan, came out through the tunnel. We wound up going up West up until I think it was Liberty, and staging was set at Liberty and West, right in that -- it could have been here (indicating), over there.

At the time we had no idea what was going on. The only thing we knew, there was a fire, and we knew that from looking over off the bridge that a plane had hit it, but we thought it was a Cessna, like a little tiny private airplane. Nobody had a clue it was a commercial liner.

Q. Right.

A. So we set up staging at that area,

Liberty and West, and my partner and I got out. We were one of the first three at that location, ambulances. We got out. Saw how close we were in relation to the towers, we also saw that both towers were in flames. We didn't know what was going on there either.

We decided to go see who we could talk to. We relocated the staging. We felt that it was totally unsafe where we were. So me and my partner tried to find authority figures, and there was really none around. The only person that seemed to have any kind of sense of why the staging was there was a voluntary unit.

We figured, you know what, we're just going to relocate them. We relocated from Liberty and West down to South End. We started to line ambulances from South End up until Liberty. So you came from South End and Albany. I imagine it was Albany. Right now I can't remember. From the map that's what it looks like.

Q. Okay.

A. I don't know, there had to be 20, 30 ambulances there that we moved. We felt it was unsafe where we were.

Q. Right.

A. A long story short, we get all our stuff out, our equipment out, and we stand by. We were just waiting. We received one patient which had a head injury, laceration, who we gave to the voluntary Hazollah unit, because they already had a previous patient and they were going to go 82 to the hospital. So we put them with them so we don't lose another bus.

At this time we saw people jumping from the roof, so we kind of realized the gravity of everything. We really just thought it was a bad fire. We really didn't know what the hell was going on. We saw so many people jumping. We just waited.

We had walked up with equipment and whatnot from this location and up until Liberty, and we were standing by on Liberty just trying to see what was going on. Again, there was really no authority figures whatsoever.

At that time we were looking at the top of the towers and all the rubble and people coming off, and all of a sudden you heard -- it sounded like another airplane, or a missile. It was like a slow shake. The whole ground just vibrated and shook. We just told everybody to run, run into a building, let's go, run, run, run.

We ran off of Liberty. We couldn't get very far. We got into a superette. We threw as many people as were coming into this superette, me and my partner. We never left each other's side the whole entire time. We were like Velcro. We got everybody into the deli superette. I don't know what the hell it was. It was big. It was good size.

After that the debris was just coming down and coming down. Nobody could really stand there anymore. There was nobody else coming in, so we went in. We got inside. Again, we're the only kind of emergency service people that were in there. We were just as scared and nervous as everybody else. We just couldn't panic.

We had about 40 people in this deli that we had to try and keep calm for a while. For the longest time we thought we were pinned in. We thought the rubble was in front. It was rubble in front of the deli, in front of the windows. Whatever debris can be. We really didn't know. We just saw dark smoke.

One guy fainted in the back, some Parks Department person, green uniform, gold shield. We roused him. He woke up. At that time after trying to keep everybody in the back of the store and calm, we tried to find an alternate exit.

As we were trying to find an exit, somebody came down from the buildings up top; I don't know how many floors. I know we walked three floors. Anyway, we tried to find it, and they said there's women and children up top in the building that are stuck. They can't breathe, there's smoke, there's so much smoke nobody could breathe.

So me and my partner grabbed a couple wet towels, ran upstairs, pulled out probably upwards of 10 to 20 people, women, children, pregnant women, pets, whatever the hell was up there, and we brought them all down into the store, because we had seen a back door.

The back door was just as much filled with soot and smoke, but it was a way out. So we figured we would keep everybody in here protected for a while. We brought everybody down. We just sat there and waited for a minute or two we saw that the front was clearing up. Everybody remained in side for a little while.

We went outside, and you could see your hand in front of your face. That's how much it had cleared up. So we decided we've got to go and see what's going on. So we told everybody stay inside for a few minutes and let the dust settle. We had no patients. Everybody was relatively shook up, whatnot, but for the most part everybody was all right.

We went outside. It was just like horrible. It was like a war. There was just nothing but soot and concrete chunks and whatever everywhere. Ambulances were covered in soot, doors wide open. There was nothing you could do. Everything was just a foot of soot and dirt, whatever you want to call it.

We came out of the deli, and we see Chief Grant. We see him walk by. He was kind of dazed a little bit altered, a little AMS there. We went up to him to actually look for some kind of -- to find out where we were going, what the situation was. He became more of a patient than anything. We made him our priority at the time because nobody else was there anyway. We put him back in the deli.

We told everybody it's clearing up, to head to the water, come around, go down toward the esplanade. We treated him, gave him oxygen, flushed his eyes, gave water, whatever, tried to hook him up. He was a little bit shocked, is really what it came down to.

We treated him for a few minutes. A few minutes -- time had no concept whatsoever, really no concept. It could have been 15 minutes; it could have been 5 seconds. I have no clue. We took care of him.

We wound up having another patient outside with minor bumps and bruises. We went to check on him with my partner. We never left each other. When I say "me," I mean "we"; okay?

Q. Right.

A. We went to check on this person. We turned around and Chief Grant was walking out of the building, heading right to the water. We figured, you know what, he's going in a good direction, let him go. We're going to watch him walk down and that's it.

That was the only place that had any kind of air was down next to the water.

Q. Right.

A. So we sent as many people as we could down towards the water if they're able to walk. We did have a few fractures and whatnot. Splinted like lightning, you know what I mean, got them out of there.

Then we got into the ambulance, threw the stretcher back in the ambulance, because it was still running, and we figured the other tower's got to be coming down. So we took the ambulance and we moved the ambulance away down to the esplanade. Where we figured it would be kind of safe.

Q. Right.

A. As we were going down I think it was Albany, I imagine. I'm really not sure. As we were going down Albany, I saw a captain. Oh, and at the time, after Grant had walked down towards the water, Chief McCracken came walking down and walked back up. I couldn't catch the man. I don't know where he went. He disappeared into the smoke. I couldn't catch up to him no matter how much I tried. So we figured we're alone here, you know.

As we were pulling down, we saw some captain. I really don't know who the gentleman was -- heavyset guy, black hair, it appeared to be, white helmet, blue shirt and the bars, you know -- asking us for a ride. I'm not going anywhere, I'm telling him. We're going down to the corner here, you know.

I guess shock kind of took over him too, kind of getting emotional and whatnot. So we stopped and we let him into to the empty seat that we were going to drive, took him down.

The inside of the ambulance was in no better shape than the outside air was. But we brought him down to there, told him here, get out, parked the truck, turned the battery off, whatever, got another patient.

So I walked him back up again and got another patient. When I say "patients," minor: bruises, cuts and scratches, fractures that, go ahead, keep walking. Fix you up quick and go.

As we made our way back into it again trying to get -- to help, the other tower came down. We couldn't see anything, the smoke was just -- we couldn't -- the stuff, soot.

Q. Where were you when the second tower came down?

A. The second tower came down --

Q. Still back down in this area?

A. No. We were probably up on South End or you know what, it might have been more on West. Yeah, it had to be on West, because we had moved the bus down and we had started walking north to get -- to help. That's what you assumed happened was the towers came down.

Q. Right.

A. We didn't know whether it came down or not. We really thought it was another plane hitting, but we figured if it was it was devastating, whatever it was.

After we got the bus to safety, because that was our only egress out of there was that bus.

Q. Right.

A. We treated another one, sent him on his way and went back up. Like I said, did a couple fractures -- what I'm guessing is Albany to west side. I'm really not sure.

We went up toward midtown, and we went left on either South End or West. Right before we got anywhere near the towers, the other one -- you couldn't see the towers. You looked up and you couldn't see what was there or not. There was nothing but smoke.

All of a sudden it happened again, the same exact sound, the same thing.

Q. The noise and the vibrations?

A. The noise and the vibrations.

At that point everything -- it just came down. All you saw was the cloud of smoke coming at you, so we ran. No shame. We ran --

Q. None at all.

A. -- right down Albany again to the esplanade. We escorted hundreds, hundreds of people down the esplanade, walked down to -- I have no idea where it was. We got to a point in the esplanade that seemed like it had a dock on it of some sort. A fireman or police officer --

I was with maybe a handful of firemen, maybe two or three police officers.

As I got down and escorted people out, we were trying to keep away from the smoke. We only had the respirators, which was after the second tower came down anyway.

Q. Right.

A. We just inhaled that air. And the air was nice over here. If you stayed on the bottom, stayed down on the ground and sucked a little air, you got a clear breath.

Q. Right.

A. Pulled all kinds of people down. Again, we didn't know what was going on. We thought it was a bomb, you know, like planes were dropping from the sky or missiles were hitting. We didn't know what the hell was going on.

So a police officer took out a Chinese restaurant door, knocked it in. Whatever the case may be, he got in. We started lifting people up into this restaurant, the women, the kids, anybody, elderly people. We had to lift them over some kind of railing, because it was the easiest access from the esplanade to get them in and out, because, again, it was just like a war zone. You didn't know what the hell was happening.

So we got as many people as we could that came walking along that esplanade into that building and kept them there. At that time I believe Mark Harris -- I saw Mark Harris and Kathy Zarr. They came over, and as they started to make up the triage area with zero equipment. We had nothing. Just maybe a supportive thing for themselves or for the patients. We really had nothing to do anything with.

The boats started coming in on the corner over the water. We started pulling out the women and children from where we put them in not 20 minutes before or however long before. We started pulling them back out, put them on boats to get them over to New Jersey. I don't know how long we did that for. Again, treatment for minor things along the way, nothing to speak of. We pulled them all out.

We didn't like the idea of having a triage here because we had nothing. We decided we've got to walk and find somebody else, some kind of brass.

Q. Right?

A. After this whole place was evacuated, there was nobody left on this esplanade, me and my partner took off walking down -- I don't see it on the map. I really wouldn't know where to begin what the name of the street would be.

Q. Let me see if I have another map. I don't know if that's going to be any better.

A. Not a bad map. We were right here. This would be --

Q. South Cove Park?

A. Right. This is where we were. South Cove Park is where we were putting people on boats and where we had put the people into that restaurant, keeping them safe and out of the fumes, the smoke.

After we got everybody off of that esplanade and out of that restaurant, women and children, onto these boats, we had no patients. It was just mostly men who were totally capable of handling themselves.

Q. Right.

A. Police officers there, firemen, still remained there. Like I said, we had no brass. We had no equipment to set up a triage spot. So we started to walk down along the esplanade down South Cove Park. As we were about to turn the corner, we saw another EMS guy. I don't know who he was. He said they set up a triage point, a staging point, at South Ferry and they also set one up at Chelsea Pier.

So in relation to where we were at the time, we felt that the south ferry was a lot closer. So before we walked any further, we decided we've got to go back and see what we could do. We turn around, went back up. As we went back up, everybody was just coming back down. I mean, firemen, cops, everybody, just coming back away from there. Nobody was saying much of anything, just like don't go there, just leave, don't go in there.

So we went back up to where we had parked our ambulance on Albany and the esplanade, went to get back into the ambulance, and the windows were all gone. All the windows were blown out in the back. We tried to get in to start it. There was an amazing cloud of soot in there. The soot was on the seats like six inches deep. We jumped in to try to get it started, and she was dead.

So we then walked the whole esplanade down to I guess maybe First Avenue, First Place, still on the esplanade, though, to where we found a chief. I don't know who the man was. Nicest guy in the world.

Q. EMS chief?

A. EMS chief. EMS chief. I don't know who he was. He didn't want to hear anything but how we were. I guess we looked pretty horrible at the time. He asked us if we needed treatment, whatnot. We said we needed a little rest, a little water, wipe our eyes out of the soot.

He said he was setting up a small staging spot with just one ambulance. He had equipment, had oxygen. He didn't have an oxygen regulator. It just so happened I had my own personal regulator on me that I didn't want to leave in the ambulance and I took, which I never saw again. It was gone. I gave him the oxygen.

Again, we set up a treatment area right at that area. I don't know at all where that would be except for maybe First and esplanade if that even exists. Needless to say, we sat there for an hour or so. Again, time really is hard.

Q. Right.

A. Evacuating people off of Manhattan onto boats with the Fire Department and Police Department. We treated whomever needed to be treated in the ambulance that was there. There was about maybe five or six other techs there, and I imagine the chief stayed. I don't know who it would be.

We didn't do much treatment after that point because we were pretty shot. He was just letting us sit for a few minutes, cooling off, whatever. If I had to guess, I would say this was about 1:00 now, maybe 2:00. This was late. We were there for a good piece of time. We didn't get down to this ferry until maybe 2, 3:00, something like that.

Q. Okay.

A. I'm really not sure. But he had told us that this area was a safe area. He had heard something about the ferry being set up as a triage point, but he wasn't sure. He said as soon as he gets more information he'll move us if he needs to. But as it was, we were in a safe area. We had a steady flow of people who were potential patients. So we remained there for a good piece of time. I don't know how long.

After most of the patients evacuated off the island already in the boats -- and there were numerous amounts of boats along the promenade, just pulling people on. You throw them on.

Q. Right.

A. We all picked up and walked. I guess the esplanade goes around lower Manhattan. So we walked along the water across a park -- I don't know where the park is; here you go, Robert F. Wagner Park -- down to the ferry.

We got to the terminal, and it was like a godsend, because everybody's in there. All the triage stuff was set up.

That was it. We remained there. Not many people to treat at that time. Everybody was off the island. Anybody that was walking and able to treat was treated and sent off that island already, whether it be on a boat along the promenade or underneath the ferry or Chelsea Pier, whoever walked over there. We didn't have anybody really that I can say was serious. Everybody was gone. They got up and left.

At that point we stayed there until 12:00 that night, maybe, 12:30 that night. I jumped on the ferry and came back to the island. I didn't have a ride once I got to the island. We had to take a train to Eltingville. We sat on the corner of Eltingville waiting for a lieutenant to come pick us up, which there was none of.

We wound up getting a ride from some hell of a nice guy that just pulled over and drove us back to the station. So that was the tie-in to the fitting night.

I don't know what else to say.

Q. When you first came into Manhattan through the battery, you came up the West Side Highway coming up there?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember who else was with you when you got up to West and Liberty up there?

A. No. As far as units?

Q. Not necessarily the unit numbers.

A. I know a couple of the guys, but I'm new out here too. So I don't know them by name or anything.

Q. They were from --

A. No, they weren't from EMS. They were from Staten Island, yes. One was a Staten Island unit which pulled up -- I don't know, I'd have to say a few minutes, four minutes after I did, maybe.

Q. Volunteer units?

A. Yeah, volunteer.

Q. Staten Island Hospital?

A. Yeah, Staten Island Hospital.

One guy's name was Mitch who was over there. Then I saw a Vinnie's unit. These are ones that I took note of because I knew the guys.

Q. Right.

A. There was a few Hazollah. There was a couple of Richmond County. I saw some Metro people.

Again, when I pulled up it seemed they had this triage spot where the ambulances were sitting, awaiting patients. There was, I have to say, a bravo ambulance, if I'm not mistaken. I don't really know for sure. None of them were EMS. None of these ambulances were EMS who set up this staging point. That's why we changed it. We said, you know what, this is not a spot for us to be in, so we moved it around.

Q. Okay.

A. That's all I remember. Nobody stopped there anymore. Everybody just turned around and came down the street. They didn't think twice about it.

That was it. I saw no brass. I saw no brass.

Q. On Liberty? You didn't come across any supervisors?

A. No. There was, I imagine it was a lieutenant, whether it was EMS or the Fire Department. I saw numerous PD who instructed me where to go, and the lieutenant instructed me where to go. I couldn't tell you who he was. If you paid me a million dollars, I wouldn't know.

There was umpteen brass all over here, but we hadn't gotten that far yet. After we relocated our ambulances, we got up to Liberty and started walking in, and it happened. Everything came down. We didn't know where, what. We just took cover, basically.

It was west side to Liberty. We relocated from Liberty to South End and Albany.

Q. Okay. Any thoughts or comments?

A. No. I'm glad I made it out of there; sorry for the people that didn't. I wish we could have done more, but there was nothing we could do.

Q. I thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER FRANK SWEENEY

Interview Date: October 18, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. CUNDARI: Today's date is October 18th, 2001. The time is 9:35. I'm George Cundari with Richard Dun of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting the interview with the following individual.

Please state your name, rank, title and assigned command.

FIREFIGHTER SWEENEY: My name is Frank Sweeney, firefighter second grade, assigned to Engine 3.

Q. Frank, can you just tell us the events of September 11th, 2001?

A. I was assigned to Engine 3 approximately two weeks before this happened, so I was kind of unfamiliar with the way the high-rise unit operated. But that morning I came in. I got here about 8:00 in the morning, reporting to work. I was upstairs.

I think I was brushing my teeth or something with Angel and Michael. I can remember Angel making fun of Michael, the way he was doing his hair. Angel said, "Frank, go downstairs and make sure they've got your name in the house watch ready to work.

So I came downstairs, and I walked into the house watch. Battalion 7 was to go down to the World Trade Center for a fire. Somebody pops on the news, and we can see the World Trade Center. There was a lot of black smoke coming from the north tower.

Q. Who was working Battalion 7? Who was the chief?

A. Orio Palmer.

Q. Orio Palmer.

A. So they go down. Very shortly after another set of tones go out. I don't know who is being dispatched. I think it might have been Engine 3. Somebody got on the air and said, "Do you want us to bring the high-rise unit?" The dispatcher came back on and said, "Bring everything you've got."

Now the truck guys are getting ready to go. I'm like, "Holy shit, Scott, what do we do? Where do we go?" Because I don't know who goes in the high-rise unit. So Scott said, "Yeah, come with me. I'll drive the high-rise and you sit next to me." I was like, all right cool.

3 Engine got right out. We were right behind them. We were flying down Seventh Avenue. You can already see people are out on the streets looking. People are already watching. The citizens are already watching what's going on.

Q. When you got there did you see a lot of debris on the ground already?

A. When we got to the scene?

Q. Yeah.

A. When we were coming down -- well, we crossed over West Side Highway and were coming down still just -- you could see a lot of things falling from the tower. But no, I can't see a lot of debris on the street, no, because the World Trade Center is actually up on like a parapet wall of some sort. There's like some kind of wall there you can't see.

We got in front of the World Trade Center, and we could see things were falling. Scott and I just looked at each other like this is not a good place to park. Scott turned the high-rise unit around and parked it under the pedestrian walkway.

At that time I remember looking at Engine 3. Engine 3 went really far south, and the lieutenant had them turn the rig around and come back north. So we were actually facing the other way and were near a couple hydrants just north of the high-rise unit and just north of that bridge.

Then another unit comes in around us. It was another engine. I can't remember what engine it was. We're standing there for a short period of time. I remember the lieutenant turned to Scott and I and said, "You know, this could be a terrorist thing. Maybe it was a bomb or something." I can't remember his exact words.

Shortly thereafter Scott said, "What's wrong with the flight patterns around here?" I said, "What are you talking about?" And the south tower blew up. Scott said, "That was a plane." I said, "Scott, it was not a plane. It was probably another bomb." He said, "No, I saw it. It was a plane."

Then a chief came up to him and started yelling at Scott saying, "Are you sure you saw a plane?" He was like getting angry. He wanted to make sure that it was a plane that Scott saw.

Scott said, "Yes, I saw it." That's when things really started changing. You could see the fear in a lot of people's faces.

Q. The plane never came over your head, then?

A. No. That was south of us. That was south of us.

All the meantime, we were seeing people jump. That's what really started getting to me. At first it didn't start getting to me. I was like, all right, people are going to be jumping here. We had to keep our heads up to make sure we don't get hit by any of these.

Then I think we were there an hour and it really started getting to be too much. I saw one woman come down and beheaded. It was just too much.

Q. Are you still looking up at the north tower?

A. Yeah, I'm looking at the north tower. The south tower is going. Somewhere in this time -- it's really hard to tell time frames, but I saw Giuliani with Von Essen, and they were going to what I believe was the command post.

It was set up like maybe in front of the Marriott Hotel, somewhere around there, maybe on the West Side Highway, yeah, in front of Two World Financial Center. They were walking over towards there somewhere.

I can remember a lot of the officers yelling to the guys, "Do not put down your equipment. If you put down your equipment, stand next to it, because you don't know who's putting what down next to us."

We were clearing all of the civilians out of the area. I can remember getting upset with one civilian who was being very theatrical about the jumpers, and I asked him to leave. He didn't need to be there.

I can remember about seven people walking from like at the Marriott over to where we were. I said, "Where are you people coming from?" They said the south tower. But it was only like seven people. Other than that there were no civilians walking in the front there. There was nobody coming out from the towers. I was very surprised about that.

Q. Did you have a lot of chaos or mayhem around you?

A. Not at this point, no. Initially when we parked the rigs there was a lot of civilians still in the area. At this point now it's a lot of security guards from the World Financial Center and a lot of Fire Department and police.

So we're standing by in front of the Winter Garden. The lieutenant has us up one level from the rest of the fireman because he thought if something else were to happen we would be able to run through the Winter Garden, where all these guys would be stuck down there in the basement.

We were actually under the pedestrian bridge at the entrance to the Winter Garden. Scott said, "If something happens, we'll all run into the Winter Garden and go to the right." I said, "Scott, look at this huge concrete pillar here. Nothing's going to go through this thing." Later on the north tower did.

So anyway, we were standing there. One of the chiefs calls for three engines and three trucks to the south tower. I can remember we went back outside, because we walked inside for a short period, just walked through the doors to see where we could run to in case we needed to.

Q. You heard that over your radio?

A. Then we walked back out. Yeah.

Q. That came over your radio?

A. Came over the radio.

Q. Were there a lot of maydays on the radio at that time?

A. No, no. I don't remember maydays at that time, no.

The lieutenant said, "Let's go, 3 Engine." I bent over to pick up the hose, and I hear what sounded like firecrackers and a low rumble. I look up, and the south tower -- I could see the top part of the siding overlapping the bottom side of the siding. The siding actually was like this. Then I saw the dirt above that.

I ran. I was right behind Scott. Scott ran into the Winter Garden and got against a concrete pillar, and I just hugged the pillar with Scott. Aguilera was right behind me. I thought we were dead. I thought the tower was coming down on top of us. I thought we were gone.

It was a loud rumble. The Winter Garden filled up with the dirt, the dust and that was it. Then it was quiet. Then you heard the maydays on the radio. I can remember hearing, "Mayday, mayday, mayday. Mayday, mayday, mayday." I think I can remember like Ladder 4 or something like that, if that makes any sense.

Q. Right now you're just with Scott in the Winter Garden? Anybody else with you?

A. Scott and Aguilera.

The rumbling stops, and we start looking for people. I can't even see Scott, and I'm right on his back. That's how thick it was.

We start back towards the entrance to go back out of the building, and we hear people in this little room. So Rob and I go towards the little room. I don't know where Scott went at that time. We grabbed the people out of this little cubbyhole and bring them to the back of the building.

Then we go back to the front of the Winter Garden and we found another person just wandering around. He said he's Commissioner of the Fire Department and he needed to make a phone call. He tried making a phone call on one of those little security phones. We're trying to tell him he can't call out on that phone. He says he has to call headquarters. We just grabbed him, pulled him and dragged him out back.

Q. Do you know which commissioner this was?

A. It was not Von Essen. It was somebody I don't recognize. He identified himself as a commissioner. He was trying to make a phone call on that little white security phone. So we just told him, "Come on, let's go. You're in shock or something." We just dragged him out back of the Winter Garden.

Then we came back out front looking for the lieutenant, who then shortly appears. Now we're worried about Kevin Cronick and our chauffeur. We didn't know where our chauffeur was. The interesting thing there is the pedestrian walkway bridge is still up. It's still intact at that time. The south tower is gone. Rob Aguilera says to me, "The Marriott's gone." I said, "Never mind that. The tower is gone." I didn't think that the tower would come down, not like that. I thought maybe a quarter of the top came off, because it didn't seem like that long of a rumble.

Q. How dark was it for how long a period? Was it a long period or short time?

A. I thought it was kind of short, thinking of what came down. What was interesting is when we went back out towards the walkway, it was actually getting clearer. The closer we walked to the tower, the clearer it was getting. Inside the building it was very dense.

Q. Were there a lot of people there other than you and your partner in the Winter Garden?

A. Just the commissioner and maybe three other guys that we took out back.

Q. There were no civilians?

A. No, no. I don't know where they all escaped to.

So the pedestrian walkway was still up at that time after the south tower came down.

So we just got together with our company, and we walked through the garden out to the back.

Q. The second building hasn't come down yet?

A. No. The north tower is still standing.

We come out on Vesey Street and we walk towards the Hudson River. The lieutenant -- I said, "Where are we going? We've got to do something here." He said, "Well, this other one may come down." I said, "This ain't coming down. That was just a fluke that that first one came down." All the time I wanted to go up in there. He said, "Yeah, the second one -- that one may come down too." Not even five, ten minutes later the thing came down.

Q. So you were around North End Street and Vesey at the time the second one came down?

A. Yeah, North End and Vesey. Everybody started running north, up to where you see North Park on there. We started running north. That whole area became cloudy.

Q. Were there boats parked over there, going to New Jersey, taking people over?

A. There were boats taking people over, but I don't know if it was before the second tower came or after. I know afterwards when we found Engine 5 and the fireman having a heart attack, yeah, there were boats there and we put him on the boats and sent him over.

Then the rest of the day we just spent running from bomb scares and gas leaks. Stuyvesant school had a gas leak. The World Financial had a gas leak or bomb or something.

Q. Then you were putting out fires on the rigs, ambulances, police cars at that time?

A. No, no. By that time we were up by Chambers Street. We're north of Chambers now. Now the Fire Department is trying to gather the people and make some kind of organization out of it and getting companies together at that time.

Once they got us back together and organized somewhat, they sent us back down to Vesey, where we stood and waited for Seven World Trade Center to come down.

Q. Were you able to drive your apparatus back or you came back with Engine 3?

A. Well, no, that's the interesting thing. After the north tower came down, that pedestrian walkway bridge was gone, and the high-rise unit was underneath there.

Q. How did you get back to quarters? Jumped on the back of a volley rescue.

A. Oh, right, right, that's how we got back. That's right.

But that was a long day.

Q. After the towers collapsed, you never really saw any injuries after that? No civilians were coming up to you?

A. No, it was surprising; right? Not many injuries at all. I think you either got hit with that building and died or --

Q. It was unbelievable the lack of injuries.

A. Yeah.

Q. Anything else?

A. No, you know, I can remember -- we were standing on Vesey Street, and it was just -- everybody is looking around in disbelief. We were wondering where 12 Truck is, when Angel Rivera?

Q. Yeah.

A. Angel Rivera was walking around in a daze and we found him. We said, "Where is the rest of the truck?" He started to explain where the rest of the truck was and what happened.

Q. And they came up after that?

A. Heinz came up, and then we found McGimpsey.

Q. He told us that Mazy and Matt Tansey were shipped to New Jersey.

A. Yeah, I didn't hear that part. I remember they were trying to rinse McGimpsey's eyes out. His eyes were killing him. They were bright red, and they were hurting him really bad. So we sat him down and tried to wash them.

Q. Anything else to add?

A. I wish I could help you with the placement of rigs or something, but I can't.

Q. There was a lot going on that day.

A. The only other thing as far as citizens was in the north tower I can remember seeing citizens walking through the glass out an exit way. It looked like they were exiting out the north, but they could have been circling around to the back.

There's nothing really else I think I could help you with.

Q. I would like to thank you, Frank, for taking the time and doing this interview.

MR. CUNDARI: This concludes the interview. It's 9:50.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FIREFIGHTER SCOTT HOLOWACH

Interview Date: October 18, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. CUNDARI: Today's date is October 18, 2001. The time is 9:15. I'm George Cundari with Richard Dunn of the Fire Department of the City of New York. I'm conducting an individual with the following individual.

Q. Please state your name, rank, title and assigned command?

A. SCOTT HOLOWACH, Firefighter third grade, assigned to Engine 3.

Q. Can you please tell us the events of September 11, 2001.

A. I just got on that morning. We were in the house -- I was in the house watch with Angel Juarbe, one of the guys who was missing from Ladder 12. We noticed on the news that one of the planes hit the Trade Center. Shortly after that the Chief was sent and I guess like 30 seconds later we were sent. We were sent by ourselves at first and we called up dispatch and asked if they want the high rise and they said to roll everything, so we took the high rise down with us.

As we were going, we went down to Canal Street and made a right and went to the West Side Highway and came down towards the Trade Center on the West Side Highway. As we were responding, all you could see is a lot of smoke pouring out of the north tower. I had Firefighter Sweeney with me in the high rise rig.

When we first pulled up, we drove just south of the pedestrian bridge, the north pedestrian bridge, which came out of the tower to the Winter Garden. I noticed a lot of debris coming down from the building, so we had to jump back into the high rise rig and made a U turn and parked underneath the pedestrian bridge facing north.

At that time, I started walking towards Engine 3. Engine 3 drove south to the south pedestrian bridge to make a U turn to come back and as I'm walking towards the Engine to find out what Lieutenant Walsh wanted us to do, I heard the sound of a jet plane. I looked up and saw it pretty close and I was like holy shit. What's going on with the with the flight patterns. All of a sudden, the wings turned and it dove right into the building and it was screwed up.

At that time Chief Ganci was behind me and he thought there was another explosion in the north tower and that's when I turned around and said Chief, listen, there is a second plane that hit the other tower. He was like no no no no, we have another explosion. I said no, Chief, I witnessed it. I watched the plane hit the other tower. He is like are you sure. I said Chief, I'm 100 hundred percent positive I watched the second plane hit the other tower.

That's when Ganci got on the radio and called for the military. Walsh walked up to him and said Chief, 3 engines here with the high rise. Do you want us to go into the tower and report to the command center. He said, no we are going to set up another command center outside. Just stand fast. They set up the command center in the mouth of the garage of the World Financial building. We were standing there and Lieutenant Walsh said listen, why don't you go stand on top underneath the pedestrian bridge, because if anything happens there is too many guys, here at least you guys can run some other way. This way you are not tripping over 100 other guys.

We were standing underneath the pedestrian bridge. We were watching people jump out of the building. I guess we were there for a little while, 20, 25 minutes. In the meantime we were sitting there and something gave me a gut feeling that something was going to happen, so I turned to the guys and I said listen, if anything happens, I said let's dive into this building because the Winter Garden, the staircase is pretty solid and there is two hallways. We will run to the right.

Shortly after that, sure enough, I heard -- I don't know even -- I guess a rumbling sound. I looked up and I see the whole 70th floor basically like buckle out and start crumbling down the outside of the building. At the time I grabbed two other guys and said let's get the hell out of here. We dove into the building and after the rumbling stopped --

Q. Would have been south tower collapsing?

A. The south tower.

Q. You could see it from your position?

A. Yes. I visually watched the 70 floor. It looked like almost it was buckling outwards and then it just went down the outside of the building, just like scaled the outside of the building and it just started pancaking and that's when I grabbed the two guys and the third guy followed us in. We dove into the hallway to the right of the staircase and huddled the wall. I guess the fourth guy, Cronick, ran out the back of the building.

But after the rumbling stopped, it was so thick in there you couldn't even see each other next to us, so my first thought was to make sure the guys were all right. So I asked Sweeney and Aguilera, who was a proby, a 14 weeker here, if they were okay. I screamed for Cronick and they said they think he ran out the back. I said all right, I said we got a lot of people with us, we got to start searching the area.

So we started searching the area to make sure that everybody is getting out, take them out the back. I got split up from these guys. I ended up with another proby from another company and we went and started searching the lobby of the Winter Garden and the first floor of the World Financial Center.

Q. Scott, did you have a radio at that time?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you able to contact anybody on the radio?

A. I didn't try to, actually I didn't think about it. I don't remember if anybody was --

Q. Was it working?

A. Yes, it was working. I don't remember hearing --

Q. What channel were you on?

A. I think I switched to 7. I'm not sure. I don't remember now. I'm pretty sure I did. Like I said, after I ran to the proby, we searched the ground level of the World Financial Center. We ended up outside on the southbound side of the mouth of the garage. We searched out front and we ended up directing a bunch of people, Chiefs and civilians, towards the water. When we walked back to the entrance to the Winter Gardens is when we ran into -- found you guys again and we came outside and found Lieutenant Walsh. He was worried about our chauffeur. Now we started looking for our chauffeur. We found our chauffeur. We were standing on Vesey and West and I guess the Chiefs and the other officers made the decision to move everybody down towards the Pier, towards the water, to reorganize and figure out what's going on.

Q. That was by where the fire boat was?

A. Yes.

Q. Bank Street?

A. No, actually down by the river terrace. We were actually on the water, right where Marine One ended up being docked. I guess we were there 10 minutes, 15 minutes. It's hard to tell time. Everything went so quick. We were there a short period of time and that's when we heard the north tower coming down and noticed the big dust cloud and we started running north towards the water.

Before the north tower came down, we helped a lot of firemen get on the ferries and shipped them over to Jersey.

Q. Were they injured?

A. Yes, they were injured. We had the one Lieutenant on it. I don't remember what company he was from. He looked like he might be having a heart attack, so we put him out. Guys from 21 Truck were there with injuries, so we put them on the ferries. A few other guys from other companies, I'm not even sure where they were from.

Like I said, after the second collapse, and the dust started settling, we went back and grabbed whatever gear we could and headed north to the end of the Pier and then went back to the West Side Highway is where they were mustering everybody and they kept on pushing us north because they thought there was a gas leak and a bomb in the American Express building. They kept on moving us north of the high school there.

Q. Stuyvesant High School?

A. Yes, Stuyvesant High School, until they figured out, I guess, there was no gas leak or no secondary bomb. Or no bomb. I guess they put the PD in there to search it. They moved us back south. We ended up back up on Vesey Street and West Street and just hanging out until tower 7 came down.

After tower 7 came down, we went right to work over at tower 7 to put the fires out. That's where we stayed until we were relieved.

Q. Did you see a lot of civilians coming out towards you away by the water on West Street?

A. There wasn't much civilians at the water, no, no.

Q. There wasn't too many --

A. More Fire Department personnel, PD and EMS on the water. There was a few civilians, but not an overwhelming amount. As I said, more of the emergency personnel went towards the water. I think most of the civilians went north.

Q. After the collapse, did you -- was there many injuries after that or you saw a lot of injuries after the collapse?

A. I saw a few. I expected a lot more. If we saw 20 or 30 injuries, that was a lot. Most of the injuries were from taking in all that dust it seemed like. More people just coughing and difficulty breathing afterwards.

MR. CUNDARI: Scott, I would like to thank you for taking part in this interview. Time is 9:25. This concludes this interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

PARAMEDIC WILLIAM SIMON

Interview Date: October 18, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. RADENBERG: Today is October 19th, 2001. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department of the City of New York. The time now is 1617 hours. I'm conducting an interview with --

PARAMEDIC SIMON: WILLIAM SIMON. I'm a paramedic with the New York City Fire Department, Battalion 58, Brooklyn.

MR. RADENBERG: We're conducting the interview at EMS Battalion 58 concerning the events of the morning of September 11th, 2001.

Q. Bill, if you would start from when you were assigned to the job.

A. All right. It was a pretty routine day. We came on and we checked the truck and we figured we're going to be on our normal everyday routine assignments. When we're in Canarsie, not too far from the station, following our check out our vehicle, we heard a report of the Trade Center being struck.

At that point we proceeded closer to our 1089, because we knew that we would in all probability have to be utilized. We subsequently were assigned to the city for a diff. breather at Broome and Broadway. That was, I would say, about 9:50.

We knew at that point that tower one had been struck and was on fire. We couldn't believe the reports. My first impression was that it probably was a terrorist act. I don't think the second building had been hit at that point. It was a bright, clear, sunny day, and my impression is any pilot, any novice pilot, tries to do everything in their power to avoid striking a high-rise building of that height.

At any rate, we were assigned to Broome and Broadway for a single individual having trouble breathing, which I thought was somewhat unusual because there should be hundreds of people related to that event having trouble breathing.

My partner, Barry Hirsch, was driving. We arrived in the city I would say maybe 10 to 12 minutes after we were assigned. I was basically doing the navigating for Barry so that we wouldn't make any misturns and would take the most expeditious route.

We came across Delancy Street -- first of all we came into Manhattan through Brooklyn over the Manhattan Bridge, came off of the Manhattan Bridge and responded, took a few turns and got over to Allen Street, Allen Street to Delancy, and then we started to travel west on Delancy. Then we crossed Bowery and then Lafayette and we dropped down to Broome Street, Broome and Broadway.

We were both awestruck by the scenes that we saw of the dust and the debris cloud that we could see as we were entering the city. I believe by the time we got there, I think the second tower had been hit. That also was an awesome sight.

We got to Broadway, and there's a tremendous amount of dust, pulverized masonry on the ground, office materials, papers, computer files and probably 10,000 people walking north on Broadway in various states of -- I wouldn't say people were panicking, but they were walking briskly to get away, hastily.

Some people were wearing makeshift masks from scarves of their own clothing. Some had obtained filtration masks, which we utilize on the ambulances, probably from some of the EMS crews that they had encountered.

What amazed me was that we were approximately 18 to 20 blocks from the World Trade Center plaza and the amount of dust that was on the street was anywhere from maybe a half inch to an inch, all over the cars, all over the street. The amount of paper looked like there had been a ticker tape parade on Broadway.

Also it reminded me of the descriptions of what a nuclear winter would look like after a nuclear attack or something out of what had happened at Hiroshima.

After we arrived at the scene in this maze of people that were walking past us, we parked the vehicle. We said there must be somebody out here who's having trouble breathing. So we exited the vehicle. We approached one of the police officers that were one of the officers directing traffic at the intersection. We asked her did anybody approach her about having trouble breathing. She said no, there's been hundreds of people that went past her, and nobody approached her specifically.

We felt it would be appropriate to exit the vehicle and try to canvas those storefronts that were still open, because there were still some merchants that had their doorways open and were looking south at the event as this mass of people were walking past us.

So I went south of Broome Street and canvassed on the east and west side of the street, and my partner went north. We canvassed east and west, on the east and west sides of the street, to all the store owners and as many people as we could encounter. Amazingly nobody was complaining of trouble breathing.

We actually wanted to get a patient, because we wanted to get involved in the actual rescue at that point. We figured some of these people had to be in distress, but I think their primary focus was escape and to get to their loved ones and just to let their family members know that they were all right. They really didn't want to, unless it was absolutely necessary.

We even saw some people with minor cuts, and they --

Q. Didn't want treatment?

A. Yeah, didn't want treatment. They said, "No, I'm fine."

So at that point we got back on the radio and we told the dispatcher our current location and our status and that at this point we had no patients or nobody that was requiring assistance.

We knew at that point we were probably going to be dispatched either to One World Trade Center Plaza or one of the other staging areas, and we subsequently were. We were instructed to respond to Chambers and West Street. That was the new staging area following the collapse of tower one. Units were being deployed over there.

It took us about five minutes to get over there, moving through the mass of people and vehicles and emergency rescue vehicles. The first EMS officer that we encountered were Lieutenant Fitton and Lieutenant Pinkus, who were on West Street. They were coordinating the reassignment of EMS units on the west side.

We identified ourselves. They're colleagues of ours, and they acknowledged our presence and were glad to see us. We were glad to see them, somebody to give us some direction.

We parked our vehicle in the now redeployed staging area and got a quick briefing on the events that had transpired. There were still a lot of questions to be answered about the magnitude and what rescue efforts were actually going on and the conflicting stories about our people involved and how many firefighters and police officers were injured. All we know is this a horrendous event of amazing magnitude. I looked south, and I was mesmerized by what I saw. It was like something out of a movie except we're in it.

They asked us to park our vehicle and to walk south on West Street and to render any care to any people who were ambulatory or confused about where to seek treatment and to instruct them where the new staging area was.

Also any EMS units that might be disoriented or confused about where the staging was, because our communications -- the tactical frequencies were so busy that there was a lot of miscommunication going on at that point. I think we were not only rescuers at that point but we were a way of communicating to the other units where to regroup.

My partner and I started to walk south down West Street and tried to answer as quickly as we could the questions of the people who were ambulatory on the street. All we could basically tell them is just keep walking north, keep walking and you'll see additional EMS resources and the police staging area. Your best bet is just to keep walking as far away from the event, because we're really not sure of what's going on.

We must have gotten two to three blocks south of Chambers Street, and I was still in awe of this spectacle that I'm witnessing. My partner and I were looking at tower two, and we're looking at I guess 20 stories -- 15 to 20 stories down from the top of the roof just in flames and smoke.

Then we hear a rumble, and we see a blast of smoke and a slight ball of flame coming out from the silhouette of the building, and we watched the antenna collapse into the building.

To be honest with you, for about five seconds or so I was transfixed. I couldn't believe what I was seeing. From our perspective, it looked as though the antenna was falling towards us, north.

We were motionless for maybe five seconds, until we realized that, hey, the building's coming down and now we've got to run for our lives. We turned at that point and told everybody else, "Listen, the building is collapsing. Run, run, run."

I guess had the building toppled north and not collapsed into itself, we probably would have been victims in the road too, because we were close enough for that to have occurred.

We sprinted for a good two to two and a half blocks through a mass of people who were running at various rates of speed. All we could really do is just tell people to just get out of the way, run, keep running north.

We were initially looking for shelter. I believe there was a school on the right-hand side. All the doors, the accesses, were locked. We still felt as though we were in the path of the debris. I looked over my shoulder once and saw the cloud of debris coming up the street and particulate matter bouncing all over. At that point we still weren't certain that we were safe.

We ran just as fast as we could, and we tried to seek shelter. Me personally, I know myself and one thing I feel good about is I didn't push anybody out of the way. It was everybody for themselves.

After about two minutes of stark terror, then we realized that the blunt of the debris had already fallen and we were relatively safe. But there was still the dust, the smoke, the noise, the confusion and the panic on some of the civilians. But we knew we were relatively safe.

Then the reality hit me that at that point we were witnessing, maybe not directly, but we knew hundreds of people must have perished at that moment. That was a sobering feeling. But you also thank God at that moment that you were able to survive or carry on or what set of circumstances allowed you to persevere.

When we got to approximately Chambers Street, there was a lot of noise and we even heard shots. I've heard shots in Brooklyn before. I couldn't fathom what was going on unless maybe an officer fell and his weapon discharged or maybe they saw some people trying to loot.

There were some windows blasted out, and we didn't know what had actually transpired at that point. But I'm told there were probably some officers that were firing to seek refuge in some of the locked buildings that I think was an adjacent school. They probably saved a lot of people from being in the direct debris path. At least that's what I'm told. I didn't know it on that particular day.

After about ten minutes or so, things were unbelievably quiet. People regrouped, regathered. We made contact again with the EMS supervisors that were there, and we set up an additional triage area. We tried to restructure the triage area in I think Borough of Manhattan Community College on the north side of the building. A makeshift triage area was set up on the upper mezzanine.

At that point myself and some volunteer

EMTs and some people who I believe responded to the area from the voluntary hospitals started to man that location. We treated one or two police officers for dust inhalation and exhaustion.

There was one young girl that was obviously in a state of total disbelief and severe anxiety. We examined her for any serious injuries. She just had some minor cuts and bruises. I think she was like all of us. She just couldn't believe the events that transpired and the circumstances that she was in the middle of.

Shortly after that, I would say maybe about 15 minutes after setting up that area, we were instructed to evacuate that area and move further north to another safe location up by Chelsea Pier on 23rd Street because there was a report of a gas leak.

So now we had to retrieve all the equipment that we had now deployed and put it back into the trucks, the trucks that were accessible to us, and move quickly up north.

At this point there were two or three EMTs on my truck. My partner, Barry Hirsch, because of his training with special operations, he had gone with Lieutenant Santiago, and they had separated. He said that he would be back in a few minutes because they were going to see if they could coordinate and regroup and see what EMS units were in need of assistance further south.

At this point, under the instruction of one of the lieutenants at the scene, we started to move the truck up north. There were a few civilians that were not as spry as some of the younger people, and we opened our doors and let them in. We transported them as far north as we could without jeopardizing their well-being. We let them exit at the Chelsea Piers.

After that, that's basically where our unit remained until later that afternoon. I stayed and hooked up with one of the medics that I know from the academy, since I only had one partner at that point.

I was with Tommy Maher until about 5:00, 5:30 in the afternoon. Then we were released from the scene. From there I got back to Battalion 58 and dropped Tommy off and knew they were going to get off the scene.

Q. When you were up on Chambers and West, that's where you encountered Lieutenant Fenton and Captain Pinkus; right?

A. Yeah, Lieutenant Pinkus, Lieutenant Pinkus.

Q. Oh, communications; do you know?

A. Maybe it's another Pinkus.

Q. Okay.

A. I know he's from -- I know it's a Lieutenant Pinkus, and he's from Metropolitan.

Q. When you were going south with your partner on West, do you recall how far, or what street you got to?

A. We probably were somewhere between Barclay and Murray or down around Warren Street, somewhere over there. I know we were -- let's see, Chambers -- we may have gotten down about here, I would say down around Murray and Barclay.

Q. Do you recall anything on your way down there, meeting up with any other EMS personnel along there that you remember?

A. There might have been some personnel, but we didn't really have an encounter with them because they basically were responding north, and that was our instructions, to tell any units that were on West Street to respond north and where to respond. So we were assuming that all they had to do was continue north and they would run into the new staging area.

Q. Right.

Other than Lieutenants Fenton and Pinkus, do you remember any other officers up at Chambers?

A. No, they were the two officers that -- there may have been more, but those are the officers that I actually had conversations with.

Q. Any other thoughts or comments you'd like to add?

A. I guess the only thing that I can say is that after the events of that morning, the tragedy, I get up every morning and I appreciate waking up more every morning. I appreciate my family more, my wife.

My heart goes out to all those families that even today have no closure on the whereabouts, and may never have closure. I'm saddened just to think about the evil which wrought this type of devastation.

My coworkers and associates, I hope that they will not have died in vain.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT RENAE O'CARROLL

Interview Date: October 18, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. TAMBASCO: Today is October 18th. I'm Mike Tambasco assigned to the World Trade Center Task Force. I'm at EMS Battalion 39 in the lounge. The time is 1603 hours. We're conducting an historical interview with EMT Renae O'Carroll from working unit 39 Mary 2 on September 11th.

Q. Renae, tell us your story.

A. My partner Eddie Rodriguez and I logged on that morning at 8:00 39 Mary. Our first call came about 8:20 that morning -- no, more like 8:35, downtown Brooklyn. The call was a dupe to another unit's job. I can't remember. I think it was a 31 unit. I'm not sure.

We gave our position to the dispatcher that we were 98. We looked up and we saw this big mound of smoke. We turned the radio on, and we heard a lot of screaming and noise on the radio. We pulled over, went into a laundromat, because we saw a lot of people crowded around a television. That's where we saw what was going on.

We called up the dispatcher. It was really hard to get through. We went on Manhattan frequency. That was the only one that was working. We told them that we would like to go down there and help if they needed anyone else.

Q. Right.

A. They said, "Yes, we were trying to call you, we didn't hear you, to send you over there."

We went down Atlantic Avenue going towards the Manhattan Bridge, and the heat was so intense, so intense, you could actually feel it while you were up on the bridge. I mean that intense you could feel the heat. Cars were coming this way, and we were driving that way.

They assigned us to go to Church and Vesey. We were going towards that area. The cars are coming this way. People are screaming and running, and we're going the opposite direction into the mess, into the belly of the beast of this thing. I still can't believe I had the nerve to do that to this day.

We got down there, and the scene was just horrendous. I've never seen anything like this before in my life. You were kind of afraid, but you knew you had a job to do. You knew there were people in there.

We went to the corner of Church and Vesey. That's where they had staging at. We were the third vehicle in line, one of the first units actually down there. The lieutenant there just said feel around and pick up whoever you can.

Q. You don't know who the lieutenant was, do you?

A. I can't remember.

At that point it was just mass hysteria down there. Nothing was really organized, because the mounds of people were just running all over the place. You were just picking up people that you saw screaming. That's how horrendous the scene was down there. We had our staging area, but because of the mass amounts of people -- you had FBI, you had police officers, you had corrections. You had everyone who was anyone down there.

We grabbed three people off of the ground. We had an elderly lady. She looked like she was burnt. At that time there was really no triaging. You were just pulling out of the mounds of people those that looked like they were viable.

We had three ladies, one elderly. She looked like she might have been burnt, maybe heat-related, and two other ones. One was ambulatory, and the other two weren't. We grabbed them and put them in the vehicle. My partner said, "Close the door and let's go."

We were down there for maybe 11 minutes before the building fell. My partner Eddie said, go to the front and let's get out of here. I said we're going to go. At that point --

Q. The building actually came down at that point?

A. The building wasn't down yet. I was getting ready to pull out, and the transportation officer waved me over. He wanted to tell me what hospital to go to.

Q. Right.

A. I had my back turned towards the building, because we were directly in front of the building at Church and Vesey. I had my back to him. He was facing the building, looking over my shoulder. He looked up, and he had the look of fear on his face.

I heard something that sounded like marbles crashing down. At that point I looked behind me. I heard everyone say run. I looked behind me, and it was a gigantic blob of ash and molt and fire and everything just behind you, and I ran. Everyone was running.

I tried to grab people. People was grabbing on to me. We were just running, running, running. I have never seen anything like that before. I understand what someone says I looked death in the face. That was death coming to me. That's all I know.

I'm running. I'm ahead of it. Everyone's running, and it's just a stampede. I'm about ten feet in front of it, running, actually sprinting because I'm an athlete and I'm running. What happened when I got to the corner, because I remember my feet hitting, coming off the sidewalk, another blob of stuff came around.

Ash came around another building in front me, and it caught me in front of me and in back of me, and everything was pitch-black. Where it hit me from the front and the back, it actually lifted me off the ground and threw me.

It was like someone picked me up and just threw me on the ground.

Everything was pitch-black. You couldn't see anything. All I saw was big bolts of fire, fire balls. I could feel the heat around me. It was pitch-black. I couldn't see anything at all. My lungs, my airways, everything filled up with ash. I couldn't breathe. I couldn't see anything.

I got back off of the ground, and I'm moving around. I heard people screaming, begging for help. I could feel something on my ankle; I don't know what it was. It was pitch-black, and I'm feeling. At this point I walk into something, and it knocked me on the ground again. I don't know what it was, but I hit my forehead on something.

It was just basically dark. I had never been through anything -- I thought I was dying. The only thing I could see was balls of fire, just balls of fire. At one point I thought I was on fire because it was that close to me. I could feel the heat. I said to myself, wow, I'm on fire. This is what it feels like to be on fire. I don't know what it feels like to be on fire. I thought that's what it feels like to be on fire.

At this point I couldn't breathe anymore. I lie on the ground. I couldn't even get up. I couldn't move. I couldn't do anything. I thought I was dying. That's basically it. I thought that I was dying.

At this point I laid down, and I started saying my prayers. Having memories of my kids, my mother, people at work. I mean, my whole life is just flashing in front of my eyes. What they say is true, everything is just flashing. I accepted it, because I didn't feel I could move on. It took the wind out of me and everything.

I just lie there and I was praying. I looked up to my left, and I saw a light opening up in the sky. I figured that maybe the ashes and stuff is clearing a break. It was a beautiful day out. The day was sunny, bright and warm. I remember very well, it was a beautiful day.

I looked up and it didn't seem like the sky; it seemed like a different type of light. Whatever this light was I was looking at, it made me feel safe and secure. I felt that that was the light that everyone's talking about. I said to myself at that moment I guess this is the light, I guess this is my time. I felt it was opening up and it was my time to go.

I didn't have any fear. Whatever fear I had prior to that, I didn't feel it. I just felt safe like someone was cradling me, and I accepted it. I was getting ready to die. I was losing my breath. Something told me -- I looked to the left on the ground, and I saw a red light. I don't know what that was. I'm thinking it's another light.

I can laugh about this now. At that time I couldn't laugh about it. I couldn't laugh about it.

And that's when I put my hand to the left to see what that light was, and I felt glass. What happened to me was just a miracle. The glass door opened up. It was a door. It opened up. It opened up, and it felt like someone put their hands under me just pulled me, picked me up and pulled me.

I rolled down some stairs, and the door behind me closed. Down there it was a basement to somewhere. I remember there was a subway station that I ran past. I figured maybe it was the other side of the subway station.

The first thing I saw when I got up was a bucket of mop water. I needed to clean my eyes out. I took and I put the mop water in my face. I felt, whatever's in this water, if that didn't kill me, this is not going to. I took and I washed my face off just to see, because I couldn't breathe and I was blind. I could feel my J.V.D. My neck was rigid. I felt that I was still dying.

I felt around. I could see only maybe half a foot in front of me, half a foot in front of me. I'm doing like this, and I'm feeling. I saw something that said "men." It was a men's room. I couldn't get the door open. It had a padlock just like this station door. I couldn't open it up.

There was one that said ladies' room across there, and I started saying, "God, how am

I going to get in here? You brought me in this far. You're going to let me die down here?" I started questioning him, "Why didn't you let me die with everybody else up there? Why bring me down here?"

What happened next was very amazing. From out of nowhere I just pressed the numbers 325, and the door opened up. And that's the same numbers that we have on the station door.

Q. On the station lock.

A. 325. That was the only numbers I could think of. I couldn't think of any other numbers to a padlock. It opened up.

When I got inside of there, there was water. I turned the water on, and I washed my face. I cleared my airway out. I made myself vomit to get the stuff out of me. I cleared my nose out. I did that again. I looked in the mirror to make sure that I didn't have any more J.V.D., and that was going away and I was able to breathe better now.

I drank some water. Now I really needed to flush my eyes, but the water wasn't coming out fast enough in the faucet. So what I did, I went and kneeled down over the toilet. I figured if upstairs didn't kill me, the toilet water is not going to kill me either.

I kneeled on it and I put my hand on the flush and I let the water go down. As it was coming up, I washed my eyes out, and I was able to see around me. I looked around and saw I was in a bathroom and that it had vents up there and that there was no smoke in there.

I wet paper towels and put it around the door. I was exhausted at this point. I lie down. I found out later on when I lie down and I went -- I don't know if I lost consciousness or what. I went to sleep. I found out later that's when the other building fell. Because when I was down there, that was the first building that fell.

Q. Right.

A. I tell you, it's amazing. It's really amazing. When I woke up, I don't know how -- they told me I was missing seven or eight hours. I don't know. I was asleep. I was asleep. I was asleep a long time.

I got up. I had no sense of time. I got up, and I start thinking what should I do? I need to get out of here. I closed the door and I checked the numbers again to make sure I wasn't dreaming. It opened up. I was afraid to close it. I put something there.

Q. To hold the door open?

A. Yeah, because I knew I needed to get back there. Just so I wouldn't lose my way when I go running around, I took some tissue paper and I laid it out.

Q. A trail of bread crumbs?

A. Yeah, I did. I made a trail to find out where -- so I could get back there, because that was a safe haven for me. There was no smoke or anything.

I found out it was a boiler room, because it had an engineering door and it had a padlock on it. Then there was another one that said electrical. It was basically a work area on the side of the subway station.

I found an open window. I went to it to get some fresh air. I was afraid. There was nobody down there but me. It was dark, pitch-black, except a little light in the corner.

I should have been afraid, but I really wasn't, to be honest, because I felt now God was with me. He brought me through all of this and there was a reason I'm here and I didn't fear I was going to die at this point, just how to get out of here.

Q. Right.

A. I couldn't remember how I got in there. I didn't remember.

I saw some stairways. I went up the stairways. The door wasn't open on the first floor. I went up another flight. It wouldn't open. The third floor let me in. On the third floor was two glass doors to an office. I saw a phone. I'm trying to get in there, but it was closed. It had a doorbell on it, and I rang the doorbell, like somebody's going to be there to open it; right? Like somebody is going to open it for me. I'm ringing it.

I saw a fire extinguisher, and I'm trying to get it out of the glass. I had nothing on me. My radio had fallen, everything. I didn't have my cell phone on me. I couldn't get in, because I was going to crack the door if I could get to the phone to call somebody.

At this point I was still tired. I wasn't breathing the way I should. I was still a little tired. So I went back downstairs, following the trail, and I went back in there and I went back to sleep. I don't know when I got up again. I don't know. I got up again, and I said I better go back out there again.

I felt a little more rested. I was breathing a little better. I walked the opposite direction this time, and that's the way that I found my way out.

Q. To the top of the street?

A. Yeah, because that was the glass door. When I looked out there -- I got there, and I looked out there. It looked like hell. There were there on the ground. No, there were parts on the ground. There was metal on the ground. It was ashes and everything. It looked like a third-world country. You had people running, screaming. Ambulances at this time was running one man.

I opened the door and did like this, and someone grabbed my hand. A police lady grabbed my hand, and she dragged me. I said,

"Help me. I can't really breathe." She was crying and everything like that. We were pretty much holding each other up.

She jumped out in the street, and an ambulance -- it was a private ambulance, maybe Cabrini or New York Hospital. I'm not sure. At this point they were riding one man with the doors open and no equipment and whoever could jump in jumped in.

She took me and she threw me in the bus. She threw me in the bus. The guy said, "Get in and let's go." She threw me in there, and I said, "Please come with me." I grabbed her hand. She said, "I can't. I have to stay." I have to stay and help people. She couldn't breathe herself.

I wish I could see her again one day, a little small thing.

Q. You have no idea who she was?

A. I don't know who she was. I don't know who she was. I got in there. She might have been an angel. I don't know who she was.

The ambulance made two more stops with the door open. No equipment in the back. He's riding one man. He's got ashes on him himself.

Q. At this time how late was this? Do you have any idea?

A. I don't know.

Q. No concept of time?

A. I had nothing. I don't know anything. I didn't know anything until I got to the hospital.

At this point he stopped to let two more people in, a police officer, an Officer Palono from the first transit -- from District 1, I think it was. I don't know. He came in. He was saying, "I can't breathe." I found one pediatric oxygen mask. I turned it on, and I gave it to him.

Q. Right.

A. I helped him. I put it on him and told him it's going to be okay. I'm not all right myself. I said, "You're going to be okay." I said, "Let's pray." Then they stopped and another elderly lady, I grabbed her hand, pulled her in and shared the mask between the two of them.

Q. Right.

A. We laid back there, just on the floor, sat there and prayed.

The ambulance pulled up to -- I found out later it was Beekman Hospital. There someone opened the door, and they grabbed us out. They just grabbed people out and threw you on a stretcher. The first thing they did was to make sure your airway was clear. Then what they did after that was take you and throw you in the shower to wash all of this stuff off.

I still had no concept of time. I didn't know what time it was. It was still daylight. But because of all the ash and everything flying around, it looked like it was nighttime.

Being in the hospital, it was like being on a conveyer belt. You went from one room to the next. They sent you from there to -- from the shower they sent you to another room where you got your eyes -- they put drops in your eyes. Then they sent you back to the airway room. There must have been a thousand people in each room. They were going down the line, actually putting drops in everyone's eyes.

It was just the worst day that -- I hope to God I never go through anything like that again. I've never seen anything like this before, never, never, never.

The job tries to prepare you for stuff like this, but for something like that there is really no way of preparing somebody for this; there really isn't. You wouldn't think in a million years something like that would happen.

Q. Right. What happened with your partner?

A. I don't know. I thought he was dead.

Q. You lost touch with him at that point, and that was it?

A. I didn't even remember anything about him. I don't know. I didn't remember anything. I didn't remember anything. I don't know what even happened. All I know is I saw a blob of smoke, and that was it. I don't know. I felt something lift me up and down the stairs. I don't know. I don't know. I don't know anything.

I remember my belt, my belt with my pink scissors. The building I was in, where I made the trail, my belt is down there with the pink scissors on it. So if ever they find it, that's where I was.

Q. That's where you were.

A. Yes, I sure did.

I was in the hospital I don't even know how many hours. Finally I made my way to a phone. They made an announcement that the phones were up, that there's one phone on each floor that the patients can use. I was on a line of maybe 80 people.

When it got to be my turn, I called to let them know I was okay. The lieutenant was on there. He was crying. The captain was on the phone, Captain Medeiros. He was crying. I was crying.

That's basically it. I stayed in the hospital, and a unit brought me back to Division 4. I took a shower there. I cleaned up. They gave me a towel. I didn't have anything on. The only thing I had left of mine was my boots.

Someone brought me from there back to Brooklyn, and the whole station, everyone from all three tours was there. When I came, they were clapping, and we all cried. It was just beautiful.

But I'm glad that I was there and they weren't, because it might have turned out differently.

Q. Right, right.

A. It wasn't my time to go. That's all it is.

That's it. That's my story.

Q. That's a story all right.

A. Yeah.

I went back down there two weeks later to help out at the morgue, because it was really bothering me. I had to go back down there, because I felt I ran away the first time. This time I had to go back and face it. I had to have some closure. I had to go back down there and face it.

I went back down there, and I said I'll work staging, because I had to get over that fear. They said, "No, you're going to the morgue." I was in the morgue for 22 hours. 22 hours. I had to get back there and face whatever it was.

Q. Right.

A. I know if something like that happens again I'll just have to do my best. I'll probably still react the same way. While people are running out, I'll just go towards it. That's it.

Do you have any questions to ask me?

Q. No.

A. That's it.

Q. Nothing else you want to say, that's it. Renae, thanks very much for your interview, quite a story.

A. It is.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT WILLIAM RYAN

Interview Date: October 18, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. CASTORINA: My name is Ron Castorina. I'm at Division 8 conducting an interview with Lieutenant William Ryan. With me is --

MR. CUNDARI: George Cundari.

Q. Your name, sir?

A. Lieutenant William Ryan, Ladder 85.

Q. Lieutenant, could you tell me, on September 11th, 2001, on that particular day, the events that took place that you can recall?

A. I guess I'll start at the Staten Island ferry. That's where I was when I first -- you know, I was on the bow of the Staten Island ferry. I should have been on the 9:00 o'clock boat, but they stopped all the boats because both towers had been hit already. I didn't see the planes hit the towers. I just heard it. They held the boat up, and I guess they held the boat up for probably 50 minutes, 40 minutes, to wait for the Staten Island police task force, and we waited for them to load like four vans with like 40 cops. Meanwhile, about 20 to 30 off-duty firefighters assembled on the boat. We were about parallel to Governors Island when the first tower collapsed.

MR. CASTORINA: Excuse me one second. The time is 1:25, 1325 hours.

A. The ferry boat was probably parallel to Governors Island at the time the first tower came down. The dust cloud was pretty tremendous. As soon as they slipped into the ferry terminal, we got off the boat and we started walking up. We decided as we approached that -- we could see the wind was blowing a little from the west, so the cloud most likely would go east. So we decided to go west. We figured it might be a little easier to breathe.

We had no idea what we were going into. We didn't know at the time it was a terrorist attack. We didn't know the towers had collapsed completely. We couldn't see anything from our vantage point. We just knew we were headed up there, figuring somebody needed help, and we just went up.

Q. What did you think you were responding to at that point?

A. Well, we knew we had fire. We knew we had partial collapse.

Q. From an explosion or --

A. Yes. Well, we heard a loud boom when we were getting ready to dock the ferry. Probably the jet fuel igniting, I assume. I was with Deputy Chief Blaich and Battalion Chief Billy Blaich, and about, like I said, 20 firemen. Some had bunker gear; some didn't. We were thinking chemical warfare also at the time. We actually did mention that on the boat because the police had gas masks and we didn't.

As soon as we got off the boat, we were in the dust cloud. You couldn't breathe. I had a bandana wrapped around my face. It was hard to see. Civilians were all over covered with shit. We just started walking through Battery Park. We were trying to go west and go up north, west-north.

When we got just to the other side of the park, I assume -- I couldn't really tell you where I was. I just assume we were outside Battery Park headed up West Street. We ran into a couple of firefighters who were dazed, confused, and we took their bunker gear off them, asked them if we could have their gear, their helmets and their coats, and we continued up. By the time we got to where we started operating out of Liberty and West, we probably had about ten guys in uniform. We actually even found some Battalion Chief and we took his handie-talkie off him.

We weren't in there 30 seconds and we picked up our first Mayday. Chief Blaich had the radio. Deputy Chief Blaich had the radio and he had a crew of guys, and the guy had told us, "Mayday. Mayday. Engine 65 with a Mayday. I'm stuck in my rig. My rig is on fire." The Chief just asked him, "Where are you?" He said, "The last I remember, I was parked on West Street about 50 yards north of Liberty."

We couldn't tell where we were. I mean, I'd even worked down there seven years. I didn't know where I was standing in the street.

Q. It was very foggy?

A. Visibility possibly 30 feet at best and you could only see shadows. You could see several fires, dozens of fires, things blowing up, cars on fire, fire trucks, 113 where I was working for a while on fire. I've never seen anything like it. No one ever has. Chaos.

So we find a street post and we dust off the sign and we see we're at Liberty and West. We assume the guy is in the pile right to our left. We had no water. We find a rig and we get it started. The hydrant is no good. Together, as a unit, we decided we've got to split up and get water. So I said let's stretch into one of the buildings close to there and use the standpipe water.

We ended up getting water. We got water through a standpipe. We used a deck pipe, stretched it two and a half, knocked the fire down. Guys got in there and they ended up getting the guy from 65 out, and he was banged up pretty good.

Q. Who was that? Do you know who that was?

A. That was the chauffeur. I don't even know his name. I've seen his name on the list. I didn't know him.

Then right from that, we just kept moving. Me and all the other guys, I've spoken to them since, I expected to find more people. The fact is there was nobody around. It was gray. I remember it being real gray, dark.

Q. Both buildings were down at that time?

A. I assume, yes. I don't know. I guess they were because they said -- I don't know. They were 18 minutes apart? Yes. So the first command post, as I found out later on, was crushed. That was under that bridge. 65's rig was just south of that bridge that collapsed where the first command post was set up. I know that from talking to friends later. It's probably this bridge right here, this pedestrian bridge. The furthest north one collapsed, and 65 was probably right about here, this guy, somewhere. He's right in front of this building because we took water from this building, stretched to a pumper here, and we worked our way down. I mean, everything was so hard to work.

Q. It's marked on the map?

A. You're climbing over tons of debris. I assume he was under about two or three stories of I-beams. It was a nightmare. This pedestrian bridge was still up. So we were by there. That's the only thing I can use as a landmark, basically.

When we got word that they were getting him out, I kind of left because they really didn't need me over there anymore. They had a bunch of guys, and Chief Blaich grabbed me back over here and wanted to try to do something else. We were working in the pile. We were just looking for guys. He picked up a Mayday again. I think at that time we picked up a Mayday for 39 Engine and I think Ladder 6, and he was trying to get coordinates as to where we were.

We still had no idea what was going on. I didn't know the towers had both collapsed all the way. We didn't know. A couple of guys I've talked to since then said they didn't know. No one knew.

Then we just started more lines trying to put out some of the fires. At that time we had no idea of the magnitude of what we were up against. It was like pissing in the street. We just started knocking down fires. There were all kinds of fires all in here. There was a big fire going right here on Liberty right, I guess, west of 10 and 10, they are over here somewhere. We were over here.

So we have no water. We were operating off whatever standpipe water was coming out of the standpipes in the adjoining buildings. The hydrants were no good. Later on someone comes up with a line from the street, but that's like three hours later. We just kept searching. We were just looking around for bodies. Guys were coming out. Firemen were coming out of the pile.

I ran into the probie from 5 Truck that I knew, Frucci, Bill Frucci, and he survived both collapses. He jumped on 5 Truck's rig. I was up in here somewhere by Liberty, just next to the No. 2 tower, I guess, right to the left of it, and I found him stumbling around. He was covered with debris. I asked him where the rest of 5 was and he was like, "They're all dead." I said, "What do you mean?" He said, "Well, they're in the tower." Then I questioned him again, "Where were you?" He was fuzzy. So I sat him down. I had put water in my backpack that I grabbed from the ferry. I gave him a bottle of water and I sat with him and I told him, "Just sit here for a minute." I made him sit about a half hour.

We kept searching, looking through the piles for guys, and guys were coming out. There were firemen coming out of that pile. I went back to him later. He ended up telling me later that Lieutenant Warchola wouldn't let him in the building. He ordered him to stay outside. He survived both collapses standing in front of 10 an 10. I don't know how he did it. He said the first time it blew him into 10 and 10, and then he got up and started looking for guys, and then the second one came down.

Q. Did he say where Rescue 5 was?

A. Ladder 5 that was.

Q. Or Ladder 5?

A. He just told me they went into the tower. He didn't know. I know now that they were in the north tower. They were in the first tower. I spoke to the guys. 24 Engine was in the same house with them. They survived. A Lieutenant from there told me they were both on the 37th floor together and some Chief came running by and told them to drop their gear and get out. He said they had no communications on the handie-talkies. That was the only message they got. 5 Truck went right. 24 Engine went left. 5 is all dead. 24 is all alive. They have a story of their own. They ended up carrying some woman down the whole way, not the whole way, nine stories.

Anyway, back to me, we just kept busy. Time was flying. I had no idea where time was going. The first time I looked at my watch, it was 1:30 in the afternoon. I was very thirsty. I stopped for water. I had hooked Frucci up with a couple of other guys that were walking around, stumbling around, and we assisted them all and told them to head to the ferry. I told them head to the boats. Basically, the advice we were giving everybody was get off Manhattan, get off Manhattan as fast as you could. We wanted everybody to get out of there because we didn't know what was going on. We knew something big was up, but we didn't know how big. We had fire all around us. Fire was everywhere. 90 West, which is this building right here, was fully involved.

Looking back at my notes, we had almost a third alarm assignment of firefighters in there at one point or volunteers that came up afterwards. Chief Hayden came later. He ended up moving the guys out of there. But I'll get back to that.

So at this point we just keep looking through the debris, assembling guys, trying to get our act together. We were taking tools off the trucks that were there. We had no masks, no equipment. I was still in just a T-shirt and sneakers. So Deputy Chief Blaich grabbed me, and that's when he asked me if I had a notepad, and I started writing notes and he made me the command post coordinator. He had a handie-talkie and he was communicating with his brother Billy, who was up in the pile somewhere talking to 6 Truck.

They ended up making a rescue later. I don't know. I wasn't involved in that. I know at 1:33 p.m. is when they got them out because I wrote that down. When they mentioned that they were getting them out, that they were out, I wrote it on the pad, 1:33 p.m. So I basically got stuck over here now. I'm on top of Squad 1's rig that's now crushed.

Q. You were there?

A. Right here. They were parked on Liberty, right on this corner, I guess. They were on the southwest.

Q. Liberty and West?

A. Liberty and West. They're right here. Squad 1. Rescue 5 was parked here. We were using this engine here to pump off of and there were a bunch of rigs, ambulances all over, cop cars, everything crushed, on fire. All the rigs over here were on fire. These rigs were on fire.

So, basically, what was happening now, guys started showing up. For a while there it was just the ten of us, and then now, all of a sudden, I don't know where they were coming from, but firemen for some reason started showing up over here. It was pretty good, actually, because they must have spotted me up there and they started coming up and we started assembling them as companies. Five guys. If we had an officer, we would stick an officer with them. Chief Blaich would just turn around to me and say, "Send me ten guys, give me six guys, give me eight guys, ten guys." I kept pointing to him up in here somewhere, I guess, and he would just send them out where he had to send them.

We started getting bigger and bigger. I wrote down how many companies. Chief Mosier, who works here now and I work with him, was in charge of 90 West trying to put the fire out, and later on Chief Hayden came up and relieved Chief Blaich basically, told him to move up.

Now I'm standing next to Chief Hayden and some guy from OEM office -- Hayden was at the job. I didn't know. He knew so much more than me. I didn't have a handie-talkie, so I had a disadvantage. I didn't know what they were communicating to one another. But he got up on the rig next to me and he said basically his concern was that he didn't want to lose anymore firefighters, that too many guys were dead already, and he basically called Mosier aside and told him, "Get everybody out of 90 West. Fuck the building. Let it go."

Later on he came over and told me, as I'm standing next to him, you know, I was still assigning companies, the street is filling up with guys, starting to flood up with guys. I assumed by now it was about 2:30 in the afternoon. He kind of took me on the side and he said -- at this point it started to clear. You could see a little bit and now you could see that thing sticking up over here, I don't know what it was, that thing that you always see now in the pictures, and I realized that the tower was gone.

Q. This is the first time that you realized that they both had collapsed?

A. Yes. About 3:00 o'clock in the afternoon.

Q. 3:00 o'clock in the afternoon?

A. And I realized fucking everyone's dead.

Q. You were initially there at just before 11:00?

A. I guess 10:30, 11:00. I assume, looking back and thinking, the second one must have collapsed as we were walking up. We heard it. But you couldn't see anything.

Q. You couldn't see in all the smoke?

A. You couldn't see anything.

Q. Were people running towards you, away from you?

A. Oh, yes. There were people all in Battery Park, people all over the place. We didn't run through that major crowd I see on the news now. But they were all along the fences. There were civilians everywhere covered with shit.

I remember Chief Hayden saying to me, "We have a six-story building over there, a seven-story building, fully involved." At that time he said, "7 has got fire on several floors." He said, "We've got a ten-story over there, another ten-story over there, a six-story over there, a 13-story over there." He just looked at me and said, "Fuck 'em all. Let 'em burn." He said, "Just tell the guys to keep looking for guys. Just keep looking for the brothers. We've got people trapped. We've got to get them out."

That was our focus for the next 48 hours, and basically that's it. I don't know. After that, I remember the next biggest project was to find our men from the north. Now I realized that there were other people around. There was a northwest command post. They were up here somewhere. Then I heard there was another command post over here somewhere.

Chief Hayden must have come down from here because I remember we were running through these buildings. This is what we were using to get back and forth to talk to one another. There was a lobby here you could cut through and you'd come out over here. This glass was all crushed. You would come out on this side and we were running messages back and forth sometimes when we had to get stuff up there and you couldn't get through on the radios.

Then we found out, I guess around 3:00 o'clock, that they thought 7 was going to collapse. So, of course, we've got guys all in this pile over here and the main concern was get everybody out, and I guess it took us over an hour and a half, two hours to get everybody out of there.

Q. Initially when you were there, you had said you heard a few Maydays?

A. Oh, yes. We had Maydays like crazy.

Q. You were getting radio transmissions?

A. There were people talking. The guys I've talked to that were with us heard voices and were shouting to people. We had heard pass alarms, but then we didn't hear voices, no more pass alarms. The heat must have been tremendous. There was so much fucking fire there. This whole pile was burning like crazy. Just the heat and the smoke from all the other buildings on fire, you couldn't see anything.

So it took us a while and we ended up backing everybody out, and that's when 7 collapsed. Then, basically, after 7 collapsed, I went over and told the Chief that -- by then they had companies with handie-talkies, masks. You've got to remember, the first 200 guys went in there with no handie-talkies, no masks, some of them with bunker gear, some without. A lot of guys I recognized. I'm on the job 23 years, so I know a lot of guys, and they were just coming up to me. It was good to see everybody was there trying to do something.

Basically, we fell back for 7 to collapse, and then we waited a while and it got a lot more organized, I would guess. By then there was some heavy equipment showing up and the Chiefs took over, and I basically kind of slipped away from the Chiefs because I didn't want to be doing what I was doing anymore. I kind of felt stuck there.

I just got myself up in the pile and did a little digging and stuff, and I just looked around. I probably stayed until 2:00 a.m., and then I went home, slept, got up the next morning and went back up there. I didn't sleep well. I just went home to have my wife and kids see me. I took a shower.

Q. Were you able to get in touch with your family?

A. I had called my wife. I called her from the ferry. She was at work. She said, "Do you see what's going on at the World Trade Center?" I actually was on the Staten Island Rapid Transit. I said, "Yes. I can see it from the train window." So she said, "What are you going to do?" I said, "Listen, I've got to go there." She said, "All right. Be careful. I'll see you later." I told her I loved her and I just left. I was at the ferry when I called, and I ended up calling her again at about 4:00 o'clock in the afternoon from a position over here. I went in there to take a leak and I just looked around. I guess when we fell back for 7 to collapse I called her. I found a phone that worked, a landline, and I got through to her. I didn't know the Pentagon got hit. I didn't know. She started telling me all that shit.

Q. She was relieved to hear from you?

A. I was crying and I just -- that's it. Basically that's it. I mean, the rest is history. But that was my first half hour or whatever. Just five hours of chaos.

MR. CASTORINA: This concludes the interview with Lieutenant William Ryan. The time now is 1:42, 1342 hours. Thank you, Lieutenant.

LIEUTENANT RYAN: Thanks, fellas.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT MARK MAZUR

Interview Date: October 19, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. RADENBERG: Today is October 19th, 2001. I am Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department, City of New York. The time is now 0651 hours. I am conducting an interview with --

EMT MAZUR: Mark Mazur, EMS command, shield 3613.

MR. RADENBERG: We are conducting the interview at the Division 4 office, and this interview is regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

A. Pretty much that day started like any other normal day. I logged in at 6:00 in the morning. Around 8 or so I was monitoring citywide radio. One of the officers heard all the commotion going on on citywide.

I called my counterparty, who was on the road with the LSU truck. So we could man the MERV van, and that was specialist Bobby Short.

When he came in, we went downstairs. We were watching the TV and found out that a plane had hit the World Trade Center. So we load up the MERV van with new equipment that it needed in the truck, stuff like that, the ALS equipment.

I threw my equipment in the LSU truck.

We met Assistant Chief Pete Carrasquillo at the division. He loaded up his car with the duty captain and his aides, and they went up to -- they were going down to the event. They told us to relocate to Battalion 45 Woodside, wait for Lieutenant Hadala and any personnel that come down to respond into the event.

Pretty much the radio was -- all you heard was like commotion going on. You couldn't get through to the dispatcher, because they knew that LSU 4 and MERV van 4 were responding in. We finally got through to them for that.

We were coming over the 59th Street bridge. We were looking over at the towers, and you could actually see the people jumping. At first I thought it was funny, because you see these little X's coming off. You say, "What the hell are these things?" You're thinking then those X's are people coming off.

As we were coming over the last bit of the 59th Street Bridge, tower one collapsed. The radio pretty much went dead. When we came in, I tell you, what helped us out the most was the traffic department. You know, those guys are always made fun of. They had everything shut down, and we had such a breeze coming over the bridge. The traffic was shut down.

When I hit 57th Street, everything was shut down and we just came down like gangbusters. When we respond with a MERV, we need two escort vehicles, because that thing doesn't go fast enough. So if you try not to stop it, you can get there faster. So we were blocking streets.

We got to the West Side Highway, and we saw a lot of people walking down. When we arrived 84 at the scene, where the first, I guess, staging area was, a lot of firemen there. Everybody was packing up and getting their hose packs and bottles and stuff like that, and walking down.

Q. Do you remember what street that was?

A. West Side Highway.

Q. And the cross street?

A. Not offhand. If I looked on this little thing that you have here, if that's the foot bridge, it had to be the first one by Warren Street. Then Warren Street, we crossed over the other side of West Side Highway. We came down the opposite side of the West Side Highway facing out, because we had a bunch of fire apparatus that were parked all the way down.

So we stayed on the other side to come up, and then we crossed over by Vesey. That's where the MERV was. We started staging up over here.

Lieutenant Hadala and his command car came on the other side of the West Side Highway with me, and then I parked just on the other side of that foot bridge by Stuyvesant School, I guess it is.

Q. Stuyvesant, I believe, is up here by Chambers.

A. Then it's this --

Q. This is the American Express.

A. That's what we did. The white foot bridge that comes over?

Q. Right.

A. Yeah, okay, I was just on the other side of this, and I crossed back over. Over here you had a bunch of fire apparatus that was on the south side of the street. What I did was I nosed my truck in between them, because I needed the back doors of my truck, I don't need the front.

Q. Right.

A. Then, again, I noticed firemen carrying hose packs, bottles and stuff like that.

After I parked my truck, I started taking my equipment out and all of a sudden I heard this sound. It sounded like a jet, a high, whistling sound. There was like a rumble behind it. It was like a jet with a locomotive behind it.

I heard people screaming. All of a sudden, the firemen that were behind me were throwing their hose packs down. When I came out of the back of the truck, I looked up and I saw the second tower coming down. The second tower was coming down.

Everybody just started to run down the West Side Highway. So with this I jumped out of the truck. A police car was coming up. It was snaking the traffic like I did. He stopped behind my truck, threw it in reverse and was going back. I jumped on his hood, because I can't run that fast. I rode that for about a hundred feet. He hit a car, and when he hit the car, I rolled off the hood again and I just kept on running down the street.

Q. Was he going back up north?

A. Yeah. When the building came down, it had to be like a ten-story dust cloud or storm that came after us, and you didn't know what the hell was in there. All you saw was papers and you could see like the light in the papers. You didn't know if it was glass or whatever. It just turned the whole street dark, and it just came over. The best I could describe it is like a tidal wave that was coming towards us.

By the time I stopped running, it was like Barclay or -- you really couldn't tell, because when it hit you, it actually knocked you down, the motion of that pressure behind that. When I got up, there was dirt and dust everywhere. You really couldn't see. You couldn't breathe.

I made it back to the LSU truck. I had about, I'd say, 10 to 15 firemen in the back of my truck. They were bewildered. They didn't know what to think. So I pulled my multi-laters out of the back with these subway manifolds, so you can give multiple O2.

Q. Right.

A. I hooked them up, and I started to give a O2 to everybody. I pulled all my masks out, so I gave them masks to guys that were still trying to get up to the scene, to rescue people.

Pretty much it was pandemonium going on. You could hear -- the thing was, I'm a fireman, a volunteer fireman. You could hear the pass alarms going off, all over the place. You didn't know what you had.

I was working there, there was a Hazollah truck that was right across from me. They were giving care to everybody. I was working with a guy from Hazollah, and you hear these explosions going off. It was crazy because -- what the hell was going on?

A fire lieutenant or EMS lieutenant -- I don't know, you couldn't tell because he was covered with dust. He came up to me and said, "Does this truck run?" I don't know. It was covered with papers from the World Trade Center and dust. He said, "If it runs, get out of here; if it don't, then abandon the truck and just get out of here. We don't know if we're going to lose the whole area, because there were gas leaks under the sewer caps in the sewers."

So what I did is I took everything that I had out. I threw it in the back of the truck. The last patient I had was a Port Authority female. She was encrusted in this thing, in the dust. She couldn't see. I put her in the front seat.

I got my truck started. I backed out and then we pulled down the West Side Highway until we hit a safe area, which I don't know where it was. They had a fire hose hooked up on a stanchion like a shower. I took her out and hosed her off.

We ran into my friend Bobby from LSU -- from our MERV van. Both of us moved our trucks all the way down until we ran into two lieutenants and Commissioner Claire. We asked him, "Where do you want us to go?" Trucks are needed, we're getting back in service. He said, "Wait here," and just kept on walking. He really didn't know what -- again, we were all -- nobody knew what was going on. We had no real command stations.

Q. So you don't remember where that was that you met up with him?

A. There was a restaurant there, Ponte's at Desbrosses Street. We were up by Desbrosses Street. That's where we were. I went to that restaurant one time.

Q. North of Chambers?

A. Yeah.

While we were there -- when that blast hit, that pretty much blew everything out of the MERV van. What we did, we got the MERV van operational and got all the equipment back on, put it where it was supposed to be, got it dusted out as best as possible.

We pulled the equipment out of the LSU truck, because it had like two inches of dust inside, the multi-laters were covered with dust. I blew all the regulators out. Now that was back in service again. Pretty much just threw all the big debris that we had in the truck out. My cab was filled because the windows were open.

The only thing that saved my truck was because I angled in when I pulled in between those trucks because everybody that was next to me blew their windshields out of their trucks. They got really blasted. Mine, I had papers and stuff like that inside, and dust and sand. But it saved my truck.

Once we were at that staging area by Desbrosses Street, we used my cell phone, because it was the only one that was working. Communications was screwed. We got in touch with citywide. They deployed us to Greenwich Street and somewhere down, I think. Is Greenwich on here?

Q. No.

A. Greenwich would be like up in here. I think this was Greenwich. They sent us to Greenwich Street. We reported over there and set up a treatment area. Greenwich Street and Murray, right over here. There was I think some kind of school or office building.

We set up a treatment area utilizing the equipment from the LSU and MERV van. We had a bunch of doctors from all around the country, really. There were all kind of doctors. They were here for a seminar.

Q. Right.

A. They shipped the seminar down there and over to us. So we begin working over there. Again, we were just like covered with all the dust and crap and all.

Then the third building fell. That was over here.

Q. That was number seven, I believe.

A. There were a bunch of people standing on the corner of Greenwich and Murray Street. It was funny because we had two lieutenants who I didn't really know. All of a sudden when the building came down, it started stampeding all the people. When the people started stampeding, he said, "Go out there and slow them down."

Did you ever see Animal House? Remember that guy? I had that shot in my mind. I said, "You've got to be crazy." I'm a big guy. These people are out there trampling. So I stood on the back of my truck, holding onto the door rails saying, "Slow down, everybody." People were getting stomped in front of us. Then that stopped.

We were there I'd say till about 8:30, 9:00. Then they moved us over to the Battery Park side. They wanted the LSU and MERV over to there, the treatment area.

That out of the whole deal has to be the most scariest part of the whole deal, because when we picked up -- you have to picture -- I don't know if you were there -- how heavy the dust and dirt was. When night came, it was just dark, no lights in that area. They had us driving all different side blocks to try to get on the other side of the World Trade Center.

So we were driving down this one block -- again, I don't know the names. I was following in the MERV. It was smoky, dusty, and you could hear a mouse it was so quiet. It was really eerie.

When we came up this block we saw burned out fire trucks, crushed ambulances, burned-out police cars. It looked like downtown Beirut. Plus you had fire hoses all over the place. We were jumping over fire hoses with the vehicles. The headlights didn't work because it was so dark.

All of a sudden you see silhouettes of firemen pop up. Guys like walking away from the battle. They're like, "Hey, brother, how ya doing? Got any water?" They were just wiped out at that point. It's like, "Yeah, I've got a water here." You hand it out of the truck.

It was the most eeriest feeling. You couldn't tell what was in front of you. You didn't know if there was another building like leaning over. You can see all these crushed cars and vehicles. What's up above me?

Q. Right.

A. They put us on the opposite side, the Battery Park side. They had us park in front of a building. Then a bunch of people came up and said, "You have to move your truck because this building is going to collapse." I think it was the American Express building. It was unsafe or leaning, or something like that.

So they backed me up by the water. Again, I don't know the street, those Battery Park buildings, you know.

Q. Yeah.

A. Those high condos or apartments. It was right on the water. We backed down this block and we got the MERV and the LSU set up and had a bunch of ambulances coming.

That night we were there about -- we got down at that point about 11:00. We finally got released from there -- we set up the treatment area about 4:30 in the morning, quarter to 5. Then we were sent up to the command post back on the West Side Highway.

We got released about 7, 7:00. It was a pretty long day. I came in around 6. So I was on borrowed time on that.

Q. When you were here by West and Vesey, by the pedestrian bridge, do you remember, aside from Bobby Short, any other EMS personnel, or officers, that were there?

A. No. Oh, by the time I got done running, you had Tony Dimao, who's from M.T.D. You had Mike Felice from M.T.D., deputy director, the motor transport division. It was funny, because when I got done running from that blast, I turned around and said Tony -- because you couldn't see the block anymore. I turned around to Tony Dimao -- we're always fighting to get a new truck. I think I need a new truck by now.

He looked down the block and said, "I think so." I know he went back down again, Tony Dimao and Felice because they got an engine -- they got a truck and a rescue truck out before we lost them, the trucks themselves. Unfortunately the personnel was still in the building. He told me when they moved the trucks they had to move some EPA escort. The guy moved it and he said, "Well, that's almost a million dollars of equipment they were trying to get saved and get out." It's like a $7,000 high-tech (inaudible).

Anything else I ran into? Again, I had the Hazollah guys there with me. That's -- Hadala, Tony Dimao, Mike Felice. I think I took care of their boss. I don't know who their boss is. I don't know if he was in charge of -- in charge of fleet, because he had a knee injury. I took care of him when I went to that safe area and got the shower.

Q. Right.

A. I gave him some ice packs because his knee was all swollen.

Again, we didn't know what was going on. When we responded in, we only knew a plane. We didn't know about a second plane hitting. We saw the fire in the two towers, when we came off the 59th Street Bridge. We thought it jumped over, but we didn't know a second plane had hit.

When we responded in, we had the first tower went down. All we knew was that everybody was gone. Those are the people you work with, like my chief and everything, the duty captain and all. They were in front of us. They were at the command post. So we didn't know they were still around until about 7:00 that night.

I called up my division, this office, and talked to somebody, and they said, "Oh, no, we heard from this one, we heard from this one." The lieutenants we were working with down on Greenwich Street, they had no clue. As far as they knew, Chief Carrasquillo was missing, Captain Deshore was missing, Captain Rivera, Chief Brown's missing, Chief Mittleman's missing. He went down the whole list.

Then he said, "LSU is missing." I said, "Oh, stop there. I'm LSU. I know where I am."

Q. There you go.

A. So we're back with the people again, because they thought we were gone. Their last dispatch was that we were 84, up on the West Side Highway up there. We rectified that.

After that they had me on the missing list when they screwed up on something else. That's when we called the division office and finally talked to somebody and found out everybody we worked with was pretty much still around.

Again, we didn't find out it was a terrorist attack until we went to that safe area by Desbrosses Street. Getting the truck set up, someone said, "Watch out for anymore aircraft." "What are you talking about?" We don't have AM-FM radios in our trucks.

They said, "Well, they hijacked so many planes and this is an attack on America. They attacked the Pentagon. We were totally clueless." "What are we talking about? What's going on?" They said, "Watch out for any aircraft. If you hear any aircraft, duck down."

All of a sudden we heard the helicopters. They were guys coming in from New Jersey, cobras, so they were our attack helicopters.

Q. Right.

A. Then about five minutes later what really scared the hell out of us, we heard a jet coming down. It was an F-16 that came roaring up the Hudson River. It's like where the hell did he come from? Then it sunk in, they weren't kidding, because I thought they were kidding us. They said no, we're under attack. I thought that was somebody's wild imagination.

All of a sudden this F-16 is whipping down the Hudson. I go, holy shit, this must be really happening. They are after us. Now the big boys are here. You don't see military jets flying over.

Q. Yeah, yeah.

Who was the duty captain?

A. Rivera.

Q. Rivera?

A. Yeah. He was trapped for a while.

Q. J.R.?

A. Yeah. First day in Queens. He was happy too because I gave him a locker that day, and everything.

Q. Do you remember who the aides were?

A. Katz, Jason Katz and Sal Sangeniti.

Q. Sangeniti?

A. Yeah, an Italian guy. Sal Sangeniti is Chief Carrasquillo's aide. Jason Katz is Chief Day's aide. Chief Day is out with an arm injury.

Q. Chief Day was at --

A. He was not at the scene. He's been out with an arm injury. The captain in the division, he went in with Chief Carrasquillo, the captain and Sal.

Did you talk to Captain Deshore?

Q. Not yet.

A. She was trapped for a while. She was forward command. We thought we lost her. She's a tough German captain, so we figured we would find her in New Jersey. She got rescued on the boat.

Q. Right.

A. When the second tower came down -- before the second tower came down, they got them off onto either a PD or fire boat. She was in there with some people from the treatment area. We figured if she was in Jersey she was probably ordering people around. She's a tough captain.

That's pretty much everybody we worked with in Queens. A lot of Queens people were there. Unfortunately, we lost Carlos Lillo.

Q. Any thoughts or comments?

A. The thoughts, again, it was unfortunately an unforeseen tragedy. If it happened again today, pretty much we would have to do it the same way right now. I have a lot of friends that were in that building. Firemen on the job. All of us in that building would say, "We'll stay back here because it's safe."

We all came in knowing there's risk on this job and we know we have to go in there and get people out. They saved thousands of people. You can't imagine how many people they saved. Unfortunately they all lost their lives.

A building that big, you can't try to figure out every emergency that could happen to it.

Did you see that special on the History Channel?

Q. No. I have it on tape. I'm waiting.

A. Again, the guy said it. He said it in one sentence. He said, "You can't figure out kamikaze commercial jetliners." No way you can write that in the book. You can't plan for something like that.

Again, we got caught really bad this time. I don't think anybody acted out of the ordinary as far as bravery goes or doing their job. But they had to do what they had to do. Unfortunately to the end. If I had another job, would I hold back? No. It's not in me. If I was going to hold back, I wouldn't be on the job. It makes you really think, take stock in what you have.

Everybody did what they had to do. Communications could have been better, but it was hard because when we were coming up to the scene all you heard was those people trapped, over the command frequency and citywide. It gave you that much more adrenaline to get up there and try to get these people. When the second tower came down, you had enough.

The radios were pretty much dead. The 800 trunking radios were working very -- you know the 800 frequency?

Q. Right.

A. They were working very shabby. You had the repeaters on the World Trade Center. That's about it. The cell phones weren't working. Only AT&T was working.

But I got to admit, everybody stuck together. The system was working. I lost my beeper and my cell phone. I found the cell phone right away. It fell in the back of the truck when I jumped out. When I jumped on the police car, I must have lost my beeper in the Street.

It's funny, about a week ago the police property office, they called my Fire Department and said, "We have a beeper." They said they checked and have it assigned to a Mark Mazur, is he with your department. One of the guys there said, "Yeah, he works for the N.Y.C. Fire Department."

So they sent it in the mail. I got it back. It's all beat up. It's funny because I got my beeper back. I got my beeper back. Out of all that rubble and crap, I got a beeper back.

It's amazing, totally amazing. I was floored by that. I go, the system works. You figure thousands of people going around on the West Side Highway, thousands of people, trucks, and I got a beeper back. So the system works.

You had some cop down there in the property room, and he called up. Very weird. There's a reason why we are the biggest and the greatest department going. You start thinking of more and more stuff as far as when we pulled up there, the debris that was there, and unfortunately the people.

Fortunately I wanted to work really hard to take care of patients. That's the downside of it, the way that treatment area was set up, we were waiting for thousands of patients. They never came. If they arrived, they arrived on the other side.

That's it.

Q. Thank you.

A. Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT GREGG HADALA

Interview Date: October 19, 2001

Transcribed by Elisabeth F. Nason

MR. RADENBERG: Today is October 19, 2001. The time is 0558 eight hours. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department of the City of New York.

Q. I'm conducting an interview with?

A. Gregg Hadala, Lieutenant, EMS command, Shield 387.

Q. Of EMS Battalion 50. We are currently at EMS Battalion 50. This interview is regarding the events of September 11, 2001. Start with --

A. Okay, I was conditions 54 that morning, covering my regular area. We started hearing about a plane into the towers. I was with another unit on a call and we were listening on Department radios and the news radios, something was going on. I figured maybe a little plane, an accident and we found out it was much worse than that. I wasn't sent in on it. I was in the area. I was by -- sending messages that I could respond to that area, do you want to send me. I wanted to get a view so I went by 69 Street and Grand Avenue.

You could see the whole tower was on fire and stuff, both towers were still up at that time. People were pulling over in their cars and looking at it and everybody's like in shock. I waited by 69 Street before I -- people were getting out of my way and stuff. I didn't even have my lights or anything, I was just driving regular and like everyone was like listening to their radios in their cars. They were sending the MERV-4 vehicle, that's the big bus outside.

Finally after an hour they were sending it and I knew it would be hard for them to get by in the traffic and stuff, so I escorted, escorted them in to Manhattan, to get over there so then they put me on the job.

We took Queens Boulevard -- we had to wait by BN. 45, between the LIE and Queens Boulevard over there. Rather than send them in, they said wait there for some reason. So all right. I escorted them over to Queens Boulevard to the 59 Street Bridge, over on 57th Street, shot over to the west side, and then downtown. I was like -- traffic was clear. They closed all the access roads to emergency, you know, emergency vehicles, so it was a clear sailing down there and as we were going down, everybody is evacuating from lower downtown. All the people are walking up in their suits and stuff, some were dusty. It was like an end of the world thing.

There was no direction really where we should go, where to set up. There were supervisors, officers, Chiefs, fire side, EMS side calling for help and like just cries for help. I think that's when the first tower went down. I figured that people were trapped, people were dying, were dead already. Let's see.

I must have pulled up somewhere about 15 minutes or so before the second tower came down. Came up the West Side Highway, past 23rd and 14th. There was like vehicles coming from all over. Staging. Some were going in, some were waiting. We wanted to get a little closer to treat patients, but not too close, so we wound up by Borough of Manhattan Community College, Chambers, a little past there. Not all the way to Vesey, but we could clearly see the tower in flames and stuff and a lot going on.

Just trying to size up what's going on. We were basically, you know, had to make our own decisions because there was no upper command there telling us -- giving direction or anything. It was like that for the rest of the evening, so we had to do our best. So let's take a look, what's going on. And so we grabbed some people to see if there were any injuries, and treated wherever. While I was doing that, they said look out, look out and the second tower crumbled and the shock wave and debris came. I had the big bus with me and another truck, the equipment truck. There was one medic with us.

Everybody took cover. Most of the people I was with, I didn't -- I was away from my vehicle. I was going to dive under a truck. It was a police truck and some guy was in it already. He said get in there. It's open. A Con Ed guy or something, so I rolled up the windows and the dust, the shock wave passed over. After a few minutes when the daylight came again, we got out and assisted anybody who wasn't able to take cover, and was covered with that stuff, and washed down some firefighters and police officers and EMS guys that were outside.

Then we can go back in the debris area and see injuries and stuff. Then they made us evacuate that area, they said there's another explosion, or said there's a gas leak and made us all head up towards like 14 Street. They told other units to go all the way up to 23 Street. Chelsea Piers. Apparently it became the staging area, so we got up to about 14th or so. I'm there, and you know, the big bus broke down so we had to clean her up a bit, because it got all dirty.

We got back going again and I let command know that I was back in service, where we were, they told us to get over to another location. I think was probably near Vesey and Trinity, somewhere on the other side, I guess most of the injuries were.

By the time they gave us that direction, came down, Chambers and a little past Chambers, I don't know. It might have been Barclay. We wound up stuck in traffic by another building where they had set up a hospital area. Whoever was in charge there just told us to park there and work with the docs and the nurses there. We were waiting for victims and stuff but they didn't come. We just treated some rescuers that got hurt trying to rescue, but we didn't get any more victims from the Trade Center.

We remained there for several hours. Then that night they directed us over to the Battery Park City side. All these streets here. Just across the street from the towers, Ground Zero, whatever they call it now, and the apartment buildings.

Q. Down around Albany and West?

A. Yes, somewhere over there, close enough that, you know, if they pull anybody out or any rescuers get hurt, we're there to treat them.

Q. Right.

A. We were there till like about 5 in the morning. Washed down some guys, gave some oxygen. Finally were released 5 in the morning. They had set up some kind of command post on Chambers and West Street. There was an EMS Lieutenant and Captain there. I don't know where my vehicle is. I didn't know if it was still in one piece, whatever, you have to worry about de-conning it, whatever. They were like, yes, right.

Then I mentioned some missing equipment and all that. They were just like, whatever, go to your vehicle, go back to your station, go home. There were firefighters, Battalion Chiefs, like, you know, needing rides back to the Bronx and Harlem.

We were like full already. Just like -- I don't know -- maybe guys who lost their companies and stuff, they were just like, 6:00 in the morning. It was just like, you know, still just walking around. Got back, there were some extra personnel in the area. They de-conned the vehicles a little bit. That was it. Then we went back, you know, over time towards --

Q. Right. When you got in with the MERV to West and Chambers, do you know who else -- who was driving the MERV?

A. Yes, it was EMT Short, Bobby Short.

Q. Short. Recognize anybody else that was up there?

A. A medic that came with them, Wilson DiBrianno. He had no partner or something, and was at the station and jumped on.

Q. DiBrianno is from 50?

A. Yes, yes. Also with us was the equipment truck guy, Mark Mazur. He drove LSU-4.

Q. Right. Was there, when you got to Chambers and West, was there any other EMS staging or command area set up there or were you the first guys to get there?

A. There was guys by 14 Street or so. I think we were like the first guys to push up towards Chambers Street and after it collapsed, all units came up, there was a couple of ambulances down there. Fire trucks from towns I didn't even recognize and ambulances.

Q. Was there any other EMS officers?

A. There was, yes, Lieutenant Pincus, and another guy, he is from Battalion 8. Another Lieutenant, a Spanish guy. I forgot his name, but he was in the area. Initially that's all I saw, no supervision. Later on after the collapse, I saw one of the Chiefs from our Division.

One of the Chiefs, he was there. He was doing whatever he had to do, he checked on us. I told him the MERV was down. It wouldn't start. We were trying to get it back together. I don't know who else. I saw one of the new Captains. She used to be here, Janice. They were taking her away in an ambulance. She was hurt. Olsz --

Q. Janice Olszewski, something like that?

A. Yes. I saw she was hurt, all covered in dust. She was stable. We were hearing things, this one is dead, this one is missing, that one is missing. Just frustration to see the tower on fire there and knowing that people are in there and rescuers went in. Firefighters, all those guys were in there. You know, when it collapsed, you said oh, man, it's like a lot of people just died.

There wasn't a lot of patients to treat. It was just, with something like that you figured it would be in the hundreds, thousands of casualties. Either you made it out or you didn't. That night you had to drive all around lower Manhattan to get to the other side there. You'd go walking down by the graveyard, all those areas around Battery Park City were all covered with that dust.

Q. Any particular event that stands out in your mind for -- or struck you as odd or anything like that?

A. Just actually the collapse and the sound it made. It was like a strange sound, rumbling, not the loudest thing you ever heard, not like a boom explosion type thing, but just strange. How fast it was collapsing, you just started running. Looking back and seeing all the pictures they got after and the videos they are showing over and over again. Pretty bad day.

Q. Yes. All right. Any other thoughts or comments you would like to add?

A. No, just as far as the medical staff was concerned. They were really not prepared, but nobody was. As far as like equipment, protective stuff, masks and stuff for the EMS crews, there was none after a while. The other stations, they had more stuff, that had no units involved. We didn't have much in the way of counseling and all that, checking on people's equipments and checking on us. You guys come down. It's like a month later finally seeing what happened, but we just felt that the EMS part could have been better organized and watched out for us a little better.

We are still waiting to hear about, you know, nobody went down for medicals or anything after. Some of us got sick. We were exposed to what we were and you fill out this exposure report, send it down and get no call backs. We don't even know if they got it or not. If anybody has got problems later, it's a concern that I have heard from our personnel. And equipment and what else to expect. Like what's the plan. If something else happens what is our plan. What do we do. Bioterror or whatever. We used to have special units to go in. HAZTAC trucks and stuff.

Q. Right, ERS?

A. Yes, I mean talk about bad timing. I think that should be back on-line. Working closer with the fire side. I mean, you know. Everybody has to work together and even closer, because our safety, our lives are at stake. I really don't see that happening, to the extent that I think it should.

So the people who didn't make it and stuff, their families. They don't even know how many people were in the buildings and stuff. I don't think they'll ever know. I've just been like working in sectors, on overtime in the past weeks, just seeing very few whole bodies going out, pieces of people, shoes and clothing with some bones inside. I never saw anything like that.

Plus us police and firefighters on like 12 hour different tours. And they have been pushing us for over five weeks to run an extra unit. RCC says extra units, and this and that. Like yesterday, they tell me go down to the Trade Center in the morning. There's not enough people on overtime so they pull people from the station; ambulances, EMTs, and supervisors. So I get down there and they said oh, you are cancelled. We don't need you. Go back on patrol.

Two hours later they send me a message, report back down there. Went back to the city, and they called the command and Chief (inaudible) was in charge. Oh, what is he doing there. We don't need them now. Go back. You think a month later they would have it down how they want to do this.

Take an overview and catch up on things, recognize things that go well and try to tool up the things that didn't go good as far as organizing us, helping us out. That's it.

MR. RADENBERG: Okay. The time is now 0618. Interviewed is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

DOMINICK MAGGIORE

Interview Date: October 19, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick.

MR. TAMBASCO: Today is October 19. I'm Mike Tambasco with the World Trade Center Task Force conducting an interview with Lieutenant Dominic Maggiore, EMS Battalion 50 in the kitchen of EMS Battalion 50. The time is 0640 a.m.

Q. And Dom, if you would be good enough, tell us your story.

A. I was at Employee Health Service when the first plane hit. I had just been cleared for full duty, because I was out with a broken toe. I was on modified duty for a couple of weeks when the first plane hit.

As I was on my way back to Battalion 50 from BHS, I saw the second plane hit the towers from the BQE. I came back to Battalion 50, and I got in the command car with Lisa DeSena, one of the division ALS coordinators, and Paramedic Chris Lefkaditis, and we responded in.

On the way in or around when we arrived at -- we first responded to the Staten Island ferry. Around the time that we first got there or on the way in, I'm not really sure, was when the first tower fell. When I got to the Staten Island ferry, there was one BLS unit there. Shortly after -- and I don't know which unit it was in the confusion.

Shortly after that, an ALS unit showed up, and we established the triage treatment area at the Staten Island ferry on the 2nd Floor of the ferry terminal. Communications was gone. Basically I used my cell phone to do all the -- most of the communication with citywide.

We set up a triage treatment area. As we established the area, you know, more resources started showing up. Somewhere along the way -- awhile later, Chief Basile came and took command of that area. It was, I would say, at least an hour or two into it by the time -- you know, we established the staging area, and the units started to respond to us.

Q. Right.

A. Basically we treated very few patients. The area -- it was mass confusion, because that was the staging point for the evacuation of downtown, so it took a bit of time and energy to get the area set up.

With that, we started getting voluntaries and volunteers, and we had probably 30, 40 beds set up, you know, with plenty of staff, medical staff doctors, and such.

I would say a little while after we were basically established, Dr. Cherson and Manny Delgado came in, and they get there shortly after the second tower fell, I think, because they were blown from the force of the tower falling. They were up there.

I don't know time frames. I really can't tell. A little while after that, Chief Brown came in. We wound up treating and transporting Chief Brown, because he was in the rubble.

A couple of hours into it, it was pretty obvious that we weren't getting too many patients at that location, and Lieutenant Phil Soto was up at the One Liberty Plaza screaming for help. He was right there. The rubble was -- actually, I got there, you know, a little while later. I took my command car and two medics that came with me, Lisa and Chris, and we went up to Liberty Plaza, and it was a mess.

It was just -- the rubble from the tower was on the stairs, on the Trinity side of One Liberty Plaza. By that time it was starting to get dark. It was starting to get dusk. I don't know whether it was the dust, or it was starting to get dark or a combination of both.

There were a bunch of basically volunteers. There were some Jersey units there, some private units there. I know particularly there was a girl Chris from somewhere in New Jersey who kind of set up like the triage treatment area in the lobby of One Liberty Plaza, and by the way, she did an excellent job.

When I got there -- Phil got there I guess a little bit before me, but he was more involved up on the rubble pile. I established the triage treatment. I, you know, kind of face-to-face with everybody. There was numerous doctors, numerous nurses, all volunteers. There were a bunch of people all over the place.

I spent a lot of my time fighting with these people to keep them away from the pile, because I had some serious concerns about it being stable, which unfortunately, later on, proved to be true, because there was a secondary collapse, which I think wound up taking the lives of a couple of the Port Authority officers who were in the rubble.

Somewhere during the course of the night -- I was there from daylight on Tuesday until about six o'clock, seven o'clock Wednesday morning, and somewhere -- during the course of the night, I had a problem with an Assist ambulance crew, that they were -- they had smuggled a reporter into ground zero in the back of their ambulance.

When I confronted them and tried to get some straight answers, they got a bit belligerent. So did the reporter, and I convinced him to leave the area.

Back to the other part with the rubble. We had units operating close to the rubble pile and a couple of times on the rubble pile. Lieutenant Soto and I agreed that that was not a good situation, and we tried to get the attention -- we got the attention of the fire supervisors, and I think they kind of backed off to the edge of the rubble pile and were proceeding a little bit more cautiously.

We pulled out I think about two or three more patients during the course of the evening. Dr. Gonzalez had shown up, because there was a bunch of problems, you know, with doctors staying off the pile, people, you know -- narcotics being sent to the front line, you know, via anyone who said that the doctor up front needed them. You know, there were a lot of problems like that.

I spoke to a police -- I think he was an inspector, two-star inspector. I couldn't remember his name. I had issues with the Port Authority cops being up -- they were probably 30 yards into the rubble climbing around, and shortly after that was when there was a secondary collapse.

There was a Port Authority sergeant who came to our, you know, treatment area, and he requested some narcotics, the morphine, because either one or two of his officers were trapped, and he made statements to the effect that they were going to try and cut them out. He said he was a nurse.

With that, two doctors who were at my staging area naturally volunteered to go up on the rubble, so the paramedic decided -- I advised the paramedic to send them to give him the narcotics, and they did.

To my knowledge -- and I was there all night -- those officers never came to our staging area.

It was just mayhem. I don't know how else to explain it. For the most part, our people and the volunteers, you know, they really did a really good job, a little bit unorganized, in my opinion. Like I said, unfortunately, I spent too much time -- I think I had to spend way too much time baby-sitting the doctors and nurses, volunteers. They really had no idea, no conception of command, and to the command -- they were all great and willing to help and all that kind of stuff.

As a matter of fact, the fact that there were no patients or very few patients contributed to everyone being anxious and mulling around and all that type of stuff, and it just kind of complicated things a bit more.

What did get my attention, and the hair on my arm stands up as we talk about it, the people -- maybe not the higher-ranking, but the people who were down in the trenches -- cops, the firemen -- it was that they worked like they had worked together forever, like two good partners. They, you know -- for the most part, you know, listened to direction, you know, when it made sense, and anything you needed, people were right there, you know, hand in hand.

The volunteers, the public were outstanding. Even that early on, there were people walking around, you know, giving out cold drinks, you know, all of that kind of stuff. It was -- it was what kept me going the whole time.

I wound up being there from Tuesday morning until Friday, approximately 60 out of the 72 hours. I went home because [redacted]

[redacted].

Back to that Tuesday night again, there was a secondary collapse, which I'm not sure, but in my opinion, and what I think happened, that's what wound up taking a couple of those Port Authority cops that were missing.

Along with that, just in the mayhem to get away, we wound up treating three or four patients, just who got trampled, you know. You know, we had some problem with some organization. It's kind of difficult.

First of all, just two lieutenants. Phil Soto spent most of his time up at the edge of the pile with a couple of crews. Again, we face to faced a couple of times. We tried to keep the personnel at the pile as minimal as we could.

First of all, there were plenty of people. Second of all, nobody knew and it turned out hindsight is great, but there wound up being a secondary collapse a little bit later on the other side, which -- let me just kind of get a reference --

Q. The west side?

A. I was at Trinity and Liberty.

Q. Right.

A. Somewhere over here.

Q. North, up near --

A. Somewhere in this area.

Q. Right, it would be towards --

A. Is that the northeast plaza building.

Q. Yes, near West and Vesey.

A. There was some kind of other -- another secondary collapse or something, because you heard the big crash, and everybody by that time now they are already -- everyone's on eggshells. Anytime you heard any kind of a -- whether it was a crane on the other side or anything that sounded like -- people were squirming and running.

I wound up getting out of there Wednesday morning, like I said, somewhere around seven o'clock, six, seven. The time frame was fuzzy. I came home. I came back to the battalion. I wound up being treated at St. Joseph's ER, because my eyes were so severely irritated. I had bilateral abrasions.

I went home for -- seemed like forever, but it turns out there was, like, a five-hour span between when I drove to Commack and got back here. I was back here by about 12 o'clock.

As a matter of fact, Lisa and Chris were waiting for me and wanted to know what took me so long, and we headed right back in again. When I got there, Captain Boyle was there. I can't think of one of the doctors. There was a doctor from the Fire Department. He was involved with FEMA. Kind of a big guy, oriental or Hawaiian type. I don't remember his name.

At that point, there was a triage treatment at Church and West at the Stuyvesant School.

Q. Right.

A. And at that point -- this is midday on Wednesday. It was still out of control. Narcotics and supplies were being sent up to the front line with civilians with a piece of masking tape on their shirt saying "EMT," and sending, again, supplies and even narcotics until -- I think it was Dr. Gonzalez was there. He told me kind of get a grip on the situation at Stuyvesant School, see what's going on. I did.

We set up security. We set up -- they pretty much had a treatment area set up. There was, you know, doctors, nurses. What wound up happening, with the help of Dr. Gonzalez, we put a stop to all the supplies going up to the front, first of all, without anyone we knew. We tried to get a grip on that.

We set up security in the Stuyvesant building, because there was a couple of problems with reporters and cameras and all that kind of stuff. It got to the point where I had to get -- I don't know whether they were National Guard or whoever they were -- they were military -- to set up at all the entrances.

We broke the teams, the doctors and nurses, into two, sent some of them upstairs to rest. There was a Dr. Rich Machette and a Nurse Jo. I don't even know -- who basically took control, and we brought -- one was as a leader for the day, one was the leader for the night.

They pretty much took control of the medical staff and with me. We pretty much got a grip on it. I had a half a dozen masseuses show up, who were willing to -- and they set up shop, and they were giving out massages to, you know, anyone, just send them over.

You know, guys had been there now for over 24 hours, and they were great, and a medical staff -- there was probably two teams of maybe 20 to 30 doctors and nurses, and some -- you know, we mixed them with our people.

Basically we had about six or eight, you know, stretchers set up, you know, for serious critical patients, and there was a doctor and at least one nurse and one EMT at each stretcher. We had an eye wash area, and they really set up. I just kind of, you know, got it flowing a little better, but this guy Rich Machette, this doctor, and this Nurse Jo really were outstanding, and that's when supplies started showing up from everywhere.

I had a guy on a tractor trailer with 21 pallets. Said, you know, he was told to come down here. I didn't have the need here. I sent him back up to Chelsea Pier. I took a little bit of -- it was gowns, and gloves and that kind of stuff.

My main problem with the whole thing was the civilian medical people. I mean, doctors really had no idea. I had an anesthesiologist show up with a black bag full of drugs. I mean, like, you know, and he was going to anesthesize someone before he tubed them. He had no concept of the fact that our paramedics tube people all the time, and he really had -- I mean, he meant well.

I wound up asking him to leave because he became such a nuisance, you know. We kind of set up with Rich and Joe, so that I wouldn't be bothered with every little nonsense, and the guy just got to be such a pain in the ass that I had to ask him to leave that we didn't need him.

Similar with physical therapists. Everybody wanted to be in on all the conversations and all that, and I spent a lot of my time, you know, blocking and screening people who you really don't have time to explain. These doctors and such are so used to being in charge, and they had really no concept of the magnitude, or incident command at all.

I think that should be something that someone should, in a general, or whatever or something to that effect, because I spent a lot of my time schmoozing doctors and trying to get them out of my way.

Q. Right.

A. I was there Wednesday until Thursday morning, eight o'clock or so Thursday morning. The whole time my radio was pretty much useless. I used my cell phone for most of the communications, and I lost that for awhile in between there.

I had received a couple of calls during the course of the night because of my nine year old had a nightmare that I had been killed, and around then was when the news of Carlos Lillo started spreading around that he was missing. I broke him in when he started.

He was a partner of mine.

Anyway, by Thursday morning, I had to go home and take care of my son. He refused to go to school until he saw me, so I went home, and I took him to school, and I spoke to the counselors at the school, tried to get a couple of hours sleep.

I came back. It was late Thursday, about four o'clock, somewhere around then. I was there Thursday, and I was basically with Captain Boyle helping him with logistics, and he was just exhausted so he went -- I don't know whether the ship was there yet or he went uptown to one of the hotels that were letting people sleep or whatever, and I kind of -- I was there with Chief Perrugia and Lieutenant Mann.

At that time somewhere during the course of the night Thursday, I met a Chief Smith. There was a frantic rush because he had misplaced a piece of equipment on one of our gators, and he was frantic over it. You know, no one would elaborate over the radio what it was or whatever, and when I finally tracked it down, it turned out to be a Scott pack with a piece of the skull still attached to it, and wound up being Captain Amato's, from Squad 1, Scott pack.

It was amazing to me. The chief was, like, frantic and upset and on the verge of tears and all that. When I finally -- I didn't know what it was, and when I -- he opened it up. I brought it to him. He opened it up. He looked at it, and he handed it back to me and told me what it was.

By the time I, like, checked it out, and I was looking up to see how the chief was, because he was obviously upset and it was Chief Smith. He handed it over, and he did his job, and he was going back to work, and, you know, I had told him because when I brought him to the morgue, the morgue was, you know, barely set up (inaudible) and the marshals that were there, we kind of -- I kind of peeked over their shoulder while they were trying to figure out whose it was, the Squad 1 Position 1, which is the captain from Squad 1, and when I went back to at least give the chief some information, he was already gone back to work, you know, which was pretty moving.

By that time it started raining during the course of the night between Thursday and Friday. To be honest, I was pretty disappointed in how the movement of our personnel went out, was seriously lacking, you know. We had an academy staff that was there for, like, 20 hours, waiting, like, four hours for a ride home, a ride out of there, and we couldn't effect it.

In my opinion, a lot of the -- you know, I'm in charge, I'm in charge, started taking place, and at that point, I had to pull myself, because it was difficult for me to begin with. Naturally, my family was not happy that I was there, although they understood as best they could that's where I had to be, but when, you know, that ugly stuff started showing its face, I knew it was time for me to back out of there, and I wound up leaving there. When I finally got a bus to take the academy staff out, it was when I left, and I pulled out.

Took a couple of days off, and I went back, and then I've been back there two weeks ago, and I went back a couple of days to work the morgue sector. I worked EMAP sector, and then the next week I was there for three more days, and now three or four weeks into it, and we still were not organized enough to get our people in and out of there in a reasonable fashion. Every day wound up being 16 hours, 17 hours.

Q. Of a 12-hour tour?

A. Right. Well, it was a regular tour for me. I went there on straight time.

Q. Right.

A. So it wound up being 16 hours, 15 hours.

Q. Right.

A. It's just the people -- this is my own -- the public -- had it not been for the public, I couldn't have done it. You know, as much as there were these incidents of the isolated assholes who acted stupid and this kind of stuff, you know, that happens all the time unfortunately. It brings out the shit in people as much as it brings out the good in people.

When I went back there Wednesday -- I was driving in -- West Street was lined, like, from the Chelsea Pier to, like, 59th Street where I came across town, or somewhere thereabouts, with the public. There were people walking around, you know, handing you sodas, handing you gloves, handing you cold drinks.

If it were not for the public and their support, I probably would not have been able to do it. When I came home that Wednesday morning, my pharmacist -- and I live in Commack, which is you know, 45 minutes from the city, you know, I explained to him, look, I need this prescription. It was for my eyes. If you can't do it right now, I have to leave, because -- he dropped what he was doing. He did it.

Thursday when I went home for a couple of hours, I had seen my doctor because my feet were all screwed up. I broke a couple of toes. My feet were really bad. I wound up -- my doctor stopped in the middle of treating a patient, brought me in. He wound up giving me cortisone shots, because my feet were so screwed up. He wrote me scripts, called them in to the pharmacy, you know, and they are pretty far removed. They really didn't have to do all that, especially the doctor. He just like -- and that was -- that was far away.

Saturday and Sunday I stayed home, and although I would have liked to have just relaxed, there was a steady flow at my house of neighbors, friends -- neighbors that I'm really not, you know, close with and stuff that knew I had been down there that had seen some pictures, and it made a difference.

I think that's about my story.

MR. TAMBASCO: All right, Dom. I thank you for your story. The interview concludes. It's 7:09 a.m. Thanks again, Dom.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT ROLAND DIAZ

Interview Date: October 22, 2001

R. DIAZ

TAMBASCO: Today is October 22nd. I'm Mike Tambasco with the World Trade Center Task Force, conducting an interview into the events of September 11th at the World Trade Center. Interview time is beginning at 8:08, and our interview today is with…

ROLAND DIAZ: Roland Diaz Junior.

Q: Roland, tell us your story.

A: I remember on September 11th, I was going to post when I got a call for a plane that hit the World Trade Center. Me and my partner started heading down there.

Q: Who was your partner that day?

A: Chris Attanasio. We started heading down there towards Manhattan. We were at the Bruckner Interchange when I saw the second plane hit the second tower. So, we're rushing down there, we're fighting traffic. We go on the FDR, we get off. We got there between 10-15 minutes. We started pulling up on Church Street.

Q: Do you remember Church and what?

A: Church and Vessey.

Q: Great,

A: That was the staging when we first got there. On our approach we saw bodies on the floor. We go talk to the commander. The commander tells us to start setting up, start heading in. As we started getting on our gear, the Lieutenant came out and told us that they're changing staging to West and Vessey. So we pull to West and Vessey. We get our stretcher out. We're getting our gear. We go down and start walking towards the building. There was so many people there, everybody was running around. It was more a thing of people running around like a chicken without a head. So before I started to go, I had this need to call my Dad. When I picked up the phone to call my Dad to tell him bye, I was in building….

Q: The North Building is One, the South Building is Two.

A: No, I was in building Five. I went into the entrance, they also had another triage set up in there. I pick up the pay phone, call my dad, I finally get in touch with my Dad. People start running, yelling another plane hit the building. So, one side of the building was all glass, when I looked at it, my first reaction was to run down into the basement. But then in my head I said, that would have been the wrong thing, I would have been stuck down there. So I start running towards West Street within the building, so I guess I'm running West. I found an exit. Once I stepped out the exit, a cloud of smoke with debris, the minute I stepped out, overtook me. It was so much debris that if you put your hand in front of your face, you couldn't see it. I started coughing. At the same time, I'm still trying to get to West Street, away from the tragedy. Me and my partner, we meet up. This gentleman from OME, Operations Emergency Management…

Q: OEM.

A: Yeah, OEM for New York City comes up to me and my partner. He says my Lieutenant is still in there, I need somebody to take us. So me and my partner, adrenaline is still rushing, we go to the ambulance, which is full of debris. At that time everybody is running in all directions cause they didn't know what was going on. All they knew was somebody yelled that second plane hit the building, and later they realized that the building collapsed. So we run back to the bus. Luckily the bus starts. The guy from Emergency Management jumped in the bus, we started heading back towards tower one. We opened up the doors. We got as close as possible. A fireman came up to us, he had lacerations to his face, he had burns, he had respiratory problems. Another gentleman came up to us, he had a pacemaker and he had chest pains. A handicapped woman, on TV they mentioned, not everyone had seen it about this guy who said he was helping this lady down the stairs who was handicapped, brought her down into the lobby, didn't know what happened to her, and was wondering if she was alive. I happened to be, me and partner, the ambulance that picked her up. Everybody ran to us. We put on our masks cause we kept breathing in, breathing in. We transported at least 6 to 7 people. Cause everybody ran in, we closed the doors, and we took them to, I think it's Cabrini Hospital. The one thing that I really remember. When we pulled up it was a ghost town. All you saw was dust. The building wasn't there anymore. Everybody's running in different directions. Everybody's trying to find each other. After that, my partner and I talked and listened to other peoples' stories, and basically that's it.

Q: So you were already en route to the hospital when the second building came down then?

A: Yeah, I was there when the first building collapsed.

Q: Well, is there anything else you'd like to add to this for posterity?

A: Well, September 11th will be a day that I'll never forget. You know, it made me a different person to realize how precious life is and it gave me different aspects of how I see things now. And to all the families that lost members, my deepest regrets to them.

Q: Okay, well I thank you for your interview. This interview concludes at 8:15 AM.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT PETER CONSTANTINE

Interview Date: October 22, 2001

P. CONSTANTINE

MIKE TAMBASCO: Today is October 22nd, I'm Mike Tambasco assigned to the World Trade Center Task Force. I'm conducting an interview into the events of the morning of September 11th at the World Trade Center. The time that the interview begins is 6:35 AM. The interview today is with EMT Peter Constantine of Battalion 20. Pete, just give me your name, ranks and assignment, then just tell me your story.

PETER CONSTANTINE: Peter Constantine, EMT, Battalion 20. I usually get off at 8 in the morning. That day we had a late call. After the late call, we came back to the battalion, when we saw that the Trade Center was hit by a plane. We were assigned to go down. As we started heading down the West Side Highway, we saw the second plane, we saw both towers on fire. There was nobody on the West Side Highway after the second plane, just us and the police following each other down. We went straight through all the way down. We parked the ambulance with a lot of other ambulances on Vessey Street and West. We basically started grabbing equipment and helping out people who were running out from the building originally. At that time it was just chaos, everybody going everywhere. We were helping any way we could. A lot of people wanted to help. At that time, I don't know what time it was, we heard across the radio the tower's gonna fall, the tower's gonna fall.

Q: You heard that on the radio?

P. CONSTANTINE

A: Oh yeah, it came across. And then all of a sudden, when you looked up, you froze for a couple of seconds, you saw these little pieces falling off. Then all of a sudden, everyone started to run. Then, you started to run, your helping people, helping them run. You saw it, it was amazing…like out of a movie, you know, the cloud's just chasing you. As you look back, you see it engulf people. After that was over, we all went back in.

Q: Do you know about how far up you got before you went back?

A: It had to have been a couple blocks. We also brought the ambulance too.

Q: Oh, you took the ambulance with you?

A: When we went back, and then we just started helping people. Everyone was covered in dust, everyone was breathing it in, we were trying to help them, cleaning them off, anybody injured. Basically at that point it was just a whole mess of people: a lot of EMS, a lot of Fire, a lot of Police, just everybody helping everybody, trying to do whatever you could, as much as you could in a fast amount of time. Mostly we were cleaning off the dust from your eyes and face. A couple of people needed to be transported, so we designated the busses to transport. Basically it was everybody trying to work together, get it together, cause it was chaotic too. And then, it felt like ten minutes, the other building fell. I read in the paper the next day that it was actually something like 30 minutes later that it fell. When that one fell everybody ran again.

Q: You must have been right next to it then when that one came down, right? Cause that was the North Tower that came down second.

P. CONSTANTINE

A: We were close, but when we ran, we ran enough fast enough, that we weren't as overcome as other people. We got out. But we still got covered. Then when the other tower had fallen, it felt like ten minutes, but it was like you said, a half an hour. Everybody ran again, then there was a gas leak they said, they pushed everybody way back to 23rd. So you had all these units, all these rescue people stationed at 23rd street, and you couldn't do anything. That was the most frustrating part, cause you were there, and you were helping everybody but you couldn't go back to go get them. So you had to just sit there, cause those we our orders. We had to just sit there. Which was smart cause it was such an unsafe scene. That was basically it, we sat there for a couple of hours, everybody, not knowing what to do or how to help. Then eventually we started getting different assignments. Then they sent us home, we spent the night at ---they set up quarters at the hospital, cause you couldn't go home. There were cars everywhere and they blocked you in. So me and my partner actually slept at the hospital in the dialysis unit that night. Then we came back, went back down, did a couple tours down there. It felt like we were actually doing something, helping when we went back down. It changed my life you know? I've only been on the job six months, and I saw something like that.

Q: You won't see something like that again.

A: I hope not. That's pretty much what happened that day.

P. CONSTANTINE

Q: Anything else you want to add to it? Go down into the history? Anything?

A: It changed my life. I'm like, ready to get married and have kids. I don't know what's gonna happen. I'm too young though, I'm 23.

Q: Okay Pete, thanks for the interview. We'll conclude the interview at 6:41.

A: Thank you.

EMT VINCENT MARQUEZ

Interview Date: October 22, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. RADENBERG: Today is October 22, 2001. I am Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department, City of New York, conducting an interview with --

EMT MARQUEZ: Vincent Marquez, EMT, Battalion 20.

MR. RADENBERG: This interview is being conducted at EMS Battalion 20 regarding the events of the morning of September 11th, 2001. The time now is 0855, beginning of the interview.

Q. If you would start pretty much from when you were assigned to the job and how you got into lower Manhattan.

A. Okay. Basically what I remember is that day I -- that morning I was off. I was at home. I was on the computer, and I had the TV on. I heard the TV say that there was an explosion at one of the towers. I thought it was internal. I really didn't pay much mind to it until the second plane hit and I heard the news reporter say, "Oh, my God." I know what's going on now.

At which time I stared at the TV and they showed the instant replay. When I saw the second plane hit, I immediately called the station. They asked me to come in. I came down, put on my uniform, and I grabbed Fermin. We jumped on a bus, and we were 20 Nora.

I remember en route there was like a lot of confusion on the radio, and I heard somebody screaming "Mayday!" The dispatcher apparently didn't hear them. As soon as there was a break on the radio, I got on the radio and said, "20 Nora, somebody is calling a mayday." The dispatcher said, "Who is calling a mayday?" The guy kept saying, "Mayday! Mayday! Mayday!" All of a sudden it was just dead silence, at which time me and Fermin, we looked at each other. We were like, oh, my God.

Anyway, when we got there, there was a lot of dust and debris just floating around. It was pretty hard to see maybe three, four feet in front of you. I jumped out of the ambulance, and I grabbed my bag and just started walking towards where I thought the smoke was coming from.

I distinctly remember hearing somebody like whimpering, and I started make may way towards that sound. I couldn't see, but I was following it from what I was hearing. All of a sudden there was like this roar. I remember stopping.

It's funny because yesterday I was thinking about this and I remember Fermin screaming out my name and telling me to run. That's when I kind of like woke up. I turned around and just started running. As I started running, I looked behind me and there was this huge, black cloud just closing in on us.

Once it pretty much settled, I went back with Fermin to where I thought I heard this whimpering coming from, and there was nothing but silence, this eerie silence.

Fermin had the stretcher, and he was following me. I was pretty much just leading the way. We picked up people here and there, and we just started throwing people in the back of the ambulance. We dropped them off at Metropolitan Hospital and shot back.

We went back into the area, pretty much ground zero. It seemed like a nuclear bomb had hit. There were vehicles abandoned at the light.

There were vehicles crashed into each other, vehicles on top of each other. I remember seeing firemen walking around in a daze.

I think the second time around Fermin -- we got separated, and I met up with two guys from Battalion 17. I don't remember their names. They were out there doing the green ham thing. They had the EMS jackets with Green's name on it and stuff like that. They just grabbed whatever equipment they could and they just went out trying to find people.

I remember looking into -- because all the cars, everything was covered with dust and debris. We were lifting things and walking by the cars and wiping the window to see if there was anybody in the cars, stuff like that.

I think that what hurts the most is the fact that there was nobody to save. I don't know. I guess that's pretty much it, just trying to find somebody to save, but there was no one.

Q. When you were going down, responding down there, do you remember what routes you took, what streets you were on once you got down there?

A. I remember we went up Fifth Avenue, because I remember seeing Central Park to my right. Once the park ended -- Fermin was driving, and he just started making twisting lefts and rights and stuff like that. So I really don't remember. I really don't remember where it was that he parked.

I know that there was a couple of ambulances already there when we got there. But it's like the ambulances were a couple of blocks ahead, and everybody was where we were at. I found that -- I don't know, to myself I said why are they here. That's when I grabbed my gear and I just walked by everybody and just started walking towards the cloud.

Q. Do you know was that still north of the Trade Center complex?

A. I don't remember that. I don't remember that.

Q. Aside from your partner, did you recognize anybody else that was down there?

A. Kevin Darnowski. He's one of the paramedics here. I remember seeing him down there. I don't remember his name, but when I first got on the job we had -- I had a partner.

I used to work in Manhattan. I remember seeing him. I don't remember his name.

I know that after all this -- after we finished looking and stuff like that, we went to the pier that was one of the triage areas. When I got there, that's when I --

Q. Chelsea Pier?

A. Yeah, that's the pier that takes you to the ferry.

When I got there, that's when I saw a lot of people from the station that I knew. They were there setting up triage and stuff like that.

Yeah, that's it. That's all I remember.

Q. Any other thoughts or comments you'd like to add?

A. Yeah. I remember later that night I had gone to -- no, actually it was the second day, Wednesday. We had gone to actually where ground zero was at. I don't remember what it was that I needed, but whatever it was, it was at a makeshift morgue that they had.

I remember just seeing big body bags with little lumps in them. At that point I realized that those were body parts in there, not entire bodies. I remember when I looked to my left someone was putting a leg or a foot in a bag, and they were just starting to zipper it. I just felt helpless.

I went down the 11th and the 12th. After that I didn't go back down anymore. When I realized that there was -- I think it was pretty much the second day, because myself, like everybody, was hoping that we could pull people out, there would be actually someone. But the second night I realized that there was no one to save, [redacted]

That's pretty much it. After that it was lack of sleep, the nightmares, which I'm still having.

That's pretty much it. That's what I can remember.

MR. RADENBERG: Just for correction, on the start time of the interview was at 0850, and the time is now 0902 with the conclusion of the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMS CHIEF JAMES MARTIN

Interview Date: October 22, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. TAMBASCO: The date is October 22, 2002. I'm Mike Tambasco, assigned to the World Trade Center Task Force. We're in the office of chief J. P. Martin at Battalion 20 in the Bronx. The time is 0655 hours and we're conducting an interview into the events that chief Martin witnessed on September 11th at the World Trade Center.

Q. Chief, if you'd be so good to tell us your story.

A. On the morning of September 11th, I was at home. I was notified by my aide that a plane had crashed into the World Trade Center. Having responded in 1993 to the initial World Trade Center bombing, I was pretty convinced that we'd be responding in.

I notified Citywide on the radio that I was available for response and awaited their dispatch not knowing what resources had been assigned already. About ten minutes after that I was advised to respond in. I called my aide back, advised him that we were rolling, that I would meet him at our Battalion, 53, and we would go in together from there. I got dressed, got in the response vehicle and responded in from home. I live in New Rochelle.

We encountered terrific traffic delays on the way in. We found a lot of civilian vehicles were stopped in the middle of the highway at high points on the roadway where you could see Manhattan to watch the towers burn. So we had difficulty getting in. But on the way in I tried to develop a response plan for EMS.

I notified the Citywide dispatcher that, instead of responding directly to the site, that I would respond to the Brooklyn side of the Brooklyn Bridge and establish a casualty collection point, and I directed them to have all Brooklyn and Queens units respond to that location in lieu of responding directly into Manhattan and we would from that point funnel patients out from there utilizing the Manhattan ambulances to ferry patients across the bridge and go right out from there. Another chief, Ellen Scibelli, heard my request. She was only a few minutes out from there. She said she would respond to that location and she did so and started to establish this casualty collection point.

Upon our arrival at that location, which was the intersection of Tillary and Adams Street, Ellen had already established the site. She had a number of ambulances there. She was also working with Lieutenant Joe Lugo. We noticed just hordes of people coming over the Brooklyn Bridge covered in soot. I took a hydrant wrench from out of the trunk of the car and I opened up a couple of hydrants or I had a couple of hydrants opened so that people could decontaminate themselves at that location, and I got on the radio to try and establish radio contact with any other chief officers, EMS chief officers who were operating on the Manhattan side.

There was no response at that point. No one came over the radio, there was no voice conversation, and you couldn't see from all the smoke, but that was the point, I believe, that the second tower had dropped at that point. Like I say, no one was answering the radio.

I notified the Citywide dispatcher that I would assume command of the EMS operation until such time as they were able to contact any other chief officer, and I asked Citywide to do a roll call of EMS officers to determine who was operational and who was not. At that point I wasn't sure if people were alive or dead, and it was a very terrifying moment thinking that I had the responsibility for the EMS response to this incident.

I also was very concerned about going over the bridge knowing, of course, that two airplanes had struck, that it was an obvious terrorist incident at this point, was there anything else involved besides just aircraft, were there chemicals or biological or nuclear components to this that would have affected anyone operating on the other side, and I felt that it might be more prudent to run the operation from the Brooklyn side and just await confirmation that there were people operating on the Manhattan side. I didn't feel it was prudent to send further resources over the bridge if there was an inferno or if there was a higher risk going on on the Manhattan side.

Several minutes later Chief John Peruggia came up on the radio. He said he was operational. I said do you want me to respond in to your location? He said yes and he gave me the intersection of Chambers Street and West to respond in to.

I did so. I traveled directly across Chambers Street after crossing the Brooklyn Bridge and the roadway was littered with a couple of inches of white dust. It almost looked like you were traveling through a snowstorm. There was a very strong odor of smoke in the air. There were some people walking around with paper masks.

We found a group of ambulances at Church Street and Chambers Street and an EMS lieutenant from the South Bronx. I'll try and think of his name later. I asked him to try and organize those ambulances and write down who they were and we would contact him on the radio if we needed those resources. I continued driving westward across Chambers Street to West Street, where I met up with Chief Peruggia and Chief Kowalczyk, and from that point we began to regroup all of the EMS resources at that location.

Within a short time, Chief McCracken appeared, Commissioner John Claire appeared, and we began developing a response plan for how we would manage the injured and we tried to regroup the officers who were there. Chief Basile came up. All of the officers who were there prior to my arrival were visibly shaken. They were really -- they were coping, but you could see that they were really visibly shaken by the incident. Kevin Howe, he's a lieutenant down at Lincoln, he was operating as safety officer. I believe he had responded in from home, and he was trying to ensure that people who were operating were operating in a safe environment and he was doing a real good job of that.

I stayed at the command post. Walter gave me the responsibility, Chief Kowalczyk gave me the responsibility of the communications officer, and one of the things that I had done prior to leaving the house, having responded the first time and realizing that we had limited resources, I filled the car up with several bottles of water and I brought my little portable radio charger. Knowing that the new 3500 radios were out there but we didn't have chargers for them, I threw that in. So I felt that, if we could find 110 volts, we could at least keep the radios charged for the extent of the event. So I had that with us and we found a source and we kept just exchanging batteries through the course of the day.

Between Chief Kowalczyk and I, we reestablished contact with all of the chief officers. He had all of the chief officers report in, regroup, briefed everyone on the operational plan, and he handled the planning component and I handled essentially the communications and the, I guess, the smaller scale directions for officers on scene and left the more major decisions to Chief Kowalczyk and Chief McCracken.

I recall seeing Chief Gombo at the scene as well. I did speak to Chief Villani on the radio. He was down at the South Ferry. Chief Friedman I spoke to on the radio. He was handling the Staten Island side. He was prepared down there to transfer numbers of patients from the ferry terminal in St. George to Staten Island hospitals.

Chief Carrasquillo was also at the command post we had established at Chambers and West, and I had encouraged him to try and -- I gave him the number of my wife, who is a paramedic in New Jersey, and I gave him a number for their dispatch center to try and establish a casualty collection point on the Jersey side because I knew there were ferries going back and forth and we could coordinate with Jersey on distributing patients to Jersey hospitals. I don't know if that was ever accomplished or not. But I also know that we didn't see large numbers of patients. I think by the end of the day, we had only seen 100 or so patients, so all of the plans really were kind of unnecessary. People either walked away from it or they didn't, and those who did walk away sought out medical attention on their own.

Can we pause this for a minute?

Q. Sure.

(Pause)

A. The lieutenant I was trying to think of who was standing by at the intersection of Church Street and Chambers Street was Eddie Platt. He's normally assigned to Battalion 17. I had him collect the resources at that location.

Later on in the day, Deputy Chief Larry Mittleman arrived at the command post. I shouldn't say later on. It was probably a half hour to an hour after I had established contact with Chief Peruggia and Chief Kowalczyk. I asked Chief Mittleman to go over to Church Street and Chambers Street and make contact with Lieutenant Platt and determine what resources were at that location for deployment into the incident.

I don't really recall much other detail about the response component. I remained on the scene and operated as the communications officer until about 2:00 o'clock in the morning, when Chief Kowalczyk relieved me and asked me to come in the following day.

I recall looking at the dust that had come down and spread itself out over the area, looking at the fibrous component and thinking it was probably all asbestos. We somehow acquired paper masks and we were utilizing those for the duration of the day, and the following day we had better masks to put on.

I don't know. I can't think of too much else at this point. A lot of the day is a big blur.

Q. Chief, anything else you'd like to add emotionwise, anything that you'd like to have recorded?

A. Emotionally, it was probably the most terrifying day of my life, not knowing if we were going into an incident that we may not come back out of. I recall hearing loud noises during the course of the day and not knowing if it was -- knowing that they had stopped all commercial aviation and not knowing if this was another aircraft that had gotten through that was heading towards us, if it was friendly aircraft or if it was a building collapsing, and there was constant tension the whole day, on top of that the constant decision making, one after the other, the radio was going the whole time, people were asking for direction and we were giving out direction.

Having responded, like I say, the first time, I was familiar with geography, so that I found was a tremendous aid, but it was very disorienting with the amount of debris in the roadway. You couldn't get through West Street, you couldn't get through Liberty Street, you couldn't get through Vesey Street, you couldn't get through Church Street. All the surrounding roadways had collapsed so that our access was very much impeded.

The biggest problem was going north and south. You couldn't really go -- a lot of our resources were down South Ferry. We couldn't bring them north. Anything that would happen in the north we couldn't bring south. So we had to utilize some gators that we had brought in. There were some people who drove gators in from -- Tony DeGennaro, he's a paramedic out of Battalion 49, drove a gator from Elmhurst in. I don't know how he got there as quickly as he did.

But the gators were a godsend. They were about the only thing that was able to move through there. I think we had the first gators on the scene and they remained the only vehicles that could get around the site at all.

There were large numbers of volunteers that came to the scene and we tried to utilize them as best we could and keep our units available for the regular 911 response, and we had a large number of them staged just up the block.

I saw Chief Hart during the course of the day along with his aide. Actually, I saw him with Grace Cacciola, who is a lieutenant in the EMS Division 1. Chief Hart had had two near-death experiences. I think pretty much everyone who was there from the beginning had not just one but two near-death experiences and these people were visibly shaken.

Chief Wells I saw later on during the course of the day. Chief Browne I did not see. I was told he was injured. There were reports that several people had been killed, several of the EMS officers, none of which, of course, turned out to be true, and all of this weighed heavily on us, but I think we still were able to make decisions, make prudent decisions, and make sure that all of our people were operating in as safe an environment as we could.

I think certainly Chief Kowalczyk, who organized the operational component of it, I thought operated extremely well in spite of what he's gone through this year. He really deserves a tremendous amount of credit for the effort that he put in.

I would say that's it.

MR. TAMBASCO: All right, Chief. I thank you so much for your interview. Thank you.

THE WITNESS: My pleasure.

MR. TAMBASCO: This interview concludes at 0717 hours.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMTD FERMIN MERRERO

Interview Date: October 22, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. TAMBASCO: Today is October 22nd. I'm Mike Tambasco with the World Trade Center Task Force, conducting an interview into the events of September 11th at the World Trade Center. The interview start time is 0826 hours, and our interview today is with --

EMTD MARRERO: Fermin Marrero.

MR. TAMBASCO: And your rank and assignment?

EMTD MARRERO: I'm EMTD, I suppose it is.

Q. If you would, tell us your story.

A. Well, it was September 11th. I was at my girlfriend's house waiting for her to come back from taking my stepdaughter to school. I usually wake up at 5:30 in the morning to watch the news, but I had a three-day swing, so I just slept a little late.

So when I wake up, the first thing I do is turn on the news. All of a sudden I was just stupefied. I started thinking about it. When it first happened, I said it could be some type of accident. I remember in 1946 a plane hit the Empire State Building.

Today you have ground control, you have satellites. But when the second plane hit, you know what's going on. Even though it was my day off, I jumped up. My girlfriend asked me where I was going. I said, "Honey, I've got to go."

I reported here. It was a madhouse, people running up and down, people grabbing equipment, grabbing vehicles. Somebody said, "We don't know what we're supposed to do." I said, "I know what we're going to do. They're going to send me down there. As soon as somebody comes, one of my boys, Vinnie Marquez came in. Me and him went out. I went home and -- I left my bulletproof vest there. I picked it up, and we were gone.

I want to tell you that when you go up on the Brooklyn Boulevard, you could see the World Trade Center burning. You could see both buildings. That's when we started praying. This has started to help me be strong and proper. Everything I did that day -- I know Vinnie is a good guy. He was in the military.

When we got there, they told us to report to Fulton and Broadway. We parked our vehicle. We ran into Lieutenant -- her name is Karen. She's an instructor. She's a paramedic now. Tolingo.

Q. Tolingo, Janet, maybe?

A. Janet.

Q. Janet Olszewski?

A. That's it, Janet. That's her. She's a good person, a good instructor. She said just get oxygen out and water. So I said okay.

A lot of people were coming by, asking us for those masks, and we didn't have any. So we took sheets and we tore them into pieces and gave them to them. I started taking out the oxygen. Vinnie said, "I'm going down the block to see if anybody needs help and I'll bring them here." I said, "Okay. You do that."

Like ten minutes into that, right there at Fulton and Broadway, I hear this rumbling. Everybody is looking up in the sky. I said, oh, man. Really I didn't know the first tower is already down. Then everybody starts running. I said, no, this can't be. Everybody is looking to see where it's coming from. We started running.

Then I said I need to find my partner. That's when the smoke came zooming. It's indescribable. It's like as you see on TV when they're in an avalanche. It just came zooming out. It's like when you have pressure and everyone is running.

I said, oh, my God, my partner. I started running toward him. There was a point there that there was no visibility. It was black. It was hard to believe. It's like 9-something in the morning, 9:30 in the morning, and the sun hasn't gotten directly above, but (inaudible).

So I'm running toward my ambulance, and he comes. I grab him. I said, "Get in the ambulance, and let's move further up." I turned on my lights, my sirens, my high beams. I move a foot when this other ambulance comes out of nowhere. It says something Valley Hudson, a volunteer. I would have hit him or he would have hit me, really.

Then a guy said the second tower is down. I didn't know the first tower is down. It's impossible. It's impossible. I really said that. I said, "This can't be. Here in New York, we (inaudible)." I said, "Let's bring the bus down as far as we can, bring out the stretcher and see what we're going to do."

So we brought down the stretcher, put all the oxygen on it. We did a favor we shouldn't have, (inaudible) the Port Authority. You know what I mean?

We started going down the block, and we ran into an old man and this guy that had a laceration on his arm. Vinnie took care of that. I took care of the old man. We didn't hardly do anything. So I find the police (inaudible). Yeah, here's two guys over here with some badges. I said take them, put them in the back. We didn't know we were going to be staying for a long time. I didn't have coffee that morning.

Then we come out with the stretcher, and these people were carrying this fireman.

Q. Do you know about where you were then?

A. Yeah. We were right here. Here's Fulton and Cedar, Broadway. Me and Vinnie came down to here.

Q. So you went south on Broadway?

A. Yeah, we went south on Broadway, almost to Wall Street. This is the bank here, I think. It was in this area here.

Q. Right around near 140 Broadway?

A. Right. We went all the way back up. Then we came down. We stopped over here in this area here.

Q. Right near City Hall?

A. Right, we were around City Hall, because they told us there was a fireman hurt there -- a policeman hurt. So this is where we went. I took care of him.

Then we came back through here. Right here is a bank. In the bank we found this lady who was hysterical. She was really breathing. She was upset. She was breathing. I said, "Vinnie, we've got to leave her."

So we came back down. At this point I went and got the ambulance and brought it down to here, right up to here.

Q. Back to like Broadway and Fulton?

A. Right. Then we found this fireman -- no, I think that's where we ran into some of our boys, Charlie from station 50. I forget his last name. He was right there on Kings Bridge and Reservoir. And a medic. So we took him with us.

So then we decided that we were going to have to go back to the ferry. We went to the ferry. That's where we ran into Juan Burgo, Mike Negron, Charlie and the medic. I said, "Look, we're going back out. We ain't staying here."

So we come back down over there, and we're on Trinity --

Q. You came north on Trinity?

A. We came back north on Trinity. Right around here they stopped us, and they had this old man with a pacemaker having chest pains.

Let me tell you something, it was nothing about ego. Nobody was in charge. I know what they teach you at the academy about we're going to triage, we're going to do this, we're going to do that. One thing about it, everybody kept their head. Everybody worked as a team.

I said, Charlie, why don't you take O2 and stay with the old man. We're going to go straight up Trinity. Whatever we find, we'll come back down and pick you up with the old man and take him to the ferry. He said that's cool.

So he jumped out. When we got right around here, we found this fireman.

Q. That's around Cedar Street?

A. Yeah, right around Cedar, right here. Right here, in fact.

Q. Trinity and Cedar?

A. Trinity and Cedar. We find this fireman. He's like in shock. I'm 48, and I think I look pretty good. He said he was 48, but he looked like he was sixty that day. I'm telling you, he was walking around aimlessly. I said, "Come here, come here, come here. What's wrong?" He said, "Nothing. Get off of me." I said, "Are you okay?" He said, "I'm okay, just having a little chest pain." "Come with us. We'll take your blood pressure and give you some oxygen. That'll make you feel better."

So we walked him back up to the ambulance, and we put him in the ambulance and we went straight back down to right over here as far as we can go. We asked if anybody needed help. I said all we've got is our patient here. We're going to treat him. We went back to Cedar. We got up to here.

Q. To about Cortlandt Street?

A. Cortlandt Street, yeah.

Then that's it. Then we stood there and we looked at it. The metal part sticking up looked like a crown. I was going to walk in there, but Vinnie said don't go in there, it looks like it's gonna fall. I said, "Let's get the fireman and the old man out of here."

So we came back, picked up Charlie and the old man, and we came up to like -- by the exchange. I came across --

Q. And then went down Broadway?

A. No, no, we came across the exchange, and over here we ran into a lieutenant. "You can take them to Metropolitan." There was so much madness that we went up Broadway, kept on going. We kept on going up Broadway past all this madness.

Then we got across to Canal Street, we found this African-American lady on the ground. I think she was (inaudible). They stopped us. I said let's go on in there.

It was really funny, the fireman said, "I want to smoke a cigarette." I said, "Pop, with all this shit, you want to smoke?" He said, "Listen, son." "But you have chest pain." "That building fell five feet away from me." I said, "You ain't going to die today, boy. You better smoke two of them."

So we took him in the ambulance, and then we had the lady. I stopped again. Then they brought this oriental gentleman. So help me God, he was covered, he was white; from head to toe, white he had a gash on his forehead. We threw him in there, gave triage to everybody.

We let the other guys off, let them could go back and help. We zoomed all the way to Metropolitan. The eeriest feeling in the world is to be on that highway and there be nobody else there but you.

We got to Metropolitan. We dropped everybody off. I took a broom. I swept the whole ambulance real quick of debris. We went up to Harlem to get another stretcher, but that was a bad move. So we had to come back all the way around the way we did, and go all the way back down around.

Then we went back to Liberty and Cedar, and that's where we picked up Juan again and Charlie, the other medic, and Mike Negron. We went back up there hunting, so to speak, and we found four more people and we took them to the hospital.

Then by that time the sun was like overhead, like 12:00. You don't have any sense of time. My dogs are killing me. My dogs are killing me for two weeks. I have some things for my feet now. Really, I'm telling you, they're killing me for two weeks. I have to write a letter about that.

In all that madness, everybody kept their head. When we got there, when the sun was really out, then we saw -- let me tell you something, you can't beat a New Yorker in a pinch. I don't care what you say about this city. You can't beat a New Yorker in a pinch.

The guy from McDonald's -- McDonald's opened. He was giving out cheese sandwiches; he was giving out coffee. By this time -- we were out at 9:30. I woke up at -- the first building had been struck, and I was there to see the second building get hit from my house. I was all the way down there at 9:30.

The thing is, there were people out there giving us food, giving us water. You don't think about it, but by that time I was like -- by 2:00 I was already beat.

We ran into this lieutenant. I forget his name. He had a whole bunch of people. So we went back to the World Trade Center -- I mean to --

Q. The ferry terminal?

A. -- the ferry terminal, told the lieutenant. We came back, but we couldn't find him. So we assumed somebody else picked him up and took him to where he had to go.

After that it was just like cut and dry. I can't say it was humdrum, because there was nothing humdrum about this. I got enough and I was working with a lot of good guys, Vinnie Marquez, Juan Burgo, Mike Negron. Charlie, I'm going to forget his last name, the medic, from Station 50.

Chief Basile was there. There was a point I said, "Chief, we can't stay because there's a lieutenant stuck up there and we know where we're going." He just said, "Go, go." He didn't hold us back.

All that soot and stuff I breathed in. It's been bothering me ever since then. They told me I could go down there. They have medicine for you down there. I don't know.

It was also everybody. Even just a month later, I had to go away for like nine days to get myself together. I had a knee operation, so I just took nine days of R&R.

Other than that, you know, it was a horrible experience, but like I said, you can't beat a New Yorker in a pinch. I pray to God it never happens again, that we have to go through this again.

That's it.

Q. Anything else you want to add?

A. Outside of my dogs, my feet. Oh, and I lost an ambulance, but I brought back the de-fib. I want that for the record. Thank you so much.

MR. RADENBERG: Today is October 22nd, 2001. I am Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department, City of New York. The time is now 0814 hours. I'm conducting an interview with --

EMT HENDERSON: Henderson, Joseph, EMT, at Battalion 20.

MR. RADENBERG: This interview is being conducted at EMS Battalion 20. This interview is regarding the events of the morning of September 11th, 2001.

Q. You can pretty much start with when you were assigned to the job.

A. I was assigned to the job approximately 8:30. We took the Bruckner to the -- I forget the name of it, the other highway to get into Manhattan.

Q. On the east side, the FDR?

A. Yeah, FDR, but the toll you pay before you reach the FDR. Anyway, FDR. There was heavy traffic, a lot of police cars, a lot of FBI cars. Traffic was finally clearing all the way down. We parked right across the street from Two World Trade Center.

Q. On the West Side Highway?

A. Yeah, on the West Side Highway.

Q. Just south of Liberty?

A. Yeah.

There were body parts all over the place. When we were going there, you could see the buildings on fire. When we pulled up, a lot of people were screaming, people running in and out of the buildings.

We were directed where to park. We parked, and we went to help two other medics. Then when we were coming back, we went to go to the staging area when somebody started screaming that the building was falling.

I looked up, because I went back to the bus to get the long board while my partner was waiting for me. I looked up, see all the debris, you hear the rumble coming down. I don't know which direction I took off to go. I took off from like this way.

As I was running, you feel a bunch of debris hit you and knock you down. After I got up, you couldn't see where you were going. You had a bunch of people screaming. A few of the ambulances were exploding. You felt debris hitting you, choking, couldn't breathe, walking around, it seemed like forever.

Finally I was able to get inside of an ambulance that the lights on. We stayed there for a few minutes. But there was so much debris and stuff that you could hear hit the buses and stuff, like stuff was crashing on the bus around you. So we were able to get out.

There was a building on the side that we were able to go into. We stayed there for, I don't know, a certain amount of time. A female cop came running in and said, "One of your guys is on fire. One of your guys is on fire." When we came back out, that's when the second building collapsed. We were able to run from that one because we weren't too close to that.

I hung around there for -- we couldn't get to the other side and couldn't get back nowhere. We had no radios. We lost our radios. We lost everything. Somebody from the news was down there.

After a while we were able to get a bus to take us to Berkley Hospital, and from there we were taken to the Bronx.

Q. When you were down here on west side and Liberty, do you remember seeing any other EMS people down there that you recognized, know their names?

A. Yeah, Jefferson. Jefferson was down there. He's a medic.

Q. Is he from Battalion 20?

A. No, I forget the station he's from. I think he's from Boston outpost.

Q. Do you know who he was working with?

A. No, I don't know who his partner was.

Q. What vehicle number did you use that day; do you remember?

A. I believe it was 265.

Q. 265?

A. Yeah.

Q. When you got down there, that was between the two crashes?

A. No, it was after the second crash.

Q. After the second crash. Okay.

Was Jefferson --

A. He was there before me.

Q. He was one of the two medics that you said you guys were helping out?

A. Yeah, we went to help him at first. He was there before. Actually they pulled up right before us. We were behind them. When they parked, they jumped out. They were told we had a firefighter with a crushed face. They ran to the side, and we parked like right in front of them, because they were directed to pull in front.

Then we went to help them. Then still we had to go and build the staging area.

Q. Right.

A. When we were going there, that's when everything started to crumble.

Q. Do you know where they were treating their patient at that point?

A. It was Cedar.

Q. Over on Cedar?

A. Yeah. It was there. I can't remember -- they were pulling the firefighter out from somewhere; I can't remember where. It was almost black.

Q. Where was the staging that you were directed to?

A. The staging was on, I believe here.

Q. On West?

A. In the hotel.

Q. In the hotel?

A. Yeah.

Q. Did you recognize anybody in there?

A. We never made it to there.

Q. You never made it?

A. No. We got to about the middle of the street, and that's when we heard the rumble, people started screaming that it's falling, and I ran this way. I'm not sure which way my partner ran.

Q. Was it between the collapse of the two towers that you actually were treating the patient? You said something about a burn patient.

A. We never actually got a patient.

Q. No?

A. No.

Q. After the collapse of the first building --

A. Oh, yeah, the burn patient was after the collapse of the first building, when the female cop that ran into the building we were in.

I believe it was this one. I don't know what building this was.

Q. You were down here at Albany and West Side Highway?

A. Yeah, after the first collapse. I was able to get in an ambulance. We were able to get out because everything here was being crushed. A few of the ambulances were on fire. You could hear some of them exploding.

So after we got out of the ambulance, we ran to one of these buildings. Then after we came back out, we got about this far, and then that's when the second building collapsed.

Q. So somewhere between Albany and Carlisle was the building that you went into.

A. Yeah.

Q. And got back up to about Albany Street?

A. Yeah.

Q. And that's when the cop --

A. No. She came in the building.

Q. She came in the building?

A. Yeah. When we went back out, that's when the second building collapsed.

Q. Do you know where the burn patient was that she was talking about?

A. No, no. I believe she said he was in a bus. He was still one of these buses.

Q. He was in an ambulance?

A. Yeah, but we never got to him.

Q. Your vehicle, 265, was that destroyed?

A. Totally.

Q. That was?

A. Totally destroyed.

Q. Do you remember any other EMS vehicles over there?

A. There was a bunch of them. I don't remember the numbers.

Q. Okay.

A. But it was like an average of eight buses parked at an angle, because we would just jump out, run in the building, and they would like come back. It was easy access in and out.

Q. Right.

A. There were about eight ambulances. We were in the front, because there were other ambulances there before we got there.

Q. After the second tower came down, what did you do then?

A. Then I came out, looking to see if you see anybody that you know or contact anybody. Then it was a few of us that had hung together. It was me, Jefferson. I can't remember the other medic's name. We were just waiting around to see if maybe somebody would come get us. We had no radios. We couldn't call anybody. That's it. We were just waiting.

After a while a chief came up -- I can't remember his name -- and told us wait here, they'll send somebody to come get us. We waited. Nobody ever came back. Finally we got a lift to the hospital.

Q. Lonnie Penn was your partner that day?

A. Yeah.

Q. Do you know where --

A. Yeah, from what I heard, he ran this way to the water, and at that time there were a few guys there that had boats and they took him to Jersey.

Q. So you pretty much didn't meet up with him again?

A. Until 10:00.

Q. Back up here at the building?

A. Yeah.

Q. Any other thoughts or opinions you'd like to add?

A. There was another guy that was running with me. I don't remember his name. He was messed up pretty bad. I think they said one of the guys that was in the hospital, he had a punctured liver. But he had a hole in his back and a broken wrist and he was running.

Q. Was he from EMS?

A. Yeah, he was from EMS.

Q. Yeah?

A. Yeah. But I'm not sure what station. We were in the bus -- the same bus that we were in, we got him in. We were going to start to treat him, but there was just so much stuff falling. We took him out. That's when we took him in this building. After the first smoke cleared, some people took him out. That's when we came back out. That's when the second building collapsed.

Q. Okay. That's pretty much it, and I thank you.

MR. RADENBERG: The time is now 8:25.

The interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT ALWISH MONCHERRY

Interview Date: October 22, 2001

A. MONCHERRY

CHRISTOPHER ECCLESTON: Today's date is October 22, 2001. The time is 22:12, and my Name is Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department World Trade Center Task Force, I am conducting an interview with the following individual…please state your name, title, and assigned command area of the Fire Department of the City of New York regarding the events of September 11th, 2001.

ALWISH MONCHERRY: My name is Alwish Moncherry, I am an EMT with the Fire Department of New York, I work out of Battalion 49 in Astoria.

Q: Were you assigned to the World Trade Center disaster on September 11th, 2001?

A: Yes, I was.

Q: Can you please tell me in your own words about the events of that day?

A: Of the events on September 11th, I would say it would have been about 8:30 or so (I'm not too sure about the time) I was at my 89 when we received the call. At first I heard over the radio, the towers had been hit. I didn't know what it was, I didn't think anything of it for a split second. Well, my partner didn't think anything of it, but then I told him, cause Kevin Barrett was my partner.

Q: Kevin Barrett?

A: I said Kevin, did you hear that on the radio? He said: hear what? Then I told him something happened at the tower. Next thing you know, five or ten seconds later, 9 Henry respond, please respond to the World Trade Center. Immediately we picked up and went. We didn't have time to write anything. Down 21st street, we reached the 59th street bridge. Central tells us to stand by at the 59th street bridge on the Queens side, until further notice. We're the first ones there, the other units 49 Charlie, 45 Adam, and 49 Victor were also called. I think all of the units out of this station were called. We were at the front of the line, 49 Henry, to wait for conditions 49 to show up and tell us where to go. Everything's happening really fast. I'm looking from the 59th street bridge, you can see the towers, you can see the smoke. The buildings just look like a cigarette basically. When we get the call to go over the bridge (I'm not too sure about the time) when we're on the bridge there's plenty of traffic. That's when we noticed the second plane hitting tower two. I just couldn't believe that that happened. So everybody was just trying to get there as fast as possible, as soon as possible, no matter what. A lot of fender benders en route, not us, but a lot of other cars hitting. A lot of chaos on the highway, on the bridge. Finally we get over, and we head down to the staging area. I'm not too sure, it was a Lieutenant or captain at the staging told us--cause 9 Henry is a haz-tac unit, I guess they wanted them at a certain place. They chose to put us originally on Vessey and West.

Q: Can you just indicate on the map with a number 1 where your vehicle was parked originally?

A: On the corner of Vessey and West. While on that corner, I'm seeing people rushing out of the buildings. Most of them appeared to be burns and, it was just hell. I can't really describe it. People were just pouring out. Thousands and thousands of people just coming out. And everybody seemed to have been injured in one way or another. Triaging patients, that's all we could do. We didn't have enough triage tags for everybody either. At the moment prior to the first building collapsing, I remember hearing popping sounds. One of my partners was saying what's that? I saw the people falling and exploding on the ground.

Q: What was exploding on the ground?

A: Human beings. They were just falling from the sky and exploding like that.

Q: How close were you to these people landing?

A: I would say about 100-150 feet. People coming out of the buildings half burned, the fuel must have spewed down and hit some people. A lot of burns literally down through the skin to the bone. I had two patients on my ambulance, vehicle 111. FBI Agents were telling us to move our vehicle from the corner of Vessey and West, cause there was debris from the airplane which they needed for evidence. I guess it was NTSB, they wanted the area secured. There was nowhere for us to move the vehicle, cause there was debris everywhere. I know I ran over some sort of evidence somewhere. Pieces of metal from the plane. I tried, we moved it. I think now I was closer to the building, I would say about 50 feet from the building prior to it falling.

Q: Can you indicate on the map with a number 2 where you parked your vehicle the second time? If you can recall.

A: Let's see…here.

Q: Thank you.

A. MONCHERRY

A: When this happened, the first tower starts to collapse. I didn't know this at first. My partner was on the corner, I didn't know his location at the time, cause I'm triaging. I have two people on my ambulance already. To my assumption, I thought, 49 Henry is a haz-tac, it's supposed to be there for a reason. I'm not haz-mat certified, but my partner is. All I had to do was triaging the patients. My first patient was going into shock and bleeding profusely. My second patient was an asthma patient, and her ankle and knee were messed up a little bit, but she was okay. I took care of her and she was okay after that. So I left the two of them in the ambulance and stepped out. Two other guys needed help, I'm not sure which unit they were. They needed some help to put the patient on the long board. As we're lifting her up, I notice people rushing towards us, and when I look up, I see the building coming down. It's almost hovering over my head in slow-motion. I'm like holy--- you know.

Q: You can say what you want, it's fine.

A: I just, I froze for awhile. I looked up and I couldn't believe when it started coming down. It was a decision that I knew I had to make, but it took awhile for me to do it. The building's coming down real fast, and it looks like slow motion. I had to leave. I turned around and I had to go. If I would have stayed and ran back to the ambulance, I don't know what would have happened. So as far as I know the people who were within that vicinity there, if they ran the wrong way, turned the wrong way, if they looked the wrong way, something could have either fell on them at that moment, or after a long time, from all the debris piling up, they would have been dead. Definitely. So I just ran. I turned around, I thought about my kids. My daughter, 5 years old, Imani. And my son, brand new to the world, one month old. And my wife, we just got married in August. I thought about them and I said I can't leave them. I turned around and started running. On my way running, I found a lot of people, and I helped out a few that I knew needed help. If they could run, just run with me. Just keep on going. Now it's like a dead silence, it's still clear, but it's a dead silence. And soon all you could see was a black smoke coming from all sides of the street. It hit me in the back, it hit everyone, it just blanketed us. No one knew what to do, we couldn't breathe. I didn't have a mask on, we didn't have time to get all that stuff. While I was running, my helmet flew off, my mask, radio. I found radios, I found another helmet that was lying around, I picked it up and put it on. I feel some lady grabbing my arm, we're trying to run. She tells me she has asthma. I say just hold on to me, keep going. In the dark I saw a light. I started going towards the light. Holding the girl's hand, we're just going forward. We get to the light, it's another EMT….

Q: We're gonna stop the tape for a moment, the time is 22:25….Resuming the tape at 22:26.

A: Well, I'm holding the girl's hand, it's dark. I can't breathe, I can't see anything. All you hear is voices, everyone screaming and yelling for help. I saw the light and I started going towards the light. It's a fellow EMT, I don't know his name. All I know is he had dreads. He looked horrible, he couldn't breathe. I was telling him to hold on. So I grab him. A few seconds later I hear shelter, shelter. So we all start going towards the voice, it was a bodega grocery store. We all went inside the store, they closed the door, gave everybody water and took care of them. Told everybody to not swallow, just gargle and spit it out. We waited a little while, treated as much as we could inside the store with whatever resources we had at the moment. Moments later, I'm not sure about the time, the smoke started to subside a little, just from the top you could see it clearing up a little, slightly. It was at that time that we heard police officers, I guess chiefs, telling us all, EMS units and fire, all you guys come on out, we gotta get the rest of the people out. So after helping out as many as we could in the store, I put my gear back on, whatever gear I had left. We ran back out, I had a tee-shirt, I forgot to mention, that's the only thing I had in terms of covering my airway. We went back towards the building, Tower One. I don't know where cause it's still dark everywhere. So, when I went back, I just started helping people out, any which way we could. I remember an African-American female, she had a four year old or a five year old daughter with her, and another child, I'd say less than a year old in the stroller. They're all covered up in stuff, in soot and everything. I'm looking at her, she's screaming, she doesn't know what to do or where to go. I told her, I just grabbed the baby that was in the stroller, and there was a police officer who was next to me, he grabbed the four-year-old, and we all started going towards the building. I think it was one of the court houses over there. We took her inside there. I was so…I guess it was the adrenaline kicking in, I just wanted to get her inside, out of that environment. I didn't even bother looking at the child, cause it was sort of covered up a little bit, so I figured it was okay. I was like get in, get out. Take the baby in there, daughter's in there and she's okay. I didn't have time to look at the child to be honest with you, and look at her, cause there were other people there. I just ran back out to help some more. At that time I bumped into my partner. I heard his voice out there, and we ran into each other. We just started crying right then and there, you know. And a couple minutes after that, another one of our partners out of at the station, Luis Diaz, was found, we found him. Luis was not himself to say the least when we found him. He didn't have his helmet on, and he was down crying. I knew it was him cause he has a bald head just like me. He has a shiny bald head, but it wasn't shiny. We found him, I hugged him, and we just cried together right there for about five minutes. I don't know how long, but it was a long time. After that we said we still have a job to do. We have to go back out there and help these people as much as we could, and that's what we did. Now I guess the second tower started coming down. Just by looking, I would say we were about 300 feet, maybe a little more, maybe 400 feet away from it. But it came down, and the same thing. Everyone started running. At that point I just didn't know what was going on and why this was happening. It just wasn't good. We were stuck there for awhile, we stayed together Kevin Barret, Luis Diaz and myself. We started finding people along the way, co-workers. We later found a captain, I don't remember her name, but I know she works out of Battalion 50 in Jamaica. I think she's a Lieutenant. We found her and she told us where the next staging area is, and we headed towards the next staging area. I don't recall where exactly it was. I know we walked a long way.

Q: Could it be here?

A: I think so, I think so. I know when the Lieutenant told us where to go, that wasn't the correct staging area, cause we were still too close to the buildings. They wanted everyone away from it. That's when there was a third building that collapsed around that time.

Q: Building Seven, which would be over here.

A: Okay, 7 World Trade, that one collapsed.

Q: 7 World Trade collapsed a little later.

A: Yeah, a lot later. That happened en route, while we were walking towards our unit.

Q: That happened at 5:25.

A: Wow. We stuck around there for a long time. I would say for most of the day and night. Later on that night we were told to go to Chelsea Piers. That's where the Emergency Room was, the make-shift ER. We went there, and we were trying to figure out who was missing. For a long time no one knew where we were. We were the guys missing, and everyone was down there looking for us. So at that time we formed a little group, from 10 to 15 EMTs, and we went out of this area to try to go back for the guys who were not accounted for. Like Carlos and Luis' partner Paul Adams.

A. MONCHERRY

That was one of the people we were looking for while Kevin, Luis and I, he was the next person we were trying to find. We finally got that Paul was okay, I think I heard his voice on the radio and I told Luis that he was okay. We didn't know where he was. We couldn't find Carlos, but there was nothing else that we could actually do. But I felt like we should at least try, you know? At least try and get him. That's something that not too many people know about until now I guess. And that was it. We stayed there for awhile, I'd say we were released maybe 20 hours later. I haven't been back since. The only thing I keep is my boots. I don't even polish them anymore, they still have the ash on them. That's the only thing I keep as remembrance. And the smell on the ambulance…

Q: Is there anything else you would like to add on the events of September 12, 2001 prior to approximately 12:00?

A: No.

Q: Okay, well thank you very much for conducting this interview with me. This interview is being concluded at 22:40 hours. Thank you very much.

A: Thank you.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT LUIS SANCHEZ

Interview Date: October 22, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. ECCLESTON: Today's date is October 22nd, 2001. The time is 2256. My name is Christopher Eccleston of the New York City Fire Department, World Trade Center Task Force. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual.

Please state your name.

EMT SANCHEZ: Luis Sanchez.

MR. ECCLESTON: Your title.

EMT SANCHEZ: EMT.

MR. ECCLESTON: And your command.

EMT SANCHEZ: 49.

Q. Were you working on September 11th, 2001?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you assigned to the World Trade Center disaster?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you please tell me in your own words about the details of that day?

A. Well, at the beginning of the day it was just like a regular Tuesday, just going to work, preparing for the day and everything for my tour, which was tour 2.

I'm not too sure what unit I was working, but my partner was broke in with someone else, and I had a new partner.

Q. Who were you working with that day?

A. I think her name was Brandon. I'm not too sure if it was Brandon or not. I believe it was Brandon.

We started at 7:00. I think we started at 7:00. We just started at 7:00. We had a call for that day, which was a cardiac arrest. I think it was approximately 7:30. We went to the call, and everything went fine. There wasn't a cardiac arrest. It turned out to be an asthma attack. So we went in and helped the patient and everything. We took the patient to the hospital, and after that it was all clear.

We got cleared at about approximately 7:45, around there. I'm not sure what time it was. All I know is five minutes after we received a call saying that a plane just crashed into the twin towers, one of the towers.

My partner told me -- I looked at him like what's going on here? I thought he was playing around. He told me, look, it's serious.

We went to up to the park to get a good view of the towers. When I saw the smoke coming out of one of the buildings, I said, oh, shoot, it is real.

So he told me it's an MCI so we had to go to the command post and go along over the bridge to the place. The problem is after everything, we started heading up to the place, the towers, and there was about 20 units right behind us and police officers and firefighters, right behind us, right in front of us, everywhere. It was crazy, real chaos.

We just got there. When we got there, I didn't really know where we were at. It was one of the towers. I don't know if it was the front, back, side. All I know is there was a lot of people outside. People were hurt. People were yelling and screaming. We were right in front of it, about a block away from it, actually.

My partner told me not to get nervous, just stay calm, everything is going to be all right, it's going to be just like a regular call. I said okay. I asked him if we should stay together, should we stay together. He said, just go and follow along with the patients. Just help whatever patients, who feels hurt, doesn't feel good. I said okay.

So I went out, and I was looking around for other patients, any patients that I saw to help out, because I had no experience. This is my second week on the job, and I had no experience at all.

I see patients coming out from the building, and I started, you know, just putting them in a safer place, which was a block away. I had a patient that had asthma. I had a patient that had a laceration on the forehead, and I was sitting him down and giving him O2 oxygen and trying to manage, do the best I can.

I was just looking at people. I saw EMTs helping out, and I was like good, now I feel more comfortable helping out. Finally I saw one of my friends who graduated with me. I saw him, and we started working together, which was good for me. We sort of had the same experience. We didn't know what to expect. So we're like, cool. We were both nervous and didn't know what to expect helping out the patients and everything.

So all of a sudden we had this other patient come out of asthma, throwing up, vomiting, screaming and just yelling. She was just real nervous. We were just telling her it was going to be okay, it was going to be, don't be nervous, everything's going to be all right. We just gave her O2, and she seemed to calm down. But she was throwing up. We were trying to make her feel better, saying jokes, anything to make her feel good, better.

Five minutes later I just heard this loud noise. It was like an earthquake. It was shaking, and things was going down. I looked everywhere. There was nothing going on. I looked to the side, looked to my friend. There was nothing going on. When I looked up, I saw the top of the building floor by floor was coming down, collapsing. I was oh. (Inaudible.)

I looked at my patients. They were all there, just throwing up. They didn't know what was going on. I looked at everybody. They seemed like they didn't know what was going on.

All of a sudden I just looked up and said this is for real, is this a dream or what? I'm like, what do I do? Do I run? What do I do? Pick up the patients? Call my partner? What I did was I screamed, I yelled. I said, "The building's collapsing. The building's collapsing. Everybody run."

What I did was just dropped everything I had the radio -- I had the radio -- and just ran, just ran as fast as I can before I get trapped between the buildings or anything. I just ran.

All of a sudden I see this firefighter who was helping a patient. They didn't know what was going on. He was looking down towards the patient. He looked like he was just like focused on the patient. She had a big laceration on her leg. He was right in front of me. I just pushed him to the side and just told him to run because the building was collapsing.

I just kept running. I just kept running for approximately 20 blocks after that, 20 blocks, kept running, until everything was cleared. There was smoke everywhere. You couldn't see anything. I just kept running until everything was all clear.

Once I got there for about ten blocks, I was with police officers and I started to help them. It was about approximately 2:00 -- sorry, it was about 10:00 when that happened. I started helping out with the police officers. I bumped into one of my friends who is a police officer, and we just hugged each other. We were started saying, "Oh, my goodness, this is crazy. What's going on here?" We just heard about there's another plane that just hit Washington, D.C. We were getting nervous.

I started helping them out for about an hour, just directing the people, where to go, go to a safer place and not to panic, to calm down and everything. I was there with them for two hours. After two hours, I hooked up with paramedics. I was with them, they went to Bellvue Hospital, and I was helping out at Bellvue hospital, bringing patients in from the streets, for about two hours, approximately.

After that I was with -- we went south together. We went down to get more patients to bring to the hospital. We went down south. For some reason I just couldn't find them anymore. So I saw some units from Brooklyn, some people that I know. So I hooked up with them for a little while, and they brought me over to Chelsea Piers. That's where we were just all stationed and doing triage.

From there on we just stayed all together. I saw more people that I graduated with and started helping them and just broke down. We both broke down and couldn't believe what we saw. It was just crazy, the things that we saw.

We never expected to see something like this, and we were never prepared for anything like this. We thought we were prepared for anything at the academy. In two weeks we just -- we wouldn't believe what we just saw that day of the 11th. It was really intense.

I was worried about my parents, calling them. I couldn't get in contact with them.

I got over to the station about 2:00 in the morning. I was working about 20 hours that day. I was exhausted, went home, just broke down. My mother broke down also. I said to myself whatever God wants, if that's his will for this to happen, that's the way it's going to happen if that's the way he wants it. That's just the way it's going to be.

I tried to keep myself calm and everything. [redacted]

That's all that I saw that day, the things that I felt.

Q. Do you know where you were when the second tower came down?

A. The second tower?

Q. Were you in the area when the second tower came down or were you further away?

A. When we got there, I don't know if the first tower fell or not. What I know is when we got there -- I couldn't see the second tower. All I saw was the first tower. I don't know if it was the first or second. All I know is that when I got there there was a lot of people. It was one of the towers -- I can't remember whether it was one or two.

All I know is approximately 15 minutes and the collapse, everybody just sprinted. Everything was a mess. I ended up -- people ended up in New Jersey, Queens, Bronx, everywhere. Everything was just all mixed up. From then on, I was with police officers and other units.

Q. Is there anything else you would like to add to this interview in regards to the events that happened before noon?

A. Before noon? Not really.

Q. Okay. I thank you very much for conducting this interview with me?

MR. ECCLESTON: The time is 2308, and this interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

LIEUTENANT GEORGE J. DeSIMONE

Interview Date: October 22, 2001

Transcribed by Nancy Francis

MR. CUNDARI: Today's date is October 22nd, 2001. The time is 1330 hours. I'm George Cundari. I'm with Richie Dun of the New York City Fire Department. I'm conducting an interview with the following individual:

Q. Please state your name, rank, title and assigned command.

A. George J. DeSimone, Lieutenant, Engine Company 224.

Q. Can you please state the events regarding the day of September 11th, 2001?

A. Sure. It was about 8:45 or so. We were watching the morning news in the firehouse, in the back room, and we saw the first plane go in or photos of the first plane hit the Trade Center. I said to the guys in the firehouse to get ready, I'm sure that we'd be moving on this, whether we were going to go to the fire or we were going to relocate to some other engine company in Manhattan. About two minutes passed, and I believe the time was 8:54 when we got the ticket to leave.

As we opened the front door of quarters, there were already papers and other kinds of debris falling outside on Hicks Street. We mounted the rig.

We went down Columbia Street. The guys who were looking north sitting in the rig saw the second plane hit. We were en route to the staging area at Hamilton Avenue. When we got there, I don't think we were there more than two minutes and we were told to head into Manhattan.

We went through the Battery Tunnel. When we came out of the Battery Tunnel, we were on West Street, very close to the Trade Center, and that was one of my problems with the whole setup initially. As we pulled close to the Trade Center, the tower, we saw airplane parts. We saw bodies. We saw body parts. What we did then was we decided to move a little bit further west on West Street to the furthermost point that we could.

Q. Was there a lot of commotion and chaos in the street?

A. At that time it appeared to be pretty quiet. There were a few rigs in the street around us. I couldn't even tell you what the numbers of those rigs were.

Q. What about civilians?

A. I really don't recollect seeing any civilians at that time.

As I said, we pulled west to get out of there because I thought we were in part of the exposure at this point. No sooner did we do that, we went west, as I said, and just a little bit north to get out of that area, and there was a lieutenant in a white shirt, I presumed from Metrotech, who came over and he said to me, "Go up the street north and find a hydrant. You're going to relay water." I don't recall what company he wanted us to relay water to.

We went up to the first hydrant and there were too many vehicles around us, so we went up to about the second hydrant. He also said initially to make sure that we maintain an aisleway in the middle so that emergency vehicles could get to and from.

As we pulled up and got to the second hydrant, we noticed that there was transmission fluid leaking from our apparatus. What I wanted to do was make sure the apparatus was parked and out of the way of this little aisleway that they wanted us to keep. So we had to jockey through a few vehicles. We had to jockey a few other vehicles around so we could put our apparatus close to that hydrant and hook up.

In the meantime, when we saw the transmission fluid leaking on the ground, one of the guys, Firefighter Saulle, went underneath with a wedge and he tried to put the chock into that, and he did in fact stop the transmission leaking to a great extent. At that point, I took my extra riding list and I went down back in front of the Trade towers, and I'm not sure if it was the north tower or the south tower, but I went to what appeared to be the command post.

At the command post I saw Chief Ganci, I saw Chief Downey and a bunch of other Fire Department bigwigs, and I gave them my riding list. We were on the apron of a building opposite the tower on the west side of the street, and it looked like it was going to be an underneath parking garage. We were on the apron of that at that point in time.

After that, I got out of there as quick as I could because the building was decaying. I mean, there was fire coming out of it, fire dropping down, and at that point I think we started to notice bodies dropping from the buildings. In that amount of time, and I can't tell you how long the frame was, maybe about a half hour, maybe 20 minutes, maybe two hours, we saw multiple bodies. I probably counted 20 bodies that had jumped from the windows.

As we got back up the street -- they had told me from the command post to just wait, that they would tell us what to do. The next thing I know, we heard a little bit of a rumbling, and then white powder came from the first collapsed building. I thought it was an explosion initially. We got hit with the powder. We tried to run. We got hit with the powder. It took a few minutes to clear.

After that, we started triaging as many firefighters and civilians as we could. It was basically cuts, scratches and eyes that were irritated, and we tried to irrigate as many of those eyes that we could.

Q. Are we talking about a lot of firefighters and civilians? Was it a large group?

A. I would say those rigs that were parked in and near where we were, and I'd say we were maybe 200 feet north of that first footbridge, maybe 20 or 30 firefighters in and around that area, to include us, and maybe another 20 or 30 civilians at that point. They all looked like they had just come out of a snowstorm. We did that for the better part of a half hour or better.

Right after that, in my mind, I heard a rumbling, and it was almost as if it was the roller coaster at Coney Island. It seemed like a metal clanging on metal sound. Then we saw a black cloud come out, and I told everybody to run. We ran as fast as we could as far north as we could. At that point we had gotten separated. We couldn't outrun a cloud.

As for me, I got knocked down. I thought it was the day I was going to die. I got knocked down and I put my mask on and it was full of debris in my face piece. When I started inhaling, I took a lot of stuff in from whatever was caught in my mask. I thought I was going to have a heart attack initially. I heard my heart pumping, and when you're encapsulated with the helmet and the mask and the face piece on, it was kind of horrible.

After that, I still thought it was an explosion. I thought it was some kind of thermal explosion where I'm either going to get burnt -- and I had kind of ideas that it was going to be something like Hiroshima where all this heat was coming at me and we were going to get burnt -- or if the heat didn't burn me, I thought that all the parts coming out of this building, the windows, metal, all the things like that, that I might be severed in half. It turned completely black. I was still on the ground at this point, and I just thought we were going to die at that point.

Right after that, probably the better part of anywhere from five to 15 or 20 minutes, I don't even recall, it started to lift a little bit, and looking through my face piece it appeared to be like a dreary day that you see in a newspaper article or photo from maybe Rochester or Buffalo in the middle of the winter. Visibility was limited. At this point my concern was where were the rest of my firefighters?

It took me the better part of 40 minutes, 45 minutes, to regroup and find all of them. At that point, I found them someplace north of Stuyvesant High School but on the east side of Vesey Street. As we all got together, we shook off what we could and we assessed if anybody was really hurt to any extent, and we kind of just sat around for a point there. At times they tried to ask me, "Lieutenant, let's do something, let's get busy," this that and the next thing.

I found a command post again and that appeared to be north of that first footbridge, and I checked in with whomever. I don't even know at that point. It was a quasi command post at best.

Q. Were the radios working at the time?

A. The radios were working. At one point they were very, very silent, and at another point it appeared that there was so much chatter on it that you couldn't decipher any kind of a message clearly coming through.

Q. Did you hear a lot of Maydays on the radio?

A. No, I did not. I did not hear a lot of Maydays. That's fact. There may have been stories of hearing a lot of Maydays, but I didn't recall.

Q. Were you on frequency 1?

A. Yes.

I checked in at the command post and said that we're available. They said just take it easy, sit there, and basically throughout the remainder of the next couple of hours, past noontime, I'd say, we were just hanging out, sitting together, and just scared as hell. We saw jets overhead, commercial airliner, military jets, Air Force jets, and we didn't know what the hell was going on.

Q. Between the first and the second building, the first one you only had the white smoke and the second building you had the black smoke?

A. Yes. I mean, the visibility was reduced the first time pretty much, but there was no visibility the second time. Absolutely none. We were in pitch black.

Later, I'm going to say sometime around 12:00ish, 1300 hours, we heard them calling, "224 give me more water." Sometime in that interim somebody had moved our apparatus. They had hooked up on Vesey Street at West, and our pumper was pumping. Every time we heard 224, we thought they were calling us, you know, just the numbers of the apparatus, the identification numbers. So we made our way back to Vesey Street and we manned our own pump pretty much the rest of the day, and for the next two days our pumper operated at that particular site.

That's about all I know. More members of the unit showed up with the recall. I was able to make a phone call home to my bride, my mother, let them know we were all right. After that, there's nothing else that I can really tell you. It's just a bad day, a real bad day.

I don't think we understood the magnitude of what was going on. I was fearful that there were bombs in the building. That was my first thought, being the military kind of guy that I am.

Q. You knew right away it was a terrorist attack?

A. When I saw the second plane, yes. There was no question. The first one could have been an accident, pilot error, heart attack of the pilot or crew. The second one, there was no doubt about it. One horrible day. That's all I can say about it.

Is there anything you want to clarify or you want to ask me to clarify? That's how I saw it that day.

Q. So basically that was the end of the day?

A. That was pretty much it.

Q. Were there any other officers or any vehicles that you might remember seeing numbers while you were driving down that lane?

A. When we met the staging area, I honestly can't be sure if it was 202 or 204's apparatus. There was a truck company there. But, again, we were there, as I said earlier, no more than two minutes. I'm thinking more like 30 seconds that we were there. There was enough confusion going on and we were looking back north at the Trade Center from the staging area at the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel and just seeing volumes of flame coming out of multiple stories.

Q. At any time did you see a lot of civilians between the two collapses?

A. I saw a lot of disoriented civilians walking around. Most of them were holding their noses, of course, or their heads, not from any injuries, but I think they were concerned about what they were inhaling at that time.

Q. Can you just clarify on the map here where you parked the engine originally?

A. To the best of my recollection, I don't know if it was this bridge. I'm assuming this is Vesey Street somewhere here?

Q. Here is Vesey, right there. This is Liberty, which is the beginning, and this is Vesey. Liberty is closer to the Battery Tunnel. This is the first pedestrian bridge. This is the second pedestrian bridge.

MR. DUN: Here is the Winter Garden right there.

A. See, I have it backwards. In my mind, Vesey was sitting somewhere over here.

Q. So you actually were on Liberty?

A. We came up through the mouth of the tunnel.

Q. Yes. That's right over here.

A. Okay. We came right up in front over here, and parts were falling off. The building was decaying.

Q. So that would be Liberty.

A. Okay. We pulled then across here, west, the west side of West Street, and then we went north about over here, maybe Barclay, Vesey to Barclay.

Q. Right. Because Stuyvesant is over here on Chambers.

A. We ran like hell and we wound up -- there's a school over here on this side, too, I believe.

Q. Yes. That's the college.

A. New York City Community maybe or something?

Q. Yes. BMCC, right.

A. That's where we recouped, up that way.

The only other thing that really scared me was, between these towers this way, and there was another very tall building here, most of the forces were massed in and around here, between these two. My only thought was that this one on the north side is coming down, too, trapping any secondary forces that were still alive at that point in there, you know, it was a shitty day.

MR. CUNDARI: I'd like to thank you, Lieutenant DeSimone, for conducting this interview. The time now is 1345. This concludes the interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

ELOY ALBUERME

Interview Date: October 23, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

MR. RADENBERG: Today is October 23, 2001. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department, City of New York. The time is now 0603 hours. I am conducting an interview with --

LIEUTENANT ALBUERME: Lieutenant Albuerme, Shield 108.

MR. RADENBERG: Of EMS Battalion No. 8.

This interview is being conducted at EMS Battalion 8 regarding the events of September 11, 2001.

LIEUTENANT ALBUERME: On September 11, 2001, I was assigned to an M.O.S. daughter who was sick at the school. Responded there. Before we responded there, I heard the call come down that an explosion occurred at the World Trade Center. Then I called my CO, and I advised him of such so he can respond.

At the completion of my assignment, I called citywide through my cell phone, advised the citywide tour commander that I was going to respond to the World Trade Center.

I responded into the World Trade Center southbound on 7th Avenue into West Broadway, which at West Broadway and Murray Street, I stopped to assist a unit that had eleven patients from -- that were injured due to the incident.

At the completion of that, I then went down to Barclay street, which I made a right to West Street, which I made a right, which I also encountered a couple of units, a few units that were sitting right there on West Street and Murray.

I asked one of the medics to have all the vehicles turn around facing northbound and to collect a key and make that as a staging area.

At that time, one of the trade buildings collapsed, and I turned right -- turned left on Murray Street, using the District 37 building as my cover, which at that time I was screaming out to everybody to come my way to use the building as a cover, and then after that I assisted (inaudible) for the people to be evacuated, and then I don't know how I got to Chambers Street, but I went down on Chambers Street, and we just started setting up triage area at the Manhattan Community College, so in case we had to take any of the personnel, and after that I encountered a couple of EMS personnel that had their cell phone on them, which I used their cell phone number as a communication device in case -- so that way we can talk to each other, since all the radio communication at that time was down.

On my way to where the EMS command center was, I went over there and I tried to speak to an EMS chief that I have started communication, I had two different staging areas set up for ambulance to respond in case we need them.

At that time, I was told to go and see the captain. The captain then told me to go see the chief. The chief told me to go back to the captain, who told me I will be in charge of transport right at the Chambers command center.

After that, it just stayed there until 2:30 in the morning, return to the station, and I went home.

Q. The first unit that you met up with on Murray and West Broadway, do you remember what unit it was, EMS unit or a volley?

A. They were a vollie unit.

Q. A vollie unit?

A. Okay, they were a vollie unit, and then I had a 911 unit. I think it was ten charlie from -- sorry, from Lenox Hill, and I think one unit from St. Vincent's.

Q. And on West and Barclay, the units that were there?

A. All EMS units.

Q. All EMS units?

A. Right.

Q. Do you remember which units they were offhand or --

A. No idea.

Q. Recognize any of the personnel?

A. I didn't recognize no other personnel. That is why I asked who was the senior man, and I had to put a senior man in charge of that staging area.

What I did ask was turn around and face north so in case they have to transport, they had a clear avenue to transport, and as they were turning the vehicle around, that's when the tower building came down. I don't know which building came down, but I know one of the buildings came down.

Q. When you were on Murray Street itself, by the D.C. 37 building, any other EMS personnel with you?

A. No, I was by myself.

Q. You were by yourself? They all went north on the Westside Highway?

A. They all went north on the Westside Highway.

Q. With the collapse?

A. Right, with the collapse.

Q. Do you know that chief and the captain?

A. There were a whole bunch of chiefs there. The captain I just don't remember his name, but there were a whole bunch of EMS chiefs there.

Q. And they were up on Chambers?

A. Chambers, there is -- yeah, they established command.

Q. Anything else you'd like to add?

A. Basically no. I think that we should start doing more drilling on an incident like this, as far as I think that we haven't done in many years because they're too comfortable. It's not only keeping in practice to have a lot of (inaudible) to make sure that everything is done correctly.

You have proper training, like the army had the war games and things like that. We have this command, this system. We should have that more often, you know, and in a city anything could happen.

MR. RADENBERG: Okay. The time is now 0609 hours, and the interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

PARAMEDIC ARTURO GONZALEZ

Interview Date: October 23, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. RADENBERG: Today is October 23rd, 2001. I'm Paul Radenberg of the Fire Department, City of New York. I'm conducting an interview with --

PARAMEDIC GONZALEZ: Arturo Gonzalez at Battalion 8 and I'm paramedic 3675.

MR. RADENBERG: This interview is being conducted at EMS Battalion 8 regarding the events of the morning of September 11th. The interview start time is 0634.

A. We start with -- we received a call to go down to the World Trade Center. The exact time I don't know. It was about 8:40, 8:45, around there. When we responded down, we went down West Street. We saw building number one had fire on the top floor. You could see that right actually from 34th Street.

Upon arrival we parked at West Street in front of One World Trade Center. That's where we stationed at. We took our equipment. We stayed there at least 24 minutes, more or less, give or take.

The second explosion came in building number two, in that area. We didn't actually see the plane, but we heard the explosion. We were told to go into that building, Merrill Lynch right there, the building in the lobby to set up the triage.

As soon as we set up triage there, building number two went down, and all the windows in the Merrill Lynch lobby, they were all out.

We ran out of that building, and we went to proceed to the next building that was across the street. I'm assuming that's the American Express building we ended up on. And we went in that building, and all the glass exploded in that building too.

So we went out of that building and ran into the park that's behind the Winter Garden, in that area. It was too much smoke coming out of the whole area.

We ran to the Stuyvesant High School, that I don't see in the map there. We stayed a few minutes there. People started running up West Street. Me and my partner that was -- we switched partners because my partner parted -- Rick Perez, we decided to go back and get the MERV. The exact location should be right here. So I'm not sure which street this is, Merrill Lynch on the right side.

Q. South side of the Merrill Lynch building.

A. We picked up the MERV there because it was abandoned because of the collapse of the building. We proceeded eastbound to West Street, and we stationed at Vesey and West. We were told to stop and treat patients, because patients were coming out of the area.

From that location, we stayed there all night up till 6:30 in the morning, 5:45 to 6:00 in the morning to be precise, treating patients there and treating members of the service and all the departments. So during that time we saw -- mostly we saw maybe two patients, three patients.

Then from there by mistake I took a walk up to this building here. I'm not sure what this is, one of these buildings, and there were 154 elderly trapped in the basement -- not trapped but they wanted to get out. We had to relocate it back to my commander and see how we could get them out. We decided it was safer to stay there.

Then we went back to the MERV and just kept on treating patients all night, just back and forth. If you're asking for the time frame between the period of the plane crash and the second one and the building collapse, we were from the location into this building, switched to another building, ran to the park and then ran to Stuyvesant High School. Then we relocate to get the MERV. That's a big vehicle we had.

When we were trying to proceed north, we were stopped at Vesey and West to treat patients, and we didn't move from that location all that time.

Q. When you arrived here on West opposite number One World Trade --

A. Right.

Q. -- aside from your partner, did you see anybody else there from EMS or the Fire Department that you recognized? Do you know the names?

A. Not Fire Department. There were some Fire Department vehicles there. EMS, there were about four or five units there at that location, standing there.

Q. City units or privates?

A. There was only one city unit, and the rest were voluntaries.

Q. Do you recall what unit that was, the city unit?

A. I think it was 7 Charlie.

Q. 7 Charlie?

A. Yes. 7 Charlie was the unit that was there, city unit. That's the only one I remember as a city unit.

Q. Did you recognize the crew at all?

A. Yeah, one of the crew members. No, both of them. I remember both. They're working here today, I think. They both were on the scene, yes. The others were voluntaries.

Q. Any EMS officers that you recall there, lieutenants, captains?

A. Yes.

Q. Chiefs?

A. There was Captain Stone. Chief Carrasquillo was there, Chief Kowalczyk. That's all I can remember offhand. At that time frame, those are the three I remember at the moment. In the evening I saw most of the other chiefs, like Chief McCracken, the captains and all that stuff, Pinky. Lieutenant Albuerme was there too. But then the time frame from the plane crash and in that time, those are the three I remember.

Q. When the building started coming down and you went into Merrill Lynch, Two World Financial, did everybody that was with you on West Street go in there, as far as you know?

A. I can't remember, because there was so much panic and running, everybody was spread. I don't think everybody entered the building. I think some people just went up West Street and some people went out the other direction. They all were separating.

We actually stayed about 20 minutes here watching people jumping out of the building. Actually they were jumping, landing on West Street. There was about 20 -- we watched about 18 to 20 people jump out of the building, and they were landing on West Street or right in front of the World Trade Center.

Q. The concourse?

A. Yeah. They were just landing in front.

We could watch them and that's it.

Then when the second plane crashed, the explosion, they decided to move us -- move further up. Somebody was screaming that another plane crashed. The next thing is we're in here but running out of all these buildings because of the explosion and the crashes that every building was creating and spreading all over the place.

Most of the units disappeared and went up. I think what happened -- we're the only one that came back and picked up the MERV then stayed there. We were the only unit there for a while, up to maybe them, they came back to us.

Q. Anything else you'd like to add, opinions?

A. No. I mean, we were not expecting what happened there. They caught us by surprise. I just remember that one of the officers took all the keys to -- usually you park somewhere and the officer takes the keys. That officer was never found. Most of these vehicles were left on the scene because the reason is they didn't have the keys.

Q. They didn't have the keys.

A. The officer that took the keys, we never found. I don't know who it was, but we never found them at that time period. Luckily Rick had a copy of the MERV, and we wanted to move slow but we had to stop because we were the only ambulance active at that moment, the MERV. They told us to stop and treat people, and that's where we stayed all night.

Q. Okay. I thank you very much.

MR. RADENBERG: The time is now 0643. The interview is concluded.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

EMT JOSE PEREZ

Interview Date: October 23, 2001

Transcribed by Laurie A. Collins

MR. TAMBASCO: Today is October 23rd. I'm Mike Tambasco with the World Trade Center Task Force. We're conducting an interview into the events of the morning of September 11th at the World Trade Center. We are in the lounge at EMS Battalion 8. The time is 6:04 a.m., and the interview is being conducted with --

EMT PEREZ: Jose Perez, emergency medical technician, Battalion 8.

Q. Jose, tell us your story.

A. From the beginning we were at 48th and Lexington or thereabouts when we heard it come over the radio that a plane hit one of the World Trade Centers. At first I just thought it was like one of those single-engine planes.

Then I guess because of all the excitement and everything we kind of just started to head down to some extent. I know all the south units were already down there. So we kind of UCA'd ourselves, and we ended up at 11th and seventh in front of St. Vincent's. We could see both of the towers. At that time when we got down there, they were both engulfed in flames.

At some point we just saw the first tower fall, and we were amazed. I was with my partner, Joe Valdivia, and we both were shaking our heads and were shaking. We decided to go down, and we took the West Side Highway. At some point we just couldn't go any further because people were starting to come up, so we threw it in park and basically just --

Q. Do you know about how far down you got?

A. I don't really remember. I think it was -- I want to say Bank Street -- actually it was further down, I think. I don't recall exactly.

Q. Okay.

A. So we just helped as much as we can with everybody that was coming out. Then the second building fell. I think for me it was just unbelievable, the whole thing. For the first few days it was something that I thought didn't really happen. I just had to convince myself that it did. I just had a good support system at my home with my wife and family. The people here, it was good to talk to.

I think initially the problem was people who were coming out, some of us were missing. So we really didn't know what was going on with certain people here.

Q. A lot of misinformation. You had no idea?

A. Right. Especially after the first building fell because everybody was calling a mayday, and we didn't know who was actually close enough to be involved in all that. Luckily everybody from our station's okay. I knew by face certain people but not really personally. So it's pretty devastating all around.

I think that's basically it. It was traumatic. I think it was helpful being here for a while with everybody.

Q. I was going to say, were you working for like days after that?

A. Yeah, it seemed long for a few days afterwards, but it kind of diminished a little bit. We coped. We were able to help each other out and support each other.

That's basically it.

Q. Is there anything else you would like to add to it at all?

A. No, just like I said, I think it was very unreal at the time. It seemed like it was a movie and it wasn't really happening. After a few hours, you know it's real.

Q. All right, Jose. I thank you for your interview?

MR. TAMBASCO: The interview we're concluding at 6:08 a.m.

MR. TAMBASCO: Today is October 23rd. I'm Mike Tambasco, assigned to the World Trade Center Task Force. The time is now 0545 a.m., again, on the 23rd of October. We're in the lounge at Battalion 8 conducting an interview into the events of the morning of September 11th at the World Trade Center. The interview is being conducted with --

EMT TORRES: Norberto J. Torres, assigned to Battalion 8.

Q. Norberto, I just ask you to tell me your story.

A. On September 11th we had been on a job with a GYN. hemorrhage going into Bellevue when I heard over the radio that an airplane had struck the World Trade Center. We dropped off the patient, and as I de-conned the bus, I continued to listen to what the radio was saying, what was going over, the transmissions.

While we were still 81, I heard someone scream over the radio that another plane had struck the second tower. Then upon hearing this, me and my partner decided let's go buff the job.

We'll head down there. We'll see what's up.

We got assigned to the call, headed down there. As we approached, we saw the towers were -- smoke billowing, the towers engulfed in flame. We proceeded to where they assigned us to West and Vesey. Originally we parked at the end of the line on Vesey, which is further in front of the -- what is that place? The Tex-Mex place at the end on the right-hand side, we were right across from that.

Lieutenant Nevins at the scene informed me to move the bus, that he wanted it closer up so that we would be ready to pick up patients and head to the hospital if we're needed.

We moved all our equipment and got ready for whatever procedures that might be necessary, whether it's to send us further in or to set up a triage in front of AMEX.

As I moved the bus, we got closer to the zone. You saw people jumping out of the buildings. You saw debris everywhere, numerous injured personnel running towards us, everyone covers in ashes and soot.

We parked the vehicle, we got all our equipment off, and we started heading towards the corner of West and Vesey. They were just throwing all the patients towards us, trying to get everybody out of the building.

We treated, as we went, numerous patients, putting them in the back. Those that couldn't walk, we carried those that needed to be on a stretcher while not -- we got them whatever help we could and got them far back.

The dust was intense, so I ran back to go get some masks, and we met -- there were chiefs and whatnot on the scene. One of the captains asked me to get all the masks from my vehicle and bring the masks to the personnel, the PD, whoever was there that didn't have a mask. I did that. I also went into other vehicles, got the masks, and gave masks to other people.

From there I was talking to J.R. Rivera at the time trying to get one of the chiefs a mask when the first building started to come down. All we heard was like a loud, thunderous roar. At first everybody was like, oh, no, another plane? There was all kinds of reports going on that there were numerous planes headed towards the financial district.

You looked up and all you saw was a wall of debris blocking out the sky coming at you. We ran. I ended up in an outcropping of one of the buildings, just hiding until the debris blew past. It seemed like forever. It took maybe less than a minute or whatnot of just everything being blown past.

Around the corner where they had set up the new staging for West and Vesey, which was -- excuse me, I don't know the name of that.

Q. Probably westward, right, towards --

A. North End?

Q. North End?

A. Right. We were redirected there. They brought the MERV. One of the lieutenants asked for volunteers to go get the vehicles, so I volunteered. He described the car where he had placed the keys for the vehicles, because as you got there you were to turn over your keys. But since some of the vehicles -- a lot of the vehicles, the doors were locked, we needed a key. He described he had placed them on top of a blue Crown Victoria.

So I went back to the scene. Even though every car was gray, I found a Crown Victoria at the scene where he was. I started digging under the pile of debris that was at the wheel well. There was nothing on top of the car. We found the keys.

I handed off some keys to some fellow EMTs that were there, and we started to just bring the buses back around the corner. We got the majority of them back around the corner. There was only like one or two that were dead that wouldn't turn over.

As we did that, somebody called my attention -- as I checked one of the vehicles that was dead, I believe vehicle 470, it just wouldn't turn on, PD called my attention that there were a couple of injured people that were bleeding everywhere. They wanted some help bringing them around the corner.

I headed towards the corner of West and Vesey, and we started to lend a hand just bringing people around the corner, numerous injured. At that point I believe the second building came down. It was just another loud, thunderous roar and everybody just running, scurrying. No matter what was wrong with the person, you just get up and run. If you can't run, I'll carry you, whatever.

We made it around the corner. We stood there. From that point Chief Kowalczyk, he came up to me and said they were setting up a staging at Chelsea Piers and he needed me to drive him up there. So I jumped in an ambulance with him and escorted -- well, I took him up to Chelsea Piers. From there we set up a staging area at Chelsea Piers with the ambulances that had been dispatched to that area over there.

Being that I felt I wasn't doing enough there by being at Chelsea Piers, I jumped on the back of the U.S.A.R. gator that was heading back towards the zone. From there I went over to the school where they said we had a command post. We had everything on Chambers and West.

I went there and informed the lieutenants that I was back, because as I had been told, I was presumed dead. Since they had a problem, they hadn't seen me for about a half hour. So I spoke to my lieutenants and told them

I was still amongst the rank and file. From there I was sent into the auditorium with all the other EMTs to prepare for whatever the scenario was.

We were in the auditorium of Stuyvesant High School for what felt like forever. It turned out to be like eight, ten hours. From there they just -- nobody basically knew what to do. This had never happened before, so nobody knew how to help or anything like that.

So they started to send out teams to go to the wreckage and to help with the morgue and to just basically search and see if there's still anybody down there. So we waited, and I managed to get on a team that was going to set up a forward triage in one of the hotels along I guess North End Avenue back there, River Terrace, maybe one of those hotels, apartment buildings.

Under the command of Lieutenant Eppinger, me and the fellow EMTs, we basically cleaned out an area, set up a treatment area for irrigations, cuts, bruises. We still expected we were going to get patients at that point. From there we just waited. We were there maybe five hours. No patients. There was nobody coming out of there.

From there, being that I had been on the scene for like 22 hours, they decided to relieve people and send in fresh batches. So from there they just shipped me out. I came back to the station, took a shower, washed off all the soot, put on a brand-new uniform and went back down to the scene.

Q. Anything else you would like to put in?

A. No. I think I'll keep my mouth shut.

Q. Not a problem. Thank you so much for the interview.

A. No problem.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

DAVID BLACKSBERG

Interview Date: October 23, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

MR. DUN: Today is October 23, 2001. The time is 555 hours in the morning, and this is Richard Dun with the New York City Fire Department, working with Marisa Abbriano, and we are interviewing --

MR. BLACKSBERG: DAVID BLACKSBERG, EMT, Battalion 31.

Q. Can you just describe in your own words regarding the events of September 11, 2001?

A. About eight o'clock in the morning, we were driving by the base of the Brooklyn Bridge, my partner and I, and we sat, and an ALS vehicle approached us. We were sitting by -- we looked up and all of a sudden -- we were ready -- we heard something, and we looked up because we were right across the water, and we had seen Tower 1 at that time was already on fire.

The paramedic unit that we work with approached us and said, "Let's go." We went, and we were able to get onto the Brooklyn Bridge and cross. We were at the intersection, I guess, of West and Liberty, a little bit -- a little bit further north of that, so we were right across the street of 1 World Trade. We got out of the ALS vehicle, and I -- we parked our vehicles right across the street. We got out. We put our helmets on and our turnout coats.

We approached the building, and we heard some loud noise. We felt some rumbling, so we looked up, and there was another plane coming in. Went behind, I guess it banked around another building, so at that time we didn't really see it hit the building, but we heard it, and we felt it, and we saw it approaching.

We got to get back in our vehicles. So we got back in, and we only ended up going -- I guess it felt like a mile away, but it's half a block.

Q. Where did you first stop the vehicle?

A. We first stopped right on the west side.

Q. West Street?

A. Right on West Street, yeah, and Westside Highway.

Q. Right.

A. Right in front of 1 World Trade.

Q. Okay.

A. We were right in at the -- there's I guess what is it called, the median -- no.

Q. The walkway?

A. Yeah, the walkway in between the highway.

Q. That goes into --

A. No, the one that goes right in between the highway.

Q. By the Winter Garden?

A. Yeah.

Q. That glass thing.

A. Right. We originally parked over there right on the highway, and we ended up parking -- moving our vehicles, and we parked underneath the pedestrian walkway going from Winter Garden to I guess it was 2 World Financial Center, over there.

We parked our vehicles there. We got out, and we had made our own staging over there at that time, because everybody was split up, and we had to split up once we got out of our vehicles, and we saw that second plane hit. We had to move, and when we moved, we wound up making our own staging.

Q. Was there a lot of chaos, commotion, people running?

A. There were a lot of people running all over the place and --

Q. Running towards you?

A. They were running away. Well, toward us, toward other vehicles and just away in general. I didn't even know until a couple of people told me later that there were a whole lot of people crossing the Brooklyn Bridge, but I just knew everybody was scattered all over the place.

At that time, we had approximately four people approach us, and a fifth one was coming saying, "There's somebody coming that's really badly burned." I got the ALS unit ready, and I told them, and we had the person that was really badly burned -- I told them to get back onto the paramedic trunk, and they took care of him.

Q. Who was the ALS unit?

A. 32 Victor.

Q. Do you know their names?

A. Ellen -- I don't remember the last name -- and her partner. I don't recall. They are from Long Island College Hospital.

Q. Okay.

A. And so they took the burn victim while we were handling everybody else, and I had called over the radio telling them that we had formed a new staging area. I don't know whether they heard me or not, because there was a whole lot of chaos.

Q. Was this before either tower came down?

A. Yeah, this was way before either tower came down. This was right after Tower 2 had gotten hit, within two minutes I believe, if that long.

So 32, they took the burn victim to Cornell, and we were by ourselves, my partner and I, just getting overloaded with a whole lot of patients, and we had no idea if there was anybody else coming. We stabilized them as much as we could.

People were coming down with minor bruises. They asked if they needed to go to the hospital. I said, "If you're walking and can tell what's going on, you can, you know, just keep walking away. There is nothing much I can do for you right now, because I have a whole lot of people."

I don't know, you know, a whole lot of commotion going on, so finally everybody is saying, you know, there's people coming or there's somebody down in front of the building. I'm approaching the building, but there's a whole lot of debris coming down, so I decided not to an approach, go into the building. Got as close as I could.

There was just bodies everywhere. We were watching them coming down. We heard them coming down, everybody screaming. A lot of debris. We didn't even know what it was. I guess it was metal, and papers and computers, I guess, we saw computer stuff on the ground, and we just watched and heard people jumping.

Someone said, "There's somebody that's still moving. Somebody is alive." I also saw a dog that was tied up in front of the building, and I approached. I got hit with some debris, so I decided not to go, so I had a lot of people that were walking. I said let me take care of them, because I know I can help them.

I did that, and in a couple of minutes or so a couple of units started approaching, and I told them where we had set up staging because they were also lost, so I was standing on the corner of West, of Westside Highway, and I guess just over by 2 World Financial.

Q. Did you see any officers, captains, chiefs?

A. Not for awhile. Not for awhile. I didn't see a chief, and then a chief came -- I believe he was a fire chief. I told him what we had, and he just took off. He said, "Okay, I'll notify whoever." I said, "Okay fine." Then another chief came, an EMS chief.

Q. Who was that?

A. I don't know his name. I don't remember. I took so many names down, and then it was just so busy. It was really chaotic. When the chief came, I told him what I had, and what was going on and what I had already done, and I already took down all the names of all the vehicles that had approached, and he didn't seem really to care what was going on.

[redacted]

Finally, we said -- okay, we parked our vehicles, and everything was clustered, and people everywhere, so finally we got some water.

Q. That's when I showed up.

A. Yes, that is when 32 boy had showed up, right when we started to get our vehicles set up.

Q. This is after the first building collapsed or --

A. Still before.

Q. This still --

A. Still prior to the buildings coming down. We were still there watching and hearing people jump, and patients were still approaching. We had cleaned up, you know, staged our vehicles by the water, so that if an emergency did happen that we could take off or we could take as many patients as possible.

There was, I guess, a fire started getting really bad, and a lot of stuff -- well, it was already bad, but we just stood by and watched people jump. Pretty much that's all we could do is just watch and listen, listen to our radios and see what would happen.

Q. Radio communication was okay? There was no problem with that, other than the chaos on the radio?

A. There was -- it was -- I guess it was all right because once they decided what was going to happen, because they -- finally they said that all -- all bosses would go on to citywide and everybody else goes onto Manhattan South. I was finally able to hear that, but they obviously didn't hear me say anything about where I was setting up staging, or didn't want to hear it or anything like that, and so we were overcome with so many people.

Once the vehicles were all set up for, I guess, a new staging area that we had set up over there, it was all set up. We just sat and watched, had people coming to us, and next thing you know, we started hearing -- just actually, there was a lot of rumors that a third plane was going to come in, so we were standing by looking up, listening. There was no third plane. The building started coming down.

Q. Was your vehicle still on the pedestrian walkway?

A. It was actually half a block up now.

Q. Close (inaudible)?

A. But I -- everything from when I was parked across the street from One Liberty, right? When I was originally parked from One Liberty to when I finally removed it and cleaned up for the staging, there was only a block, block and a half, so it really wasn't that far. It was right across the street.

We started hearing the building, and we saw it tipping. It was just leaning.

Q. You saw it leaning?

A. Well, I looked up, and I thought I saw it leaning. Later on it was confirmed that it was leaning, and it was starting to come down, and so we just started booking. We ran as fast as we could, wherever we could. Everybody scattered all over the place. Nobody knew where anybody else went.

I looked -- I ran, and a whole lot of people, we were all running together. I looked back, and it was like it was this cloud of smoke, but it was like an avalanche, because you could see the smoke and everything tumbling right at you. You couldn't see up, you couldn't see back, and no matter how fast you ran, you couldn't out run it, and it overtook us, and finally I found my partner.

We grabbed hands, and we just ran, and then the next thing you know, we had people grabbing my arm. Then they split up us, got my other arm, and my partner, Juan Rios, they grabbed his arms and said, "Where are we going?" Because it was so cloudy and smoky, dusty and everything else that we really didn't know where we were going. We just kept on running.

Everybody was panicking, and I told them to -- we had babies crying, kids crying, adults not -- lost not knowing what to do, where to go. People are walking back. People are walking in circles. My partner and I, we were the only EMS people, fire people or anybody that we could see of, even PD. We didn't know where anybody went. Calling on our radio to find out where everybody is. Nothing. Everybody is over the radio, so you couldn't do anything.

Finally, we told people to cover their mouths with the T-shirts if they had, cover their mouths with their arms. People just wanted to sit down and do nothing. There was papers and the smell and everything else that was in the smoke that we didn't know about, you know, and the dust. We had them cover -- keep their heads down. People were closing their eyes while grabbing onto us. We had a whole chain link of people.

Q. All this chain link, was it all EMS people?

A. It was just my partner and I that were EMS, fire or PD. Just the two of us, and we started talking to people, trying to calm them down.

Q. Civilians?

A. They were all civilians, and actually quite a few of them were from 1 World Trade. They were from -- I don't know. One girl was telling me she was from the 63rd Floor, and another one was telling me she was from the 84th, and then there was other people, too. I don't remember what floors they told me from, but I remember these two, and they told me that they ran down, and I see they were still wearing high heels. How in the world are you running with these shoes on? So you kind of had to joke around a little bit, even though it wasn't really a joking situation, but you had to calm everybody down. Especially myself, you know. So I kind of used that to calm myself down and everybody else, joking around as we were walking now, because once you ran and the smoke and everything caught up to you, there was no use running, because it's already caught up, and you're already breathing the stuff in.

Q. Did you get blown into something, or did you duck under the buses or --

A. We had finally found a couple of city buses that were just parked just before Battery Park.

Q. Battery Park City?

A. Yeah, we ran. Well, it felt like a lot anyway.

Q. This is going towards the Battery Tunnel

A. Okay, so we are down here by the park. We ran all the way down to the park. I can't tell you what you route we took, because we just --

Q. I don't think you really care.

A. Because we just kept going around, no.

We went by Battery Park, and we saw two city buses there, and I told them to get on, and they said, "Where are the buses going?" Everybody's asking where the buses are going. I said, "Doesn't matter, as long as, you know, you're sitting here, and you are away from everything else. Doesn't matter where the buses are going. Right now, doesn't look like they're going anywhere." Everybody is worried about where they were going. I said, "Well, the air is cleaner in here. It's going to be dirty, but it's cleaner in here than it is outside."

At that time, we still didn't have masks. Nobody had masks. Finally we sat everybody in there. My partner and I went back out trying to find more people. A lot of babies, a lot of kids, adults. We told them all where to go. We were directing as many people as we could find that were lost.

Finally, we found two more EMS people, but they weren't working for the Fire Department. They worked for a private company. I think it was Cabrini, but I'm not positive.

Q. Building 2 still didn't go down yet?

A. At that time, we had no idea what was going on, because we were running, and we just heard the first building coming down, so I lost track of time of when the second building was coming down. It sounded like one big rumble, and then it just sounded like it just continued, and I was -- I wasn't really paying attention. I was looking at the sound. I was looking at the smoke and everything. I was listening to the people that were screaming. I didn't really hear another building coming down, so we ended up going into the park, getting people to come down and standing by the water, because there was a little bit of a clearing down there, and everybody standing by the water. We were standing by the water.

We were trying to go over our radios trying to find out if there was another staging area near us. I don't know how much longer that we found out, but it was quite a bit longer, a couple of hours, and now it felt like a couple of minutes, but now I know it was probably an hour or two.

We found out that there was staging right at the Staten Island Ferry Terminal, which was half a block away.

Q. That is half a mile away.

A. When we started walking, it felt like it was closer, you know. I was just happy to see other people, I guess.

Q. That's good.

A. When we were still at the water, at the park, we flagged down a fire chief. Actually ended up being an EMS chief. I don't know his name. I don't know.

Q. It's okay.

A. I wasn't really thinking about taking down names, and we just set up over there, and there was carts inside, inside the park, the vendors that sell the water, and food and everything. Everybody was just taking water, trying to wash out their eyes, wash out their throats.

Nobody could breathe. Everything was stuck in their throats, and their eyes, mouths, faces and everything, so we were taking water, washing everybody as much as we could, because we didn't have any equipment, my partner and I, and there was no ambulance there, nothing, except for the command vehicle, and they didn't have much either. So we took whatever we could. A couple of boats started to show up, and we just put people on the boats, and everybody was worried about where they were going.

Q. You took injured people or --

A. Injured, noninjured, all civilians, but both injured and noninjured, both going onto the boats. Everybody was worried about where it was going.

They were going to Ellis Island, Jersey City and Staten Island. Those were the three places I remember the boats going. We were putting people on the boats. I told them it didn't matter where it was going. You'll always find a way home, and people were saying, "I just live a block away." I told them, "I guarantee you, you are not going to be allowed to go back in your apartment at least for a day, two days. If you are lucky, it will be two days."

Finally we started kicking everybody -- not really kicking them, but telling them, pushing them onto the boat and telling them to go. I told them they had no choice. There really was no choice for them. They had to go, so everybody was going on. I said, "Where do you live?" This is the closest one. Brooklyn would be the closest. Staten Island would be the closest, or Jersey City, wherever they lived, just get on.

Finally, people started getting onto the boats, and we were actually trying to find another -- another EMS person, and I -- he worked for the Fire Department. We went and found a fire truck, took the fire hose and a wrench, because we thought we had seen a hydrant, but there was none, because we were trying to get some water to wash the stuff down and try to clean up, but there was nothing there, and next thing you know, everybody was walking -- there was another -- somebody had gone back and got an ambulance, so at that time there was a fire chief, no lieutenants, and about six EMTs from the Fire Department, and we were pretty much doing everything down at the water over there.

Then we walked over -- once we found out -- once we got everybody onto the boats, cleared that whole section off with the pedestrians and civilians, we went over to the Staten Island Ferry Terminal. That's where we found out that a lot of people were going, and that was one of the main staging areas.

They started setting it up like a makeshift hospital there. People were coming down from the Trade Centers, being transported, and then we triaged them over there, and they were put onto the Staten Island Ferry and shipped over to Staten Island where I guess there was more EMTs over there.

Finally, there was really nothing much going on. People were coming in, but not steadily, and my partner and I felt useless. We were like, what are we doing here? There is nothing going on, nobody coming now. At that time there was nobody coming for maybe 20 minutes, it could have been longer. I lost track of time the whole day. The whole day felt like it was five minutes long.

We said there is nothing going on here. We made sure our names were on the list, because there was a lieutenant taking names on a list.

Q. EMS lieutenant?

A. EMS lieutenant at the Staten Island ferry, so I made sure our name was on the list. I wanted somebody to know that we were all right, you know, that were there. We started walking up and found out that we were -- that we saw some of the EMTs handing out masks to people that were still walking away.

There were still dust and clouds. Everything was in the air and like that for a couple of weeks. We started handing out masks. We were walking up handing out masks. It felt like we were doing something because we -- you know, we're just sitting in there doing nothing. We walked up and we ended up -- it was a -- there was an ambulance from Midwood, and they were going -- they said that they were going to go up to ground zero.

At that time, we didn't know what it was called, but they were going to go up to the area, which is now ground zero. We said, "All right, can we hop aboard with you?" And he said, "Yes, absolutely."

We took the bus right up, took the ambulance up there, and we found out that staging was now at One Liberty, and Juan and another EMT ended up walking back. My partner Juan, he walked back. Rios walked back, and I stayed up there, because I knew Juan, and I knew the other guy that he was with, that also works at the station, they were walking back, so I knew that they would be all right. They were partners, and they saw me going with the lieutenant and other EMTs, so we had split up. My partner and I split up a lot, but we ended up finding each other somehow. At that time he walked back, and I stayed.

I had a radio. My partner lost his radio and his helmet, everything at the same time, so it didn't matter, but I knew that --

Q. Fine.

A. I stayed up there, and I had a radio, and I was calling making sure everybody was all right. I had a cell phone on me, calling back and forth, and next thing you know we were on the rubble digging and getting fire, and PD and everybody else that was getting hurt. Meanwhile, some of us were hurting.

Q. And this point was it towards the end --

A. This was actually about -- I don't know. Maybe three o'clock in the afternoon. I had already gone into overtime for me. I ended up staying until the next morning. I stayed. It ended up being about 25 hours that I was there.

I tried to get a half-hour nap, but you can't, because you couldn't breathe. Anyway, we had some mess. They were like paper.

Q. How did you ever get back to the station?

A. Well, I found another EMT, and in the morning when we just said that we were exhausted and ready to come back, he said, "You can walk to the Brooklyn Bridge and come back" and I said, "Well, I know that there is a vehicle down at the Staten Island Ferry, because that was mine." Somebody had moved it earlier in the day, and I had the key, so I said, "If we're lucky, the ambulance is still there. I know I still have my key on me."

He said, "All right, let's try it." We got down there, and the bus is still there, but there was all this soot and papers and everything still on the vehicle and inside. We were wearing or masks inside the vehicle. I was driving maybe three miles an hour, and everything is blowing all over the place, and we finally made it back, and the next thing you know, I had lieutenants and everybody telling me I was missing for nine hours.

I called them. I spoke to them, but I guess in the chaos, nobody really knew where I was or what was going on, but I ended up making it back, and I'm all right. We still felt like -- I mean, I still feel like I didn't do enough. I know I did a lot.

Q. A catastrophe like that, I don't think anybody can actually feel they did enough, you know, so much going on, so, you know. You were there for 25 hours.

A. We were hands on the whole time. We were doing something, or we walked around or we were helping out whereever we could. We had those power bars that ended up making their way up. Next thing you know, I know people were having hot meals. I don't think I could have eaten at that time. I wasn't able to eat anyway for a long time.

Q. We want to thank for you your cooperation in this.

A. Thank you.

MR. DUN: The time is 6:18, and that's going to be the end of interview.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

FRANK PASTOR

Interview Date: October 23, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

MR. DUN: Today is October 23, 2001. The time is 6:25 a.m. hours, and this is Richard Dun of New York City Fire Department, working with Marissa Abbriano. We are conducting an interview with --

MR. PASTOR: FRANK PASTOR, EMT D, from Battalion 31.

Q. At this time, we would like to -- of the New York City Fire Department. At this time, we'd like you to describe the events on September 11.

A. Okay. September 11, that Monday morning, I reported to work. I came to the station, and let me just say this, the lieutenants here still break my chops, because that morning I came in, and I said to them, "I think we are going to be busy today." And they said to me, "Why?" I says, "Well, it's going to be 9-11," and from thereon -- I remember our normal routine in the morning, go get our breakfast, and we go sit and we cover Red Hook, so we had the view of the city. We were sitting there, and we were looking at the city. All of is sudden my partner says to me, "Frankie, that plane seems to be low."

Q. What unit were you working that day?

A. We were working 32 boy in Red Hook. We had the view of the city, and she yells out, "Frank, that plane just hit the building."

Q. Who is she?

A. My partner is Mala, Mala Harilal, and I look up, and I can't believe what I'm seeing. I get on the radio, and I said, "32 boy, if you need us, we're available. We can go right through the tunnel." As soon as I seen this, I got on the phone, and I dialed the number to call my wife to let her know what's going on. We were standing there in awe. We can't believe what's going on, and she says -- and I remember my partner, Mala, saying again to me, "That other plane is low." I don't know how much time, 10, 15 minutes, and we seen the other plane hit.

Q. You're still in Brooklyn?

A. We were still in Brooklyn. They haven't called us. Now they say, "32 boy you're going." I back up the vehicle. We start heading towards the tunnel. We hit the tunnel. In the tunnel, we're stuck, and I can feel the tunnel vibrating. I'm aware it's already chaotic.

We don't know why we are stuck in the middle, but in front of me there is a big ESU truck. I look behind me. There is an ESU truck behind me. They are blowing their horns. We can't see nothing, but we were in a standstill. What's going on? The problem is that you have the three lanes coming out or going in, and only one coming out. They're stopping traffic so we can get through.

As soon as I get on the other side of the west side -- I'm the driver. I come out of the tunnel, and I just see -- I told my partner, "I just saw somebody's torso on the floor," and my partner said, "No, you're kidding." I says, "It's not a dog." I thought it was a dog, but I saw a torso with no arms and no legs, just split open on the driver's side.

I go through. Guys are flying by. Emergency vehicles are flying by, so I see that -- I see which is 31 David's ambulance over towards the west side. I pull over, which I believe is going to be the first staging area. We didn't know at the time if it was or not.

I remember pulling over to the left. I saw that they're underneath this walkway, and I put the ambulance -- I saw their ambulance underneath the walkway, which at the time it seemed to be a good idea, because there's debris, there's stuff falling. I remember seeing a computer coming out the window and hitting the ground, breaking the windows.

We don't know what's going on. I pulled the bus over behind them, and I look up, and I'm saying -- you got this gut feeling saying we don't belong here. We're too close.

Q. The two buildings were still standing?

A. The two buildings are standing. There's flames coming everywhere, so I said, "You know what?" I told my partner, Mala, "Let's get suited up," and we gotta go.

Q. What do you mean suited up?

A. Get our equipment.

Q. Turnout coats?

A. Turnout coats, everything. I remember putting on my bulletproof -- I have the outer carrier on the bulletproof vest. I remember putting that on, and I remember putting my helmet.

I saw 31 David. They're treating somebody in that first area underneath the walkway. There is stuff hitting the overpass, and I run over to them. I said, "Guys, I'll be right back. We're going to have to move these vehicles. We got to get out of here."

I remember running back to where we think -- they're parked underneath this walkway here at this time.

Q. Liberty Street walkway?

A. Liberty Street -- or no, I -- yeah, this one here. There's debris falling on it. The windows are shattering. So I said, "I'll be right back. I'm going to go find a commanding officer, and we have to get out of here."

I remember seeing a lot of Hatzolah ambulances. There was a couple of EMS ambulances, a lot of private ambulances gathered in that corner. So I turned around, and I ran over. I remember seeing Captain Frank D'Amato. He was the one -- I said, "Captain, we have to get these vehicles out of here." He's looking at me, and he says to me, "You're in charge of taking all these vehicles and getting them out of here."

There had to be 10, 15 vehicles. I says, "Okay." Now all the equipment is out. Everybody has all the equipment out. Stretchers are out. We have to put everything back in. What it seems to me eternity, we moved the buses another half a block up.

As we moved the buses up, I'm coming back. He said, "And make sure everybody comes back with the equipment. We're going to start a staging area."

Seems to me that they're going to start detouring us towards the building, going closer towards the World Trade.

It must have took us, I would say by the time we moved the last vehicle, half an hour, 40 minutes, would have seemed to me, pulling the vehicles down and getting all the equipment. That's when we hear, "It's coming down. It's coming down." We didn't even have a chance to turn around.

The cloud is coming down, and we get buried. I remember being in the dark on the floor. I remember getting on my Nextel, calling my wife back, telling her I'm okay. "I can't see. I can't see my hand in front of my face, but I'm okay."

We must have been in the debris -- it didn't clear for about half an hour, 45 minutes. I remember running into Battery Park in the -- everybody is running, people falling. I remember falling down. I remember I lost my helmet. I didn't know where I was.

I remember running into a lobby in the financial district somewhere. I was the only EMS personnel in there with a bunch of women and children crying, and people saying to me, "Help me, help me. We can't breathe." I had no equipment. All I had was my pouch. I remember I had a bottle of water with me, and I had it in my pocket, and I remember doing this clearing my face, people are coming up to me in the lobby, saying, "Help me, help me. I can't breathe. I can't breathe." I'm looking around to see what I can do.

I remember opening up this door. There was a slop sink. There was clothes hanging. I took the clothes, and I started soaking the clothes, wetting them, started cutting out strips, giving it to kids, giving it to the mothers. I must have ripped everybody's clothes that was hanging from people that work for the maintenance department. I remember being those gray shirts, those uniforms, cutting them all up. I found a watering -- a plant. What do you call those?

Q. Watering can.

A. People were coming to me, dousing everybody. I'm taking control of the bathroom, because it's chaotic. I can't let nobody in there because it's going to be -- they are fighting for water. They're lining up for me. I'm cleaning them off, giving them rags, cleaning them off.

I'm looking at the door. You can't fit nobody more in the lobby. There had to be 500, 600 people in the lobby.

Q. What lobby are you talking about?

A. I remember running. I'm in here, so we were -- at first we were here. I moved the buses down the block here. When we moved the buses further down in here somewhere --

Q. Gateway Plaza?

A. Yeah. These guys were here at one time. Then we moved them here. Then we finally got them all down like another block and a half away. This is, I think, Albany Street and South End.

Q. South End Avenue and Albany.

A. Okay, somewhere in here, and the reason I know that because I've gone back to ground zero a couple of times and I remember saying this is where I ran. This is where I remember running.

In here somewhere I remember going into a lobby. That's where we started soaking the people up and giving them stuff. I must have been in the lobby half an hour. Everything seems to me like half an hour, an hour. I remember people gathering around me because the radio is still on, and that's the way they can hear communications. Safety, I guess.

They were all gathering. I said let me lower this, and I have to try to get out of here. As I tried to get out, they were blocking the door and said, "You can't leave us." I finally managed to go back out, and I'm walking back towards the green. Everybody is coming. I don't see no EMS personnel still.

Q. Did you see fire personnel?

A. When we started going, I lost my partner. I remember running into three fire zebra, a unit, and they had Scott packs. The HAZ-TAC unit, and I know the guys. I remember seeing Joe, and I seen Eric, and I said to Joe, "Joe, give me some --" He gave me some oxygen. I was covered completely.

I remembered taking my helmet off and putting the flaps down when I was running, but I remember stuff hitting me, but then I lost my helmet, so now I got my head full of plaster, after doing all this. I remember running into the guys. They gave me oxygen, and as I'm walking back, I see on the floor stumbling Chief Grant. He's got a non-rebreather on, no O-2, no nothing. He's just stumbling on the floor, and I grab him, and I pick him up, and he says to me, "What do I tell these people?"

People are still running. The flames are still coming around that bend. When you walked down Battery Park, there seems to be a bend. It seems to be like when you're going to walk back towards the World Trade Center. He said, "Keep them going. Keep them going. Keep them walking," but it seems to me we were walking back towards the area.

I remember telling him we can't go that way. He says, "What do you mean? What do I tell these people?" I says, "We're going to have to stay here." We were in a grassy area. I remember being on the grass, and I look over, and I thought it was an ambulance.

I lost my footing, but it's a fire boat with the lights on coming, and these Liberty shuttle, whatever you want to call it.

Q. The ferries.

A. The ferries. They are yelling out, "I can take 75. I can take 200." That's when we started putting the people on the boat.

I lost Chief Grant. I lost his aide. I lost my partner. These guys, I don't know where they were. I walked back towards -- when I'm walking back towards the building, that's when I ran into more EMS personnel.

Q. This is after both buildings came down.

A. Well, we didn't know it was two. We didn't know that both of them came down. We remember hearing the rumble, and it seemed like it was a continuous rumble, so we didn't know if it was one, or two or three. We didn't know.

We found out that it was both after when we walked back towards the area that we didn't see nothing standing, just the mountain of dust and debris.

Just walking back towards the area, now you start seeing personnel. I remember seeing people coming back with water, EMS equipment, and that's when we just got together and started walking towards the ferry, and that's where we spent the whole day.

That's pretty much the whole story.

MR. DUN: I want to thank you for your interview, Frank, and your cooperation.

WORLD TRADE CENTER TASK FORCE INTERVIEW

BRIAM SMITH

Interview Date: October 23, 2001

Transcribed by Maureen McCormick

MR. DUN: Today is October 23, 2001. The time is 813 hours.

I am Richard Dun, New York City Fire Department, working with Marisa Abbriano, also New York City Fire Department. We are conducting an interview with --

MR. SMITH: BRIAM SMITH, EMT, 5480.

Q. Brian, can you describe the events or things that happened on September 11?

A. Yes. Tell you the story now?

Q. Right.

A. You want me to follow this thing?

Q. You know, just go through it, and if you remember things, you know.

A. Initially, we -- like I said it before, we had gotten off of duty at quarter of nine. I was going out to my vehicle to drive home, and we -- my partner and I saw the -- right after the first tower had been hit, and so we came back inside, and we told them. It hadn't even gone over the radios yet, because initially he didn't -- he thought that we just --

Q. So you actually saw the first plane go in?

A. I heard the explosion and looked up, and then I saw it start to billow out.

So I came back inside, and I told my lieutenant, Lieutenant McCarthy -- he was the desk lieutenant -- and I told him I was going to go inside and get changed, put my uniform back on, because I was in my civilian clothes, and that we needed an extra unit, and we need to go back out, and, like I said, he initially didn't believe us, but then a couple of seconds later they came over the air with the announcement, you know, "Units, an MCI has been announced the Borough of Manhattan," so on and so forth.

So I went inside. I got changed into my uniform real quick, very quickly and very sloppily, I might add, but we went back into the office. I grabbed keys. My partner was outside. He was checking the back of the ambulance, because he was going to be teching, he's not evoced, so he was in the back, and he was going through all the stuff to make sure that we had what we needed just to get out on the road. Went in and logged on the computer right away.

Before I left, my lieutenant told me that we were going to be 31 Mary, and if they needed us, they'd call us, so we got on. I logged on right away and told them that we were the next unit available if they needed us, and they told us to proceed to the MCI in Manhattan.

So we left the parking lot, and we started going over the Brooklyn Bridge, and we made it down that -- it was heavy traffic, but normal Tuesday morning traffic, but right by the foot of the bridge, it was pretty congested, but with vehicle traffic. I guess because they -- the police had shut down all the vehicle traffic going over -- to allow pedestrian traffic there, I guess going over the bridge, so everybody was bottled up, but I was able to drive up on the sidewalk a little bit and make my way to the bridge, and they just waved us right through, so we were going over the bridge, and when we were -- when we initially left out of the station, central gave us a cross street to stage. They gave us a spot where they said they were going to have EMS staging, but again, like I said earlier, I'm not very familiar with lower Manhattan. I don't know the street names or, you know, it's not like upper Manhattan where there are numbers, and that's easy. It's a little tougher down on the low side if you don't really know your way around.

So my partner was trying to look at the Hagstrom's and trying to figure out, you know, where we were going, and, like I said, going over the bridge there was no other traffic besides us, and the both of us were, like, looking out enroute to the alarm. We see the -- at this point only the one tower was hit, and there was all kinds of stuff coming out of it. Looks like paper, and it's smoking, and we were going over the bridge, and again, like I said, my partner, he couldn't -- we couldn't figure out exactly where we had to go once we got off the bridge, so there was an unmarked police car coming up behind us. He had the light going, and I said, you know, just follow this guy. He's got to be heading to the same place.

So we -- so I said all right I'll just follow him in. I followed him in. I got off the bridge. We circled around, and we started heading in this direction, I guess west. I don't know what street we ended up on, because I don't really know where it drops you off when you get off the bridge, but all I know we ended up somewhere down, like, I guess, in this vicinity because where we initially stopped when we were heading south, you could see down here.

I mean, it was -- you know, there must have been a crossing somewhere, because you could see there is, like, a foot bridge or something somewhere around here, and you could see the tower. No, it was right here. I think it was Cortlandt or one of these streets. I don't really know.

So we had stopped because you could tell once you got close there was thousands of people in the street, you know, like they were everywhere.

Again, I mean, all we wanted to do was find out where we had to be staged and where they were going to set up the EMS staging, and we got flagged by a MetroCare unit, and they said that, yeah, some guy's having a heart attack. He had like a self-defibrillator, and it's, like, you know, it had defibrillated him six times, and I guess they thought that we were an ALS unit, because I told them -- I said, "Listen, we are just another BLS unit. You know, we can't do anything more than you guys can. We can't tie up two ambulances and four EMTs with one guy having a heart attack. I mean, you know, who the heck knows what the heck is going on over there."

While all this is going on -- and again, I only know this because of how many times I kind of replayed it and trying to fit everything into the time of events.

The second plane has to hit either as we are getting off the Brooklyn Bridge or just as we are meeting that throng of people, because by the time that we get down to Liberty Street, the second tower is already hit, and, like I said, going over the bridge, only the one tower was hit. So, I mean, it must have happened in just, you know, that minute or so that we made our way over to Manhattan.

Like I said, there were a lot of people, and we could see the trade center. Again, like I say, I'm kind of confused by the whole layout. As many times as I look at this map -- this is actually one of the best maps that I've seen so far, but we start making our way down, and we ended up a couple of blocks away from the trade center when there was -- like, it looked, like a court building or something on the right-hand side as you are going down Liberty, and because there's steps going up, and there was some police there, and there was a fire truck.

Q. Maybe that was Liberty Plaza.

A. It might have been. I don't know.

Q. Liberty Plaza is right here.

A. That might have been it. Do you know if there were steps over here?

Q. Yeah, there's steps. Black marblite, a dark color building?

A. Yeah. I think that's it. Might have been this.

Q. So you were on Liberty and Church, Trinity?

A. Liberty and Trinity.

Q. Which turns into Church.

A. Right. So we are -- like I said, I'm kind of guessing, but we were basically, like, right here, and there is a -- I think it was a sergeant or a lieutenant, I don't recall, but he was directing some kind of traffic. I think he had a helmet on, but I stopped, and we asked him. I said, "You know, sergeant, do you know where they are setting up staging?" And he tried calling on the radio, and he tried, and it was so much radio traffic at that point.

Like I said, it was bedlam, you know, at that point. It was just, you know, crazy. Nobody really had a clear sense of what the heck was going on. In fact, when we were going over the bridge we were hearing reports on the radio that after the first tower had been hit, we heard that it was a plane that hit it. We heard that two planes hit at the same time. We didn't know if a bomb went off. We didn't know exactly what was going on. It wasn't like you could see a wing sticking out of the building. You know, it wasn't anything obvious.

So we went to -- we were there, and the guy said to us -- he said "Listen, I don't know where they are setting up staging, but I haven't seen any ambulances down this way, and I know that there is -- that they have some people that are hurt at the 10-10 house," and he said, "No ambulances or anything down there, so, you know, maybe you could do something over there."

So I said, "All right, we'll go down there." So we went down. We went up to the 10-10 house. As soon as we got there, we backed in the engine bay, like you guys have seen where it is, so if you are looking at the front of the building it's the engine bay on the left, and there was a captain there, one of the fire captains. He wasn't in turnout, but I said to him, "Cap, listen, you know --" because, like, he was captain at the house there. I don't know if he was from Ladder 10 or from Engine 10, but we backed it in, and the guy said, "Yeah, we got a bunch of people injured in here, seven or eight people, some of them hurt pretty bad. If you guys want to grab a couple of people and run."

I said, "All right. Let me get out a take a look," and the guy said, "Just make sure you back it all the way in, because there was a lot of debris, and there is a lot of stuff going over the building."

Like I said, by this point, Two World Trade Center is on fire. You know, like you can look all the ways up to the top, you know, I mean, there's quite a bit of damage up there. Like I said, the second plane had already hit it.

Q. People jumping at that point?

A. Not when I first got out of the ambulance. They were plenty of jumpers to come, but not at that point. If there had been, you know, like I said, I didn't notice.

Q. Was there a lot of debris when you were pulling up into the firehouse?

A. Yes.

Q. You saw a lot of debris?

A. A lot of debris on the street. All the ways over here.

Q. All the way up to Church?

A. Yeah. I mean, I wasn't crazy. It wasn't like I had -- I mean, I could drive through it, but, I mean, I had, you know, to kind of go around a couple of bigger pieces of debris.

So we backed into the firehouse, and we got out, you know, after a quick assessment of how many patients were in there. I kind of guesstimated by how much time had passed from the initial incident. I mean, again, like I said, coming over, only because I'm not really familiar with the way the things are set up, I thought that this tower right here is the tower that I saw burning on the way in. I don't know that it's this tower burning, because when you look at the bottom and you look up, it's tough to get a sense of where it is in proportion to the top of the tower.

So I figure maybe 20 minutes went by, 15 minutes. Like I said, it's kind of hard to tell, because time is kind of like -- it was like in slow motion, but we got out. I got a quick assessment of the amount of patients in there, you know, immediately, and, like I said, some of them were pretty bad, so I said to the captain -- I said, "Cap, listen. I haven't seen any ambulances over here either, and what we are going to do is, being that everyone is going to be familiar with the firehouse over here, you know, we are just -- we will take this station over, and we are going to -- my partner and I are going the set the station up as a triage station, and I'm going to radio out to dispatch, and we'll let them know what we are doing, but I need a few guys to give us a hand," and the guy's -- you know, he was, like, whatever you need, you just let us know. We will do whatever we got to do. And I said -- I asked him if he had anybody there that was medically trained. I figured there was an engine company there that maybe they have some CFR guys. He said, "I don't have anybody, no CFR, nothing." He's like, you know, whatever you got, you got.

There was a volunteer firefighter from Commack on Long Island. He worked in the trade center. He came over, and he's, like, you know, trying to offer his services, I guess, and, you know, so the captain gave this guy to us to help out. He said the saying thing, like he wasn't medical or anything. Like he knew CPR or something. So I don't know what his last name is. I just know his name was Rob, but --

So I said to the captain -- I said, "All right, listen. Again, we are going to take the station over in the name of EMS" and I don't recall how I told him we were going to commandeer the station, but like I said, he was pretty willing to go with it.

So I said to him -- I said, "I need every chair in the station, you know, whether kitchen chairs, chairs like this, you know, chairs in someone's office, rolling chairs. You name it. I need every single one. I need it set up behind the ambulance. I need it to look like a movie theatre. It's got to be nice and neat, because that's for the walking wounded as they start to make their way into the firehouse."

I said, "I also need every pillow, every blanket and any of the mattresses that you can get from any of the bunks upstairs. No metal frames or nothing, just mattress, and we are going to take the entire other side of the engine bay and just lay them on the ground. It's got to be nice and neat, and that was where we were going to start putting unstable patients and our critical patients."

My partner and I are going to start MCIing these people. We are going to start triaging them. So we did. Like I said, some of the patients were -- some of them were, you know, hurt not too bad. I mean, you know, like, injuries that were significant, but nothing life-threatening. Some bad lacerations, some --

Q. Walking wounded.

A. Yeah, walking wounded kind of stuff. There were some that were worse. There was one lady who was burnt up pretty bad. She had her shoulder -- all the skin off her shoulder was burnt off. Parts of her arm, her leg, her hair was all burnt, and I remember her fingers were burnt also, and, like, when they swell up when you get burnt real bad.

In fact, the guy, Rob, I said to him -- I had to show him how to use a ring cutter, because I had to cut the woman's rings off because they were swelled up so badly, and she was, like, in shock, you know. She was just sitting here like this while we were cutting the rings off, and I know it had to hurt, but she didn't -- she looked like she didn't feel a thing, and the plasma was just, like, dripping just off her finger, you know. It was -- she was burnt pretty good.

So we dressed her wounds, me and this guy Rob. My partner -- there was an Oriental guy. His name was Fu, and this guy had a broken hip, at the very least a dislocated hip. He had a pretty significant hip injury.

Q. Were there a lot of people coming into the firehouse looking for help?

A. Yeah, there were a lot of civilians. There were a lot of civilians that was still just kind of near the front of the firehouse that weren't triaged yet. Like I said, we -- I mean, between the two of us we must have maybe got six, seven, eight triage tags written out, and, you know, the MCI tags, and put on people. I mean, name, injury, and then we rated them, pulled the tag off at the bottom.

So we went to -- while we were doing that, like I said, this guy, the Oriental guy with the broken hip, I showed my partner real quick how to immobilize it with a KED, so he immobilized -- he started to immobilize the fracture with a fireman. The other fireman set up the chairs behind the ambulance, started setting up the blankets and everything else.

Q. At this time, the buildings were still standing?

A. Yeah, they were still standing, and it's a shame. If the buildings didn't come down, you know, I know that some, you know, some EMS captain or chief would have walked by and said, damn, this is a nice triage station. I mean, it was looking pretty sharp.

So to answer, I guess, next question. That's where we parked our apparatus, and we didn't really get too much in the way of civilian reports, but, like I said, I spoke initially to that captain. He gave us some firefighters to work with. He was sending guys outside, and at this point is when I started seeing jumpers, because the civilians that were still out by the front were screaming, "Oh, my God, my God," and then I walked out to the front of the firehouse, and then they were just, you know, hit, you know, just coming off the building, and, you know, hitting the ground maybe 20 feet away, whatever it was.

So I said all right. I got to go back inside, and I told the captain also to let any of the firemen know, because they were all up and down the street. They were everywhere, and I said to him, "Cap, listen, just tell your men, tell anybody else that walks past the firehouse that the 10-10 house is being set up as a triage station. This way, if they run in to any civilians out on the street, they can direct them this way. We can at least triage them real quick and then, you know, once they start rolling ambulances and stuff, we can start getting people taken care of."

So they started letting everybody out on the street know that the 10-10 house was going to be set up as triage, and we -- and shortly thereafter, there were a couple of firefighters that came into the station, and they said that there was a brother that was hurt out on the street pretty bad. He had been hit in the head with a piece of falling debris, and that he was -- you know, that he was in bad shape, and they -- initially the guys weren't -- like, I guess, word of mouth was just getting around, and they didn't know where he was, so that the captain was like, all right, let's figure out where we are going to send you guys, and once they -- once we had a general vicinity, they just kept pointing down Liberty, like down in this direction.

Q. To the west?

A. Yeah, to the west. That captain said, "All right, you know --" again, we were just trying to get a sense of where it was. So I grabbed two firefighters. There was a Stokes basket laying on the ground. I said, "Guys, grab the Stokes. Come with me."

I grabbed my tech bag, told my partner that I was going out to go get this guy and initially, like my partner, he got kind of frantic. He was like, you know, I'm not leaving you, I'm not leaving you, but I said, "You know, just sit tight. I got to go out, and I got to see if there is somebody out there. I'm going to bring him right back in. Don't worry about it.

I'll be all right."

So I went out and I started heading down west on Liberty, and again, like I said to this point, I don't know anything as far as, you know, plane or anything else.

Q. Did you ever try communicating to CB that you were doing this at the 10-10?

A. Yeah, yeah, central dispatcher, yeah.

Q. You notified them?

A. Sure, sure. I let them know pretty much every step of the way.

Q. Okay.

A. I called them up, and, I mean, I didn't tell them that I was going on the street, but I told them, you know, I told my partner that I was heading out and, you know, I let them know we were setting up the triage station at the 10-10 house.

So we -- I started heading down West on Liberty with two firefighters, and again people were -- people were still, you know, leaping out of the building 20 feet away, whatever it was, and they were -- you know, you had to walk like this, because they were landing so close, and there was still a lot of stuff falling from the building. There was a lot of debris on the street, but, again, like the whole point I don't really see any -- there is not a big wing or anything hanging out. For all I know, someone, you know, hid a bomb on the 80th Floor, blew it up, and, you know, I'm just seeing the remnants of everything that's going on. We don't have any specifics.

Q. You don't have to follow that. Just keep going.

A. Okay. So we started heading down trying to find this guy, and, again, like I said, there was firefighters all over the street, there were guys everywhere, and the first indication that I had that it was a plane crash, I remember -- because I'm color blind so it's hard for me to distinguish different colors, especially when everything is gray, because it had -- really had kind of a gray look to it, because of all the dust, you know, but there was like a bank or something here, and there's like a fountain, I guess, right in front of the bank.

I'm trying to remember everything in that 20 seconds I'm going past it, but I remember there was life jackets everywhere, the yellow in-flight life jackets, and that the contrast of the yellow against all the gray, you know. It stood out. It was easy for me to pick it out, and I remember thinking as I saw that, you know, I guess it must have been a plane crash, because where the hell else would you get a bunch of yellow life jackets in the middle of Manhattan, you know.

So, yeah, and I looked on the ground to see if there was anything around, and I didn't see anything, so I thought, you know, maybe it was an empty plane, who knows, but we started going a little further down. Like I said, it was a long walk before we started getting to where this guy was. I've been down there since, because I went down there on one of the family trips the Fire Department had, and I tried, you know -- they got that platform up there?

Q. Yes.

A. I tried to see from there to where the 10-10 house is, and I'm trying to figure out how far down I went, because, like I said, I tried --

Q. Did you go into the Westside Highway?

A. No, no, no.

Q. That's a big multiple highway, so --

A. Okay. No, no, no. I definitely never left Liberty Street. I just don't know how far.

Q. You went down a block or two maybe.

A. I went down maybe a couple of blocks, and I remember that you have to kind of cut back a little bit. You have to cut back a little bit, and because there was a lieutenant on the street. I asked him where this guy was, and he said that, "He's, you know, down that way aways, but, you know, stay under the awnings. There's a lot of stuff coming down."

And then I started walking, and I slipped, and I looked to see what I slipped on, and it was this guy's head. It was like a mush head, you know. It wasn't solid like a head, you know. I guess it was from the explosion or whatever. It was like a mush head. I could still see it was someone's head, and at that point, I took -- I tried to take note at what basically was on the ground around me, and then that's -- there was a lot of body parts there at that point. I mean, it was -- I mean, it literally carpeted the sidewalk. You couldn't tip toe through it like a mine field or nothing like that. You couldn't, like, you know, like you are dodging dog crap or something. I mean, it was -- basically just it was everywhere, you know, and I remember I -- again, I took a couple of seconds to take notice of what exactly it was I was looking at, and some of it you could tell what it was you know, some of it was identifiable and some of it, you knew it was from a person. You didn't know what the heck it was. I mean, I seen a lot of dead in MVAs, dismemberments and stuff, but some of it was just, you know, I just had no idea. I mean, just from the explosion and from the fall and everything else, it kind of, you know, turns people to mush.

I don't know if you -- you need to know about the details of the bodies and stuff right?

Q. So did you ever get to the firefighter that was hurt or not?

A. When I started get to go that stuff, I saw down where the guy was. They pointed down to him maybe a hundred feet away. He was -- four firefighters picked him up on a long board. I mean, you could see his head. His head was, you know, was in bad shape. I don't know if this guy lived or whatever, but from where I was standing, from my perspective it didn't look too good for him, but he started running down the other way. He was heading down towards the Westside Highway on Liberty.

So at that point I said to these two guys -- I said, "Listen, I don't know where he's going, if they have something set up down there, but let's get the hell back inside the firehouse." I said, "There's just too much shit falling down. We are going to get -- we don't want to get killed out here."

So we started making our way back to Liberty, back to the 10-10 house down Liberty. We stopped at this corner because there were two concession stands. You know, the little carts that got the donuts and stuff in it, coffee trucks?

There were two there, and I said to these guys, I said, "Hey, listen. I want to get out all the liquid stuff, all the water, the juice, ice tea and all that. I want to set up a rehab station inside the firehouse also, and this way we will have it set up for the firefighters that are going to be working there."

I mine, when I was setting up this thing in the 10-10 house, I was expecting to be there like for 24 hours. I was anticipating setting something up for a long-term operation, and, you know, I certainly had no idea that all those plans would be spoiled shortly thereafter, but -- and the thing is, like, with city firemen, these guys are funny, because it's like they have, like, two main things, you know. One thing is they just love to get like an order, like, you know, they just need like someone to tell them do this, do that, and so after I said this, they -- like one of the other favorite things they love to do is break stuff, and they -- both these guys put their hands on the cart, and they are, like, let's knock it over.

I said "Hey, guys, whoa. There's enough stuff destroyed out here." There was a lock about that big on it, you know. Don't you have bolt cutters or something in the firehouse? They were, like, yeah. I said,"Let's go get the bolt cutters," I said. You know, I don't want to break anything more than is already broken out here. Let's, you know, let's just, you know, relax, try to be a little calm about this.

So we went back in the firehouse, saw my partner. You know, he said, "You know, how bad is it? Is it bad out there?" I said, "Yeah,, it's pretty bad." From the time that I saw the first jumper to that point, there was like six, seven jumpers, plus all the stuff.

Q. Your partner's name?

A. Brian Gordon. You want his shield?

Q. Yeah.

A. Shield No. 5548. I know what it is, but --

Q. We just got a name to clarify that.

A. Brian Gordon.

So these guys grabbed the bolt cutters, and we ran back out to the concession stand, and it was the concession stand on the west side of Greenwich, I guess. It was right here. Like this is where the 10-10 house is, because it was on -- there was like a street, because the 10-10 house is, like, on the corner, whatever it is, so I went back out there, cut the lock off the cart, opened up the door, and there was some milk crates in with butter and milk and stuff, and I threw out the milk and the butter, and filled it up with ice teas, Snapples and waters and stuff, gave it to the one guy that was with me and I said, "You know, take this into the firehouse. Put it against the wall. I'll set it up when I get in there."

So that guy split, and I started doing the other one, the same thing, emptied it out, and started putting some stuff in there, and I heard this sound, and, you know, it wasn't until -- it wasn't until I saw the news, it wasn't until I'm able to replay events and where I was and what exactly was happening, because, like I said, as far as I know, there is only one plane that's hit at this point. I mean, it sounded like a plane coming in. It sounded like a jet engine getting ready to land on my head, you know, and I remember I started to hear it.

I looked at the guy, and I said, you know, like, run, and we started hauling, and we started running down towards the 10-10 house. There was guys all over the street, all these guys. These guys were history, because --

Q. Civilians you are talking about?

A. No, firefighters. There weren't all that many civilians. I mean, they were out there, but when we started running into the 10-10 house, I mean, from the time that I hear that first sound, to the time that the eventual concussion hits me, it couldn't have been more than four seconds, but, like, as I go through this, it's like slow motion, you know, like everything got slowed down.

And so we started running, and the firefighter was ahead of me. I don't know if he was from Engine 10 or Ladder 10. He was from one of the 10 companies, because he had it on his helmet, and when we -- by the time we got into the engine bays, they were completely clear. There was nobody in there. They all ran to the back of the building, like the kitchen area in there.

The only guy that was still in there was the Oriental guy Fu, because he couldn't get up and walk, and this poor bastard was crawling his way to the back of the building, like an animal that gets his hind quarters run over, you know. It was horrible, and I remember the firefighter was running, and he ran past him, and I remember I thought to myself -- I said, oh, man, you know, now I'm going to have to stop and try to grab this guy, and as the sound is coming, getting louder and louder, you know, it really feels like it's about to fly in the front door of the of the fire house.

Q. Talking about the second plane crashing?

A. Not the second plane crashing. This is the building coming down.

Q. Okay.

A. To me, it's the second plane crashing. That's what it sounds like.

Q. That is why I wanted to clarify that.

A. Yeah. Again, like I said, I only know this because at the time I'm watching on the news and everything, afterwards. From where I was, you couldn't (inaudible) so we started running.

I stopped. I picked up Fu. I grabbed him by the KED that we had on his waist and his hip, grabbed his shirt, and I started to drag him and looked behind me, and then it was just like "bam," and it came so fast. It was like a bomb went off, you know, and it just hit me so suddenly, you know, and it picked me up, picked me right up off my feet and threw me a good 30 feet through the air, because now you can imagine where the ambulance is. I'm on the other end of the bay side. Ain't nothing blocking the -- you know, between the street and me, and it just hit me and sent me flying and sent me closer to where the gear racks were. They moved them since, because I've been down there, but the gear racks were set up on the left-hand side behind where I set up all the chairs.

It sent me past that part, and I got to the back of the gear racks and hit down face first, and then I felt the rush of everything coming behind me. I felt things coming by, hitting me, and it was just a sound, like whoosh, and I liken it to being hit by a wave on the beach, you know, because that's kind of what it felt like. I mean, the stuff was so heavy I thought I was being buried.

I thought I was going to -- it felt like people were just dumping, you know, dirt like it was shooting at me, you know. It was so thick and heavy, and at that instant, I really felt like I was going to be buried, like that's how I was going to meet it, you know, and I took a breath, and then the blast came, and then there was -- you know, like I said, that wave of crap and everything else that hit us, and then I opened my eyes, and I couldn't see anything. It was just black. I mean, black as you can imagine. I mean, you can't close your eyes and get that black.

And I stood up, and I thought to myself I have to -- I said I can't take another breath. You know, the next breath is it, you know, and it was just, like, kind of like a quick silence right after it happened, and I'm a volunteer firefighter out on the Island for seven years, and, you know, like, firefighters stuff started kicking in, and I thought to myself I got to get a Scott pack, you know, I got to get one, because I can't breathe. If I breathe, I'm going to die. I had one breath. I could hold it for you know, a good 30 seconds or so, and I got to find air.

First thing I thought was, okay, I'm going to go out to my unit, because I work for a Haz-Tac unit. It has two packs on it. I run out to grab a pack, and I said, oh, I'm on an extra unit. So I'm in a firehouse. There's fire trucks here, and at that instant, I pulled my shirt up over my face, and I got ready to take my next breath, and I remember as I was doing it I thought to myself, you know, this is going to be the last one, you know.

So I was breathing in, and my entire inside of my mouth, my nose, my throat, anything that was wet inside down the whole way down was instantly dirt, you know, like I was hacking and coughing, and it was horrible.

So I tried to make my way towards where the back of the firehouse was. People at this point started screaming. People were trying to push past each other. You couldn't see anything, but you could feel people, like, grabbing on to you and trying to push you out of the way, and I found there was -- I think it was a Port Authority cop. He had a white shirt on. He had a white shirt on, and he looked like he was walking with a purpose, so I figured I think I'll follow this guy, because I was -- you know, kept saying, "Does anybody know where the exit is to this building?" Because I thought maybe all that crap was just in the firehouse. Little did I know that the back of the building is blown out, and the street is right behind it, and, you know, it's just as dark out there, but, I mean, when you can't see your hand in front of your face, you don't know what's going on, you know, and, you know, just survival stuff is kicking in, you know, and I remember I followed this guy into like a corner of the kitchen, and he turned around, and, I'm like, what are you doing? He said, "I don't know. I'm trying to find a way out."

You know, I -- I remember thinking a lot of things, you know, and I thought to myself, my hopes got kind of dashed. I thought maybe I was, you know, heading, you know, to a final way out, and I pictured it was like -- I felt like I was on the Discovery Channel, you know and they show stuff, like, the concentration camps [redacted]

That was when I was picturing. The people are screaming, and there's complete chaos. You can't see anything. You can't breathe, and I didn't know how many more -- I mean, I know I couldn't keep breathing this crap, but eventually it starts to calm down a little bit.

My partner was -- I heard my partner screaming my name, and I grabbed him, and he was just -- you know, he was beside himself. He was pretty upset. I said, "It's all right, Brian." I said, you know, "We are here, let's try to figure out what's going on. Let's try to relax a little bit," and actually he said -- we got separated again, because he went out towards the engine bay again, and I'm in the kitchen, and I tried walking back out to the engine base, and I heard on my radio, because I think we already switched to Brooklyn North again, because initially we were on citywide. You couldn't get on the Citywide frequency to your save your life, so congested going over the bridge. It was nuts.

So I remember hearing him screaming on the radio, you know, 31 Mary, 31 Mary, just, you know, yelling a Mayday, saying that we were trapped in a building, you know, that it was -- you know, there was rubble. We couldn't breathe. We were injured. We took heavy casualties. You know, that basically we were taking a pretty solid beating, and then when I saw him again, I was getting ready to radio. He said, "I already called them." I said, "Yeah, I know." I said, "You can't give these guys a message like that." I said, you know,"We will have to figure out what we can figure out here, but, you know, you're screaming like that, somebody else is going to come running in here trying to get us out, and they are going to get killed out there, too. Let's just let everybody try to figure out where they're at right now. Let's take it, you know -- try to think this through."

So I pretty much relayed the same message, but in a -- you know, in a much calmer fashion, you know, for the sake of everybody else that was out there, and there were people that were screaming. Like I said, the dust was starting to settle a bit. You could see. I mean, not all that well, but there were a lot of people that got hurt, that got broken legs, and a firefighter that just -- he got a tibia fracture.

A lot of people (inaudible.) So I grabbed my partner, and I walked to -- you know, we were in, like, the engine bay area, and I said to him, "Brian, listen, before we do anything else, we got to kind of figure out whatever -- I need to know where you are at, we are on the same page here, you know."

I said to him -- I said, "Basically this point we have two options. Option No. 1 is there will be -- salvage whatever we can out of the ambulance, because at this point it was in bad shape, but I mean, there was still some stuff that could have been taken out, so we can salvage it, pick our way through the rubble, try and find our way out of here and just run to Brooklyn and don't stop until we hit the water, maybe swim back to the battalion. Whatever it takes, we got to get the hell out of here.

I remember it was pretty funny, because I remember he looked at me, and he said to me -- he says, "There is only one option. We are getting the hell out of here. I'm not dying with these people here." He's, like, we are going to get killed. I said, "Well, let's -- let me just go through Option No. 2 before I make a decision."

Option No. 2 is that we stay, that we treat every patient that we have, because there is no EMS. There is nobody here. I said, "You know, if there is anybody that was out in the street, those guys got wiped out." I said, "There is nobody else here to help them." I said, "I can't, you know, in good conscience leave these people." I said, "I'm staying, and, you know --" I said, "I can't leave anybody behind," and he said, "All right, I'm with you," and he's like, I'm not leaving your side.

I said, "All right. Now that we have a plan, let's go implement it." We went inside, and we splinted the guy's leg. We got him -- he was on an long board. Like I said, things started to settle a little bit. There were firefighters inside and outside the firehouse.

I went into the kitchen area where there were civilians, everybody kind of congregating and did like a -- you know, everyone had three seconds to do their thing. I said, "I don't want to hear your history. I don't want to hear what kind of medicine you are taking. What hurts? You know. My arm is cut. What hurts?" You know, and I went through the whole thing, 20 people, 30 people, whatever it was.

So at that point, we started to assign people to pick people up that couldn't walk, pass them out the window, assign people that, you know -- that couldn't walk, but, you know, without help, but could basically kind of carry some of their own weight. Okay, listen, you two guys help him, and let's go out the back door, start walking down the street. Walking wounded were getting -- I mean, everybody was making their way out.

Fu was still in there. He was out by the back exit. I remember because I went upstairs to check to see if there was anybody up there. I went past him, and he was pretty worried that we were going to leave him, but I assured him that we weren't going to.

So we went to -- we went upstairs. There were a couple of more people up there, got them out of the building, and we basically -- we emptied out pretty much the whole building. I mean, there were still some scattered guys there, firefighters and stuff, and one of them, Gordon says, he is one of the captains. I didn't make the recognition. He was wearing turnout gear, so I didn't really got to see who it was, but this guy Gordon and myself walked back out to the engine bay area, because, like I said, there was a lot of debris out there.

I didn't know if people were buried. I said okay, before we leave the house, let's get a shot out here. Is there anybody out here? We're screaming, and just waiting and listening, you know, to hear if anybody responds, and nobody responded, so I said, "All right. There's nobody to dig out here." I said, "Let's get the hell out of here," you know and that's when the -- we started to hear the sound of the next tower coming down, and again, it sounded like a plane.

When we were in that house, and we started hearing it coming down, I thought that this plane -- I'm thinking the third plane is hitting, you know. Little do I know that the first plane already hit, and the second plane hit, and the tower came down, and I think the towers are still up, and I remember consciously thinking there is no way that this tower came down, because when I was out there before, and I looked up, I mean, I thought to myself, all right, the collapse zone on the structure fire is one and a half times the height of the building, which puts me somewhere back to Brooklyn. I said, "That thing comes down, we are all dead. You know, nobody could live through that. You know, it's crazy."

So like I said, after that, you know, what I think is the second plane, but was really actually the tower coming down. I mean, there is no way in the world for me that I'm thinking that this thing went down because of the damage I figure it would cause, so I think it's a plane, and again, when the Tower 1 comes down it sounds just like a plane, and it was so loud. You know, the energy of all the steel and the concrete and everything else giving way, and I guess the rush of air.

We started running, and we ran into the bathroom just behind the apparatus bay, so we started heading to the back of the house on the left-hand side, and the three of us ran in there, and we got in the corner on the floor, and the three of us were praying. I had the firefighter on my left and my partner behind me, and we were just kind of like huddled on the ground real low, and then it hit, and, you know, we kind of got, like, pushed into the wall, and the same thing with the smoke and the dust and everything else.

You couldn't see. You couldn't breathe, and it lasted awhile, you know, and eventually it starts again. It starts -- the blast part of it is over, and, you know, like things are starting to settle down a little bit. You can hear there's a lot of noise outside, stuff falling, stuff falling apart, whatever it was, and I remember I was laying there on the floor, and I heard water running. I thought it was weird. I thought, you know, we were in the bathroom. I thought someone was taking a leak, you know, and I said, "What the hell is that?" I said -- you know, and the two -- the other two guys, I mean, they were -- they were shaking. They were really upset, and they were crying, and I said, "Hey, is someone taking a leak in here or what?" And these guys, they were laughing. What are you talking about?

I said, "Listen, I hear water running," and I got up, and there was a sink above my head, and it was weird, like I think about it now, but I leaned forward, and I turned the faucet off and the water stopped, and I said -- I remember, I talked to the guy (inaudible) hey, guys, listen, you know for whatever reason, we were spared here. We still got work to do. Let's go.

And we got up, and we just got back into the mode again and just started getting up and running to do our next thing, you know.

So we went to -- we got up. We started -- again, we made another sweep of the firehouse. Nobody was left in there. Went to the back of the building. Fu was on the ground, and there was a couple of firefighters outside, and then they are, like, looking at us, you know, you're EMS, and they were, like, can we pick him up. We need a back board, you know. I said "You guys are worried about immobilization? You're crazy. Let's just pick this guy up and get him the hell out of here." I said, "What are you worried about? You going to make him a paraplegic? He's going to be buried in here. You guys got to be kidding me."

So we picked him up, and we tried doing like a soldier carry with our arms on each shoulder, and it just wasn't working out, because he wouldn't let go of his briefcase, and he was whacking us in the face with it, and no matter how much we tried to make him let go of it, he wouldn't let go, you know, and we come to find out the guy has like half a million dollars in cash in his briefcase, you know, and really it was a lot --

Q. It was one million cash.

A. It was like the mafia movies. You flip the briefcase up and you see all the hundreds stacked in there. I was, like, holy cow, you know, he wasn't -- he would not let go. Because we offered. We said, "Look, we'll carry it if you want us to." He would not let go, so eventually we were, like, what the hell are we going to do with this guy?

So we just picked him up and carried him on our shoulders, like legs over here, arms over here and basically just took turns trying to carry him.

Now, we come out, I guess from this map because the bag of the firehouse is blown out. I guess this is Cedar here, so we come out onto Cedar, and we tried going back and forth, and everybody out there is telling us that all these intersections are blocked off with debris, you can't get through, but eventually we make it out to -- I can't figure.

Q. Thames.

A. To Thames, I guess, because we start heading in the direction of Rector.

Q. Thames.

A. So eventually we get down that way. I don't know if we make our way back to Greenwich or to Trinity, get down in that direction. To be honest with you, I got very turned around, 1983 -- wherever 10 Rector is -- you know.

Q. You know, that is not really important. You made your way down.

A. In that general vicinity. We get down there, and we carried Fu down that way, and we get into this building, and I remember the reason why we stopped in there was because there was clean air. I mean, there was so much garbage and debris on the street, you can't see a damn thing, and our eyes were burning, and I said, "You know, we're going to get killed out here walking through that crap," and it wasn't like you looked up and said, oh, you know, the towers are gone. You couldn't see two feet in front of you, you know, above, below, whatever it was. You couldn't see your hands in front of your face.

So, we stopped at this building because a guy at the door, he opened the door, and I remember looking inside, and there was clean air in there, and I said, "We got to get in there," and I said to the guy, "How many stories in this building?" He said "27 stories."

I didn't know whatever became of Fu, but he's like the comic relief in this story, but anyway -- so we make our way down to Rector Street. We get in there and, again, like I said, I mean, it was kind of like a toss-up. Do I go in this big building or stay out on the street? And I was like, I get to get some air. I can't even see anymore. My eyes felt like Mace, you know.

So we went inside, and there was a security desk right in the middle of the lobby. It was a big lobby, you know, and we went in there. We put Fu down, and there were people in there, you know, like maybe 20, 30 people, and, you know, I said to the guys at the security desk -- I said, "You know, are there still people in this building?" The guy's like, there's hundreds of people in this building. We told them to stay at their desks, and I said, "Jesus Christ. We got to get these people out of here, you know. They -- these people are going to get killed. You know, I said, "We got to get the hell out of Manhattan." I said, "We got to try to get as many people out as we can," so I radioed out to dispatch.

I told them the address we were at, and I said, "Central, this is 31 mary. You know, my partner and I made it into this location. I need directions to send these people out to give them -- you know just tell them which way to go, you know, and I need directions as precise as -- I'm in this building. I'm walking out the front door. Do I make a right or a left?"

I said, "Central, I can't see street names. I can't see signs. I can't see anything." I said I need rights and lefts, you know, and they said, "10-4 one Mary. We'll call you back with directions." I said "Okay." So --

Q. Did they ever do that?

A. Yeah, they did.

Q. Okay.

A. And yeah, it was a Brooklyn North dispatcher. The craziness of everything, I don't know, you know, who it was, but people were coming up to me and saying, you know, are you all right? Are you hurt? I'm, like, yeah, I'm fine. Don't worry. Like, no, you're bleeding real bad, and I had on a paper mask, and I pulled it away it was full of blood, you know, and I thought that I broke my nose, because there was blood coming from my nose, blood coming from my face. I was cut up, and I said, "I can't feel it, you know, so whatever it is isn't enough to worry about. You know, we'll deal with it later on. At this point I mean, this whole time is just --" is all adrenaline, so we were in the building, and we started making announcements over the PA system.

My partner goes into the stairwell. He goes upstairs, and my partner went upstairs, starting clearing out some of the floors. I was downstairs trying to get a handle on things, and eventually the central dispatch called me, Brooklyn dispatch calls me with the directions, and I was with that volunteer firefighter from Commack, this guy Rob.

Like I said, he worked in the trade center and he was familiar with the area. I said to him -- I said, "Rob, do you understand what this is? What she's telling me? Because I don't know what the hell she is telling me." You know, I mean I know make a right, but she was giving me street names, you know, and I said, "Rob I don't know what the hell she's talking about."

He said, "I know exactly where she is sending us. I know exactly where I am, you know, no sweat. You know, I can handle it." I'm, like, all right, great.

So I cleared all this crap off the desk. There was maybe like a hundred people in the lobby at this point, and I got up -- like I was, you know, like a public speaker in ancient Greece or something, and I said, "All right, folks. Everyone has to pay attention. You have to pay attention to what I'm saying explicitly. Nobody -- if anybody doesn't want to listen or want do their own thing, be my guest."

I said, "You know, your blood is in your own hands at that point." I said, "If you want to go home and see your families, I have directions. I will get you to your family."

Meanwhile a lot of it was, you know, was BS, because I don't know what happened to some of these people. I don't know if they know exactly what's going on. I'm sending these people to their deaths or anything, but they don't know -- you know, these people were just looking for a voice to tell them which way to run, you know.

So basically I said to -- you know, I got -- listen, we're going to be walking out of here. We're going to be walking out of here single file. Stay arm's length away from the person in front of you, because if you do anything more than that, you are going to lose sight of them and get lost out there.

There is not going to be any running. There is not going to be any cutting, no pushing, no shoving,. Basically if we start doing this, people are going to get hurt. If you are walking out of here and you think you know a better way than what my dispatcher is telling me, and you want to make a left when everyone else is making a right, you are going to get hit by a plane, a building is going to fall on you, some debris is going to fall on you, trip on some crap out there. You are going to get hurt. I said, "I promise you, no one is coming to get you for a long time, because I just came from that direction, and there ain't nobody left over there, so you have to listen to what I say to the letter" and I could hear a pin drop. You know, a hundred people in the lobby, but the echoes when people talk, and nobody said a word, you know, and I was going through the whole thing, keep a mask on your face, breathe in through your nose, out through your mouth, try to squint, everything to try to, you know, instill in these people that I kind of knew what I was talking about.

People were, like, who do we follow? I don't know (inaudible) because initially I pointed to the guy Rob. I said, "You follow one person and one person alone, and that's the person in front of you. You don't stop following until you get to the water."

I spoke with this guy Rob afterwards, and he said to me -- he said, "You know, Brian, when we got down to the water," he said, "Its' funny, because as I was walking, I felt like the Pied Piper, you know, because we'd pick up some stragglers along the way, and I'd be, like, get in line with everybody else.

Just, you know get in line with everybody else, and he said that once he started getting to a spot in Manhattan where it started to clear out a little bit, he said, you know, behind him was -- like, I mean you could run a laser beam down it, a straight line. These people followed it right to the letter, you know, and they all got out of the building, and my partner, you know, he was like -- are we going with them? And I'm, like, you know, we can't leave yet, there is still more people in the building, and we still had Fu.

I mean, I don't know what the hell to do with this guy. I said, "I can't carry this guy back to Brooklyn, you know."

So we did the same thing again. This time I went up on the floors. We cleared out the rest of the people in the building. Some of the people were hesitant. They were, like, we were told to stay at the desk. I said, "Listen, if you want to stay by your desk and get killed in here, it's your business."

I said, "You want to go home to your family" I said, "I got -- you know, I can give you the way." And nobody stayed behind their desk, you know. Everybody left.

So we went to -- down the lobby. Same thing again. Filled up the lobby, a hundred people, 150 people. It was a bigger crowd than the first time around. Gave the same speech again, and we didn't have any paper masks to give anybody. I know Gordon started -- he had the button-down uniform. Started taking it off and cutting it into strips so people could put it over their face, and like I said, again, the same speech.

There was an off-duty police officer there, and he approached me and said -- I gave him the same directions. He knew exactly where I was talking about, and so --

Q. So you were going and making your way down to the ferry, right?

A. No, I never left the building.

Q. You were sending the people in the direction of the ferry?

A. I guess. Like I said, I don't know where the hell central sent them, but the people who were familiar with the area, who were the leaders of this group, they knew where they were going.

All I knew was they made it right out of the building. After that I couldn't see them any more, you know.

I have to stop for a drink of water. My throat is getting a little dry.

So anyway, we evacuated the building again. At this point, there's nobody left in the building. Fu was still in there, myself and Gordon. There was another guy, older guy, and his foot was mangled. He
